NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

https://archive.org/details/californiareport0000unse_w4r8

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER

154 P.—157 P.

Cite by Volume and Page

of the

PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:

154 P. 1

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 154, Nos. 1-6; Vol. 155, Nos. 1-5; Vol. 156, Nos. 1-5; Vol. 157, Nos. 1-7.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cal.Rep. 154–157 P.
2–1967

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 154–157 P.

	Vol.	P. Page
Abbott Kinney Co.; Llewellyn Iron Works v., Sup.	155	986
Ainley; Babik v., Sup.	155	631
Alameda County; Havens v., App.	157	821
Alexander v. Stone, App.	156	998
Allen; Bush v., Sup.	155	456
Allen v. Chatfield, Sup.	156	47
Allen Co. v. Edwards, App.	154	1066
All Night and Day Bank; Hulbert v., App.	157	546
All Persons; O'Reilly v., App.	154	474
All Persons Interested, etc.; Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v., App.	156	876
Alturas School Dist. of Modoc County; Lynip v., App.	155	109
American Exch. Nat. Bank of Duluth v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	154	279
American Surety Co. of New York; San Dimas Quarry Co. v., App.	157	548
Anderson v. Lewis, App.	154	287
Anderson; Lick v., App.	156	70
Andrade; People v., App.	154	283
Angelus Hospital Ass'n; Perry v., Sup.	156	449
Anthony; Thomas v., App.	157	823
Antonetti; People v., App.	155	141
Antonetti; People v., Sup.	155	141
App Consol. Gold Min. Co.; Manning v., Sup.	154	301
Astorg; Fry v., App.	156	873
Augustine; Chamberlain v., Sup.	156	479
Austin v. Strang, App.	157	1002
Babik v. Ainley, Sup.	155	631
Bakersfield & Kern Electric Ry. Co. v. Hay, App.	155	132
Bakersfield & Kern Electric Ry. Co. v. Hay, App.	155	134
Ballou; Robertson v., App.	157	523
Bank of Bakersfield v. Conner, App.	154	869
Bank of Shasta County; People v., Sup.	157	606
Barandun v. Barandun Min. & Mill. Co., Sup.	156	473
Barandun Min. & Mill. Co.; Barandun v., Sup.	156	473
Barbera; People v., App.	157	532
Barlow v. Barnes, Sup.	155	457
Barnes; Barlow v., Sup.	155	457
Barnett; Tweedale v., Sup.	156	483
Barrett v. Metropolitan Contracting Co., Sup.	155	645
Barry v. Jackson, App.	157	828
Bauer; Rosenthal v., App.	157	1137
Beale; Jordan v., Sup.	155	990
Bekins Van & Storage Co. of San Francisco; Schmidt v., App.	155	647
Bell v. Wilson, Sup.	155	625
Benson v. Benson, App.	154	285
Bernon; People v., App.	155	1021
Bier v. Leisle, Sup.	156	870
Bigelow; People v., App.	155	141

	P. Vol.	Page
Bigelow; People v., Sup.	155	142
Bittleston Law & Collection Agency v. Howard, Sup.	156	515
Bizzell's Estate, In re, Sup.	157	237
Blood v. Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California, App.	157	1140
Bloxham v. Tehama County Tel. Co., App.	155	654
Bonney; Hilborn v., App.	154	26
Borger v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., App.	156	70
Borges v. Hillman, App.	154	1075
Bossert v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	157	597
Bower; Parker v., Sup.	156	869
Bradford v. Sunset Land & Water Co., App.	157	20
Branick v. Large, Sup.	157	238
Branick's Estate, In re, Sup.	157	238
Brizzolara v. Sbrana, App.	156	1198
Broadmoor Imp. Co.; Manning v., App.	157	524
Bronge v. Mowat & Co., App.	155	827
Bruguiere v. Bruguiere, Sup.	155	988
Brunswig Drug Co.; Cooley v., App.	157	13
Bryson v. Security Trust & Savings Bank, App.	156	987
Buckingham; Roberts v., Sup.	156	1018
Bullock v. Bullock, App.	155	1009
Bush v. Allen, Sup.	155	456
Butler v. Butler, Sup.	156	1019
Cadwalader; Gordon v., Sup.	156	471
Cain v. French, App.	156	518
Calara Valley Realty Co. v. Smith, App.	156	369
California Drug & Chemical Co.; Congdon v., App.	154	1062
California Selling Co.; Coos Bay Mfg. Co. v., App.	155	817
Callahan Const. Co.; Tingey v., App.	154	28
Callander; United Motor San Francisco Co. v., App.	157	561
Canfield; People v., App.	154	33
Cappa; Rivera v., App.	156	1016
Cappa; Rivera v., Sup.	156	1017
Caridis; People v., App.	154	1061
Carpenter v. Markham, Sup.	155	644
Carpenter; Rucker v., App.	157	524
Carpenter's Estate, In re, Sup.	156	464
Carr; Pacific Rys. Advertising Co. v., App.	157	529
Carter v. Holt, App.	154	37
Carver; Williams v., Sup.	154	472
Caspar's Estate, In re, Sup.	155	631
Cavallini; People v., App.	156	73
Cavitt v. Raje, App.	156	519
Central Fireproof Bldg. Co.; Worden v., Sup.	155	839
Chamberlain v. Augustine, Sup.	156	479
Chatfield; Allen v., Sup.	156	47
Chino Land & Water Co. v. Hamaker, Sup.	154	850
Chin You; People v., App.	157	523
Chober; People v., App.	157	533
Christie; Orchardson v., App.	157	547
Chung Sun Tung Co.; Hughes v., App.	154	299
Chung Sun Tung Co.; Hughes v., Sup.	154	301
City Council of City of Los Angeles; Rindge Co. v., App.	156	975
City of Los Angeles; Curtis v., Sup.	156	462
City of Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber & Mill Co., Sup.	156	468
City of Oakland; Standard American Dredging Co. v., App.	157	833
City of Sacramento v. Swanston, App.	155	101

	P. Vol.	Page
Coats v. Hord, App.	154	491
Coelho v. Judson Mfg. Co., App.	156	1005
Cohn; Salfield v., App.	155	1007
Cole; Lantz v., Sup.	156	45
Colyear; Woodruff v., Sup.	156	475
Commins v. Guaranty Oil Co., App.	154	882
Common Council of City of San Diego; Rigdon v., App.	157	513
Congdon v. California Drug & Chemical Co., App.	154	1062
Connecticut Fire Ins. Co.; Borger v., App.	156	70
Conner; Bank of Bakersfield v., App.	154	869
Cooley v. Brunswig Drug Co., App.	157	13
Coos Bay Mfg. Co. v. California Selling Co., App.	155	817
Cornell; People v., App.	155	1026
Cornish v. Dickey, Sup.	155	629
Cox; People v., App.	155	1010
Cox v. Schnerr, Sup.	156	509
Crane v. Roach, App.	156	375
Crofford v. Crofford, App.	157	560
Crowley v. Savings Union Bank & Trust Co., App.	157	516
Curtis v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	156	462
Cutting v. Cutting, Sup.	155	1002
Cutting's Estate, In re, Sup.	155	1002
Dabney; Whitton v., Sup.	154	312
Dabney Oil Co. v. Providence Oil Co. of Arizona, App.	155	114
Darling; Roystone Co. v., Sup.	154	15
Daroux; Pythian Castle Ass'n of Sacramento v., Sup.	157	594
Dart, Ex parte, Sup.	155	63
Dates; People v., App.	155	112
Davis; Thompson v., Sup.	157	595
Dean v. Hawes, App.	157	558
Decker; Tilton v., Sup.	154	860
D. Ferrari & Co.; Koehler v., App.	156	69
Dickey; Cornish v., Sup.	155	629
Dickinson; Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v., App.	157	615
Dickson; Houghton v., App.	155	128
District Council of Sheet Metal Workers of State of California; Wilson v., App.	157	629
Dixon Farms Co.; Johnson v., App.	155	134
Dixon Farms Co.; Johnson v., Sup.	155	136
Dolbear v. Wilkinson, Sup.	156	488
Don v. Pfister, Sup.	155	60
Dox v. R. E. Lomax Co., App.	156	874
Dufour v. Weissberger, Sup.	155	984
Dutcher's Estate, In re, Sup.	157	242
Dye; People v., App.	154	875
Dye v. Shutan, Sup.	156	464
East San Mateo Land Co. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., App.	157	634
East Shore Co. v. Richmond Belt Ry., Sup.	155	999
Ecton; People v., App.	156	996
Edwards; Wiley B. Allen Co. v., App.	154	1066
Ehrenpfort; Glindemann v., App.	154	481
Eilersficken; People v., Sup.	156	458
E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Co.; Wills v., App.	154	613
Elliott v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. of Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, Sup.	156	481
Elsea v. Fassler, App.	154	1067
Elsom; Hihn-Hammond Lumber Co. v., Sup.	154	12

	Vol.	Page
Emmons, In re, App.	154	619
Ensign-Baker Refining Co.; Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v., App.	157	613
Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of the United States; Flittner v., App.	157	630
Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States; Hagenkamp v., App.	156	520
Erken; Stoff v., Sup.	156	1033
Evans v. Hindes, App.	157	522
Evening Herald Pub. Co.; Pollok v., App.	154	30
Fairbanks; Stroud v., App.	154	282
Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Zimmerman, App.	157	509
Fassler; Elsea v., App.	154	1067
Ferrari & Co.; Koehler v., App.	156	69
Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California, Sup.	154	834
Film Producers v. Jordan, Sup.	154	605
Fisher; People v., App.	157	7
Fiske v. Fresno Estate Co., Sup.	157	1127
Fleishhacker; Seberg v., Sup.	156	55
Flickinger v. Wrenn Inv. Co., Sup.	155	627
Flittner v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of the United States, App.	157	630
Flynn v. Flynn, Sup.	154	837
Forester; People v., App.	155	1022
Foster v. National Ice Cream Co., App.	156	985
Foster v. Young, Sup.	156	476
Fountain v. Willard-Slater Co., Sup.	155	630
Fowler; People v., App.	157	540
Fox v. Windemere Hotel Apartment Co., App.	157	820
Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. of Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany; Elliott v., Sup.	156	481
Frede v. Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp., App.	157	528
Freeman; People v., App.	156	994
French; Cain v., App.	156	518
Fresno Estate Co. v. Fiske, Sup.	157	1127
Fry v. Astorg, App.	156	873
Fry; House v., App.	157	500
Galbreath; Smith v., Sup.	157	242
Gambetta v. Gambetta, App.	157	1141
Gehring; Wenks v., Sup.	154	24
General Acc., Fire & Life Assur. Corp.; Porter v., App.	157	825
George A. Moore & Co.; Mills v., App.	155	823
Ghiotto; Rossi v., App.	156	974
Ghiselli v. Thorstensen, App.	155	1015
Gibson v. Kennedy Extension Gold Mining Co., Sup.	156	56
Gilbert v. Odom, App.	156	989
Ginty v. Ocean Shore R. Co., Sup.	155	77
Glindemann v. Ehrenpfort, App.	154	481
Goldwater; Innes v., App.	157	18
Gordon v. Cadwalader, Sup.	156	471
Gordon v. Roberts, App.	157	15
Grace & Co. v. Levy, App.	156	626
Gray v. Pacific Suction Cleaner Co., Sup.	155	469
Gray v. Union Trust Co. of San Francisco, Sup.	154	306
Green v. Stone, Sup.	155	992
Grenfell Lumber Co. v. Peck, App.	155	1012
Griffith v. Welbanks & Co., App.	155	120
Gross; Perry v., Sup.	156	1031
Growney; Richmond Const. Co. v., App.	155	1008
Guaranty Oil Co.; Commins v., App.	154	882

P.

	Vol.	Page
Guernsey v. Johnson Organ & Piano Mfg. Co., App.	157	527
Gunn; People v., App.	157	619
Guyer v. Sterling Laundry Co., Sup.	154	1057
Hagenkamp v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, App.	156	520
Hall; Teague v., Sup.	154	851
Hamaker; Chino Land & Water Co. v., Sup.	154	850
Hammel; Keith v., App.	154	871
Hammond v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., App.	155	1023
Harlan; People v., App.	156	980
Harris; Passow & Sons v., App.	156	997
Hart; Thornber v., App.	155	99
Hassey v. Ruggles, App.	156	989
Hathaway v. McMillian, Sup.	157	237
Havens v. Alameda County, App.	157	821
Hawes; Dean v., App.	157	558
Hay; Bakersfield & Kern Electric Ry. Co. v., App.	155	132
Hay; Bakersfield & Kern Electric Ry. Co. v., App.	155	134
Healy v. Obear, App.	157	569
Healy v. Obear, Sup.	157	570
Hellings v. Wright, App.	156	365
Henderson v. Palmer Union Oil Co., App.	156	65
Herman; Scheafer v., Sup.	155	1084
Herrick v. Oakland Motor Co., App.	155	1006
Hester v. McMullan, App.	157	521
H. G. Bittleston Law & Collection Agency v. Howard, Sup.	156	515
Hihn-Hammond Lumber Co. v. Elsom, Sup.	154	12
Hilborn v. Bonney, App.	154	26
Hilborn v. Soale, App.	155	130
Hill v. Nerle, App.	156	981
Hillman; Borges v., App.	154	1075
Hindes; Evans v., App.	157	522
Hinkel; Johnson v., App.	154	487
Holabird v. Railroad Commission of State of California, Sup.	154	831
Holt; Carter v., App.	154	37
Hord; Coats v., App.	154	491
Hotchkiss; Wilson v., Sup.	154	1
Houghton v. Dickson, App.	155	128
House v. Fry, App.	157	500
Howard; H. G. Bittleston Law & Collection Agency v., Sup.	156	515
Howard; Mineral Park Land Co. v., Sup.	156	458
Howell, Ex parte, App.	157	553
Hughes v. Chung Sun Tung Co., App.	154	299
Hughes v. Chung Sun Tung Co., Sup.	154	301
Hulbert v. All Night and Day Bank, App.	157	546
Hunt; McIntosh v., App.	157	839
Hunt; McIntosh v., Sup.	157	842
Hunt; Slye v., App.	154	607
Idora Park Co.; Whyte v., App.	155	1018
Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Wores, App.	155	124
Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California; Blood v., App.	157	1140
Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California; Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v., Sup.	154	834
Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California; Miller v., Sup.	156	1033
Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California; Weiser v., Sup.	157	593
Innes v. Goldwater, App.	157	18
Ives; Salter v., Sup.	155	84
Jacks; Swanton v., App.	157	11

	Vol.	Page
Jackson; Barry v., App.	157	828
Jacobs v. Vanderhurst, Sup.	154	5
Jenkins v. Locke-Paddon Co., App.	157	537
Johns v. Sanfilippo, App.	156	72
Johnson, Ex parte, App.	157	560
Johnson v. Dixon Farms Co., App.	155	134
Johnson v. Dixon Farms Co., Sup.	155	136
Johnson v. Hinkel, App.	154	487
Johnson; King v., App.	157	531
Johnson; Porter v., Sup.	156	1022
Johnson Organ & Piano Mfg. Co.; Guernsey v., App.	157	527
Jordan v. Beale, Sup.	155	990
Jordan; Film Producers v., Sup.	154	605
Jordan; Meinberg v., App.	157	1005
Jordan; Meinberg v., Sup.	157	1007
Jordan; People v., Sup.	156	451
Journeay; Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v., App.	156	999
Joy; People v., App.	157	507
Judd v. Superior Court of Humboldt County, App.	157	566
Judson Mfg. Co.; Coelho v., App.	156	1005
Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp.; Frede v., App.	157	528
Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp.; Roberts v., App.	157	511
Kaufman; Young v., Sup.	157	1007
Kehrlein-Swinerton Const. Co. v. Rapken, App.	156	972
Keiser v. Levering, App.	154	281
Keith v. Hammel, App.	154	871
Kennedy; National Lumber Co. v., App.	154	25
Kennedy Extension Gold Mining Co.; Gibson v., Sup.	156	56
Kierski v. Lick Co., App.	156	69
King v. Johnson, App.	157	531
Kinney Co.; Llewellyn Iron Works v., Sup.	155	986
Knowles; People v., App.	155	137
Knowles; People v., Sup.	155	140
Koehler v. D. Ferrari & Co., App.	156	69
Kohlberg; Merrill v., App.	155	824
Koyer v. Miner, Sup.	156	1023
Kraus; Miller v., App.	155	834
Kraus; Miller v., Sup.	155	838
Kromphold; People v., Sup.	157	599
Lachman; Lund v., App.	154	295
Lagudis v. London Assur. Corp., App.	156	68
Lancel v. Postlethwaite, Sup.	156	486
Landers v. Whitney, Sup.	154	855
Lantz v. Cole, Sup.	156	45
Lapique v. Morrison, App.	154	881
Large; Branick v., Sup.	157	238
Larkin v. Superior Court of Shasta County, Sup.	154	841
Law Union & Rock Ins. Co.; Mangrum & Otter v., Sup.	157	239
Leatham; Nicholson v., Sup.	155	98
Lehrke; McMunn v., App.	155	473
Leisle; Bier v., Sup.	156	870
Levee Dist. No. 1 of Sutter County; Southern Pac. Co. v., Sup.	156	502
Levering; Keiser v., App.	154	281
Levy; W. R. Grace & Co. v., App.	156	626
Lewis; Anderson v., App.	154	287
Lewis; Rector v., Sup.	155	75
Lick v. Anderson, App.	156	70

P.

	Vol.	Page
Lick Co.; Kierski v., App.	156	69
Lim Foon; People v., App.	155	477
Linz v. McIver & Becker, App.	156	1000
Llewellyn Iron Works v. Abbott Kinney Co., Sup.	155	986
Locke-Paddon Co.; Jenkins v., App.	157	537
Lomax Co.; Dox v., App.	156	874
London Assur. Corp.; Lagudis v., App.	156	68
London Assur. Corp.; Steil v., Sup.	155	72
Los Angeles Ry. Corp.; Wood v., Sup.	155	68
Love; People v., App.	157	9
Luchini v. Roux, App.	157	554
Lund v. Lachman, App.	154	295
Lynch; O'Hara v., Sup.	157	608
Lynip v. Alturas School Dist. of Modoc County, App.	155	109
McColgan v. Walter Magee, Inc., Sup.	155	995
McCowen; Sage Land & Improvement Co. v., App.	157	244
McDougall; Parmenter v., Sup.	156	460
McEwen v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., Sup.	155	86
McGibbon v. Schmidt, Sup.	155	460
McIntosh v. Hunt, App.	157	839
McIntosh v. Hunt, Sup.	157	842
McIver & Becker; Linz v., App.	156	1000
McLeod; People v., App.	156	970
McMillian; Hathaway v., Sup.	157	237
McMullan; Hester v., App.	157	521
McMunn v. Lehrke, App.	155	473
Magee, Inc.; McColgan v., Sup.	155	995
Mangrum & Otter v. Law Union & Rock Ins. Co., Sup.	157	239
Manning v. App Consol. Gold Min. Co., Sup.	154	301
Manning v. Broadmoor Imp. Co., App.	157	524
Marin Water & Power Co. v. Railroad Commission of State of California, Sup.	154	864
Markham; Carpenter v., Sup.	155	644
Marshal v. Popert, App.	156	881
Martha Washington Council No. 2, Daughters of Liberty of California v. Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	154	298
Martin v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., App.	156	986
Martinelli v. Morrow, Sup.	156	1017
Mathews; White v., App.	156	372
Maurer; Perich v., App.	155	471
Mayers v. San Francisco Cornice Co., App.	156	985
Meinberg v. Jordan, App.	157	1005
Meinberg v. Jordan, Sup.	157	1007
Merrill v. Kohlberg, App.	155	824
Metropolitan Contracting Co.; Barrett v., Sup.	155	645
Meyer v. Reclamation Dist. No. 17, Sup.	155	635
Miles v. Ryan, Sup.	157	5
Miller v. Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California, Sup.	156	1033
Miller v. Kraus, App.	155	834
Miller v. Kraus, Sup.	155	838
Miller; People v., Sup.	154	468
Miller; Snyder v., App.	157	22
Mills v. George A. Moore & Co., App.	155	823
Miner; Koyer v., Sup.	156	1023
Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard, Sup.	156	458
Montague; Rountree v., App.	157	623

	P. Vol.	Page
Jackson; Barry v., App.	157	828
Jacobs v. Vanderhurst, Sup.	154	5
Jenkins v. Locke-Paddon Co., App.	157	537
Johns v. Sanfilippo, App.	156	72
Johnson, Ex parte, App.	157	560
Johnson v. Dixon Farms Co., App.	155	134
Johnson v. Dixon Farms Co., Sup.	155	136
Johnson v. Hinkel, App.	154	487
Johnson; King v., App.	157	531
Johnson; Porter v., Sup.	156	1022
Johnson Organ & Piano Mfg. Co.; Guernsey v., App.	157	527
Jordan v. Beale, Sup.	155	990
Jordan; Film Producers v., Sup.	154	605
Jordan; Meinberg v., App.	157	1005
Jordan; Meinberg v., Sup.	157	1007
Jordan; People v., Sup.	156	451
Journeay; Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v., App.	156	999
Joy; People v., App.	157	507
Judd v. Superior Court of Humboldt County, App.	157	566
Judson Mfg. Co.; Coelho v., App.	156	1005
Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp.; Frede v., App.	157	528
Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp.; Roberts v., App.	157	511
Kaufman; Young v., Sup.	157	1007
Kehrlein-Swinerton Const. Co. v. Rapken, App.	156	972
Keiser v. Levering, App.	154	281
Keith v. Hammel, App.	154	871
Kennedy; National Lumber Co. v., App.	154	25
Kennedy Extension Gold Mining Co.; Gibson v., Sup.	156	56
Kierski v. Lick Co., App.	156	69
King v. Johnson, App.	157	531
Kinney Co.; Llewellyn Iron Works v., Sup.	155	986
Knowles; People v., App.	155	137
Knowles; People v., Sup.	155	140
Koehler v. D. Ferrari & Co., App.	156	69
Kohlberg; Merrill v., App.	155	824
Koyer v. Miner, Sup.	156	1023
Kraus; Miller v., App.	155	834
Kraus; Miller v., Sup.	155	838
Kromphold; People v., Sup.	157	599
Lachman; Lund v., App.	154	295
Lagudis v. London Assur. Corp., App.	156	68
Lancel v. Postlethwaite, Sup.	156	486
Landers v. Whitney, Sup.	154	855
Lantz v. Cole, Sup.	156	45
Lapique v. Morrison, App.	154	881
Large; Branick v., Sup.	157	238
Larkin v. Superior Court of Shasta County, Sup.	154	841
Law Union & Rock Ins. Co.; Mangrum & Otter v., Sup.	157	239
Leatham; Nicholson v., Sup.	155	98
Lehrke; McMunn v., App.	155	473
Leisle; Bier v., Sup.	156	870
Levee Dist. No. 1 of Sutter County; Southern Pac. Co. v., Sup.	156	502
Levering; Keiser v., App.	154	281
Levy; W. R. Grace & Co. v., App.	156	626
Lewis; Anderson v., App.	154	287
Lewis; Rector v., Sup.	155	75
Lick v. Anderson, App.	156	70

	P. Vol.	Page
Lick Co.; Kierski v., App.	156	69
Lim Foon; People v., App.	155	477
Linz v. McIver & Becker, App.	156	1000
Llewellyn Iron Works v. Abbott Kinney Co., Sup.	155	986
Locke-Paddon Co.; Jenkins v., App.	157	537
Lomax Co.; Dox v., App.	156	874
London Assur. Corp.; Lagudis v., App.	156	68
London Assur. Corp.; Steil v., Sup.	155	72
Los Angeles Ry. Corp.; Wood v., Sup.	155	68
Love; People v., App.	157	9
Luchini v. Roux, App.	157	554
Lund v. Lachman, App.	154	295
Lynch; O'Hara v., Sup.	157	608
Lynip v. Alturas School Dist. of Modoc County, App.	155	109
McColgan v. Walter Magee, Inc., Sup.	155	995
McCowen; Sage Land & Improvement Co. v., App.	157	244
McDougall; Parmenter v., Sup.	156	460
McEwen v. Occidental Life Ins. Co., Sup.	155	86
McGibbon v. Schmidt, Sup.	155	460
McIntosh v. Hunt, App.	157	839
McIntosh v. Hunt, Sup.	157	842
McIver & Becker; Linz v., App.	156	1000
McLeod; People v., App.	156	970
McMillian; Hathaway v., Sup.	157	237
McMullan; Hester v., App.	157	521
McMunn v. Lehrke, App.	155	473
Magee, Inc.; McColgan v., Sup.	155	995
Mangrum & Otter v. Law Union & Rock Ins. Co., Sup.	157	239
Manning v. App Consol. Gold Min. Co., Sup.	154	301
Manning v. Broadmoor Imp. Co., App.	157	524
Marin Water & Power Co. v. Railroad Commission of State of California, Sup.	154	864
Markham; Carpenter v., Sup.	155	644
Marshal v. Popert, App.	156	881
Martha Washington Council No. 2, Daughters of Liberty of California v. Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	154	298
Martin v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., App.	156	986
Martinelli v. Morrow, Sup.	156	1017
Mathews; White v., App.	156	372
Maurer; Perich v., App.	155	471
Mayers v. San Francisco Cornice Co., App.	156	985
Meinberg v. Jordan, App.	157	1005
Meinberg v. Jordan, Sup.	157	1007
Merrill v. Kohlberg, App.	155	824
Metropolitan Contracting Co.; Barrett v., Sup.	155	645
Meyer v. Reclamation Dist. No. 17, Sup.	155	635
Miles v. Ryan, Sup.	157	5
Miller v. Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California, Sup.	156	1033
Miller v. Kraus, App.	155	834
Miller v. Kraus, Sup.	155	838
Miller; People v., Sup.	154	468
Miller; Snyder v., App.	157	22
Mills v. George A. Moore & Co., App.	155	823
Miner; Koyer v., Sup.	156	1023
Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard, Sup.	156	458
Montague; Rountree v., App.	157	623

P.

	Vol.	Page
Moore & Co.; Mills v., App.	155	823
Morrell v. San Tomas Drying & Packing Co., App.	157
Morrison; Lapique v., App.	154	881
Morrow; Martinelli v., Sup.	156	1017
Moss v. Smith, Sup.	155	90
Mowat & Co.; Bronge v., App.	155	827
Murphy's Estate, In re, Sup.	154	839
National Ice Cream Co.; Foster v., App.	156	985
National Lumber Co. v. Kennedy, App.	154	25
Nerle; Hill v., App.	156	981
Newell v. Newell, App.	154	32
Newlands v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Sup.	154	829
Nicholson v. Leatham, Sup.	155	98
Nigro's Estate, In re, Sup.	156	1019
Nolte v. Nolte, App.	154	873
Northern Assur. Co.; Steil v., Sup.	155	72
Oakland Motor Co.; Herrick v., App.	155	1006
Obear; Healy v., App.	157	569
Obear; Healy v., Sup.	157	570
O'Brien v. Reardon, App.	155	534
Occidental Life Ins. Co.; McEwen v., Sup.	155	86
Ocean Shore R. Co.; Ginty v., Sup.	155	77
O'Connor, Ex parte, App.	155	115
Odom; Gilbert v., App.	156	989
O'Hara v. Lynch, Sup.	157	608
Oliver; People v., App.	156	1005
Orchardson v. Christie, App.	157	547
O'Reilly v. All Persons, App.	154	474
Pabst v. Shearer, Sup.	156	466
Pacheco; Sweetser v., Sup.	155	639
Pacific Coast Lumber & Mill Co.; City of Oakland v., Sup.	156	468
Pacific Coast Mail Order House v. Stillens, App.	157	539
Pacific Electric Co.; Starck v., Sup.	156	51
Pacific Rys. Advertising Co. v. Carr, App.	157	529
Pacific Suction Cleaner Co.; Gray v., Sup.	155	469
Page; Snook v., App.	155	107
Palmer v. Woodruff, App.	157	1137
Palmer Union Oil Co.; Henderson v., App.	156	65
Parker v. Bower, Sup.	156	869
Parker; Williams v., App.	157	550
Parmenter v. McDougall, Sup.	156	460
Passow & Sons v. Harris, App.	156	907
Peck; Grenfell Lumber Co. v., App.	155	1012
People v. Andrade, App.	154	283
People v. Antonetti, App.	155	141
People v. Antonetti, Sup.	155	141
People v. Bank of Shasta County, Sup.	157	606
People v. Barbera, App.	157	532
People v. Bernon, App.	155	1021
People v. Bigelow, App.	155	141
People v. Bigelow, Sup.	155	142
People v. Canfield, App.	154	33
People v. Caridis, App.	154	1061
People v. Cavallini, App.	156	73
People v. Chin You, App.	157	523
People v. Chober, App.	157	533
People v. Cornell, App.	155	1026

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Cox, App.	155	1010
People v. Dates, App.	155	112
People v. Dye, App.	154	875
People v. Ecton, App.	156	996
People v. Eilersficken, Sup.	156	458
People v. Fisher, App.	157	7
People v. Forester, App.	155	1022
People v. Fowler, App.	157	540
People v. Freeman, App.	156	994
People v. Gunn, App.	157	619
People v. Harlan, App.	156	980
People v. Jordan, Sup.	156	451
People v. Joy, App.	157	507
People v. Knowles, App.	155	137
People v. Knowles, Sup.	155	140
People v. Kromphold, Sup.	157	599
People v. Lim Foon, App.	155	477
People v. Love, App.	157	9
People v. McLeod, App.	156	970
People v. Miller, Sup.	154	468
People v. Oliver, App.	156	1005
People v. Phillips, App.	157	1003
People v. Phillips, Sup.	157	1005
People v. Pitisci, App.	157	502
People v. Ratledge, Sup.	156	455
People v. Richman, App.	155	142
People v. Rivera, App.	154	29
People v. Robbins, Sup.	154	317
People v. Sidwell, App.	154	290
People v. Solari, App.	155	141
People v. Solari, Sup.	155	141
People v. Stephens, App.	157	570
People v. Stephens, Sup.	157	572
People v. Terramorse, App.	157	1134
People v. Turco, App.	156	1001
People v. Turner, App.	154	34
People v. Turner, App.	156	381
People v. Turner, Sup.	156	382
People v. Villalovas, App.	156	982
People v. Wagner, App.	155	649
People v. Williams, Sup.	156	457
People v. Williams, App.	156	882
People v. Wilson, App.	156	377
People v. Woodson, App.	156	378
Perich v. Maurer, App.	155	471
Perkins v. Perkins, App.	154	483
Perry v. Angelus Hospital Ass'n, Sup.	156	449
Perry v. Gross, Sup.	156	1031
Pezzola; Scheeline v., App.	155	127
Pfister; Don v., Sup.	155	60
Phillips; People v., App.	157	1003
Phillips; People v., Sup.	157	1005
Pierce v. Works, Sup.	154	852
Pillsbury; Western Metal Supply Co. v., Sup.	156	491
Pitisci; People v., App.	157	502
Plant v. Plant, Sup.	154	1058
Pollok v. Evening Herald Pub. Co., App.	154	30

	P. Vol.	Page
Popert; Marshal v., App.	156	881
Porter v. General Acc., Fire & Life Assur. Corp., App.	157	825
Porter v. Johnson, Sup.	156	1022
Postlethwaite; Lancel v., Sup.	156	486
Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v. All Persons Interested, etc., App.	156	876
Prather; Ulm v., App.	154	611
Providence Oil Co. of Arizona; Dabney Oil Co. v., App.	155	114
Purcell v. Victor Power & Mining Co., App.	156	1009
Purdy; Vawter v., App.	157	556
Pythian Castle Ass'n of Sacramento v. Daroux, Sup.	157	594
Ragan v. Ragan, App.	154	479
Railroad Commission of State of California; Holabird v., Sup.	154	831
Railroad Commission of State of California; Marin Water & Power Co. v., Sup.	154	864
Raje; Cavitt v., App.	156	519
Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Woodhams, App.	156	62
Rapken; Kehrlein-Swinerton Const. Co. v., App.	156	972
Ratledge; People v., Sup.	156	455
Reardon; O'Brien v., App.	155	534
Reclamation Dist. No. 17; Meyer v., Sup.	155	635
Reclamation Dist. No. 17; Spurrier v., Sup.	155	840
Reclamation Dist. No. 1500 v. Superior Court in and for Sutter County, Sup.	154	845
Rector v. Lewis, Sup.	155	75
Rector; Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v., Sup.	156	506
R. E. Lomax Co.; Dox v., App.	156	874
Richman; People v., App.	155	142
Richmond Belt Ry.; East Shore Co. v., Sup.	155	999
Richmond Const. Co. v. Growney, App.	155	1008
Richvale Land Co.; Sweet v., App.	154	608
Rigdon v. Common Council of City of San Diego, App.	157	513
Rindge Co. v. City Council of City of Los Angeles, App.	156	975
Rivera v. Cappa, App.	156	1016
Rivera v. Cappa, Sup.	156	1017
Rivera; People v., App.	154	29
Rivergarden Farms Co.; Terry v., App.	154	476
Roach; Crane v., App.	156	375
Robbins; People v., Sup.	154	317
Roberts v. Buckingham, Sup.	156	1018
Roberts; Gordon v., App.	157	15
Roberts v. Justice's Court of Los Angeles Tp., App.	157	511
Robertson v. Ballou, App.	157	523
Robson v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	154	8
Roche v. Superior Court in and for San Diego County, App.	157	830
Rock v. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., Sup.	156	1029
Rolph; Spader v., App.	156	977
Rosenthal v. Bauer, App.	157	1137
Rossi v. Ghiotto, App.	156	974
Round Mountain Citrus Farm Co.; Sample v., App.	156	983
Rountree v. Montague, App.	157	623
Roux; Luchini v., App.	157	554
Roystone Co. v. Darling, Sup.	154	15
Rucker v. Carpenter, App.	157	524
Ruggles; Hassey v., App.	156	989
Ryan; Miles v., Sup.	157	5
Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Rector, Sup.	156	506

P.

	Vol.	Page
Sage Land & Improvement Co. v. McCowen, App.	157	244
St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	157	247
Salfield v. Cohn, App.	155	1007
Salter v. Ives, Sup.	155	84
Sample v. Round Mountain Citrus Farm Co., App.	156	983
San Bernardino County v. State Board of Equalization of California, Sup.	155	458
San Dimas Quarry Co. v. American Surety Co. of New York, App.	157	548
Sanfilippo; Johns v., App.	156	72
San Francisco Cornice Co.; Mayers v., App.	156	985
San Francisco & O. Terminal Rys. v. Superior Court of Alameda County, Sup.	157	604
Santa Cruz County; Welch v., App.	156	1003
San Tomas Drying & Packing Co.; Morrell v., App.	157	818
Savings Union Bank & Trust Co.; Crowley v., App.	157	516
Sbrana; Brizzolara v., App.	156	1198
Scheafer v. Herman, Sup.	155	1084
Scheeline v. Pezzola, App.	155	127
Schmidt v. Bekins Van & Storage Co. of San Francisco, App.	155	647
Schmidt; McGibbon v., Sup.	155	460
Schnerr; Cox v., Sup.	156	509
Schwartz, In re, Sup.	154	304
Scott, In re, Sup.	156	872
Scott's Estate, In re, Sup.	157	242
Seberg v. Fleishhacker, Sup.	156	55
Security Sav. Bank; State v., App.	154	1070
Security Trust & Savings Bank; Bryson v., App.	156	987
Shea; Torrey v., App.	155	820
Shea; Wilson v., App.	157	543
Shearer; Pabst v., Sup.	156	466
Shields, In re, Sup.	156	1033
Shutan; Dye v., Sup.	156	464
Sidwell; People v., App.	154	290
Simmons v. Superior Court in and for San Diego County, App.	157	817
Slye v. Hunt, App.	154	607
Smith; Calara Valley Realty Co. v., App.	156	369
Smith v. Galbreath, Sup.	157	242
Smith; Moss v., Sup.	155	90
Snook v. Page, App.	155	107
Snyder v. Miller, App.	157	22
Soale; Hilborn v., App.	155	130
Solari; People v., App.	155	141
Solari; People v., Sup.	155	141
Southern Pac. Co.; Bossert v., Sup.	157	597
Southern Pac. Co. v. Levee Dist. No. 1 of Sutter County, Sup.	156	502
Southern Pac. Co.; St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v., App.	157	247
Southern Pac. R. Co.; East San Mateo Land Co. v., App.	157	634
Spader v. Rolph, App.	156	977
Sprague Canning Machinery Co. v. Western Ranching Corp., App.	155	1017
Spurrier v. Reclamation Dist. No. 17, Sup.	155	840
Standard American Dredging Co. v. City of Oakland, App.	157	833
Standard Lumber & Wrecking Co.; White v., App.	157	544
Starck v. Pacific Electric Co., Sup.	156	51
State v. Security Sav. Bank, App.	154	1070
State Board of Equalization of California; San Bernardino County v., Sup.	155	458
Steil v. London Assur. Corp., Sup.	155	72
Steil v. Northern Assur. Co., Sup.	155	72

P.

	Vol.	Page
Steil v. Sun Ins. Office of London, Sup.	155	72
Stephens; People v., App.	157	570
Stephens; People v., Sup.	157	572
Sterling Laundry Co.; Guyer v., Sup.	154	1057
Stillens; Pacific Coast Mail Order House v., App.	157	539
Stoff v. Erken, Sup.	156	1033
Stone; Alexander v., App.	156	998
Stone; Green v., Sup.	155	992
Stone's Estate, In re, Sup.	155	992
Strang; Austin v., App.	157	1002
Strong's Estate, In re, Sup.	156	1026
Stroud v. Fairbanks, App.	154	282
Sun Ins. Office of London; Steil v., Sup.	155	72
Sunset Land & Water Co.; Bradford v., App.	157	20
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Robson v., Sup.	154	8
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Sutter St. Ry. Co. v., Sup.	155	469
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; United Railroads of San Francisco v., Sup.	155	463
Superior Court in and for San Diego County; Roche v., App.	157	830
Superior Court in and for San Diego County; Simmons v., App.	157	817
Superior Court in and for Sutter County; Reclamation Dist. No. 1500 v., Sup.	154	845
Superior Court of Alameda County; San Francisco & O. Terminal Rys. v., Sup.	157	604
Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco; Martha Washington Council No. 2, Daughters of Liberty of California v., App.	154	298
Superior Court of California, in and for Los Angeles County; American Exch. Nat. Bank of Duluth v., App.	154	279
Superior Court of Humboldt County; Judd v., App.	157	566
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Newlands v., Sup.	154	829
Superior Court of Shasta County; Larkin v., Sup.	154	841
Sutter St. Ry. Co. v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	155	469
Swanston; City of Sacramento v., App.	155	101
Swanton v. Jacks, App.	157	11
Sweet v. Richvale Land Co., App.	154	608
Sweetser v. Pacheco, Sup.	155	639
Taft v. Washington, App.	154	1073
Teague v. Hall, Sup.	154	851
Tehama County Tel. Co.; Bloxham v., App.	155	654
Terramorse; People v., App.	157	1134
Terry v. Rivergarden Farms Co., App.	154	476
Thomas v. Anthony, App.	157	823
Thompson v. Davis, Sup.	157	595
Thornber v. Hart, App.	155	99
Thorstensen; Ghiselli v., App.	155	1015
Tilton v. Decker, Sup.	154	860
Tingey v. Callahan Const. Co., App.	154	28
Torrey v. Shea, App.	155	820
Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn.; Rock v., Sup.	156	1029
Tucker v. United Railroads of San Francisco, Sup.	154	835
Turco; People v., App.	156	1001
Turner; People v., App.	154	34
Turner; People v., App.	156	381

	Vol.	P. Page
Turner; People v., Sup.	156	382
Turner v. Wilson, Sup.	154	2
Tweedale v. Barnett, Sup.	156	483
Udell, Ex parte, Sup.	154	23
Ulm v. Prather, App.	154	611
Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v. Dickinson, App.	157	615
Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v. Ensign-Baker Refining Co., App.	157	613
Union Trust Co. of San Francisco; Gray v., Sup.	154	306
Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v. Journeay, App.	156	999
United Motor San Francisco Co. v. Callander, App.	157	561
United Railroads of San Francisco v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	155	463
United Railroads of San Francisco; Tucker v., Sup.	154	835
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co.; Hammond v., App.	155	1023
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co.; Martin v., App.	156	986
Vanderhurst; Jacobs v., Sup.	154	5
Vanderhurst's Estate, In re, Sup.	154	5
Vawter v. Purdy, App.	157	556
Victor Power & Mining Co.; Purcell v., App.	156	1009
Villalovas; People v., App.	156	982
Wagner; People v., App.	155	649
Walter Magee, Inc.; McColgan v., Sup.	155	995
Washington; Taft v., App.	154	1073
Weiser v. Industrial Acc. Commission of State of California, Sup.	157	593
Weissberger; Dufour v., Sup.	155	984
Welbanks & Co.; Griffith v., App.	155	120
Welch v. Santa Cruz County, App.	156	1003
Wenks v. Gehring, Sup.	154	24
Wenks' Estate, In re, Sup.	154	24
Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, Sup.	156	491
Western Ranching Corp.; Sprague Canning Machinery Co. v., App.	155	1017
White v. Mathews, App.	156	372
White v. Standard Lumber & Wrecking Co., App.	157	544
Whitney; Landers v., Sup.	154	855
Whitney's Estate, In re, Sup.	154	855
Whitten v. Dabney, two cases, Sup.	154	312
Whyte v. Idora Park Co., App.	155	1018
Wilcox v. Wilcox, Sup.	155	95
Wiley B. Allen Co. v. Edwards, App.	154	1066
Wilkinson; Dolbear v., Sup.	156	488
Willard-Slater Co.; Fountain v., Sup.	155	630
Williams v. Carver, Sup.	154	472
Williams v. Parker, App.	157	550
Williams; People v., App.	156	882
Williams; People v., Sup.	156	457
Willis, Ex parte, App.	157	819
Wills v. E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Co., App.	154	613
Wilson, Ex parte, App.	157	529
Wilson; Bell v., Sup.	155	625
Wilson v. District Council of Sheet Metal Workers of State of California, App.	157	629
Wilson v. Hotchkiss, Sup.	154	1
Wilson; People v., App.	156	377
Wilson v. Shea, App.	157	543
Wilson; Turner v., Sup.	154	2
Windemere Hotel Apartment Co.; Fox v., App.	157	820
Wood v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., Sup.	155	68

P.

	Vol.	Page
Woodhams; Ransome-Crummey Co. v., App.	156	62
Wood Lumber & Mill Co.; Wills v., App.	154	613
Woodruff v. Colyear, Sup.	156	475
Woodruff; Palmer v., App.	157	1137
Woodson; People v., App.	156	378
Worden v. Central Fireproof Bldg. Co., Sup.	155	839
Wores; Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v., App.	155	124
Works; Pierce v., Sup.	154	852
Wrenn Inv. Co.; Flickinger v., Sup.	155	627
W. R. Grace & Co. v. Levy, App.	156	626
Wright; Hellings v., App.	156	365
Young; Foster v., Sup.	156	476
Young v. Kaufman, Sup.	157	1007
Zimmerman; Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v., App.	157	509

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

154 PACIFIC REPORTER

(171 Cal. 617)

WILSON v. HOTCHKISS. (S. F. 6786.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1915. Rehearing Denied Jan. 20, 1916.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⟸89 — SALE OF GOODS—ACCEPTANCE—WORDS.

Under the statute of frauds providing that sales of personal property for a price of $200 or more shall be invalid unless there be some written memorandum, except where the buyer, accepts part of the goods, the mere words of the buyer, who was already the pledgee in possession, or proof of his acts of dominion over the property inconsistent with his former rights as pledgee, might establish a transfer of possession from that of a pledgee to that of complete ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 165–173; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 89.]

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⟸89 — SALE OF GOODS—POSSESSION.

Where sale of personal property is made to a buyer in possession, the statute of frauds does not require him to quit it and to retake possession as the new owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 165–173; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 89.]

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⟸159 — SALE OF GOODS — TRANSFER OF POSSESSION — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for the price agreed on a parol sale of stock for a price more than $200, to a buyer already in possession as pledgee, evidence held to make the buyer's acceptance of possession as complete owner a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 378; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 159.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Virginia E. Wilson against W. J. Hotchkiss. Judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied, and defendant appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Titus, Creed & Dall, of San Francisco, for appellant. Franklin P. Bull, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The first trial of this cause resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Defendant's appeal was considered by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District, where every legal consideration pressed upon the attention of that court is clearly, fully, and satisfactorily disposed of. Wilson v. Hotchkiss, 21 Cal. App. 392, 132 Pac. 88. That court very properly ordered a reversal of the judgment and a new trial for the failure of the trial court to give any instructions touching the statute of frauds and its applicability to the contract under consideration. Upon the new trial such instructions were given. Again the verdict of the jury was for plaintiff, and once more defendant appeals. It may not be questioned but that the court quite fully and quite accurately instructed the jury as to the nature of the acts by a vendee under a parol contract within the statute of frauds which would be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of that statute.

[1, 2] But complaint is made over the court's refusal to give the following:

"Mere words are not sufficient to prove a receipt or acceptance of the personal property to take an oral contract of sale of personal property, for a price exceeding $200, out of the statute of frauds."

It is said that this refused instruction embodies an unquestioned principle of law, first declared in New York in Shindler v. Houston, 1 N. Y. 261, 49 Am. Dec. 316, and approved in this state in the very early cases of Gardet v. Belknap, 1 Cal. 399, and Malone v. Plato, 22 Cal. 103. These cases and the principle of law for which appellant contends therefore demand examination. Shindler v. Houston was a sale by oral contract of lumber in the possession of the vendor, and piled on a dock. Standing in front of the lumber, the vendor and the vendee agreed upon the price and the plaintiff then said "the lumber is yours." There was absolutely no other delivery, no change of possession, and the true meaning of the decision is that where delivery and change of possession are necessary to comply with the statute of frauds, an oral declaration does not alone constitute such delivery. To precisely the same effect is Gardet v. Belknap, where there was not the slightest pretense that the brandy which the defendant orally purchased had ever been removed from the plaintiff's store, or that the defendant had exercised or attempted to exercise any dominion over it, the plaintiff resting his case solely upon the oral declaration of the vendee at the time of the purchase and as a part of the contract of purchase. In Malone v. Plato defendant was charged with having purchased horses of the plaintiff. The transaction rested wholly in parol, defendant saying: "I will take them. I will be back in half an hour and pay for them." The horses remained in plaintiff's stable. Defendant refused to complete this oral contract, and pleaded the statute of frauds. This court again said that it appears to be entirely settled that to comply with the requirements of the statute of frauds "the transfer of possession must be evidenced by acts and cannot be effected by mere words." With the soundness of these declarations as bearing upon the facts to which they were applied, no criticism can be made. But what were the essential facts? They were that for their validity each contract required a delivery of the article sold, and the holding is merely that the language of the vendor that "the property is yours," or the language of the vendee, "I will take the property," does not measure up to the requirement of the statute.

This principle and these decisions have no bearing on or relationship to cases such as the one at bar—cases where the actual possession is in the vendee and the real question is whether that possession has been transformed from that of bailment or pledge to that of complete ownership. Where a sale is made to a vendee in possession, whatever may have been the nature of his prior possession, the law does not require a quitting of it and a retaking of possession as the new owner. Snider v. Thrall, 56 Wis. 674, 14 N. W. 814. All that is required is evidence showing that the possession is retained by the vendee in his new capacity of owner. And what evidence will establish this? Manifestly it may be established by proof of acts of dominion over the property inconsistent with his former holding as bailee or pledgee, but equally may it be established by his declarations that he so holds the property as owner. On principle this must be so, for it would indeed be strange if a pledgee, formally reciting the oral contract by which he had purchased the property and declaring that he held possession of it no longer as pledgee but as absolute owner, could have the evidence of these declarations excluded from the consideration of the jury upon the ground that they were mere declarations and not a part of his acts or conduct in dealing with the property. They are essentially a part of his acts and conduct, and so we find it declared as "well settled that any acts of the parties indicative of ownership by the vendee may be given in evidence to show the receipt and acceptance of the goods to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Conduct, acts, and declarations of the purchaser may be given in evidence for that purpose." Garfield v. Paris, 96 U. S. 557, 24 L. Ed. 821. And without multiplying citations, reference may be made to Browne Statute of Frauds, § 321e, where he states:

"The conduct of the buyer showing an acceptance * * * may be drawn * * * from what he says."

And again quoting from the same author, page 433, footnote:

"An examination of the cases will show that evidence has uniformly been received even in New York of the conduct of the parties; i. e., what they did and said, without in any way discriminating between acts of doing and acts of saying."

See, also, Mecham Sales, § 382; Williston Sales, § 87. It follows that the court ruled correctly in refusing to give the proffered instruction.

[3] Plaintiff's evidence went to establish that her assignor in selling his stock ceased to have any connection with the corporation and so forfeited his position as manager; that he was temporarily retained by the defendant purchaser in his managerial position at an increased compensation, the increase being paid by the defendant himself; that defendant was the pledgee of the stock at the time of the sale; that the vendor was jointly liable with the vendee upon certain promissory notes; that as a part of the consideration the vendor was to be released from liability on those notes; that in fact the vendee did pay those notes and never made demand upon the vendor for recoupment; that the vendee publicly declared that he had bought the vendor's stock; and that the vendor no longer had any interest in the company. Here certainly is enough and more than enough evidence to justify the submission of the cause to the jury, whose verdict will not here be disturbed. Shumway v. Rutter, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 443, 19 Am. Dec. 340.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

171 Cal. 600

TURNER v. WILSON. (Sac. 2417.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1915.)

1. ELECTIONS ⇐194 — BALLOTS — DISTINGUISHING MARKS.

Under Pol. Code, § 1211, subd. 4, declaring that no mark upon a ballot which is unauthorized, shall be held to invalidate it unless placed thereon to identify the ballot, ballots will not be refused because a voter, after making pencil crosses, had stamped a cross over such crosses, or because he stamped a cross in the voting squares opposite a blank space under the name of a candidate for Governor, nor because he stamped crosses in the voting squares opposite a proposition submitted; for the purpose of the section which was added in 1903 was to prevent the rejection of ballots containing unauthorized marks, not the result of an intent on the part of the voter to identify his ballot.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⇐194.]

2. ELECTIONS ⟸186—BALLOTS—MARKS.
As under Pol. Code, § 1211, subd. 1, a cross is not essential in the case of a name written on a ballot, the fact that a voter, after writing in a name, placed a cross opposite it, will not warrant the rejection of the ballot.
[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 159; Dec. Dig. ⟸186.]

3. ELECTIONS ⟸186 — BALLOTS — DISTINGUISHING MARKS.
Because a voter wrote in the words "Yes" or "No" in the voting squares opposite a bond proposition, instead of stamping such squares with the appropriate cross, will not warrant the rejection of the entire ballot, whatever the effect may be on the vote as to the bonds.
[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 159; Dec. Dig. ⟸186.]

4. ELECTIONS ⟸305 — ELECTION CONTEST — DETERMINATION.
Where the finding that the contestee received the highest number of votes was correct, it will not be disturbed because the finding as to the number of votes received by each candidate was incorrect.
[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 317–332; Dec. Dig. ⟸305.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Election contest by J. L. Turner, Jr., against W. C. Wilson. There was a judgment for contestee, and contestant appealed. The judgment of affirmance by the District Court of Appeal was vacated, and the cause transferred to the Supreme Court. Affirmed.

Ostrander, Tuttle & Ostrander, of Merced, for appellant. F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for respondent. Thomas P. Boyd, of San Rafael, and W. H. Early, of Petaluma, amici curiæ.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action to determine whether the contestant or contestee was elected constable of township No. 4, Merced county, at the election on November 3, 1914. At the canvass of the votes by the board of supervisors the return made was that each candidate had received 168 votes, and that neither of them was elected. At the hearing in the superior court it was found that contestee (Wilson) had received 165 votes and the contestant (Turner) 160 votes, and it was there adjudged that the contestee was elected. The contestant appeals from the judgment on a bill of exceptions. At the election contestant's name was the only name printed on the ballot for the office of constable; the supporters of contestee being able to express their preference only by writing his name upon the ballot.

[1] 1. This cause was originally decided by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District, which, in view of the provisions of our Constitution, has appellate jurisdiction in the matter of election contests. Upon petition for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, the decision of the latter court was vacated, and the cause transferred to this court, the members of this court not being satisfied that the views of the District Court of Appeal as to the rejection by the trial court of certain ballots on the ground that the same contained distinguishing marks were correct.

The ballot marked "Contestee's Objection No. 1," containing a vote for Turner, was rejected by the trial court because of the fact that the voter had stamped a cross in the voting square opposite the blank space under the name "Hiram W. Johnson," candidate for Governor.

The ballot marked "Contestee's Objection No. 9," containing a vote for Turner, was rejected because of a cross stamped by the voter in the voting square opposite the blank space under the name of "Lucien Shaw," candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court.

The ballot marked "Contestee's Objection No. 12," containing a vote for Turner, was rejected because of such a cross in the voting square opposite the blank space under the name of "U. S. Webb," candidate for Attorney General.

The ballot marked "Contestee's Objection No. 26," containing a vote for Turner, was rejected because of a similar cross placed in the voting square opposite the blank space under the name of "William M. Conley," candidate for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

The ballot marked "Contestee's Objection No. 8," containing a vote for Turner, was rejected because the voter, having written in the name of "L. S. Cardwell" as a candidate for justice of the peace in the blank space left for that purpose on the ballot, had first placed a pencil cross in the blank space provided for that purpose, and had then stamped over said pencil cross a cross with the stamp.

The ballot marked "Contestee's Objection No. 19," containing a vote for Turner, was rejected because the voter had marked his cross with a pencil in the proper place in the case of the first four offices on the ballot, and then, apparently perceiving his mistake, had used the voting stamp for the whole of his ballot, placing the stamped crosses in the case of the candidates already marked with pencil over the pencil crosses.

The ballot marked "Contestee's Objection No. 25," containing a vote for Turner, was rejected because the voter had apparently stamped a cross in each of the voting squares of the twenty-second proposition, there being a cross opposite "Yes," and also a cross opposite "No."

The District Court of Appeal concluded that the action of the trial court in rejecting these ballots was correct, except in the case of the ballot marked "Contestee's Objection No. 8."

We are satisfied that none of these ballots should have been rejected, and that all of them should have been counted for Turner.

In the year 1903 our election law relating to the canvass of votes and marked or spoiled ballots was amended by the addition of subdivision 4 to section 1211, Political Code, reading as follows:

"No mark upon a ballot which is unauthorized by this act shall be held to invalidate such ballot, unless it shall appear that such mark was placed thereon by the voter for the purpose of identifying such ballot."

This provision has ever since been in force. The only purpose thereof was to prevent the rejection of ballots containing some unauthorized mark which was not the result of an intent on the part of the voter to identify his ballot. Theretofore the very stringent provisions regarding the marking and rejecting of ballots had been so construed by the courts as to result in the exclusion of numerous such ballots, although it was perfectly clear from an inspection of the ballots themselves that the mark was made without evil intent of any kind. The effect of the amendment is that, where there is no evidence whatever before the trial court, other than the ballot itself, unless such ballot is so marked as to warrant an inference by the trial court that the marking was designedly made by the voter for the purpose of identifying his ballot, the ballot must not be rejected on the ground that it bears a distinguishing mark. We so intimated in withholding our approval of a portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal in Gray v. O'Banion, 23 Cal. App. 468, 479, 138 Pac. 977, 981, citing this very provision of our law. Decisions relative to distinguishing marks rendered prior to the amendment we have referred to must be read in the light of the law as it then was. We find on none of the seven ballots to which we have referred anything warranting the inference that the unauthorized mark was placed thereon by the voter for the purpose of identifying the ballot, and there was no other evidence as to the intent of those marking the ballots. Counting these 7 ballots for Turner would give Wilson 165, and Turner 167.

2. Certain ballots counted by the trial court for Wilson, marked "Contestant's Objections A, E, I, J, M, P, U, X, A4, A5, A8, A9, and A10," were properly so counted. As to all of these except the ballot marked "Contestant's Objection P" we are satisfied with the views expressed by the District Court of Appeal in its opinion in this case. The District Court of Appeal held that the trial court should have rejected said ballot "P" on the ground that the same was really a vote for "W. E. Walson" instead of "Wilson," but an inspection of the ballot satisfies us that the trial court was warranted in concluding that the second letter was an "I" instead of an "A," making the name "Wilson." The same may be said as to certain ballots claimed to read "Welson" instead of "Wilson."

3. We have examined the other ballots referred to in the bill of exceptions as to which objections were made, and from our examination we have concluded as follows: The ballot marked "Contestant's Objection D," containing a vote for Wilson, which was rejected by the trial court, should have been counted for Wilson. The same is true of ballots marked "K, L, N, Q, S, A2, and A3." It is obvious from the inspection of the ballot that the alleged identification mark on ballot "D" was not placed thereon with any intent to identify the ballot.

[2] The same is true of the pencil cross on ballot "L," opposite the name of "W. C. Wilson," written in by the voter. A cross is not essential in the case of a name written on the ballot (see subdivision 1, § 1211, Pol. Code), and the pencil cross cannot invalidate unless it appears that it was placed there for the purpose of identifying the ballot. The same is true of ballot "N." The name written on ballot "K" for constable was clearly that of "Wilson." Ballot "Q" is exactly like ballot "D." Ballot "S" furnishes no support for the conclusion that the pencil mark was placed there for the purpose of identifying the ballot. Ballots "A2 and A3" contain nothing making it appear that the alleged distinguishing marks thereon were placed thereon by the voter for the purpose of identifying the ballots. This makes 8 additional votes for Wilson, bringing his vote to 173.

[3] 4. Ballots marked "Contestee's Objections 16 and 17," each of which contained a vote for Turner, were rejected by the trial court. They should have been counted for Turner. In one case the voter had written in one of the voting squares provided for the vote on certain bond questions the word "Yes"; there being four such propositions so voted on by him. In the other case the voter had attempted to vote on such propositions by writing the word "No" in said voting squares. Whatever may be held to be the effect of this manner of voting on these particular propositions, it is perfectly clear that the word "Yes" in the one case and the word "No" in the other case were not placed on the ballot by the voter for the purpose of identifying his ballot. The addition of these two votes makes Turner's vote 169. It is to be noted that, in so far as alleged distinguishing marks are concerned, there was no evidence whatever before the court as to the intention of the voter saving and excepting the ballot itself. As to all of the ballots referred to in the bill of exceptions that we have not particularly discussed or mentioned we find that the trial court committed no error.

[4] There is no necessity for a new trial of this case. The bill of exceptions purports to contain an appropriate reference to all the ballots to which objection was made and the rulings of the court thereon, and it is clear that, counting such ballots as should be counted for Wilson and such ballots as should be counted for Turner, and excluding all ballots that should not be counted for either party, Wilson has 173 votes, and Turner 169 votes. The findings that contestee did receive the highest number of votes cast in such judicial township for said office of constable, and that it is not true that contestant received a majority of said votes, are fully supported by the evidence, and the mere fact that the findings are incorrect as to the exact number of votes received by each of the parties does not require a reversal.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

SHAW, J. I concur in the opinion of the CHIEF JUSTICE. I think, however, that something additional should be said in regard to the seeming conflict between subdivisions 4 of section 1211 of the Political Code and the preceding portions of the chapter bearing on the subject of improper marks on the ballot.

With respect to all these inconsistencies the case calls for the application of the rule expressed in section 4484 of the Political Code that, where there are conflicting provisions in different sections of the same chapter or article, "the provisions of the sections last in numerical order must prevail, unless such construction is inconsistent with the meaning of such chapter or article." The rule is founded in reason, and it exists independently of the Code. It therefore for like reasons applies to conflicting provisions of different subdivisions of a section. 1 Suth. Stat. Const. § 268.

There is also the rule that specific provisions relating to a particular branch of a subject must govern that branch, "as against general provisions in other parts of the statute, although the latter, standing alone, would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular provisions relate." Harrigan v. Home Ins. Co., 128 Cal. 537, 58 Pac. 180, 61 Pac. 99; Franzden v. San Diego, 101 Cal. 321, 35 Pac. 897; Earl v. Bowen, 146 Cal. 762, 81 Pac. 133; Healy v. Superior Court, 127 Cal. 662, 60 Pac. 428.

Since subdivision 4 is later in numerical order than any of the provisions conflicting therewith, it must, under the rule first stated, prevail over them, and, since it specifically provides that the intention of the voter to identify his ballot must appear before it could be declared invalid because of an unauthorized mark thereon, and there is no other specific provision on that precise subject, it must govern that subject, under the rule last stated.

Applying these rules, we will see that the provision of subdivision 1 of section 1211 declaring that "in canvassing the votes any ballot which is not made as provided in this act shall be void" must yield to the later and specific provision of subdivision 4 which requires that the intention on the part of the voter to identify the ballot must appear. Similar reasons may be given regarding all of the other provisions supposed to conflict with subdivision 4 aforesaid.

It may be further said, with respect to the provision of subdivision 8 of section 1197, as amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 404), and of subdivision 10 of the amendments of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 1157) and 1915 (St. 1915, p. 272), providing that there shall be printed on the ballot certain instructions to voters, one of which is that distinguishing marks and erasures make the ballot void is not an enactment of substantive law at all, but a mere provision that certain cautions shall be given to the voter himself. These instructions to voters have been carried down in the same form from the time when the statute provided that every distinguishing mark should invalidate the ballot, and it apparently has not been perceived that subdivision 4 aforesaid changes the rule in that respect.

171 Cal. 553

In re VANDERHURST'S ESTATE. JACOBS et al. v. VANDERHURST et al.

(S. F. 7258.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1915. Modification of Opinion Jan. 12, 1916.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1178—REVIEW—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION.

While Code Civ. Proc. § 1714, abolished new trials in probate proceedings except in will contests, an appellate court may, on appeal from a decree of distribution, order the doing of anything which the probate court should have done in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4604–4620; Dec. Dig. ⇐1178.]

2. WILLS ⇐761 — CONSTRUCTION — ADMISSIBILITY OF ACCOUNTS.

A will declared that the testator had made advances to his deceased son, and to the son's children as shown by his books of account, that he had made advances to other children, as evidenced by their notes, and that it was the testator's will that such advances should be deducted from the shares of such children. The books of account showed payment by the testator of monthly allowances to his two daughters, and also contained credits in favor of the daughters, practically balancing their accounts. The daughters admitted that they had not made any payments to the testator. Held, that where there were no notes of the daughters showing advancements, the books of account were not admissible to charge them with the amounts paid as monthly allowances, the credits being disallowed, for the description of the notes were sufficiently definite to be binding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1968, 1969; Dec. Dig. ⇐761.]

3. WILLS ⇐759—LEGACIES—ADEMPTION.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1351, 1397, declaring that advancements shall not be taken as ademption of general legacies unless such intention is expressed, and that all gifts are made as advancements if expressed in the gift to be so made, payments by testator of monthly allowances to his daughters, which were not evidenced by promissory notes, cannot be treated as advancements, where the testator declared that the advancements to his children were evidenced by notes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1961–1966; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃759.]

4. WILLS ⊂⊃759 — ADVANCEMENTS — ADEMPTION.

Advancements made before a will was executed cannot be considered in distributing the estate, unless specified in the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1961–1966; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃759.]

5. WILLS ⊂⊃487 — CONSTRUCTION — FORMAL WILLS.

In construing a will, a former will which was revoked cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1023, 1026–1032; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃487.]

6. WILLS ⊂⊃719—"CONTESTS"—WHAT ARE.

That legatees opposed the petition of other legatees for distribution, claiming that they were not entitled to share under the will, does not show a contest of the will, but a proceeding for its construction; therefore the opponents will not be denied right to take under a provision, if any legatee or devisee should contest the will, his share should be $1.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1722–1725; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃719.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contest.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of William Vanderhurst, deceased. Petition by Mary A. Jacobs and another for distribution, opposed by William M. Vanderhurst and another. From the decree of distribution, petitioners appeal. Reversed.

Joseph J. Webb, of San Francisco (John K. Alexander, of Salinas, of counsel), for appellants. Vincent Surr, of San Francisco, and J. A. Bardin, of Salinas, for respondents. Alexander & Alexander, of Salinas, for executors.

MELVIN, J. Mary A. Jacobs and Lillian M. Vanderhurst, daughters of William Vanderhurst, deceased, appeal from a decree of distribution in the estate of said deceased person.

The principal matter involved in this appeal is the action of the probate court in charging the two appellants with certain advancements. Miss Vanderhurst was thus debited with a sum in excess of $9,000 and Mrs. Jacobs with something over $2,000.

[1] Respondents make a preliminary objection to the consideration of the appeal. They say that appellants may only receive the aid which they seek by a new trial; that motions for new trial have been abolished in probate proceedings except in will contests (section 1714, Code Civ. Proc.), and that on an appeal from a decree of distribution the court may not order a retrial of the issues, but is limited to discovery of discrepancies (if any exist) between the findings and the decree and a modification of the decree to conform to the findings. The cited section as amended merely fixes the procedure in a case of this sort by doing away with the cumbersome process of a motion for a new trial. It does not deprive this court of the right to examine the record and to direct the lower court to do anything which may be proper in the exercise of its probate jurisdiction. The amendment to section 1714, Code of Civil Procedure, merely conformed to the declarations of this court that usually in probate litigation motions for new trials and appeals therefrom needlessly raised difficult questions. Estate of Geary, 146 Cal. 107, 79 Pac. 855; Estate of Franklin, 133 Cal. 587, 65 Pac. 1081.

[2] William Vanderhurst originally had a family of seven children. When his will was made in 1912, two of his sons had died, leaving children. The will was an elaborate one. After providing for certain specific legacies and gifts it bequeathed and devised to each living child one-seventh of the residue, and provided for two trusts, each of one-seventh of the said residue, for the benefit of the children of the two deceased sons. The tenth paragraph was the one about which the disagreement arose. It was as follows:

"Inasmuch as I have from time to time, made advances to my deceased son Robert Lee Vanderhurst, and to his three children, named herein, amounting to the full sum of $4,954.50, as is shown by my books of account, and to others of my children, which advances to them, is represented by their promissory notes now in my possession: It is my will, intention and desire that in the settlement and distribution of my estate, that the amounts so advanced by me as herein set forth, to my said children and grandchildren, shall be deducted from any money or other property that would come to them, or either of them, and that represented by the trust estate mentioned and described in the 'eighth' and 'ninth' sub-divisions of this my last will, and that the surplus thus arising, be given and distributed to my children, and said trustees for my grandchildren, in the same shares and proportions as I have indicated in and by this my will, to the end that none of my children or grandchildren shall have or receive more than an equal share of my estate."

The court interpreted this provision as meaning that the books of account might be examined for all purposes, and that all charges made therein against the two daughters might be regarded as advancements to them. The books, despite the objections of counsel for appellants, were admitted in evidence, not only to show the charges against Robert Lee Vanderhurst and his children and against those heirs who had given promissory notes, but for all purposes. The accounts showed that to each of the daughters William Vanderhurst had given a monthly allowance, and had credited each with a like amount, so that according to the books their accounts were practically closed; the balances being merely nominal. The court, however, permitted evidence, which was drawn by respondents from the appellants themselves, that they had paid no money to their father, and thereupon the court disregarded the credits, but charged the two daughters with all sums received from their father. Commenting upon this ruling, counsel for respondents says in his brief:

"Indeed, were the will silent as to the father's full intent to treat his children with exact justice, a stranger might blunder into the error of supposing that the artificial credits shown in the ledger were placed there to absolve these fair debtors from their obligations."

We fail to see how any other conclusion could be reached, after reading the will and examining the accounts, than that the testator intended to do that very thing—"to absolve" his daughters from all charges. But under the interpretation of the tenth clause of the will which we feel bound to give, the book of account was not admissible for the purpose of showing advancements to the appellants. The language of the will very aptly limits and specifies funds to be charged with payments made in the testator's lifetime as advancements. These are the trust estate created for the benefit of Robert Lee Vanderhurst's children, and the shares of those who had given notes to the testator. By no method of construction which we are able to discover may the language be given any other meaning. Advancements are to be charged against the shares of Robert Lee Vanderhurst and his children in accordance with the book accounts, and all notes are to be regarded as evidences of advancements. Respondents contend that the closing words of the paragraph compel a different interpretation. By the first part of the tenth paragraph the testator had provided a method of determining the amounts to be subtracted before division of the property and the words "to the end that none of my children or grandchildren shall have or receive more than an equal share of my estate" merely declare his purpose in charging these advancements. The mere fact that the court believed the method chosen might not achieve the purposed end would not justify charges against certain heirs which were not directed in the will. Such impositions may not be made by the court in an effort to achieve equal distribution. To permit such a course would be equivalent to allowing the court to make a will for the decedent. If the closing words of the tenth clause would justify the court in going to such lengths to achieve equal distribution, then might the specific legacies to the daughters with like reason be disregarded, because such legacies, in a sense, were opposed to an evenly divided bestowal of decedent's estate.

[3] Respondents contend that the descriptions of the notes contained in the will are too vague to be of binding force, and in this behalf they cite certain cases. One of these is Estate of Plumel, 151 Cal. 82, 90 Pac. 192, 121 Am. St. Rep. 100, which correctly states the rule that reference in a will may be of such character as to exclude parol testimony; as, where it is to papers not yet existent, or where the reference is so vague as to be inapplicable to any particular instrument. But this court adopts the language of the Court of Appeals of New York in Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369, to the effect that any testamentary document may be incorporated into a will by reference, provided the language of the will clearly identifies the paper or renders it capable of identification. And the court in the Plumel matter was discussing not a mere evidence of debt, but a solemn instrument of testamentary nature, which was held to be incorporated into another such writing by reference. The will specified "notes now in my possession." Surely such allusion to notes was capable of being made certain. It was quite as definite as the reference to "books of account." We find no language in the will, therefore, which justifies the action of the court in charging the shares of Mrs. Jacobs and Miss Vanderhurst in their father's estate with debits shown on the books of account, or in striking out credits formally entered by Mr. William Vanderhurst in favor of his daughters. Advancements are not to be taken as ademptions of general legacies unless such intention is expressed by the testator in writing. Section 1351, Civ. Code. Section 1397 of the Civil Code is as follows:

"All gifts and grants are made as advancements, if expressed in the gift or grant to be so made; or if charged in writing by the decedent as an advancement, or acknowledged in writing as such, by the child or other successor or heir."

There were no promissory notes produced at the hearing in the probate court which the appellants, or either of them, had executed in favor of the testator. The will itself, as we have seen, did not charge them with any sums paid to them as advancements, and no writing was produced whereby they were chargeable under section 1397 of the Civil Code. Surely there was nothing in the books of account which would justify their admission under section 1397, Civil Code, or by which the testator evinced any intent to charge the items against his daughters as advancements rather than gifts or loans. Estate of Hayne, 165 Cal. 573, 133 Pac. 277, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 926. On the contrary, the credits indicated that Mr. Vanderhurst intended the payments as gifts, except, perhaps, the trifling balances against the daughters, and those may be regarded as loans rather than advancements.

[4] Moreover, it is a general rule that advancements made before the will was executed cannot be considered in distributing the estate unless specified in the will, because it is presumed that the testator had in view all previous advancements when he made his will and acted accordingly, so as to make the final division conform to his actual wishes. Estate of Hayne, supra; 1 A. & E. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 760, § 2; Bowron v. Kent, 190

N. Y. 432, 83 N. E. 472; Needles v. Needles, 7 Ohio St. 432, 70 Am. Dec. 85.

The judgment must be reversed because of the errors in charging appellants with any sums as advancements. This conclusion makes it unnecessary for us to discuss all of the matters appearing in the briefs. Some of them, however, require attention.

[5] The court erred in admitting in evidence a former will executed by Mr. Vanderhurst in 1906 and revoked by the later will. The will before us must be interpreted by the language used therein, and cannot be varied or explained by an instrument executed several years earlier. Estate of Tompkins, 132 Cal. 175, 64 Pac. 268.

[6] There was a provision in the will that in case any legatee or devisee contested it his or her share of the estate should be $1. Appellants argue that the respondents William M. and George B. Vanderhurst contested the will. The mere statement of this contention refutes it. They opposed the petition for distribution, but they did not seek, in any way, to contest the will. They merely sought interpretation of it.

No other alleged errors merit discussion.

The decree of distribution is reversed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

Modification of Opinion.

PER CURIAM. Good cause appearing therefor, it is hereby ordered that the judgment of this court in the matter of the above-entitled appeal be and hereby is amended to read as follows:

"It follows herefrom that the court erred in charging the appellants with these advancements. Wherefore, and to this extent, the decree of distribution is reversed, with directions to the court in probate to modify its decree in accordance with this opinion and judgment."

171 Cal. 588

ROBSON v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 7001.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1915.)

1. NEW TRIAL ⇐163—EFFECT OF AWARD OF NEW TRIAL TO CODEFENDANT.

Where, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, in which successive purchasers of the mortgaged property, who had severally assumed payment of the mortgage, were made defendants, and a deficiency judgment was rendered against all of the defendants, one of the defendants who had filed no cross-complaint, and in whose favor no affirmative relief had been given, could not be affected by the award of a new trial to one of the defendants in so far as his liability on the deficiency decree as formerly rendered was concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 330–332; Dec. Dig. ⇐163.]

2. PROHIBITION ⇐15—PERSONS BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED.

In such case a defendant other than the one to whom a new trial was awarded was not beneficially interested, and was not entitled to maintain prohibition to prevent a trial of the issues between the plaintiff and the defendant to whom a new trial was awarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 57–60; Dec. Dig. ⇐15.]

3. PROHIBITION ⇐9 — WRIT—WHEN ISSUABLE.

In such case, where the application for writ of prohibition to prevent trying the case anew as to the other defendants contained the undenied allegation that the court was about to retry the case as to all defendants, the defendants other than the one who moved for a new trial were entitled to a writ of prohibition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 35; Dec. Dig. ⇐9.]

In Bank. Proceeding in prohibition by Kernan Robson against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco and others. Writ issued.

Jas. P. Sweeney, of San Francisco, for petitioner. J. J. Lermen, of San Francisco (Chas. L. Tilden, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is a proceeding in prohibition. The petition was addressed to this court originally, and an alternative writ was issued. The facts are as follows:

In September, 1908, the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society sued to foreclose a mortgage on real property. The original mortgagor was Theresa Lewin. Jacob Lewin was joined as her husband, and the other defendants, sued as successors to the interest of Mrs. Lewin in the order in which they were named and as persons who had assumed the payment of the note secured by the mortgage, were Kernan Robson (petitioner herein), Michael O'Toole, Curtis Hillyer (sued as C. H. Lieutemps), John G. Hoyt, the corporation known as Tilden, Swayne & Co., and Louis James. Other defendants were designated by fictitious names. The cause was tried, and judgment was given in favor of plaintiff. The court found that there had been successive conveyances, as pleaded, with corresponding assumptions of the indebtedness, and drew the conclusions of law that plaintiff was entitled to foreclosure and to a judgment declaring Theresa Lewin, Robson, O'Toole, Hillyer (sued as Lieutemps), and Hoyt personally liable for the amount of the mortgage debt. The judgment was entered October 5, 1911.

On December 7, 1911, the motion of Hoyt for a new trial was served and filed. On December 8, 1911, the foreclosure sale took place, the plaintiff becoming the purchaser, and a deficiency judgment, which, on April 2, 1912, amounted to more than $14,000, was on that date docketed against Theresa Lewin, Robson, O'Toole, Hillyer, and Hoyt. The deed of the commissioner to plaintiff was executed December 18, 1912. Hoyt's motion for a new trial was denied on February 21, 1913. When said motion was called on the court's calendar on that date, Hoyt did not answer, because he had agreed with a member of the firm of lawyers representing plaintiff that there should be a continuance. This agreement was not known to the representative of that firm who appeared in court on February 21, 1913, and he asked that the matter be submitted. Thereupon the court denied the motion. On February 27, 1913, on the ex parte application of the plaintiff, the court set aside the order of February 21, 1913. On April 4, 1913, the court made and entered an order granting a new trial. This was based "upon stipulation filed," which stipulation was in the following language:

"It is hereby stipulated that the judgment heretofore made, rendered and entered in the above-entitled action in favor of plaintiff may be vacated and set aside, and that a new trial may be granted in the above-entitled action. Dated April 4, 1913. Tobin & Tobin, Attorneys for Plaintiff."

It is conceded that the petitioner, Robson, had no notice of the application which resulted in the order of February 27, 1913, setting aside the order denying Hoyt's motion for a new trial, nor had he notice of the stipulation upon which was based the order of April 4, 1913.

Respondents contend that the order setting aside the previous order by which Hoyt's motion for a new trial had been denied was fully within the jurisdiction of the court and was made in pursuance of a well-recognized power. The case of Whitney v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 536, 82 Pac. 37, fully supports this view. In that case, as here, the court was dealing with an order made upon ex parte application of counsel, setting aside its former order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. In that case, as here, the motion for a new trial had been called up by plaintiff's counsel in the absence of counsel for the moving party and in violation of the stipulation that it should not be brought to the attention of the court in that manner. Upon the theory that the court had lost jurisdiction to set aside the order denying the motion for a new trial, the successful litigant in the lower court (or his assignee) asked for a writ of execution, in spite of the fact that after restoration of the defendant's motion to the calendar and formal argument thereof the prayer of defendant had been granted, and a new trial had been ordered. This court declined to give a writ of mandamus to compel the clerk of the superior court to issue execution. Speaking of the litigation in the superior court, Mr. Justice Van Dyke, delivering the opinion of this court, said:

"The motion for new trial in that case was by the defendant. He was the moving party. It was brought up, as appears, in the absence of the defendant's attorney, without any argument, or opportunity upon the part of the defendant to be heard, and under the circumstances it was right and proper for the court to do as it did—set aside the order denying the motion for a new trial, and thereupon give the moving party an opportunity to present the motion. In Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331, it is said: 'If a motion for a new trial is decided by the court before it has been submitted, the order denying or granting the new trial should be set aside as improvidently made, if application is made therefor.' In Stewart v. Taylor, 68 Cal. 5, 8 Pac. 605, it is said: 'There is no doubt that the court in which an irregular order is made and entered may, where the irregularity is apparent, on suggestion, motion, or ex mero motu, set it aside at any time before an appeal is taken from it.' In Hayne on New Trial, vol. 2, § 199, the author says: 'Where an appealable order was improvidently or inadvertently made, the aggrieved party may move the court below to set it aside, and may appeal from the order denying his motion. Thus, where a motion for a new trial was granted without any submission of the motion, and before the record upon the motion was completed, it was held to be proper practice for the aggrieved party to move upon affidavits to have the order granting the new trial set aside, and the order denying such motion was reversed [referring in note to case of Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331]. The fact that the order was made irregularly takes it out of the general rule.' See, also, 2 Spelling on New Trial and Appellate Practice, § 379. The late case of Holtum v. Greif, 144 Cal. 521, 78 Pac. 11, one of the cases relied upon by the petitioner, after stating the general rule that an order granting or refusing a new trial regularly made and entered cannot be set aside by the trial court, states that, if the orders 'have been entered prematurely or by inadvertence, they may be set aside on a proper showing. Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 170, 4 Pac. 1173, and cases cited.' "

It is suggested that Whitney v. Superior Court, supra, may be distinguished from the case at bar because, after the motion had been restored to the calendar, the counsel of the respective parties to the litigation appeared and took part in the proceedings in the hearing of the motion for a new trial, and the plaintiff appealed from the order granting a new trial. But the court in that case was dealing with a question of jurisdiction which may not be conferred by acquiescence. It was clearly held that the court had the power to correct its action with reference to defendant's motion. The fact that after his objection to the jurisdiction of a court the litigant proceeds in the usual manner to try the cause or the proceeding does not preclude him from questioning the power of the court to proceed further. Arroyo Ditch & Water Co. v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 52, 28 Pac. 54, 27 Am. St. Rep. 91. It was not the theory of the Whitney Case that the plaintiff in the litigation in the superior court was estopped to deny the jurisdiction of the court to set aside its own order inadvertently made. We see no reason to forsake the doctrine of the Whitney Case, which has been the settled law for more than a decade. That case was carefully considered and the opinion of Mr. Justice Van Dyke received the concurrence of four of the justices who are still on this bench.

It is suggested, however, that the inadvertence which resulted in the entering of the order denying the motion for a new trial was an inadvertence of a party relief from which might have been obtained under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, upon due application after proper notice. But the inadvertence was not that of Hoyt. He had done nothing he should not have done. He had omitted nothing which he should have done. It was not his fault that some one unauthorized to submit his motion had done so. Petitioner insists that there was nothing within the knowledge of the court which should have given notice to the judge of that tribunal that an improper order was being made. Undoubtedly the court may dismiss a motion for a new trial when the moving party fails to prosecute, and it is also true that such a motion may be brought on for hearing by either party. Section 600, Code Civ. Proc. The court knew that Hoyt's counsel and Robson's counsel were not present when the order of February 21, 1913, was made. It was the duty of the court to permit Hoyt to present his motion unless he waived his right by failing to appear. When, therefore, the court learned that the motion had been called for hearing under circumstances which deprived Hoyt of his right to a hearing, it became manifest that the court, and not counsel for the injured party, had acted inadvertently, and therefore that of its own volition the court could restore the motion for new trial to the calendar without any application having been made under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. The Whitney Case has settled that matter.

[1, 2] The next question presented is whether or not the court erred in making the order of April 4, 1913, granting the new trial on stipulation of plaintiff and defendant Hoyt, without giving notice to the petitioner, Robson. The position of respondents is this: Robson and Hoyt were not adversary parties to the action of foreclosure; therefore the judgment in favor of the plaintiff is not res judicata as to any issue between Robson and Hoyt, and the bank could, accordingly, stipulate with Hoyt as it pleased. This contention is correct. The bank sued the defendants and alleged against each of them separately that each in purchasing the land has assumed the payment of the mortgage. Robson and Hoyt filed separate answers. Robson filed a pleading called a "cross-complaint," but in it he asked no affirmative relief against Hoyt. The findings contain the statement, among others, that the case came to trial upon the cross-complaint of Robsón against O'Toole and Hillyer. No reference is made to Hoyt. Clearly the superior court did not look upon the pleading as a cross-complaint against Hoyt. Counsel for petitioner virtually concedes that there was no cross-complaint against Hoyt; for he uses the following language in one of the briefs:

"The cross-complaint was filed as a precautionary measure, for in advance it was not known how plaintiff would act, and whom plaintiff would seek to hold or release, but, in view of the findings of the court, all necessity of the cross-complaint ceased, its existence is of no importance, it affects no right of the parties, and discussion of it is closed."

It should be noted also that no judgment was rendered in favor of Robson. The true position of these two defendants is therefore to be found by eliminating all thought of the so-called "cross-complaint." The true rule is well illustrated by the following quotation from Hibernia Bank v. Dickinson, 167 Cal. 619, 140 Pac. 265:

"Where a complaint is directed against two persons, and the liability of one involves some facts which are not material to the liability of the other upon the cause of action declared upon, and they answer separately, neither is required to answer those allegations which relate solely to the liability of the other. The present case illustrates this proposition. The action was upon the note and mortgage executed by Dickinson alone. His liability was shown by the allegations of the execution and nonpayment of the note and mortgage. Montgomery did not execute them. He was a proper party because he was a subsequent purchaser of the land. But his personal liability for the debt and to a deficiency judgment was founded on the extraneous fact that he had assumed payment of the mortgage debt. This fact had no relation whatever to the original liability of Dickinson. It was not a fact material to the cause of action stated against Dickinson, either to obtain a foreclosure or to obtain a deficiency judgment."

The effect of granting a new trial of the issues between the bank and Hoyt will not disturb the judgment against Robson. Section 578, Code Civ. Proc.; Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 149 Cal. 155, 86 Pac. 178; Nichols v. Dunphy, 58 Cal. 607. Hoyt was asking for a new trial as to the issues between him and plaintiff, and as to such issues only. Petitioner is not an aggrieved party because in the event of Hoyt's escaping a judgment all of the liability might fall upon him. The conclusion of the court in the suit for foreclosure of the bank's mortgage will not be binding in any action which Robson may bring against Hoyt. The decree in favor of the bank fixed none of the rights or obligations of the defendants among themselves. Robson is not an interested party in the proceedings for a new trial of the issues between plaintiff and Hoyt. In Estate of Heydenfeldt, 127 Cal. 459, 59 Pac. 839, it was held that persons who were on the same side in a former proceeding may not invoke the principle of estoppel as between each other based upon findings in that said former proceeding. We need not analyze the many authorities from other states cited by respondents, because the rule is well understood. It is well stated, however, in Wiltrout v. Showers, 82 Neb. 779, 118 N. W. 1080. The action was for breach of contract whereby defendant agreed to pay a note and mortgage executed by plaintiff in favor of a third person. The holder of the note sued both Wiltrout and Showers. The former defaulted, and Showers was successful as against the holder of the obligations. Wiltrout paid the judgment, and then sued Showers, who pleaded the former judgment as res judicata. The court said:

"As between the two defendants in that action no issue was joined. Wiltrout and Showers were not adverse parties. The question of liability of Showers on the oral contract to assume and pay the notes was not litigated and determined as between Wiltrout and Showers. The rule of law is well settled that parties to a judgment are not bound by it in a subsequent action unless they were adverse parties in the original action. 1 Freeman, Judgments (4th Ed.) § 158; 2 Black, Judgments (2d Ed.) § 599; Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. Bartsch, 51 Minn. 474 [53 N. W. 764, 38 Am. St. Rep. 511]. The bar of former adjudication can only be raised between those who were adverse parties in the former suit, and the judgment in the former suit settles nothing as to the relative rights or liability of the codefendants as between themselves unless their conflicting claims were put in issue by cross-petition or adverse answers, and were actually litigated and adjudicated. 23 Cyc. 1279; Whitesell v. Strickler, 167 Ind. 602 [78 N. E. 845, 119 Am. St. Rep. 524]."

It follows that Robson's rights are not dependent upon the determination of the issues between the plaintiff and Hoyt in the foreclosure suit. Of course, the court below will confine itself in the new trial to the single issue of the alleged assumption by Hoyt of the payment of the mortgage.

[3] But it is alleged in the petition that the respondent court and the judge thereof are about to "try said action as to all defendants," and there is no denial of this allegation in the answer. The petitioner is entitled to a writ prohibiting respondent from trying any issues except those arising on the pleadings between the plaintiff bank and defendant Hoyt.

Let such a writ issue.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

SLOSS, J. I concur in the judgment. It is clearly shown by the opinion of Mr. Justice MELVIN that the petitioner, Robson, would not be affected by a new trial of the issues raised between the plaintiff in the foreclosure suit and Hoyt. This being so, the petitioner is not a party "beneficially interested," and is not, therefore, in a position to seek a writ of prohibition against the trial of such issues. Code Civ. Proc. § 1103. He is, however, directly interested in preventing another trial of the action against himself as defendant. By the judgment he is made liable for a deficiency in the proceeds of the sale. The property has been sold on foreclosure, and the amount of the deficiency ascertained. In the event of a new trial, a new judgment, and a new sale, the deficiency for which Robson is liable may be greatly increased.

It follows that, as is held in the foregoing opinion, any new trial should be confined to the issues between the bank and Hoyt, leaving the judgment of the bank against Robson standing as a final adjudication. This was precisely the effect of the writ of prohibition directed on the former submission of the present proceeding. The correctness of the conclusion is conceded by the respondents in their brief filed since their petition for rehearing was granted. If, as they claim, and as we hold, Robson was not an adverse party to Hoyt, and could not be affected by a new trial granted to Hoyt, there is no occasion to consider whether the court properly set aside, as to Hoyt, the order denying a new trial. But, as this question is discussed in Mr. Justice MELVIN'S opinion, I deem it proper to say that I do not assent to the views expressed by him with respect to the right of a court to vacate, on an ex parte application, an order granting or denying a new trial. On this point I adhere to what I said in the former opinion, from which I quote:

"The petitioner takes the position that, when an application for a new trial has been made in due form and the court has passed upon it, the order made is conclusive so far as the court making it is concerned, and that court cannot afterwards vacate the order and again decide the motion. As a general proposition, this contention is unquestionably sound. Coombs v. Hibberd, 43 Cal. 452; Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 168, 4 Pac. 1173; Dorland v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 484, 6 Pac. 135; Lang v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 491, 12 Pac. 306, 416; Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 596, 19 Pac. 174; Holtum v. Greif, 144 Cal. 521, 78 Pac. 11. The 'statute,' says the court in Dorland v. Cunningham, supra, 'authorizes but one motion for a new trial, and makes the ruling thereon final, so far as the superior court is concerned.' If error has been committed in granting or denying the motion, the proper mode of seeking redress is by appeal, as in the case of any final order or judgment of the superior court. The objection that the lower court has improperly vacated its final order is one that goes to the jurisdiction of the court. Lang v. Superior Court, supra; Carpenter v. Superior Court, supra; Holtum v. Greif, supra. * * *

"An order granting or denying a motion for a new trial is, of course, like other orders, subject to be set aside under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But the granting of such relief implies an application to the court by the party against whom the proceeding was taken, upon notice to the adverse party and upon a proper showing, and it is not claimed that in this case there was any attempt to invoke or to exercise the power conferred on the court by section 473.

"There is one further limitation upon the rule prohibiting the court from vacating its order once made, and upon this the respondents place their reliance. Where an order has been made 'irregularly and through inadvertence,' the court has power, of its own motion or on application of a party to set the order aside. Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331; De Gaze v. Lynch, 42 Cal. 362; Hall v. Polack, 42 Cal. 223; O. F. Sav. Bank v. Deuprey, supra, and cases cited; Holtum v. Greif, supra; Whitney v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 536, 82 Pac. 37. This rule has been applied in cases where the order was prematurely made, as, for example, where a statement to be used on the motion has not been settled, or there had been no submission of the motion. In such cases the court has acted irregularly and inadvertently in undertaking to pass upon a motion which had not been brought before it, and its improvident action may be set aside. This does not mean that an order may be vacated because the court concludes, after making it, that it erred in matter of law or fact, or because one of the parties was guilty of some inadvertence which resulted to his disadvantage. The inadvertence which will justify the setting aside of an order (except under section 473) is the inadvertence of the court, not of a party.

"We think there was here no basis for the court's action in setting aside its order denying a new trial. The notice of intention had been served and filed, the bill of exceptions had been duly settled and was on file, and the motion appeared regularly on the calendar of the court for argument on February 21, 1913. On that day, there being no appearance for the moving party, Hoyt, the motion was called and answered 'ready' by counsel for plaintiff, who submitted the motion, which was thereupon denied. All of this was perfectly regular, and the court did not act improvidently or inadvertently. It appears, however, that there had been an oral understanding between counsel for Hoyt and a member of plaintiff's firm of counsel that the hearing of the motion should be continued. This was not known to the attorney who appeared for plaintiff on February 21st. The misunderstanding in this regard would unquestionably have supported a claim of inadvertence or surprise on the part of Hoyt, but we cannot see that it tended to show any inadvertence or irregularity on the part of the court. If the disregard of oral stipulations or misunderstandings between counsel could authorize the court of its own motion, or on an ex parte application, to set aside judgments or orders as improvident, the finality of judicial determinations would be seriously impaired. Reasons like these are typical illustrations of the grounds upon which relief should be sought under section 473."

I do not stop to discuss the question whether Whitney v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 536, 82 Pac. 37, can be successfully distinguished from the case at bar. If there be no valid ground of distinction, I think the decision in the Whitney Case is in conflict with the rules established by a long line of prior decisions, and with fundamental principles governing the finality of judicial determinations.

I concur: SHAW, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I concur in the judgment on the ground that the petitioner would not be affected by a new trial of the issues raised between the plaintiff in the foreclosure suit and Hoyt, and that, this being so, he is not in a position to seek a writ of prohibition against the trial of such issues. He is beneficially interested in prohibiting the trial of other issues, and therefore it is properly ordered that a writ issue to prohibit any such trial.

171 Cal. 570

HIHN-HAMMOND LUMBER CO. v. ELSOM et al. (S. F. 6707.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1915.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸196—STATUTE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1194, declaring that laborers and materialmen shall have preference over subcontractors in participation in the amount applicable to mechanics' liens, is not violative of Const. art. 20, § 15, providing that mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien for labor or material furnished, since such provision serves merely to place on an equal footing mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers who personally perform work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 337–341; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 196.]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸196—PERSONS ENTITLED — CLASSIFICATION — STATUTE — "LABORER" — "SUBCONTRACTOR" — "ORIGINAL CONTRACTOR"—"MATERIALMAN."

Under the Mechanics' Lien Law (Code Civ. Proc., § 1194) prior to the amendment of 1911, declaring that laborers and materialmen should have preference over subcontractors in participation in the amount applicable to mechanics' liens, a firm which lathed and plastered a house, furnishing the material; a firm which constructed most of the floors and walls, furnishing the material; a company which erected part of the walls of bathrooms, furnishing the necessary tile; a company which put on a mission tile roof, furnishing the material; a firm which laid the flooring in certain rooms, furnishing the material; and a person who erected the tin work and galvanized iron and copper work, a substantial part of the structure, furnishing the materials—were all "subcontractors" under the statute, which divides the liens assertable against the property into four classes, laborers', materialmen's, subcontractors', and original contractor's, the "original contractor" being the person who agrees with the owner to construct a building on his property, "laborers" being those who perform labor in the construction of the building, "materialmen" being persons who merely furnish material to the contractors to be used in the construction of the building, and "subcontractors" being all persons who agree with the original contractor to furnish the material and construct for him on the premises some part of the structure which the original contractor has agreed to erect for the owner, although literally a "subcontractor" is one who agrees with another to perform a part or all of the obligation which the second owes by contract to a third person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 337–341; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 196.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Laborer; Materialman; Original Contractor; Subcontractor.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸934—PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING COURT BELOW.

All intendments favor the judgment of the court below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777–3782; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 934.]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸290—FORECLOSURE—FINDING—SUPPORT BY LIEN CLAIM.

In a consolidated action to foreclose mechanics' liens, where the lien claims of certain firms stated that they had respectively performed labor on the building, the claim of one stating that its members had performed certain labor in the construction of the house, and also had furnished certain materials used therein, a finding ranking such parties as materialmen or laborers was sufficiently sustained by the respective claims of lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 591–597; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 290.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action to foreclose liens by the Hihn-Hammond Lumber Company against R. W. Elsom and others. From a judgment assigning their respective ranks as lienors, and from an order denying their motion for new trial, Thomas J. Guilfoy and certain others appeal. Judgment and order affirmed.

W. P. Netherton, of Santa Cruz, for appellants. Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondent Hihn-Hammond Lumber Co. H. A. Van C. Torchiana, of San Francisco, and W. P. Netherton, of Santa Cruz, for defendant Williamson & Garrett. Charles B. Younger, of Santa Cruz, for defendants W. R. Van Wagner and F. P. Van Wagner, and for respondents A. D. Houghton, and George H. Cardiff. I. F. Chapman, of San Francisco, for defendant White Bros. W. P. Netherton, of Santa Cruz, for defendants E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., California Artistic Metal & Wire Company, Simpson & Fisher, F. A. Angell, H. V. Angell, and H. W. Truman. Charles M. Cassin, of San Jose, for defendants Henry Willey Co., George G. Byrne, Walter C. Byrne, and Daniels Santa Cruz Transfer Co. C. R. Taylor, of Los Angeles, for defendant Granite Rock Co. Rittenhouse & Johnston, of Santa Cruz, for defendants L. W. Rickey, George H. Leroy, Louis H. Wessendorf, George C. Staffler, H. F. Faneuf, C. H. Heath, Fred A. Bright, and W. F. Bright. Greg S. McEvers, of San Francisco, for defendants William Ross and D. MacLeod. A. E. Bolton, of San Francisco, for defendants William T. Sesnon, B. F. Porter Estate, J. Harry Blohme, and Clarence B. Ward. W. M. Gardner, of Santa Cruz, for defendant R. W. Elsom.

SHAW, J. A number of persons, each claiming a mechanic's lien on the same property, began separate actions to foreclose the liens. These actions were consolidated for trial and resulted in a joint judgment of foreclosure. The building, on account of which the liens accrued, was erected prior to the enactment of the amendment of 1911 to the mechanic's lien law, in pursuance of a contract which was valid under the prior law. The liens amounted to more than the balance found due from the owner to the contractor. This made it necessary to apportion the balance to the respective claimants, and to declare the rank of each lien and the order of its payment out of the fund. Six of the lien claimants, namely, Thomas J. Guilfoy, Waterhouse-Price Company, Floodberg & McCaffery, W. W. Montague & Co., N. Clark & Sons, and Ford & Malott, being dissatisfied with the rank assigned to them by the judgment, have appealed from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The court found that each of these appellants was a subcontractor and, for that reason, assigned them a rank subordinate to that of laborers and materialmen. The provisions of section 1194 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it then existed, declared that laborers and materialmen should have preference over subcontractors in participation in the amount applicable to liens under that law.

[1] The first point urged by the appellants is that section 1194, in so far as it gives such preference to laborers and materialmen, is unconstitutional. This question was considered by this court in Miltimore v. Nofziger, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 790, 90 Pac. 114. It was there declared that the section did not violate the Constitution by reason of this preference, but only so far as it gave laborers a preference over materialmen. Some members of the court dissented on the ground that the priorities given to laborers over materialmen was valid. But there was no difference of opinion regarding the power of the Legislature to prefer these two classes to subcontractors. We are not disposed to go over the ground again to demonstrate the soundness of this decision. Upon the authority thereof we hold that the point is not well taken.

[2, 3] Another proposition advanced in support of the appeal is that the findings of the court, with respect to each of the appellants, that it was a subcontractor and not a materialman, are contrary to the evidence.

The facts relating to each of them are as follows: The building erected was a large two-story dwelling house. The contract price was $27,635.20. R. W. Elsom & Co. were the contractors for the erection of the building. Guilfoy agreed to furnish and set in place in the building "all tin, galvanized iron, and copper work, including copper sash bars, galvanized iron caps, copper flashings at back of wall, two rows of cross bars and a half bar at wall line, the full length," all according to the plans and specifications of the building prepared by the architect. The cost of the material for this work amounted to $943.50. The cost of the labor was $247.50. The Waterhouse-Price Company agreed to furnish the tile for the walls of four bathrooms and a toilet and set the same in the building, the setting to be done by experienced workmen from San Francisco, all as required by the plans and specifications. The material therefor amounted to $227.50 and the labor, $37.50. Floodberg & McCaffery agreed to furnish the material and labor necessary to complete the lathing and plastering upon the building according to specifications attached to the contract. The material amounted to $1,600 and the labor to $1,363.20. Montague & Co agreed to furnish and place in the building 360 square feet of tile for the front porch, 250 square feet of tile, and the cove around the walls with plinth blocks at doors, for four bathrooms and floors of toilets on the second floor; also, to furnish the materials and place in the building four fireplaces made of brick or tile in different rooms in the building, and to place 75 square feet of tile and wire spaces in the pantry. For all this the material amounted to $500 and the labor to $423. Clark & Sons agreed to deliver and lay in place the tile roof with scalloped iron at the eaves, in accordance with the plans and specifications. The material amounted to $1,350 and the labor $335. Much of the tile had to be cut and fitted on the premises. Ford & Malott agreed to lay the fiber stone flooring and furnish the material therefor in the breakfast room and on the south and west lower porches. The material amounted to $340 and the labor to $300.

The question whether one who claims a lien upon a building is a contractor or materialman has been several times considered by the court. A brief statement of the cases in which the decisions have been rendered will assist in elucidating the principles to be applied. In Hinckley v. Field, etc., Co., 91 Cal. 139, 27 Pac. 594, it was held that one who constructs, before delivery, "a steam plant consisting of boilers, engine, heater, feed pipe," etc., for a cracker factory, delivers them and puts them in place in the factory building, is a materialman, and not a contractor. It was said that the work of putting these materials in place "was only the completion of their contract to deliver such finished machinery." In Roebling Co. v. Humboldt Co., 112 Cal. 290, 44 Pac. 568, the same rule was made concerning a contract to make and set up ready for use in a building an electrical plant "consisting of dynamos, converters, switchboard, lamps, etc., with the necessary wiring and connections," although in order to set them up it was necessary to put in the building a foundation for the dynamos and to install the wires and lamps. In Bennett v. Davis, 113 Cal. 337, 45 Pac. 684, 54 Am. St. Rep. 354, the same rule was followed with respect to a contract to furnish mantels, tiles, and grates and set them in a building under construction. Each tile pertaining to the mantels had to be set in separately and some bricklaying around the mantels was necessary as a part of the setting thereof. In Bryson v. McCone, 121 Cal. 153, 53 Pac. 637, the court held that a person contracting to build ice tanks, including steel molds, pipes, pumps, and connections, and to set them up in an ice factory, was a materialman, and not an original contractor. In Smith v. Bradbury, 148 Cal. 41, 82 Pac. 367, 113 Am. St. Rep. 189, it was held that one who contracted to do the plastering in a building at a stated price yer yard was a subcontractor and not a materialman. So in La Grill v. Mallard, 90 Cal. 373, 27 Pac. 294, one who contracted to paper and decorate a number of rooms in a dwelling house, where the actual work was done by employés, was held to be an original contractor. The only rule of general application announced in any of the above-mentioned decisions was stated in Bennett v. Davis, supra, 113 Cal. 339, 45 Pac. 685, 54 Am. St. Rep. 354, as follows:

"The main consideration after all is whether the labor bestowed upon the article (in setting) was simple and trifling in comparison to the price."

Literally, a "subcontractor" is one who agrees with another to perform a part or all of the obligation which the second party owes by contract to a third party. With respect to the mechanic's lien law in question, however, the word has a much narrower meaning. Section 1194 divides the liens which can be asserted against property under the mechanics' lien law into four classes, to wit, laborers, materialmen, subcontractors, and original contractors. The meaning of the term "subcontractors," as there used, must be determined by reference to this classification and to the subject to which it relates. The "original contractor" is the person who agrees with the owner to construct a building on his property. Those who perform labor in the construction of the building come within the first class, as "laborers." Persons who merely furnish material to the contractors to be used and which are used in the construction of the building come within the second class, as "materialmen." The term "subcontractor" embraces all persons who agree with the original contractor to furnish the material and construct for him on the premises some part of the structure which the original contractor has agreed to erect for the owner. We think something more than a mere comparison of the cost of the labor of attaching material to the building with the total price of the work and materials is necessary in many cases to a determination of the question whether a claimant is a subcontractor or a materialman. Generally speaking, it would be held that one who, under an agreement with the contractor, enters upon the premises and there, with material furnished by himself, erects a definite part of the structure composing the building, is a subcontractor within the meaning of this section, regardless of the comparative cost of labor and material. The cases above cited which hold the claimant to be a materialman go upon the theory that the claimant agreed with the owner or the contractor to construct, outside of the building, or away from the premises, some completed article, machinery, or apparatus to be thereafter placed in or attached to the building by the person who furnished it. The contention was that the work of attaching it to the building constituted a part of the construction of the building itself, and therefore made the claimant either an original contractor with the owner or a subcontractor with the contractor. The substance of the decisions is that the work of attaching and placing the thing in the building was merely a part of the delivery, and that the essence of the agreement was to furnish a finished article as material to be placed in the building. But in the other cases it was clear that the work of the claimant was that of constructing a part of the building itself with his own materials, under an agreement with the original contractor, and he was held to be a subcontractor.

Under the decision in Smith v. Bradbury, supra, there can be no doubt that the status of Floodberg & McCaffery, who did the lathing and plastering and furnished the material therefor, was that of a subcontractor. The work of Montague & Co. consisted of furnishing the material and constructing in the building a considerable part of the floors and walls thereof. The Waterhouse-Price Company was to furnish the necessary tile and erect a part of the walls of the bathrooms. Clark & Sons, a corporation, was to furnish the material and put on the building a mission tile roof. Ford & Malott were to furnish and lay the flooring in certain rooms. All these constituted substantial and important parts of the building and of the work of constructing it. These parties were, in our opinion, subcontractors, under the principles we have just stated. It is somewhat difficult to determine, from the meager record on the subject, what part of the building was constructed by the claimant Guilfoy. Enough appears to show that he was to furnish the materials and erect in the building the tin work, galvanized iron, and copper work required by the plans and specifications. The plans and specifications are not set forth in the record. It is at least not improbable that the metal work of this character constituted a substantial part of the structure. If so, Guilfoy would be a subcontractor within the rules above stated. As all intendments are in favor of the decision of the court below, and no evidence of a different condition is presented by the record, we must sustain the finding that Guilfoy was a subcontractor.

In Bennett v. Davis, supra, the claimant, who contracted to furnish mantels for the building with the tiles and grates connected therewith and to set them all in the building, was held to be a materialman. A part of the work of Montague & Co. consisted of the building of four fireplaces in the house, using brick and tile. This work is in some respects similar to that which was held to be the furnishing of materials in Bennett v. Davis. But here we have no plans or specifications or other description of the work, and we cannot say that the fireplaces did not constitute a very substantial part of the structure of the building in question. In Bennett v. Davis the mantels, which are usually finished outside as a complete structure and thereafter taken to and set in the building by the person who makes them, were the principal subject of the agreement and the setting was a mere incident and of very slight cost compared with the price of the mantels. It was in this case that the court said that the comparison of the labor of setting with the price was the main consideration. The work done by Montague & Co. constituted nearly half of the sum they were to receive for furnishing the material and erecting these porch floors, fireplaces and other things in the building. The cost of the different parts of their job is not stated. There is therefore no means of making comparison of the cost of the labor with the total cost of the fireplaces, and we cannot interfere with the finding that they were subcontractors.

[4] The appellants further contend that certain other claimants, namely, Faneuf & Heath, Wessendorf & Staffler, Bright Bros., and the Daniels Santa Cruz Transfer Company, were erroneously ranked as materialmen or laborers when they should have been classed as subcontractors. Their claims were small, amounting in all to $181.79. Each of these parties filed a claim of lien stating that they, respectively, had performed labor on the building. The claim of Faneuf & Heath states that they performed certain labor in the construction of the house and also that they furnished certain materials which were used therein. There is nothing in the record to show the character of the work done by either of these claimants, or of the materials they furnished. The finding is sufficiently sustained by the respective claims of lien, and, as there is no evidence to the contrary in the record, the findings must be upheld.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 526

ROYSTONE CO. v. DARLING et al.

(L. A. 4072.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1915. Rehearing Denied Jan. 13, 1916.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂⊃89—MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂⊃3—CONTRACTOR'S BOND—STATUTE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Act May 1, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1313), amending Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, provides that persons working upon a building or furnishing materials shall have a lien for the value of the labor and materials, and that in case the original contract shall be filed in the office of the county recorder, together with the bond of the contractor in an amount not less than 50 per cent. of the contract price, which bond shall be conditioned for the payment of the claims of all persons performing labor or furnishing materials on the work, and shall also be made to inure to the benefit of all laborers or materialmen on the work described in the contract, to give them a right of action to recover upon the bond in any suit to foreclose the mechanics' liens or in a separate suit brought on the bond, then the court, where it would be equitable to do so, may restrict the recovery under such liens to an aggregate amount equal to that found to be due from the owner to the contractor, and render judgment against the contractor and sureties on the bond for any deficiency. Const. art. 1, § 1, guaranties the right of contract. Article 20, § 15, provides that mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, and that the Legislature shall provide for the speedy enforcement of such liens. Held, that the provision of the mechanic's lien act requiring the contractor's bond is not unconstitutional as invading the right of contract, since it allows the owner of property to contract freely for its improvement and upon such terms as he may deem for his best interest, merely exacting from him as a condition of exemption from liability to subcontractors and materialmen in excess of the contract price for the work, that he should provide a reasonable security for the constitutional lien given for labor and materials furnished by his contractor, a requirement within the scope of the constitutional provision conferring such liens, and of the police power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 157; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃89; Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃3.]

2. Bonds ⊂⊃35 — Validity — Statutory Bonds.

A bond given solely to comply with a statute which is itself void, or which does not require the bond as supposed, is without binding force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bonds, Cent. Dig. §§ 40, 40½; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃35.]

3. Statutes ⊂⊃85 — Class Legislation — Contractor's Bond.

Act May 1, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1313), amending Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, to require a contractor's bond securing materialmen and laborers as a condition to the owner's exemption from liability thereto in an amount in excess of the contract price, is not unconstitutional as class legislation, since a law is general and constitutional when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction which has some reasonable relation to the legislation respecting the class, which is the case, as to persons furnishing labor or materials for the construction of buildings, under the constitution conferring their liens thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 94, 95; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃85.]

4. Mechanics' Liens ⊂⊃227—Contractor's Bond — Construction — Recovery in Excess of Penalty—Statute.

Act May 1, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1313), amends Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, to require that a contractor shall file a bond securing materialmen and laborers as a condition to the owner's exemption from liability thereto in an amount in excess of the contract price, and fixes the penalty of the bond at not less than one-half the amount of the contract price, subsequently providing that after applying to the payment of liens the sum due from the owner to the contractor, lien claimants may, in suit on the bond recover the unpaid balance of their claims. Held, that such a bond could not be construed, because of the last provision of the statute, as authorizing a recovery in excess of its penalty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 410; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃227.]

5. Appeal and Error ⊂⊃907—Presumptions Favoring Court Below.

In a suit to foreclose mechanics' liens, where the propriety of an allowance for extras to a materialman depended upon the specifications, which were not incorporated in the bill of exceptions or elsewhere in the record, the finding of the court below must be sustained on presumption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2899, 2911–2916, 3673, 3674, 3676, 3678; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃907.]

6. Appeal and Error ⊂⊃181—Reservation of Grounds of Review—Necessity of Objection Below.

An objection made in appellant's brief, but not made on trial or in the court below, will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1141–1151, 1157, 1158, 1160; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃181.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by the Roystone Company against Thomas Darling and the American Surety Company of New York and others. From a judgment against it, the defendant American Surety Company appeals. Affirmed.

Bicksler & Smith, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Irwin, White & Rosecrans and Randall & Bartlett, all of Los Angeles, for respondents Darling. Ernest E. Nichols, of Los Angeles, for respondent Joseph Musto Sons-Keenan Co. R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for respondent Hammond Lumber Co. Gray, Barker & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for respondent Schultz Lumber Co. Shaw & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for respondent Stead. Willis O. Tyler, of Los Angeles, for respondent James. Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent Western Commercial Co. Alfred Wright, of Los Angeles, for respondent Eager Hardware & Paint Co. C. W. Pendleton, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondents H. W. Johns-Manville Co. and J. C. Crawford. Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, for respondent Patten & Davies Lumber Co. Arthur Wright, of Los Angeles, for respondent Hughes Mfg. & Lumber Co. Waterman & Green, of Los Angeles, for respondent Neely.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal taken from the judgment within 60 days after its entry, the American Surety Company being the sole appellant. The judgment was rendered in a consolidated action to foreclose mechanics' liens. Nineteen separate complaints embracing 22 claims of lien were included in the order of consolidation.

On June 19, 1912, the defendant Thomas Darling, being the owner of a lot in Santa Monica, Los Angeles county, entered into a contract with the defendant J. M. Thomas for the erection of an apartment house on said lot. The contract price was $13,279, payable in installments. Five of these installments of $1,659 each were payable at intervals during the construction of the building, the sixth, of the same amount, was to be paid at completion thereof, and the seventh, $3,320, was made payable 35 days after the filing of the notice of completion in the recorder's office. The remaining $5 are not accounted for. On the 20th day of June, the contractor, Thomas, and the appellant, American Surety Company, executed and delivered to Darling a bond in the sum of $6,640, being 50 cents in excess of one-half of said contract price. This bond conformed in every particular to the requirements of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1911. The contract and the bond aforesaid were duly filed and recorded in the office of the recorder of said county on June 21, 1912, the day after the execution of the bond. In pursuance of the contract, Thomas immediately began the erection of the building and completed it on December 14, 1912. Extra work of the value of $183.50 was ordered by Darling and performed by Thomas. On December 14, 1912, Darling filed in the recorder's office a notice of completion as provided in section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Prior to November 1, 1912, Darling paid Thomas five installments, as provided in the contract, amounting to $8,295. The remainder of the contract price, $4,984, together with the value of the extra work $183.50, a total of $5,167.50 remains unpaid. The several claims of lien found to be valid by the court amounted to something over $10,000, being more than $6,000 in excess of the balance due from the owner to the contractor as aforesaid.

The court below was of the opinion that said sum of $5,167.50 due from Darling to Thomas on the contract was applicable to these liens, and that liens should be declared and enforced on defendant's property in favor of each claimant for his pro rata share of this sum and for no greater amount. Seven of these claimants were declared to have no right to further relief except against the contractor. The court held that the other 15 claimants were each entitled to a judgment against the American Surety Company upon the bond aforesaid for the excess of their respective claims over their respective shares of the fund due to the contractor aforesaid. Judgment was given in accordance with these conclusions.

As will be seen from the foregoing statement the contract between Darling and Thomas was made in 1912. The case is therefore governed by the provisions of the mechanic's lien law, as revised by the act of May 1, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1313). This revision made some radical changes in the law, and it presents new questions for decision. It will aid in the understanding of the purpose and meaning of this act if we call to mind, as briefly as may be, the history of the mechanic's lien laws in this state and the state of the law on the subject at the time the amendments in question were enacted.

Prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 the lien of mechanics and materialmen for work done and materials furnished in the erection of buildings was entirely a creature of the Legislature. The former Constitution contained no declaration on the subject. Numerous decisions of the Supreme Court had declared that all such liens were limited by the contract between the owner and the contractor, and could not, in the aggregate, exceed the contract price. The doctrine that the right of contract could not be invaded by legislative acts purporting to give liens beyond the price fixed in the contract between the owner and the contractor, or regardless of the fact that the price had been wholly or partially paid, was so thoroughly established that litigation involving it had virtually ended. Section 1183 of the Code, as amended in 1873, declared that every person performing labor or furnishing materials to be used in the construction of any building should have a lien upon the same for such work or material. It did not limit the liens to the contract price. In this condition of the law the Constitution of 1879 was adopted. It provides as follows:

"Mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished material, for the value of such labor done and material furnished; and the Legislature shall provide, by law, for the speedy and efficient enforcement of such liens." Art. 20, § 15.

In 1880 section 1183 was again amended by inserting a direct declaration that "the lien shall not be affected by the fact that no money is due, or to become due, on any contract made by the owner with any other party." This amendment of 1880 first came before the Supreme Court for consideration in Latson v. Nelson, 11 Pacific Coast Law Journal, 589, a case not officially reported. The court in that case considered the power of the Legislature to disregard the contract of the owner with the contractor and give the laborer or materialman a lien for an amount in excess of the money due thereon from the owner to the contractor. In effect, it declared that section 15, article 20, of the Constitution was not intended to impair the right to contract respecting property guaranteed by section 1, article 1, thereof, and that the provisions of the Code purporting to give a lien upon property in favor of third persons, in disregard of and exceeding the obligations of the owner concerning that property, was an invalid restriction of the liberty of contract. Although it is not very clearly stated, the theory of that decision is, and it has always been understood to be, that section 1 of article 1, declaring that all men possess "certain inalienable rights," among them the right of "acquiring, possessing, and protecting property," is a guarantee which includes the right to contract concerning the use, enjoyment, and disposition of property, and which cannot be taken away or restricted by the Legislature except by reasonable regulations made in the exercise of the police power. See on this point Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 177, 22 Pac. 509, 6 L. R. A. 588; Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, 136 Cal. 125, 68 Pac. 481, 57 L. R. A. 726, 89 Am. St. Rep. 116. Latson v. Nelson was approved and followed in McCants v. Bush, 70 Cal. 126, 11 Pac. 601; Wiggins v. Bridge, 70 Cal. 438, 11 Pac. 754, both decided in 1886, and in Walsh v. McMenomy, 74 Cal. 359, 16 Pac. 17, in 1887. In the meantime the Legislature of 1885 (St. 1885, p. 143), apparently recognizing and conceding the force of the decision in Latson v. Nelson, undertook to secure and enforce the constitutional lien by other means, that is, by regulating the mode of making and executing contracts, rather than by disregarding the right of contract. It amended sections 1183 and 1184 of the Code by providing that in all building contracts the contract price should be payable in installments at specified times after the beginning of the work, that at least one-fourth thereof should be made payable not less than 35 days after the completion of the work contracted for, that all such contracts exceeding $1,000 should be in writing, subscribed by the parties thereto, and should be filed in the office of the county recorder before the work was begun thereunder, that if these regulations were followed, liens upon the property for the erection of the structure should be confined to the unpaid portion of the contract price, but that all contracts which did not conform thereto, or which were not filed as provided, should be void, that in such case the contractor should be deemed the agent of the owner, and the property should be subject to a lien in favor of any person performing labor or furnishing material to the contractor upon the building for the value of such labor or material. This law, with some amendments not material to our discussion, remained in force until the enactment of the revision of 1911, aforesaid.

In the meantime the Supreme Court has followed the rule established by the cases last cited and has uniformly declared, with respect to such liens, that if there is a valid contract, the contract price measures the limit of the amount of liens which can be acquired against the property by laborers and materialmen. The following cases declare the doctrine directly: Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, supra; McDonald v. Hayes, 132 Cal. 495, 64 Pac. 850; Snell v. Bradbury, 139 Cal. 382, 73 Pac. 150; Kellogg v. Howes, supra; Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 319, 33 Pac. 913; Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 736, 84 Pac. 200; Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, 154 Cal. 116, 97 Pac. 152; Butler v. Ng Chung, 160 Cal. 438, 117 Pac. 512, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 940; Marshall v. Vallejo Bank, 163 Cal. 474, 126 Pac. 146; Ganahl Co. v. Weinsveig, 168 Cal. 669, 143 Pac. 1025; Clark v. Beyrle, 160 Cal. 314, 116 Pac. 739. In addition to these express declarations there are many cases in which the rights of the parties were adjudicated upon the assumption that this proposition constituted the law of the state. Each one of the large number of decisions regarding the priorities of liens in the unpaid portion of the contract price, each decision respecting the right to reach payments made before maturity under such contract, each decision as to the formal requisites of contracts under the amendment of 1885, and each decision as to the apportionment under section 1200, Code of Civil Procedure, upon the failure of the contractor to complete the work, constitutes an affirmance of the doctrine that the contract, legally made, limits the liability of the owner to lien claimants. There has been scarcely a session of this court since the enactment of that amendment at which one or more cases have not been presented and decided which, in effect, amounted to a repetition of this doctrine. The Legislature has also recognized the doctrine by subsequent amendments following out the theory of the amendment of 1885.

The scheme of regulation embodied in the amendments of 1885 and continued until 1911, did not work well in practical operation. Disputes frequently arose concerning the terms of contracts, the time of maturity of installments, the making of payments, the time of beginning the work, with respect to the filing of the contract for record, and many other details which, under the somewhat elaborate plan of the statute, would affect the validity of the contract, or the right to a lien to the unpaid part of the price when the contract was valid. Our reports show many decisions on these questions. Amendments to the statute were made from time to time, but, upon the whole, conditions were not improved. The act of 1911 was obviously designed for the purpose of removing, as far as possible, the objections to the former law.

The plan differs in important particulars from the previous statute. It amends the entire chapter with the exception of sections 1186, 1188, 1189, 1191, 1191a, 1196, 1198, 1199, and 1201. The provisions of these sections harmonize with either scheme. Sections 1183a, 1200, and 1203a are repealed. The amended sections do not prescribe the form of building contracts, nor do they fix the time or the manner of payment of the contract price or require its payment in installments. All these things are left to the will of the owner and the contractor as they may agree. They do not require that one-fourth of the contract price, or any part thereof, shall be made payable after completion. The parties are at liberty to contract for payment in advance, or in specific property. Such contracts are not declared void by the present law. Section 1183 allows the contract to be filed before the work is begun under it, and provides that there may be filed with it a bond executed by the contractor with good sureties in an amount at least one-half of the contract price, conditioned for the payment in full of all claims on account of labor performed for, or materials furnished to, the contractor in the work, and giving to such persons a right of action on said bond for such claims. Other changes are made, but as they are not material to the decision as to the extent of the lien and the validity of the provision for a contractor's bond, we leave them to be noticed on the discussion of the questions to which they may relate.

[1, 2] The first point urged by the appellant in support of its appeal is that the portion of the statute providing for the execution and filing of the bond by the contractor is unconstitutional and void. It is necessary here to state more fully the statutory provisions regarding the same. Section 1183, after declaring that persons who work upon a building or furnish materials, shall have a lien upon the property for the value of the labor done and materials furnished, proceeds as follows:

"The liens in this chapter provided for shall be direct liens, and shall not in the case of any claimants, other than the contractor be limited, as to amount, by any contract price agreed upon between the contractor and the owner except as hereinafter provided."

It then provides that such liens shall not extend to any labor or materials not embraced within the original contract, or modification thereof, if the claimant has had actual notice thereof before the performance of labor or furnishing of material. It further provides, with respect to such notice, that the filing of the contract, or modification thereof, in the office of the county recorder before the commencement of the work, shall be equivalent to actual notice thereof to lien claimants. Then follows the important provision of the section in these words:

"In case said original contract shall, before the work is commenced, be so filed, together with a bond of the contractor with good and sufficient sureties in an amount not less than fifty (50) per cent of the contract price named in said contract, which bond shall in addition to any conditions for the performance of the contract, be also conditioned for the payment in full of the claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in such work, and shall also by its terms be made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who perform labor upon or furnish materials to be used in the work described in said contract so as to give such persons a right of action to recover upon said bond in any suit * * * to foreclose the liens provided for in this chapter or in a separate suit brought on said bond, then the court must, where it would be equitable so to do, restrict the recovery under such liens to an aggregate amount equal to the amount found to be due from the owner to the contractor, and render judgment against the contractor and his sureties on said bond for any deficiency or difference there may remain between said amount so found to be due to the contractor and the whole amount found to be due to claimants for such labor or materials or both. No change or alteration of the work or modification of any such contract between the owner and his contractor shall release or exonerate any surety or sureties upon any bond given under this section. It is the intent and purpose of this section to limit the owner's liability, in all cases, to the measure of the contract price where he shall have filed or caused to be filed in good faith with his original contract a valid bond with good and sufficient sureties in the amount and upon the conditions as herein provided. It shall be lawful for the owner to protect himself against any failure of the contractor to perform his contract and make full payment for all work done and materials furnished thereunder by exacting such bond or other security as he may deem satisfactory."

Section 14 of the revising act is as follows:

"The provisions of this act shall be liberally construed with a view to effect its purpose. They are not intended as a re-enactment of the provisions of former statutes, with the policy heretofore impressed upon the same by the courts of this state, but are intended to reverse that policy to the extent of making the liens provided for, direct and independent of any account of indebtedness between the owner and contractor, thereby making the policy of this state conform to that of Nevada and the other Pacific coast states."

The court below found that the bond was given in pursuance of section 1183 aforesaid. It is not claimed by the respondents that it is good as a common law bond, or that there was any consideration for its execution other than the belief that it was required by said section. The contention of the appellant is that the entire scheme of the provision is invalid because it invades the right of contract preserved by section 1, article 1, of the Constitution, and that, even if its provisions are otherwise valid, the requirement of a bond is beyond the legislative power and void, and that, for these reasons, the bond is without any consideration, and is unenforceable. If the premises are correct the conclusion that the bond creates no obligation would follow. The principle that a bond given solely to comply with a statute, which is itself void, or which does not require the bond as supposed, is without binding force is settled by the cases of Powers v. Chabot, 93 Cal. 270, 28 Pac. 1070, Coburn v. Townsend, 103 Cal. 235, 37 Pac. 202, Reay v. Butler, 118 Cal. 115, 50 Pac. 375, and similar cases, and, on the other hand, if the statute is valid in this respect it would necessarily follow that there was a sufficient consideration for the bond, and that it was binding upon the surety. The validity of the act as a whole and the provision requiring such bond in particular are, therefore, questions necessary to the determination of the case.

We have shown that when this act was passed it was the established doctrine of this state that the Legislature cannot create mechanic's liens against real property in excess of the contract price, where there is a valid contract, but that it is within the legislative power, in order to protect and enforce the liens provided for in the Constitution, and so far as for that purpose may be necessary, to make reasonable regulations of the mode of contracting, and even of the terms of such contracts, and to declare that contracts shall be void if they do not conform to such regulations. This court has never in any case departed from this doctrine. The case of Laidlaw v. Marye, 133 Cal. 170, 65 Pac. 391, and similar cases holding that, although a contract not in conformity with the statutory regulations is void, and therefore does not limit the lien claimant to the contract price, that it is binding in controversies between the contractor and owner to fix the amount of the contractor's recovery in assumpsit for the value of the work he has done, are not in conflict with this doctrine, but in recognition of it. Merced L. Co. v. Bruschi, 152 Cal. 372, 92 Pac. 844, and Burnett v. Glas, 154 Cal. 249, 97 Pac. 423, had to do with invalid contracts. They do not impugn the doctrine stated; they assert and enforce it. Nor is there any suggestion contrary thereto in the recent case of Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 Pac. 665.

The portions of the act of 1911 above quoted clearly show that the Legislature did not intend thereby to depart from this doctrine, but that, on the contrary, the design was to follow it and to protect lienholders by means of regulations concerning the mode of contracting and dealing with property for the purposes of erecting improvements thereon. The first declaration on the subject is that the liens provided in the chapter shall be "direct liens" (whatever that may mean), and that persons, other than the contractor, shall not be limited by the contract price "except as hereinafter provided." The proviso referred to is found in the following declaration in the same section:

"It is the intent and purpose of this section to limit the owner's liability, in all cases, to the measure of the contract price where he shall have filed or caused to be filed in good faith with his original contract a valid bond with good and sufficient sureties, in the amount and upon the conditions as herein provided."

A plainer declaration of the intent to make the contract price the limit of the owner's liability, where the bond and contract have been filed as required by this section, could scarcely be made. The rather vague statement in section 14 of the revising act of 1911 that said act is intended to make the liens therein provided for "direct and independent of any account of indebtedness between the owner and contractor," should not be interpreted as in contravention of section 1183, unless no other reasonable construction is apparent. It is not difficult to find a better application of the expression. Section 1183 describes two classes of liens. One class consists of liens in cases where the bond has not been filed, in which case, the state of accounts between the owner and contractor, and even the contract price, are immaterial to the lien, except as to the contractor. The other classes consist of all cases in which the proper bond and contract are duly filed. In these cases, by the express language of the section, the contract price is made to control, and the account of the indebtedness thereon from the owner to the contractor is decisive of the amount of the liens which can be adjudged against the property. The above-quoted clause of section 14 is therefore obviously applicable only to the first-mentioned class of liens, those where the bond and contract are not filed. To apply it to the other class of liens would work a practical repeal of very many of the elaborate provisions of the chapter as revised, since, for the most part, they would be wholly unnecessary and useless. The intent of the statute is to restrict liens to the contract price in all cases where the provisions of the statute regarding the bond are observed, and to impose upon the owner the penalty of paying all liens to the extent of the value of the work done and materials furnished where he shall neglect to comply with the statute.

The effect is that persons contracting for the erection of buildings or structures on their property must require the contractor to furnish such bond and must file the same with the contract in the recorder's office, or as an alternative, he must see to it that the value of the work and materials used in the building by the contractor is paid to the persons who furnish the same. A contract not accompanied by such bond is not declared to be invalid, but it furnishes no protection to the owner against liens for labor and material on the building. Do these regulations come within the doctrine of Latson v. Nelson, supra, and the other cases above cited?

The amendment of 1880 to section 1183 purported to confer liens for work and material on buildings without any regard whatever to the contract between the owner and the contractor. It gave the owner no method of exercising his right to contract with the builder for improvements on his property, without practically assuming total responsibility for all failure of such builder to pay for the labor and material thereon. It provided no means whereby he could avoid liens placed upon the property for the value of such work and materials. The right of persons to contract in that manner respecting their property was, to that extent, taken away. This was held to be a violation of the inalienable right to acquire and possess property guaranteed by section 1, article 1, of the Constitution. The revision of 1885 also interfered with the right of contract. Under its provisions the owner of property, in all proceedings to have improvements placed thereon by a builder, was not allowed to make payment in advance of the work. He was required to make his contract provide that three-fourths of the contract price should be paid in installments as the work progressed, or at completion, and one-fourth 35 days or more after completion. Failing in this he was declared to have made no contract at all, and the property was made subject to all claims for work and material used in the structure erected. This, although clearly a destruction, pro tanto, of the right of the owner freely to contract for the improvement of his property, was held to be a reasonable and permissible regulation of the right of enjoying property and of making contracts in relation thereto. The difference in the decisions upon these two differing laws points to the solution of the first part of the question. In view of the fact that our Constitution itself gives to workmen and materialmen a lien upon property for the value of the work and materials they bestow upon it and directs the Legislature to provide for the efficient enforcement of such liens, it is obvious that any legislative provision to that end which offers to the property owner a reasonable and practical mode of improving his property through a contractor at a fixed price and without further liability, should be considered as a legitimate exercise of the constitutional mandate. The plan of the amendment of 1880 was deemed unreasonable because it deprived the owner of all right to contract for improvements on his property for a sum fixed by his contract with the builder, while the amendment of 1885 was considered reasonable because it provided a practical method for the making of improvements under such contracts, although it did to some extent infringe upon liberty of contract. This theory has not been put in this way nor fully expressed in the several decisions on the subject. But the discussion therein plainly points to this as the true reason for the differentiation of the two enactments. The case of Latson v. Nelson, and others following it, construing the amendment of 1880, and the case of Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, supra, holding that the Legislature may not require such contracts to be made payable only in money, go far toward the limit of reason on the point that section 15, article 20, of the Constitution, is subordinate to the Declaration of Rights in section 1, article 1. The law of 1911 here involved does not deprive the owner of the right to contract for the improvement of his property. It allows him to contract freely for such improvement and upon such terms as he may deem for his best interests. All it exacts from him, as a condition of such exemption from liability, and in order to make his contract effective, is that he shall provide a reasonable security for the constitutional lien given for labor and materials furnished to his contractor. It is not an unreasonable burden. It is one which we think the people have the power to impose and which we believe to be within the scope of the constitutional mandate in the section conferring such liens, and of the police power.

Upon the point that any provision requiring a bond to secure such liens, whether given by the contractor or the owner, is unconstitutional, the appellant cites a line of cases beginning with Gibbs v. Tally, 133 Cal. 373, 65 Pac. 970, 60 L. R. A. 815. The other cases are Shaughnessy v. American Surety Co., 138 Cal. 543, 69 Pac. 250, 71 Pac. 701; San Francisco, etc., Co. v. Bibb, 139 Cal. 192, 72 Pac. 964; Snell v. Bradbury, 139 Cal. 380, 73 Pac. 150; Montague v. Furness, 145 Cal. 206, 78 Pac. 640; and Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 729, 84 Pac. 200.

In 1893 the Legislature amended section 1203 by requiring a bond to be filed to secure claims of workmen and materialmen on a building. The foregoing cases construe this section. It provided that every contract required to be filed by the mechanic's lien law should be accompanied by a bond in the sum of at least 25 per cent. of the contract price, which should be made to inure to the benefit of persons performing labor and furnishing materials for the building. To this was added a provision that a failure to file such bond should render the owner and contractor liable in damages to any person entitled, under the mechanic's lien law, to a lien upon the property affected by the contract. Gibbs v. Tally involved the consideration of the latter clause of the section. The other cases involved the validity of the bond thus required, and held that this provision for a bond is in violation of the inalienable right to acquire and possess property and contract in relation thereto. The section did not specify who should file the bond, nor to whom it should be made payable, nor who should execute the same. In Gibbs v. Tally the contract for the building was valid under the lien law as it then existed, and the persons who filed claims of lien had foreclosed the same, and had caused all of the contract price remaining unpaid from the owner to the contractor to be applied upon their liens, but it was not sufficient to pay them in full. Gibbs, one of the lien claimants, then began the action against Tally, the owner, to recover the damages which the statute purported to allow in case of the failure to file the required bond. The gist of the decision is that to allow such recovery, where there was a valid contract between the owner and the contractor, would make the owner liable for a debt which he did not owe, for an amount in excess of the contract price and which he had not agreed to pay. This, it was declared, was an unlawful infringement of section 1, article 1, of the Constitution. The facts involved in the case have no necessary bearing upon the question whether or not the Legislature could in any case require the contractor to file a bond for the benefit of persons having claims against him regarding the same before entering upon the work.

In Shaughnessy v. American Surety Co., supra, the question of the power of the Legislature to require the bond specified in section 1203 was directly involved. It was said that the requirement of such a bond was entirely outside of any protection of the constitutional lien given to mechanics and materialmen, and that it was in violation of the constitutional right of contract respecting property. The other cases above cited merely follow the decision in Shaughnessy v. American Surety Co. without further discussion of the subject. There is a marked difference between the law denounced as void in these cases and the act of 1911. The provisions of section 1203 do not appear to have had any direct relation to the validity or invalidity of the contract for the building. It was an additional requirement, an additional burden upon the parties. It had no connection with or relation to the constitutional mechanic's lien. The bond required to be given by the act of 1911, on the contrary, is provided for the express purpose of enabling the owner to escape liability for his building in any sum in excess of the contract price. It has a direct relation to the constitutional lien and to the effect of the contract for the improvement. The efficacy of the contract as a protection against such liens is made to depend directly upon the act of securing and filing the bond with the building contract. We think these differences are sufficient to distinguish this case from the line of cases above cited. We are unable to perceive any constitutional objection to the expedient of providing that by the execution and filing of such bond the owner may be protected against the delinquencies of his contractor while, at the same time, lien claimants are afforded a security for the payment of their claims. We therefore hold that the foregoing decisions are not applicable, and that the provision for requiring this bond is not unconstitutional or invalid.

[3] Some minor points remain to be noticed. It is urged that the provisions of the act requiring persons who make building contracts to file a bond, while no such requirement is made of any other person who may wish to make other kinds of contracts, creates a lack of uniformity and is class legislation. There is an intimation to this effect in Shaughnessy v. American Surety Co., supra, but the point was not directly involved, and the case does not hold to that doctrine. It is not sustained by authority. The rules regarding legislation respecting classes have been thoroughly settled in this state. The case most often cited is Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604. The decision in that case has been followed in very many cases since it was rendered. The principle announced is that a law is general and constitutional when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction. To this it has been added, in some cases, that the distinction must have some reasonable relation to the legislation enacted respecting the class. The fact that the Constitution confers upon persons performing labor or furnishing materials for the construction of a building the right to a lien thereon, at once establishes these persons as a class and makes a constitutional distinction between them and all other persons making contracts. This justifies legislation for the benefit of such claimants and governing the conduct and contracts of the owner of the property and the person contracting to construct buildings thereon. There is no improper classification.

[4] The claim that the terms of the bond, as prescribed in section 1183, would authorize a recovery on the bond for the full amount found due to lien claimants and in excess of the sum named therein as the penalty thereof, is untenable. The penalty of the bond is to be not less than one-half the amount of the contract price. This measures the obligation and the liability of the surety. The subsequent statement that after applying to the payment of liens the sum due from the owner to the contractor, such claimants may, in a suit on the bond, recover the unpaid balance of their claims, cannot be construed to authorize a recovery on the bond of more than the penal sum thereof. The provision must be construed as an entirety. So construed it seems that the recovery, being had in a suit on the bond, is necessarily limited to the penalty thereof. The fact that such suit may be joined with a suit to foreclose the liens does not make it any the less a suit on the bond. The statement that the bond must be "conditioned for the payment in full of the claims" of lienholders, is the usual phraseology of the obligation of a bond at common law. This is not understood to create an obligation in excess of the penal sum named, but only an obligation to pay such claims in full, provided they do not exceed the penal sum. The statute, being descriptive of the terms of a bond, should be given the same meaning.

[5, 6] The objection to the allowance of $144 to the respondent Hughes Manufacturing and Lumber Company, for extras on its subcontract for wall beds in the building cannot be sustained on the record before us. That company agreed with Thomas, the contractor, to furnish the wall beds, of a kind described as No. 40, for $600. While they were being installed, the architect interfered, stating that the specifications of the contract called for wall beds known as No. 29, and directed that No. 29 wall beds be placed in the building, which was done, with the consent of Thomas. The $144 was the additional charge on account of this change. The plans and specifications were attached to and filed with the general contract, as a part thereof, but they are not set forth in the bill of exceptions, nor elsewhere in the record. Therefore the finding of the court must be sustained on the presumption that the court below, upon examining the specifications, ascertained that they call for No. 29 wall beds, and that there was no change in the original contract nor any departure therefrom. The objection that the allowance of $144 includes some small amount, not inquired into at the trial or shown by the record, charged for the labor of making the changes, which would not be chargeable to the owner, or to the surety on the bond, is made in appellant's brief, but it was not made at the trial, or in the court below, and for that reason we refuse to consider it on appeal.

Our conclusion that the revision of 1911, as a whole, and the part thereof requiring the bond are valid enactments, disposes of all other points urged by the appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

HENSHAW, J. I concur in the foregoing judgment, but solely for the following reasons: It would seems when the Constitution of this state declares, as it does, that "mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property * * * for the value of such labor done and material furnished" that it was wholly beyond the power of the Legislature to destroy or even to impair this lien. The Legislature, controlling all procedures in courts of justice, could prescribe reasonable regulations with which the lien claimant must comply in the matter of the enforcement of his lien and declare in effect that for a noncompliance with these reasonable regulations the lien claimant shall be deemed to have waived his lien. Again, as a part of its powers in this matter, it may interpose between the lien claimant and the property owner some other fund and exact of the lien claimant that he first exhaust this fund before enforcing his lien upon the property. But it would also seem that there is a well-defined limitation upon the Legislature's power in the matter of this lien so solemnly guaranteed by the Constitution itself, and that limitation is that if the interposed fund (or bond) shall prove inadequate, the Legislature cannot say to the lien claimant that he must be satisfied with this fund, though he do not receive from it all that the Constitution has guaranteed him. But by a long course of judicial decisions, beginning with what I believe to be a mistaken view, first announced in the unreported case of Latson v. Nelson, this court has held that the legislative powers are greater than those I have indicated, and that those powers go to the extent of permitting the Legislature to impair or even to destroy the lien. It is too late, perhaps, for this court to recede from what I believe to have been the mistaken view thus forced upon it. The fact still remains, however, that under our decisions the Legislature can and does control the whole matter. Thus, if the Legislature desires to do so, it may give the lien claimant all the rights touching his lien, which the Constitution guarantees him.

It would appear that by the new act here under review the Legislature undertook to do this thing. The act to begin with declares as to the right to a lien in the very language of the Constitution. It does away with much of the pre-existing technical law of filing contracts, etc., and in its last section declares:

"Sec. 14. The provisions of this act shall be liberally construed with a view to effect its purpose. They are not intended as a re-enactment of the provisions of former statutes, with the policy heretofore impressed upon the same by the courts of this state, but are intended to reverse that policy to the extent of making the liens provided for, direct and independent of any account of indebtedness between the owner and contractor, thereby making the policy of this state conform to that of Nevada and the other Pacific Coast states."

By this language it would appear that the Legislature had at last decided to give to these lien claimants everything that the Constitution declares they should have. But by a most singular interpolation by way of an amendment to this act as originally proposed the question is again thrown into confusion. By the language of this interpolated amendment it is declared:

"If the original contract shall, before the work is commenced, be so filed, together with a bond of the contractor with good and sufficient sureties, in an amount not less than fifty per cent of the contract price named in said contract * * * then the court must, where it would be equitable so to do, restrict the recovery under such liens to an aggregate amount equal to the amount found due from the owner to the contractor."

The owner may have paid the contractor (and he is not prohibited from so doing) everything that is due, and in such case this language would limit the right of the recovery of the lien claimant to what he could obtain under the bond. In short, he would have no lien upon the property at all. Here is as radical a denial of the constitutional lien as is found in any of the earlier statutes. The inconsistency between this language and other parts of the act is too apparent to require comment. Yet, as this seems to have been the deliberate design of the Legislature, it is perhaps incumbent upon this court under its former decisions to give that design legal effect. If the Legislature in fact means to give claimants the rights which the Constitution guarantees them, as it declares its desire to do in section 14 above quoted, it alone has the power to do so by language which will make it apparent that a lien claimant may still have recourse to the property upon which he has bestowed his labor if the interposed intermediate undertaking or fund shall not be sufficient to pay him in full. This court is, however, justified I think in waiting for a plainer exposition of the Legislature's views and intent in the matter than can be found in this confused and confusing statute.

I concur: MELVIN, J.

171 Cal. 599

Ex parte UDELL. (Cr. 1993.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1915.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS ⇐54 — APPLICATION — SUFFICIENCY OF.

Under Pen. Code, § 1475, an application for a writ of habeas corpus should state whether a previous application has been had and what the proceedings thereon were.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 51; Dec. Dig. ⇐54.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⇐120 — ISSUANCE OF WRIT—POWER OF JUDGE.

While under certain circumstances the court may feel warranted in entertaining a second application for a writ of habeas corpus, no single member of the court after the denial of a writ may entertain a second writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. ⇐120.]

In Bank. Application by Alva Udell for a writ of habeas corpus. Application denied.

Alva Udell, of San Francisco, pro se.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus by one Alva Udell who is now in the custody of the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco under a judgment of the superior court thereof adjudging him guilty of contempt of court. The application is addressed to the Chief Justice, and not to the court.

[1] The petition is defective in that it does not state whether any prior application has been made to any court for a writ in regard to the same detention or restraint, and, if there was any such application, does not show the proceedings therein. Section 1475, Penal Code. As a matter of fact, a prior application in regard to the same detention or restraint was made by petitioner to this court, as our records show, on December 1, 1915, and such application was denied by the court on December 2, 1915. Not only was such application in regard to the same detention or restraint, but the grounds of the former application were the same as those now urged, with a greater degree of elaboration.

[2] While it may be that under certain circumstances the court itself might feel warranted in entertaining a second application from a party regarding the same detention or restraint, it is manifest that no single member of the court, be he Chief Justice or Associate Justice, is warranted in granting a writ where the same has been denied as to the same detention or restraint by the whole court in bank.

The application to me for a writ of habeas corpus is denied.

171 Cal. 607

In re WENKS' ESTATE.
WENKS v. GEHRING.

(S. F. 7315.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1915.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⊂=314—ORDER OF DISTRIBUTION—SCOPE OF RELIEF.

Where appellant as heir of his father sought to reach property which he claimed was the community property of his father and testatrix, who was the father's second wife, such claim should either be asserted by an action by appellant as heir or by the administrator of the father's estate, and cannot be presented on objections to an order of distribution of the estate of the testatrix.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1274–1297; Dec. Dig. ⊂=314.]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⊂=314—ORDERS OF DISTRIBUTION—CONTESTS—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, authorizing, in a proceeding for the distribution of the property of a decedent, contests arising out of the community property, applies only in case of intestacy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1274–1297; Dec. Dig. ⊂=314.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William S. Wells, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Elizabeth Wenks, deceased. Contest by Joseph Wenks against an order of final distribution in favor of Edward E. Gehring. From an order refusing to entertain the contest, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Carl L. Lindsay and H. C. Lucas, of Oakland, for appellant. Burton Jackson Wyman, of Oakland, for respondent. Gutsch & Lempke, of San Francisco, for residuary legatee.

HENSHAW, J. [1] Elizabeth Wenks died testate, disposing of all her property by will. Joseph Wenks, appellant, is her stepson, the son of her predeceased husband. During his lifetime that husband conveyed to her a piece of real property. No administration was had upon the estate of the husband of Elizabeth Wenks. Upon her death his son appeared and filed a contest in the matter of the final distribution of the estate, alleging that his father, the husband of Elizabeth, in his lifetime conveyed to Elizabeth certain real property which was community property; that the character of the property as community property was not changed by this conveyance, and that it remained the community property of the two spouses until the death of the husband; that after the death of the husband Elizabeth sold this property, and that the property of her estate for which distribution is sought is the proceeds of this sale. The court refused to entertain the contest or to hear the proffered evidence in support of these allegations.

In this the court was clearly right. Appellant had abundant opportunity to establish the facts which he here asserts by appropriate action as an heir of his deceased father, and it was his duty to have brought or to have caused the bringing of such an action either by himself as heir or by the administrator of his father's estate. His claim here presented is a claim of title adverse to that of the estate, and "the law does not contemplate or provide for the distribution of property or money in the hands of the executor or administrator to persons who may claim adversely to the estate, but leaves all such questions to be determined by an action on behalf of or against the executor." Estate of Rowland, 74 Cal. 523, 16 Pac. 315, 5 Am. St. Rep. 464.

[2] Moreover, section 1386, subdivision 8 of the Civil Code, upon which appellant apparently bases his right to be heard, is applicable only to cases of intestacy. Estate of Brady, 151 Pac. 275. Here the deceased died leaving a will disposing of all of her property. No support can be found for appellant's position in Estate of McCauley, 138 Cal. 546, 71 Pac. 458. There the court declared that under this section, in case of intestacy, the named relatives of the spouse first deceased are heirs so far as concerns the common property of the spouse last dying intestate. The decision then proceeds to show that there was a small amount of common property, amounting only to $499, in the estate of Jennie McCauley undisposed of by her will. This appears from the first paragraph of the decision, where it is pointed out that the distributable value of the estate is $67,000, and the total value of the property disposed of by will amounts to $62,000. The conclusion therefore properly followed that Jennie McCauley died intestate as to the small amount of community property, which would therefore descend, under the rules of succession, to the relatives of her husband, she having left no next of kin.

For these reasons the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

28 Cal. App. 780

NATIONAL LUMBER CO. v. KENNEDY et al. (Civ. 1771.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 13, 1915.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸132 — BUILDINGS — COMPLETION.

That after a building was completed and occupied by the owner, a skylight proved defective and was remedied, does not show that the building was incomplete until the skylight was repaired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 190, 192–207; Dec. Dig. ⟸132.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011 — REVIEW — FINDINGS.

A finding of the court on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3989; Dec. Dig. ⟸1011.]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸132—TIME OF FILING—NOTICE OF COMPLETION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, declares that the owner of any building must, within 10 days after its completion, or 40 days after cessation from labor upon any unfinished contract, file with the county recorder a notice thereof, that a failure to file such notice shall estop the owner and persons deraigning title from him from asserting, in foreclosure of a mechanics' lien, the defense that the lien was not filed within time, and that all claims for liens "must be filed within 90 days after completion." Held, the failure of the owner to file the notice of completion will not excuse a materialman's failure to file his lien claim within 90 days after completion, such provision fixing the ultimate time within which liens may be filed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 190, 192–207; Dec. Dig. ⟸132.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by the National Lumber Company against James Kennedy and another. There was a judgment for the named defendant, and from an order denying new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellant. E. H. Jolliffe, of Ontario, Cal., for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to foreclose an alleged lien for materials sold by plaintiff to defendant Miller for use in the construction by him, as contractor, of a building for defendant Kennedy. Miller made default. Kennedy answered, and upon trial judgment was entered for said defendant. The appeal is by plaintiff from an order overruling its motion for a new trial. No record was made of the contract, which was for a sum exceeding $1,000.

Two questions are presented: First, was the lien filed within the time required after the completion of the building, as provided in section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure? If not, did the acts and conduct of Kennedy as owner of the building estop him from urging such ground as a defense to the action?

The court found that the building was fully completed on October 15, 1909, but that no notice of its completion was ever at any time filed with the county recorder; that plaintiff's claim and notice of lien was not filed until March 15, 1910, which was 151 days after the completion of the building; that Kennedy did not, between November 3d and November 15, 1909, as alleged in the complaint, or at any time, state to plaintiff that said building was not complete according to the plans and specifications; nor is it true that plaintiff delayed filing its claim of lien because of any statements or representations made by Kennedy.

As we understand appellant's brief, it attacks all of these findings, except that as to defendant's failure to file a notice of the completion of the building.

[1] That the building was fully complete and occupied on October 15, 1909, is conclusively shown by the evidence. The only reason suggested for claiming otherwise is the fact that a skylight put in by the contractor proved defective, and later, some time in January, 1910, the defendant's tenant, being authorized so to do, employed another workman who installed a skylight in place of the one originally put in under the terms of the contract by Miller, the cost of which substituted skylight was, some time in March, paid for by Kennedy.

[2] Appellant, basing its contention upon the case of Hubbard v. Lee, 6 Cal. App. 602, 92 Pac. 744, insists that the acts and conduct of Kennedy estop him from basing any defense to the validity of the lien on account of its not being filed within time. In support of this theory plaintiff offered testimony to the effect that in response to a letter requesting him so to do, Kennedy, some time between November 3d and November 15th, called at its office, and in a conversation with its agents concerning the bill for materials furnished to Miller, and wherein the filing of a lien being mentioned, he asked them not to file any lien on the property, that the building was not yet completed, and that Miller would pay the bill. With reference to this conversation, one of plaintiff's witnesses, who at the time represented it, testified as follows:

"Q. And you didn't file your lien because you expected I. S. Miller to take care of the amount coming to you? A. Yes, sir. Q. That is the reason you did not file your lien? A. Yes, sir. Q. Didn't Mr. Kennedy tell you that I. S. Miller had the money to settle these claims and would settle them, and for you not to file any lien? A. Yes, sir. Q. And on that account you didn't file any lien? Now, isn't that the exact reason? A. Yes."

In addition to the general effect of plaintiff's evidence being weakened by this testimony, the defendant Kennedy denies that he ever said the building was not completed, but, on the contrary, stated to plaintiff that the building was completed, and that I. S. Miller had the money to pay their bill and told them to go and see him. Conceding that plaintiff's testimony, if believed by the court, might have constituted an estoppel against defendant, nevertheless there was a sharp conflict between the evidence on behalf of plaintiff and that given by defendant, as to which the determination of the court thereon must be deemed final. In the Hubbard Case, as here, the owner neglected not only to record the contract, but also to file for record the notice of actual completion of the work as required by the statute, and it was sought to prove that not only the owner, but the architect, repeatedly stated and represented to the materialman and lienor that the buildings were not completed, and that he had not accepted them and would not until certain other work was done, and that plaintiff, relying thereon, had delayed filing his notice of lien, to all of which the court sustained objections, and it was held to be error. The facts in the case at bar easily distinguish it from the Hubbard Case.

[3] Appellant next insists that, notwithstanding the expiration of more than 90 days, to wit, 151 days, following the completion of the building, it nevertheless was entitled to file its notice of lien by reason of the provisions of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, to the effect that the owner may, within 10 days after completion of any contract, or within 40 days after cessation from labor thereon, file for record in the office of the county recorder of the county where the property is situated, a notice setting forth the date when the same was completed, or on which cessation from labor occurred. The section further provides that "in case such notice be not so filed, then the said owner and all persons deraigning title from or claiming any interest through him, shall be estopped in any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien provided in this chapter from maintaining any defense therein, based on the ground that said lien was not filed within the time provided in this chapter"—followed by this proviso: "That all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building, improvement, or structure." In support of its contention, appellant cites the case of Robinson v. Mitchel, 159 Cal. 581, 114 Pac. 984. But there the court, with reference to this latter clause, say:

"This would seem to fix a time limit within which all liens must be filed regardless of whether the owner has filed his notice of completion or not. * * * But this question it is not necessary here to resolve."

Clearly the purpose of the provision was to give to persons interested therein notice of the completion of the work, in order that they might in due time file their claims of lien. Filing the notice of completion is not mandatory, but failure to file it extends the time for filing claims of lien for a period of 90 days after the actual completion of the work. The Legislature deemed such period ample time for otherwise obtaining information as to the time of completion. The provision that "all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building," could serve no purpose other than to terminate the time within which the claim of lien might be filed. Such is the plain import of the language used. As found by the court, the building was completed about October 15, 1909. In the absence of the filing of notice of its completion, plaintiff had until about the middle of January within which to file its lien, which, as stated, was not filed until March 15th thereafter. It appears from the record that plaintiff's agents passed the building daily, and from October 15th knew that it was occupied and had every appearance of being completed. In our opinion, the findings of the court attacked are fully sustained by the evidence.

Since the plaintiff was not entitled in any event to enforce its claim of lien, the alleged errors due to rulings upon the admission and rejection of testimony could in no event have been prejudicial to the rights of plaintiff.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

28 Cal. App. 789

HILBORN v. BONNEY et ux. (Civ. 1777.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 13, 1915.)

ELECTION OF REMEDIES ⇐14—FRAUD—MONEY JUDGMENT.

Defendant fraudulently procured the conveyance of plaintiff's property to him in exchange for worthless stock. Plaintiff instituted an action at law to recover damages against defendant for fraud, in which she obtained a judgment. Meanwhile, defendant had sold plaintiff's land and invested the proceeds in land upon which defendant's wife filed a declaration of homestead. Plaintiff then instituted the present action to have the declaration canceled as a cloud on the property purchased with and representing the property fraudulently obtained from her which obstructed an execution under her money judgment. Held, that plaintiff, having elected to pursue her remedy at law for damages for the fraud, was estopped from again proceeding on the same facts for equitable relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Election of Remedies, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. ⟸14.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Grace A. Hilborn against Frank R. Bonney and Ella Bonney, his wife, to annul a declaration of homestead by the wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

E. J. Fleming and S. L. Carpenter, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. Frank L. Muhleman, Jones & Evans, and Earl T. Miller, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. It appears from the complaint filed August 20, 1912, that plaintiff had theretofore, on August 9, 1912, in an action instituted against defendant Frank R. Bonney to recover damages for alleged fraud, obtained a judgment against him in the sum of $4,000, upon which she caused to be issued an execution and a levy thereof made upon certain real estate described as lot 22 of the Huston tract, in Los Angeles county, title to which real estate was at the time in the name of defendant Ella Bonney and upon which she, prior to the entry of the judgment against her husband, had filed a declaration of homestead. The complaint then alleges the fraudulent acts of Frank R. Bonney by means of which he induced plaintiff to convey to him certain real estate then owned by her in exchange for certain valueless corporate stock, which acts were made the basis of the action wherein judgment was rendered against him and in favor of plaintiff; that after thus obtaining such real estate from plaintiff he sold the same and invested the proceeds thereof in said lot 22 of the Huston tract, which, prior to the rendition of the judgment against him, he caused to be conveyed to his wife, Ella, who, as stated, filed a declaration of homestead thereon. The prayer of the complaint is to have this declaration canceled and annulled; the reason assigned therefor being that it constitutes a cloud upon the property, thereby obstructing plaintiff in enforcing collection of her judgment against Frank R. Bonney by sale of the property under execution so levied thereon. A general demurrer interposed to this complaint was overruled. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendants appeal.

The only question involved is the ruling of the court upon the sufficiency of the complaint. The theory of respondent (plaintiff here) is that since, as adjudged in the action wherein she had a judgment for damages against him, the conveyance of her property was obtained by the fraudulent acts of Frank R. Bonney, neither it nor lot 22, bought with the proceeds of the sale thereof, could, as to her judgment, be the subject of a declaration of homestead by the wife; in other words, that by reason of the manner in which the property was obtained, it was impressed with a trust in favor of plaintiff. Conceding, upon the facts stated, plaintiff might have brought an equitable action to impress a trust upon the property or to have a lien declared thereon, and thus have obtained relief, she chose instead to sue at law for a money judgment. Having elected to pursue this course, we are unable to perceive that she has any greater or different rights with reference to the property than any other general judgment creditor of Bonney. The case presented is almost identical with that of Hanly v. Kelly, 62 Cal. 155, wherein it was said:

"Under such circumstances, plaintiff must be held to have elected his remedy at law, and to be estopped from pursuing in equity the fund into the homestead."

To the same effect is Barker v. Barker, 14 Wis. 142; Fitzell v. Leaky, 72 Cal. 477, 14 Pac. 198; and Harding v. Atlantic Trust Co., 26 Wash. 536, 67 Pac. 222. Section 1240, Civil Code, provides that "the homestead is exempt from execution or forced sale, except as in this title provided," and section 1241 designates the circumstances which must exist in order to render a homestead subject to execution or forced sale in satisfaction of judgments obtained. The sale sought of the property is under an execution issued upon a general judgment, and, as stated, plaintiff's rights with reference to the homestead in no wise differ from the rights of any other general judgment creditor. Under the doctrine of election, she chose to assert her rights in an action for damages against defendant Bonney, thus electing to enforce her claim generally against his property, and is now estopped from again, upon the same facts, asking for equitable relief. In Fitzell v. Leaky, supra, the Supreme Court says:

"It (the homestead) is not invalid because made during the progress of litigation, which subsequently results in an ordinary money judgment against the homesteader, or because made at any time before the entry and docketing of such a judgment. The law authorizes a debtor to erect a barrier around the home, over which the sheriff, although armed with final process under such a judgment, cannot pass. With the policy of the law, or the abstract morality of a particular transaction, we have nothing to do. The doctrine bearing upon conveyances made to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors has no application to the creation of a homestead."

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

28 Cal. App. 777

TINGEY v. CALLAHAN CONST. CO.

(Civ. 1761.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 13, 1915.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=874—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—NECESSITY FOR APPEAL.

Where no appeal was taken from the judgment, orders overruling a demurrer to an amended complaint and denying a motion to strike out portions thereof, will not be considered on appeal from an order denying a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3478, 3480, 3481, 3484, 3530–3540; Dec. Dig. ⊂=874.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=548 — RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW — OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE—SPECIFICATION.

Where various exceptions were taken to the introduction of testimony, which were again urged in the briefs on appeal, the general point being made that the evidence heard was insufficient to sustain the findings, the bill of exceptions containing no particular specification pointing out the weakness of the testimony as to any of the facts in issue, the question of the propriety of the evidence was not presented where there was sufficient evidence, unchallenged, to support the findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2433–2440; Dec. Dig. ⊂=548.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1050—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Errors in receiving testimony cannot be deemed to have been prejudicial to defendant when, disregarding the incompetent matter, enough remains in the record to sustain the cause of action as alleged in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068, 1069, 4153–4157, 4166; Dec. Dig. ⊂=1050.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by C. H. Tingey against the Callahan Construction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying its motion for new trial defendant appeals, presenting the appeal upon a bill of exceptions. Order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

A. J. Morganstern, of San Diego, for appellant. Crouch & Harris, of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Judgment was awarded plaintiff in this action. The defendant appealed from an order made denying its motion for a new trial and presents the appeal upon a bill of exceptions.

[1] The action was based upon a contract whereby plaintiff's assignor agreed with the defendant to do certain excavating and grading work for a specified sum per cubic yard. The cause of action was stated in brief form, it not appearing from the allegations thereof whether the contract sued upon was written or oral. The defendant by its answer, after denying that plaintiff's assignor had performed the work described in the complaint, alleged that the contractual relation between the parties depended upon a writing which was set up as an exhibit attached to the answer. In the course of the trial plaintiff was allowed leave to amend his complaint by incorporating therein the written contract as alleged by the defendant, and alleging other facts showing that the oral agreement under which the work was commenced was incorporated in the writing which was signed at a later date, but before the alleged completion of the work; that at the time the preliminary negotiations were closed it was agreed that the contract should be reduced to writing; and that the delay occasioned in that regard was because of the failure of the defendant to prepare the writing. There was a demurrer to this amended complaint and a motion to strike out portions thereof. However, these points cannot be considered, as no appeal was taken from the judgment. Under our practice the taking of such an appeal is necessary before questions of the kind suggested would be presented for review. See Stewart v. Stewart, 156 Cal. 651, 105 Pac. 955, and cases therein cited.

[2, 3] At the trial various exceptions were taken to the introduction of testimony, which objections are again urged in the briefs of counsel on this appeal. The general point is made that the evidence heard was insufficient to sustain the findings of the court. In the bill of exceptions there is no particular specification, as is required, which points out the weakness of the testimony as to any of the facts in issue. The objection that a sufficient specification is lacking is not answered by saying that it is the claim of appellant that there is no evidence upon which to sustain the decision of the trial court, for there is evidence as to the making of the contract and the entering upon the work, which stands undisputed and unchallenged. We may say that there is some evidence shown in the record to sustain all of the findings of the trial judge. The defendant offered no testimony whatsoever in opposition to the case presented by the plaintiff. An examination of the evidence, as the bill of exceptions presents it, shows, we think, sufficiently that the claim of the plaintiff was just and that he was entitled to enforce his demand. Any errors committed by the court in receiving testimony cannot be deemed to have been prejudicial to defendant's right to a fair trial, when, disregarding the incompetent matter, enough remains in the record, as we conclude there does, to sustain the cause of action as alleged in the amended complaint. In other words, it is not shown in this case that there has been a miscarriage of justice within the meaning of the constitutional amendment.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

28 Cal. App. 774

PEOPLE v. RIVERA. (Cr. 390.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 12, 1915.)

1. LARCENY ⊂⊃55—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY. In a prosecution for cattle theft, evidence held insufficient to warrant conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 152, 164, 165, 167–169; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃55.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1036—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS BELOW—NECESSITY. Error cannot be predicated on the admission of evidence not objected to below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1631–1640, 2639–2641; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃1036.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃829 — EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTION. The refusal of requests covered by the charges given is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃829.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Joe Rivera was convicted of grand larceny, and, from the judgment of conviction and an order denying new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Pierce, of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant, together with Bert Rivera and John Cassou, was charged with having committed the crime of grand larceny by stealing a heifer belonging to Elias Munz. The theft of the animal was claimed to have been committed in the cattle-raising district of Los Angeles county, near Elizabeth Lake. Appellant was convicted of the charge and sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment in the state prison. He appealed from an order denying a motion for a new trial and from the judgment.

[1] As a principal contention involved in a consideration of the appeal is that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the jury in finding a verdict of guilty, it will be proper to review briefly the testimony introduced by the prosecution as the typewritten record shows it: At the time of the alleged theft appellant resided at a ranch which appears to have been owned or controlled by his brother and codefendant. Several miles away was the ranch of complainant Munz. Shortly before the 20th of April, 1914, Munz drove two cows, or rather a black cow and the heifer which was alleged to have been stolen, onto a nearby range, where they were left in charge of one Babcock. They were then upon an open range, and at about the 20th of April they had come down near to Babcock's house, and he drove them back into the hills where there was a small canyon and a spring of water. This point where he left them was approximately between 6½ and 8 miles from the Rivera ranch. Immediately after the 20th of April Babcock missed the two animals hereinbefore referred to which belonged to Munz. Munz, being informed of their absence, began a search in an endeavor to locate the animals. He went down upon the Rivera ranch and was proceeding, with the aid of a neighbor, to search in a thicket of willows that grew there. While so engaged, Joe Rivera, the appellant here, came hastily down to where the men were, appearing in an excited state. He cursed Munz and told him to "get off the place" and not to search there without a search warrant. Munz deemed it best to follow the advice of Rivera and proceeded at once to Lancaster, which was 20 miles away, where he procured a search warrant and came back and resumed the search. It was observed that a pathway which led into the thicket of willows had been covered with leaves (apparently for the purpose of giving it the appearance of not having been disturbed). Following this pathway into the thicket, Munz and his companion found evidences that something had been buried there, and they soon unearthed what appeared to them to be the entrails of two cows, the remains of an unborn calf, together with a cow's head. This cow's head bore a resemblance to the head of the larger cow which had been taken from Babcock's range. Shortly thereafter another neighbor, who was about to embark with his boat on the body of water known as Elizabeth Lake, noticed a gunny sack close to the shore and he took possession of it. In this sack was a hide, evidently that of a cow. Later another hide was found in a similar sack at the bottom of the lake near the shore. These hides were exhibited to Munz, who identified them, not only on account of the color of the hair which appeared clinging thereto, but because also of the fact that a brand appeared on the hides which he identified as being his own and one which his family used in marking their cattle. Munz testified that the brand on the younger animal had only been placed there about two months prior to the time of its disappearance. Witness Chandler was the keeper of a hotel at the town of Elizabeth Lake, which was about 2½ miles northeast from the ranch of appellant. Chandler testified that on the night of the 20th of April, 1914, John Cassou came into his place, asking if there were any cows in the yard. It was about 8 or 8:30 o'clock in the evening and very dark and cloudy; a rain was threatening. Chandler testified that he took two lanterns and went out into the yard, and that he there saw a young cow or heifer of a fawn color, and also a big dark-colored cow. (The heifer which Munz claimed to have been stolen from him by appellant was a light-colored Jersey heifer.) Witness Lindstrum was a next-door neighbor of Chandler's and as Chandler went out that night into his yard he first called to Lindstrum. Lindstrum heard the call, but did not go farther than his front gate. Cassou drove the animals out of Chandler's yard and left the place. Lindstrum testified that, when he came to his front gate in answer to Chandler's call, Joe Rivera, the appellant, was there seated upon a horse; that they exchanged greetings; that Rivera continued on his way; and that there was the noise of something proceeding ahead of him. Witness Andrade, who lived about one mile from the Riveras, on the same night and at a time not far from that mentioned by Chandler in his testimony, hearing the barking of a dog, went out into his front yard and there saw this appellant and Cassou driving two cows. The animals had stopped at a watering trough that stood by the roadside. At a later date a man named Burns shipped a carcass of beef to Lapham, a butcher at Lancaster. The witness Andrade testified that some time after the alleged theft of the heifer he was present when Harry Burns reported to appellant that "they" had found the hides in the lake, and that Rivera had replied to him, "They won't know who put them there, anyhow." In the face of this testimony, the claim that there was a lack of sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in convicting impresses us with but little force. We think that, upon the state of facts as the testimony for the prosecution presented them, there was ample evidence to show the commission of the crime alleged and the participation of this appellant in it. It is said by counsel in the briefs that it is altogether improbable that Joe Rivera and John Cassou could have driven the cattle from the place where Babcock left them, a distance of seven or eight miles, within the period of time from sunset or thereabouts until they were seen at Chandler's and Andrade's places. The witnesses in this case, as is usual in courtroom experience, did not attempt to state the time exactly, and, even though they had, the question as to the probability of the cattle having been driven the distance mentioned was one peculiarly for the jury to pass upon. No such state of improbability is presented by the evidence as to warrant this court in interfering with the verdict on that ground.

[2] We find it urged also in the brief of appellant that the court improperly allowed testimony of the selling of the carcass of an animal or animals by Burns to Lapham. We find that objection was made to but little of this testimony, and that the main facts of the occurrence adverted to were given without any protest being heard from the appellant.

[3] Some complaint is made on account of the refusal of the court to give certain instructions offered by the appellant. Those instructions, in so far as they may be said to have correctly stated the law, were pointed to the purpose only of emphasizing and laying stress upon matters which were, by other instructions given by the court, very fully stated to the jury.

We have given no attention to claims for error which are not supported by argument in the briefs. It seems clear enough that on the merits the case against appellant was fairly presented, and that no error was committed which may be said to have produced a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

(28 Cal. A. 786)

POLLOK v. EVENING HERALD PUB. CO.

(Civ. 1774.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 13, 1915.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⟸86—WORDS NOT ACTIONABLE PER SE—INNUENDO.

Where defendant published an article saying that plaintiff's theater manager was guilty of immoral conduct, the charge specifically mentioning the name of the theater, but not specifically referring to the plaintiff, nor susceptible of a meaning injurious to him; the words were not actionable, since the innuendo could not supply to them a meaning which they of themselves did not contain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 205–208; Dec. Dig. ⟸86.]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⟸32 — GENERAL DAMAGE—WORDS NOT LIBELOUS PER SE.

Where the words used were not libelous per se, merely alleging that the manager of the plaintiff's theater was guilty of immoral conduct, no general damage could be shown, since the injury suffered, if at all, was due to the extrinsic circumstances set forth by way of innuendo.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. ⟸32.]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⟸89 — WORDS ACTIONABLE—WORDS NOT LIBELOUS PER SE.

Where an alleged libelous article merely alleged that the manager of plaintiff's theater was guilty of immoral conduct, but made no specific reference to the plaintiff, and the complaint failed to charge any special damage, such as loss of patronage at the theater, no recovery could be had, since special damage must be shown to warrant recovery for words not actionable per se.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 213, 214; Dec. Dig. ⟸89.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Fred A. Pollok against the Evening Herald Publishing Company, a corporation. From a judgment for defendant upon an order sustaining his demurrer to the third amended complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse A. Gyger and Wesley H. Beach, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Denis & Loewenthal, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action for libel. Plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of defendant upon an order of court sustaining the latter's demurrer, both general and special, interposed to the third amended complaint.

It appears from the complaint that on October 21, 1912, plaintiff became the lessee and manager of a place of amusement in the city of Los Angeles, known as the Princess Theater; that at that time defendant was a corporation engaged in the publication of a newspaper of general circulation, known as the Los Angeles Evening Herald; that on November 14, 1912, defendant published in the regular issue of said newspaper an article as follows:

"Theater Manager Accused in Court. Girl Says George E. Ryan Forced Her to Accept His Attentions.

"May Thomas, whose stage name is Ladene Earl, who several days ago swore to an affidavit charging Guy Eddie, city prosecuting attorney, with forcing his attentions upon her, appeared in Judge Wilbur's court this morning as prosecuting witness against George E. Ryan, manager of the Princess Theater.

"According to the testimony of Miss Thomas, Ryan contributed to her delinquency. She stated that she was employed by Ryan as a chorus girl at the Princess and that two days after she went to work he told her that she would be discharged unless she accepted his attentions. She also stated that he promised her a raise in salary provided she would look with favor upon his advances.

"According to Deputy District Attorney H. S. G. McCartney, Ryan has made a business of forcing his attentions upon girls working in the chorus. He avers that when Ryan's trial is called he will produce at least six girls who have complained to him of Ryan's treatment."

By way of innuendo, it is then alleged that by the publication of said article defendant intended to and did charge, and by the readers of said paper was understood as charging, that Ryan was the manager of said theater at the time of the publication of the article, to wit, November 14, 1912, and that Ryan was and had been for some time, as such manager, in the employ of plaintiff, who had allowed him as his agent to employ chorus girls in said theater, and that plaintiff had allowed said Ryan to act in an indecent, outrageous, and criminal manner in the course of the performance of his duties as plaintiff's manager, and that plaintiff was a person of low character, and allowed his business to be operated in a low and criminal manner. It is further alleged that plaintiff had never employed Ryan in any capacity, and that at no time subsequent to said October 21, 1912, when plaintiff acquired the Princess Theater, had Ryan been manager thereof; that said publication, as understood by the general public and by defendant intended to be understood, exposed plaintiff to hatred, contempt, and ridicule by imputing to him a low and base character similar to that of an owner of a brothel; "that by reason of the publication aforesaid plaintiff was thereby injured in his theatrical business to his damage in the sum of $15,000."

[1] It must be conceded that as to plaintiff, to whom the article made no reference, the language thereof is not actionable per se. Recognizing this fact, plaintiff seeks, by way of innuendo, to show that by the article defendant intended, and was understood to intend and mean, to charge him in effect with being an accomplice of Ryan in the commission of the misdeeds imputed to the latter. From no angle, in our opinion, is the language used susceptible of such meaning or application. As said by Lord Kenyon in a very early case:

"The injury is much too remote to be the foundation of an action." Ashley v. Harrison, 1 Esp. 48.

"If the words before the innuendo do not sound in slander, no meaning produced by the innuendo will make the action maintainable, for it is not the nature of an innuendo to beget an action." Grand v. Dreyfus, 122 Cal. 58, 54 Pac. 389.

While it may serve to point a meaning to precedent matter, it can never be resorted to for the purpose of establishing a new charge. At most, the article erroneously describes Ryan's calling as manager of the Princess Theater. Quoting from Odgers on Libel and Slander (5th Ed.) p. 134, it is said:

"Where the words can bear but one meaning, and that is obviously not defamatory, then no innuendo or other allegation on the pleadings can make the words defamatory. * * * No parol evidence is admissible to explain the meaning of ordinary English words, in the absence of any evidence to show that in the case before the court the words do not bear their usual signification."

[2] Moreover, while it is alleged that the article was published for the purpose of and did damage plaintiff and injure him in his business and calling, the article itself makes it apparent that no general damage could have been sustained. This for the reason that, as stated, the language used was not libelous per se, the alleged injury suffered being due solely to the extrinsic circumstances set forth by way of innuendo.

[3] It appears to be the rule that "in order to maintain an action upon words which are not libelous * * * per se, the plaintiff must have suffered some special damage, and the recovery is limited to compensation therefor." 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1085; Harris v. Burley, 8 N. H. 216; Hirshfield v. Bank, 83 Tex. 452, 18 S. W. 743, 15 L. R. A. 639, 29 Am. St. Rep. 660. Such damage might be predicated upon the loss of patronage and attendance upon entertainments given by him at the Princess Theater. There is nothing in the complaint, however, showing any falling off in such attendance, nor any allegations upon which special damages could be predicated. Our conclusion is that, since the article was not libelous in itself, no recovery could be had thereon for the general damages prayed for; and, while plaintiff might have alleged facts upon which to base a claim for special damage, no such averments were made, and therefore the complaint states no cause of action for the recovery of such damage. Newbold v. Bradstreet & Son Co., 57 Md. 38, 40 Am. Rep. 426; Woodruff v. Bradstreet Co., 116 N. Y. 217, 22 N. E. 354, 5 L. R. A. 555; Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 386; Harris v. Burley, supra; Dun v. Maier, 82 Fed. 169, 27 C. C. A. 100.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

28 Cal. App. 784

NEWELL v. NEWELL. (Civ. 1537.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 13, 1915.)

1. DIVORCE ⟸255—ALIMONY—DECREE.

Where the complaint of plaintiff wife suing for divorce alleged that she and defendant had contracted to settle their property rights, whereby defendant agreed to pay plaintiff, as alimony, the sum of $75 per month during her life, or until she should remarry, praying that defendant be required to pay plaintiff such sum, a decree ordering that defendant pay such sum monthly, until the further order of the court, for the support of the plaintiff, was not open to attack on the ground that the relief granted was without the issues tendered and prayed for.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 722–724; Dec. Dig. ⟸255.]

2. DIVORCE ⟸240—ALIMONY—DECREE.

Where plaintiff wife, suing for divorce, alleged a contract settling the property rights of the parties, whereby the husband agreed to pay $75 a month alimony, praying that he be required to pay her that sum monthly as alimony, the decree ordering that defendant pay $75 per month until the further order of the court, the amount to be for the maintenance and support of plaintiff, even if defendant were bound both by the order and the agreement to pay the amount, so that upon default plaintiff might have concurrent remedies in enforcing payment, the decree was not improper as effectuating a double award.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 675–678, 680; Dec. Dig. ⟸240.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action for divorce by Kate Elizabeth Newell against William D. Newell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, for appellant. K. B. Campbell, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. [1, 2] This was an action for divorce. In addition to the grounds therefor, plaintiff alleged that she and defendant had entered into a contract in writing whereby they had settled and adjusted all their property rights, making a division of all community property belonging to them, and whereby, among other things, defendant agreed to pay plaintiff as alimony the sum of $75 per month during her life, or until she should remarry. The prayer of the complaint was:

"That the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between herself and defendant be dissolved, and that defendant be required to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $75 on the first day of each and every month during her life, or until she shall remarry."

To this complaint defendant made default, and upon the trial of the case the court found:

"That a divorce ought to be granted as prayed for in said complaint, and that the defendant pay $75 per month for the support and maintenance of plaintiff as hereinafter directed."

The appeal is prosecuted from that part of the decree wherein:

It is "ordered and decreed that defendant William D. Newell pay to plaintiff on the first day of each and every month, beginning on the 15th day of November, 1912, the sum of $75 per month, until the further order of this court; the said sum of $75 to be for the maintenance and support of plaintiff, Kate Elizabeth Newell."

As we gather from appellant's argument, his contention is that the court went outside of the complaint and beyond the allegations thereof in ordering that defendant pay alimony to plaintiff; that, since the complaint alleged an agreement for a division of the community property and under which defendant had agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $75 per month as alimony, the effect of the decree is to require defendant to pay the $75 per month alimony as ordered by the court, leaving him bound under his contract with plaintiff to pay her an additional $75 month, making in all $150 per month. The prayer of the complaint was that defendant be required to pay plaintiff the sum of $75 per month alimony, and the decree and order are in strict accordance with the prayer of the complaint. Defendant therefore had due notice of the specific relief demanded by plaintiff, and hence, since the complaint alleged his agreement to pay the same, cannot say the relief granted was without the issues tendered and prayed for. Nor do we see any merit in the contention of appellant to the effect that he is bound by his contract to pay $75 per month as alimony, and also bound by the decree to pay an additional $75 as alimony. Conceding that he may be bound by both the order and agreement to pay said sum, and upon default plaintiff might have concurrent remedies in enforcing payment, nevertheless the payment of $75 per month would not only satisfy his obligation existing by virtue of the agreement made with plaintiff, but at the same time satisfy the obligation imposed upon him by the order and decree made in accordance with the terms of the agreement and pursuant to the prayer of the complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

28 Cal. App. 792

PEOPLE v. CANFIELD. (Cr. 415.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 15, 1915.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES ⟸31 — INDICTMENT — SUFFICIENCY—STATUTE.

Under Pen. Code, § 952, requiring a statement of the particular circumstances of the offense when they are necessary to constitute an offense, where an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses described no natural or causal connection between the false representations alleged and the delivery of the property to defendant, such indictment was demurrable, since an indictment for the offense must show that the property was obtained by means of the false pretenses alleged, so that, when no natural connection appears between the pretense and the delivery of the property, such additional facts as are necessary to show the relation must be alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 38–41; Dec. Dig. ⟸31.]

2. FALSE PRETENSES ⟸31 — INDICTMENT — SUFICIENCY.

There may be averments in an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses from which the connection between the pretense and the obtaining of the property can be inferred, so that the indictment is sufficient without direct averment of the connection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 38–41; Dec. Dig. ⟸31.]

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ⟸60 — NECESSARY CONTENT.

An indictment or information must set forth all the facts and circumstances necessary to constitute the crime sought to be charged, as such matters cannot rest in presumption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 182, 266, 267; Dec. Dig. ⟸60.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Leonard C. Canfield was indicted for obtaining money by false pretenses, and from a judgment sustaining his demurrer, the people appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Tracy C. Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles, for the People. Paul W. Schenck, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant was indicted for obtaining money by false pretenses. His demurrer, interposed upon both general and special grounds, was sustained, and from the judgment following such ruling, the people appeal.

The indictment is quite lengthy; the substance thereof being that defendant, with intent to defraud Caroline Schertz, Flora B. Schertz, Ernest H. Lockwood, and Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation, out of their, and each of their, money, represented that he was Helmer E. Rabild, the owner and legal holder of a certain promissory note of the face value of $10,000, made by one Justin E. Cook to him, said Helmer E. Rabild, payment of which was secured by a mortgage duly executed by said Cook upon certain real estate in Los Angeles county, which real estate it was represented had been conveyed to one Earl M. McLaughlin, and that $7,000 had been paid upon the principal of said note, and $350 paid on account of interest accrued thereon, all of which representations so made to said persons, it is alleged, were at the time made, false, and known by defendant to be false and untrue; "that by reason of the aforesaid false and fraudulent representations and pretenses, so made as aforesaid by the said Leonard C. Canfield to the said Caroline Schertz, Flora B. Schertz, Ernest H. Lockwood, and the Title Insurance & Trust Company, a body corporate, the said Caroline Schertz, Flora B. Schertz, Ernest H. Lockwood, and the Title Insurance & Trust Company, a body corporate, relying upon the said false representations and pretenses, and believing same, were thereby induced to, and on the 3d day of September, 1914, did, at and in the county of Los Angeles aforesaid, pay over and deliver to the said defendant, Leonard C. Canfield, $2,739.20 lawful money of the United States of the moneys and personal property of them, the said Caroline Schertz, Flora B. Schertz, Ernest H. Lockwood, and the Title Insurance & Trust Company, a body corporate, and they were and each of them was thereby then and there defrauded out of said sum of $2,739.20 of the personal property" of said persons.

[1] In addition to the general demurrer, it was also alleged that the indictment did not conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code, and that it was not direct and certain, in that it could not "be determined what, if any, causal connection there is or was between the alleged false representation, and the parting with money by any one, if any was parted with." It appears the trial court deemed the indictment obnoxious to the ground last stated. In thus sustaining the demurrer the court followed the case of People v. Kahler, 26 Cal. App. 449, 147 Pac. 228, wherein this court, in discussing a like objection urged against an information, said:

"It is merely alleged that defendant, knowing the same to be untrue, falsely represented to Richard J. Cogan that he had contracts for furnishing orchestras to certain cafés and theaters; that Cogan, believing the representations to be true, and relying thereon, paid and delivered to defendant the sum of $75. For what purpose is not disclosed. Conceding the representation made by defendant to have been false, there is no causal connection between the payment of the money and the representation. * * * We are unable to perceive any connection between the alleged false representation and the paying or giving to defendant the $75, nor how, in the absence of further allegations, such representations should have been induced, or were calculated to induce, Cogan to pay defendant $75 in money."

We deem the language there used likewise appliable here. For aught that appears to the contrary, defendant retained and still holds the note. Then for what purpose was the money paid over and delivered to him? It is left entirely to conjecture. In the absence of any allegation to that effect, we cannot assume the prosecuting witnesses were, by reason of the false representations, induced to pay their money to defendant in consideration of a transfer by him to them of this promissory note and mortgage. Conceding the representations were, as believed, all true, why should they induce these persons to give their money to Rabild? That they delivered the money to him relying upon the representation that he was Rabild is as inconceivable as that they should have paid it to him because of a false representation that he was Dr. Cook and had been to the north pole.

"The indictment must show that the property was obtained by means of the false pretense alleged. Accordingly, when there appears to be no natural connection between the pretense and the delivery of the property, such additional facts as are necessary to show the relation must be alleged." 19 Cyc. 429; People v. White, 7 Cal. App. 99, 93 Pac. 683.

In the absence of an allegation showing that the prosecutors were induced to purchase the note and mortgage or lend money thereon, there appears to be no natural connection between the false representations and the delivery of the property to defendant.

[2] While such facts should be directly pleaded, nevertheless there may be averments from which the connection between the pretense and the obtaining of the property can be inferred, as in the case of People v. Donaldson, 70 Cal. 116, 11 Pac. 681; where the defendant was charged with false pretenses in obtaining from one Spence certain hogs by falsely pretending to Spence that he, the defendant, had in bank a certain sum of money for which he delivered to Spence his check. So, in the case of People v. Haas, 151 Pac. 672, recently decided by this court, and wherein the court, through Mr. Justice James, distinguished the facts therein from those in the Kahler Case, an examination of the information upon which Haas was prosecuted exhibits facts from which the court was fairly justified in inferring that the money of the prosecuting witness was, by reason of the false pretenses, paid over to defendant, in consideration of a transfer to her of certain property alleged to be owned by Haas. In the case of People v. Hines, 5 Cal. App. 122, 89 Pac. 858, cited by appellant, the information, by indirect allegations, disclosed the money of the prosecuting witness was paid over to defendant in consideration of a conveyance of property which he represented he owned.

[3] It is a well-settled rule that an indictment or information must set forth all the facts and circumstances necessary to constitute the crime sought to be charged. In the absence of such allegations, or statements from which such facts may be fairly deduced, the court cannot indulge in the presumption that acts were committed which constitute a crime. The prosecuting witnesses herein may by reason of such representations have been induced to pay the money over to defendant as a contribution to some charitable object, in which case we do not mean to say it would not constitute the offense charged. Section 952, Penal Code, requires a statement of the particular circumstances of the offense when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense. Measured by this provision, the indictment is insufficient, since it fails to disclose any natural or causal connection between the false representations alleged and the delivery of the property to defendant.

The judgment and order from which the appeal is prosecuted are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(28 Cal. A. 766)

PEOPLE v. TURNER. (Cr. 592.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 12, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐1186—APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—STATUTE.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that no judgment shall be set aside in any criminal case unless the court shall be of opinion that the error complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice, in a prosecution for libel, where, at the conclusion of the preliminary hearing, the magistrate merely announced and caused to be entered in his docket, without signing it, an order that the defendant should be held to answer in the superior court to a charge of libel, fixing his bail, in contravention of Pen. Code, § 872, providing that, if it appears on examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe that the defendant is guilty, the magistrate must make or indorse on the complaint an order signed by him to that effect, it not appearing that defendant was injured by the failure of the magistrate to make the required indorsement upon the complaint before the information was filed, judgment of conviction after fair trial will not be set aside for the omission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3215-3219, 3221, 3230; Dec. Dig. ⇐1186.]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇐145 — CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—STATUTE—"LIBEL."

Under Pen. Code, § 248, declaring that a libel is a malicious defamation, expressed by printing, tending to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation of one, and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, where a newspaper proprietor published an oath alleged to be required of all fourth degree members of a fraternal association, which oath was of such a character as to impeach the members' loyalty as citizens, though not directly impeaching their honesty and integrity, he was guilty of libel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 404; Dec. Dig. ⇐145.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Libel.]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇐145 — CRIMINAL PROSECUTION — LIBEL UPON MEMBERS OF FRATERNAL ORDER.

Where a newspaper proprietor published a libel in the form of an oath alleged to be required of fourth degree members of a fraternal organization, although the publication was intended to apply only to persons who were candidates for public office at the time, it was libelous as to all members of the order of the degree named, since a libel may be upon a class of persons if the tendency of the publication is to stir up riot and disorder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 404; Dec. Dig. ⟸145.]

4. Criminal Law ⟸824 — Trial—Instructions—Requests.

In a prosecution for libel, where no instruction was requested or given on the subject of privileged communication, the omission to specifically instruct the jury as to defendant's contention that, since his publication related to an election, it was privileged under Pen. Code, § 256, was not ground for reversal, since, as the jury are judges of both the law and the facts in criminal libel cases, the defendant should have requested a specific instruction if he desired to have the jury more directly advised as to his contention in regard to privilege than it was by the evidence or argument of counsel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. ⟸824.]

5. Libel and Slander ⟸148 — Criminal Prosecution—Privilege—Libel of Candidate for Office—Statute.

Pen. Code, § 256, providing that a communication made to a person interested in the communication by one who was also interested, or who stood in such relation to the former as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing his motive innocent, is not presumed to be malicious, and is a privileged communication, did not render privileged a libelous publication in a newspaper impeaching the loyalty of citizens who were candidates for public office, since a candidate for office is as much entitled to protection from defamation as any other citizen, and a public journal or individual who indulges in defamatory assertions in respect to him is equally responsible for his acts with those committing the same offense against private individuals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 407–411; Dec. Dig. ⟸148.]

6. Criminal Law ⟸1166½ — Appeal and Error — Harmless Error — Remark of Court.

In a prosecution for libel, where the court, in the presence of the jury, stated that the publication might fairly be interpreted to state that all persons admitted to the fourth degree of a fraternal order had taken the published oath, which was libelous, and then explained to the jury that the remarks were not directed to them, but solely to counsel incidentally to the denial of a motion to dismiss, repeatedly admonishing the jury thereafter that they were not in any way to be influenced in reaching their verdict by the court's observations, that they were the sole judges of the facts, and that the interpretation of the language of the publication was a matter for them, the error in the court's statement was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3114–3123; Dec. Dig. ⟸1166½.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; W. A. Beasly, Judge.

Henry S. Turner was convicted of libel, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Ralph H. Smith, of Santa Cruz, and Aaron L. Sapiro, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guerena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of libel, and was tried and convicted. This appeal is from the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Upon his arraignment the defendant moved the court to set aside the information upon the ground that he had not been legally committed for trial by a magistrate. The motion was denied. Such denial is the first of the grounds urged by the appellant for the reversal of the judgment.

[1] Section 872 of the Penal Code provides that, if it appears upon an examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe that the defendant is guilty thereof, the magistrate must make or indorse on the complaint an order, signed by him, to that effect. Under the authorities, in so far as the section requires that the order shall be indorsed upon the complaint, it may be regarded as directory; and it is sufficient if the indorsement be reduced to writing and signed by the magistrate and entered upon his official docket, or upon the complaint or deposition. People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 Pac. 896; People v. Wilson, 93 Cal. 377, 28 Pac. 1061. In this case the order of commitment was neither indorsed upon the complaint or deposition, nor was the entry of such order in the magistrate's docket, made by his stenographer, signed by the magistrate until after the motion to dismiss the information was filed. In other words, the record discloses that prior to the filing of the motion the magistrate did nothing more at the conclusion of the preliminary hearing than to announce and cause to be entered in his docket an order that the defendant should be held to answer in the superior court to a charge of libel, and fixing the bail.

While it is no doubt true that the terms of section 872 of the Penal Code should be complied with before the district attorney is warranted in filing an information against a person, still it does not appear that the defendant was deprived of any substantial right by reason of the omission of the magistrate. If the motion had been granted, another preliminary examination could have been held under the provisions of sections 997–999 of the Penal Code (Ex parte Baker, 88 Cal. 84, 25 Pac. 966; People v. Breen, 130 Cal. 72, 62 Pac. 408), wherein the omission now complained of could have been supplied. Under the provisions of section 4½, art. 6, of the Constitution, it not appearing that the defendant was injured by the failure of the magistrate to make the required indorsement upon the complaint before the information was filed, we cannot now, after a fair trial, set aside the judgment of conviction because of such omission.

[2] Defendant demurred to the information on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The demurrer was overruled, and he now challenges the correctness of such ruling.

The question presented is whether or not the publication complained of comes within the definition of the offense found in section 248 of the Penal Code. That section, in so far as it is pertinent to the offense here involved, declares:

"A libel is a malicious defamation, expressed * * * by * * * printing * * * tending * * * to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation * * * of one * * * and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt or ridicule."

The information charges that the defendant, the proprietor and publisher of a certain newspaper called the "World-Issue," committed the crime of libel, in that on the 22d day of August, 1914, he unlawfully and wrongfully caused to be printed and published in said paper in Santa Cruz county, of and concerning the prosecuting witnesses, who lived in that county, and who were members of the fourth degree of that certain fraternal organization known and called the Knights of Columbus, the following article:

"Can you vote for a man for public office who subscribes to the following?

"Knights of Columbus Oath.

"(Extracts—4th Degree.)

"'I do now denounce and disown any allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince or state, named Protestant or Liberals, or obedience to any of their laws, magistrates or officers.

"'I do further promise and declare that I will have no opinion or will of my own or any mental reservation whatsoever, even as a corpse or cadaver (perinde ac cadaver), but will unhesitatingly obey each and every command that I may receive from my superiors in the militia of the Pope and of Jesus Christ.

"'That I will in voting always vote for a Knight of Columbus in preference to a Protestant—especially a Mason—and that I will leave my party to do so; that if two Catholics are on the ticket I will satisfy myself which is the better supporter of Mother Church and vote accordingly.

"'That I will not deal with or employ a Protestant if in my power to deal with or employ a Catholic. That I will place Catholic girls in Protestant families of the heretics.

"'That I will provide myself with arms and ammunition that I may be in readiness when the word is passed, or I am commanded to defend the church as an individual or with the militia of the Pope.'

"To the quiet, law-abiding, liberty-loving American citizen it is almost unbelievable that any fellow citizen or body of them can seriously undertake or hope to overthrow our present form of government and replace it with an absolute monarchy. It is still more unbelievable that such a proposed monarchy should be dominated by a foreigner, and that such a change be brought about under the guise of religion. Yet if such a citizen will but open his eyes to the condition existing under his very eyes, and open his ears to the open, avowed purpose of the Roman Catholic Church, he will no longer rest easily in his present peaceful slumber."

It would seem that a mere statement of the published oath, coupled with an averment that it was false and malicious, would by sufficient to bring the publication within the terms of section 248 of the Penal Code. It would be a severe reflection upon the condition of the law of libel if it permitted to go uncondemned the publication of articles such as this, if false. It is clear that the published oath, if believed by the community to be taken by the members of the fourth degree of the Knights of Columbus, would have a tendency to expose those persons to hatred, contempt, or ridicule. While the publication may not, as claimed by the defendant, directly impeach their honesty and integrity, it does in a most direct and vital way assail their loyalty as citizens by charging them with the taking of an obligation which is in itself a violation of their oath of allegiance and of the essential duties and bonds of American citizenship, and thus in a general sense impeaches their reputations, and exposes them to those attitudes of public feeling described in the section of the Penal Code.

[3] At the time of the publication of the article in question it appears from the record that there was a political campaign in progress in Santa Cruz county, where the article was published; and perhaps it is fair to infer from the record that some of the candidates for election were members of the fourth degree of Knights of Columbus, but none of the prosecuting witnesses were such candidates. With the record in that condition defendant contends: First that the publication was not of and concerning the prosecuting witnesses; and, secondly, that the alleged libelous matter applies to a class or generally to all of the members of the fourth degree in the fraternal order mentioned, and therefore has no individual application, and that for these reasons the judgment of conviction cannot stand.

While the published matter may have been intended to apply only to persons who were candidates for office at that election, nevertheless, in terms and in effect, it refers to each and every member of the order of the degree named. It is undisputed that the publication was false, that the prosecuting witnesses were members of the society of the degree in question, and the inevitable conclusion to be drawn from the article is that every member of the order of the fourth degree had taken and subscribed to the published oath. The article asperses the character of such members, and ascribes to them base and dishonest motives, and as to them its publication constituted criminal libel, whether at that time a candidate for public office or not. The points presented by defendant might be urged with some force in a civil action in mitigation of damages, but we do not believe they are good in a criminal prosecution for libel, for, as is said in the case of State v. Brady, 24 Pac. 948, 949:

"The law is elementary that the libel need not be on a particular person, but may be upon a family or a class of persons if the tendency of the publication is to stir up riot and disorder and incite to a breach of the peace. It is obvious that a libelous attack upon a body of men, though no individual may be pointed out, may tend as much or more to create a public disturbance as an attack on one individual, and a doubt has been suggested whether the 'fact of numbers does not add to the enormity of the act.'"

This statement is a correct exposition of the law and of the causes of its existence. People v. Crespi, 115 Cal. 50, 46 Pac. 863.

[4, 5] The defendant next contends that the court erred in denying his motion for a new trial. He argues that the record supports the theory that the publication was made for the purpose of enabling the voters at the approaching election to cast their ballots more intelligently, and that therefore, under the terms of section 256 of the Penal Code, the publication must be deemed a privileged communication. That section provides:

"A communication made to a person interested in the communication, by one who was also interested or who stood in such relation to the former as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing his motive innocent, is not presumed to be malicious, and is a privileged communication."

Assuming for the moment that this publication comes within the privilege of that section, still we are satisfied that this case should not be reversed upon the ground stated. No instruction was requested or given upon the subject of privileged communications of the sort defined by that section, but the record shows that the defendant was relying upon this form of privilege in presenting his defense, and, since the jury are the judges of both the law and the facts in criminal libel cases, the defendant should have requested the specific instruction if he desired to have the jury more directly advised as to his contention than it was by the evidence or argument of counsel. We are further satisfied, however, that section 256 of the Penal Code has no application to cases of this character. Whatever the rule may be in other jurisdictions, it has been expressly decided in this state that a candidate for office is as much entitled to protection from defamation as any other citizen, and that a public journal or an individual who indulges in defamatory assertions about candidates for office is equally responsible for his acts with those who commit the same offense against private individuals, and that such libelous matter published against a candidate for a public office is not a privileged communication. Jarman v. Rea, 137 Cal. 341, 350, 70 Pac. 216; Edwards v. San Jose Pr. & Pub. Co., 99 Cal. 431, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70; Aldrich v. Press Pr. Co., 9 Minn. 133 (Gil. 123), 86 Am. Dec. 84; Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 158, 31 Am. Rep. 757; King v. Root, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 113, 21 Am. Dec. 102; McAllister v. Detroit Free Press Co., 76 Mich. 338, 43 N. W. 431, 15 Am. St. Rep. 318 and cases noted. In the present case it is not disputed that the publication was false. It was therefore not privileged.

[6] During the trial of the case, in denying a motion made by the defendant to dismiss, the court gave his reasons therefor in the presence of the jury, and, among other things, said that, examining the publication by its four corners as one would a contract, it might fairly be interpreted to state that all persons who were admitted to the fourth degree of the Knights of Columbus had taken the published oath; "in fact, the court thinks the paper is fairly interpreted to mean just that." This remark, defendant insists, constituted error on the part of the learned trial judge, for which the case must be reversed. At the time, upon attention being called to the apparent inadvertence, the court explained to the jury that the remarks were not directed to them, that they were addressed solely to the counsel in the case, and made incidental to the denial of the motion before the court. Subsequently in the instructions the jury were repeatedly admonished that they were not to be in any way influenced in reaching their verdict by the observations of the court, that they were the sole judges of the facts in the case, and that the interpretation of the language of the publication was a matter to be wholly determined by them. It will, of course, be presumed in this behalf that the jury followed the plain admonition of the court, and hence that in the matter suggested the defendant suffered no injury.

Other points made by the appellant relate to the admission or rejection of evidence, and to instructions given to the jury. We have examined them, but without finding therein anything upon which to ground appellant's argument for a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

28 Cal. App. 796

CARTER v. HOLT et al. (Civ. 1766.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 16, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 13, 1916.)

1. TRUSTS ⇐95—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—CONTRACT AS SUBJECT-MATTER.

Where, by fraud, defendant obtained money from plaintiff and therewith paid part of the purchase price of an automobile on a contract of sale to him on the installment plan, plaintiff could impress a constructive trust, arising from defendant's fraud, upon such contract, since in proper case there is no reason why a contract or lease, as well as any other property, may not be subject to a constructive trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 145–147; Dec. Dig. ⇐95.]

2. TRUSTS ⟸371 — GENERAL DEMURRER — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.

In an action to impress a constructive trust upon a contract of sale of an automobile on the installment plan, the allegation of the complaint that an assignment was made to a defendant by the defendant who fraudulently obtained money from plaintiff without consideration "after knowledge by (the assignee) that said automobile had been purchased with plaintiff's money and funds," was sufficient, in the absence of special demurrer, as alleging that prior to the assignee's acquisition of the automobile and contract of purchase he had knowledge of plaintiff's rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 588–599; Dec. Dig. ⟸371.]

3. TRUSTS ⟸356—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—NOTICE TO ASSIGNEE OF RES—EFFECT.

Where the assignee of a contract of sale of an automobile on the installment plan took the same with knowledge that it had been paid for with funds fraudulently procured from plaintiff, his position as to money loaned or paid on the contract to the assignor thereof was that of a second lienor, subordinate to the rights of the defrauded party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 529–538; Dec. Dig. ⟸356.]

4. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸88 — RIGHT OF ATTORNEY TO CONDUCT OWN CASE.

Where an attorney who was sued appeared in court by an attorney of record who conducted the case to a point where defendant proposed to cross-examine plaintiff's witness, it appearing that he would be a witness in his own behalf, the court properly denied him the right to cross-examine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 161–163; Dec. Dig. ⟸88.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1170 — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that no judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted for any error in procedure, unless, after the court shall be of opinion that the error complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice, where an attorney, defendant in an action, was represented by an attorney of record who conducted the case until defendant desired to cross-examine a witness, which leave was refused him because it appeared that he would testify in his own behalf, the action of the court, if erroneous, was not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4032, 4066, 4075, 4098, 4101, 4454, 4540–4545; Dec. Dig. ⟸1170.]

6. TRUSTS ⟸373 — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS — SUIT TO ENFORCE—EFFECT OF FINDING.

In an action to impress a constructive trust upon a contract of sale of an automobile on the installment plan, the court's finding that when the assignee of the contract presented the assignment to the seller, it recognized and approved the same in writing, whereupon the assignee paid the installment due, and that thereafter the seller with knowledge that the money paid it by the purchaser was plaintiff's money, attempted to rescind the contract, was sufficient to negative the allegation of the answer that the assignee purchased the automobile from the company by an independent contract after it had repudiated the assigned contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 604–606; Dec. Dig. ⟸373.]

7. TRUSTS ⟸372 — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST — SUBTERFUGE IN SALE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to impress a constructive trust on a contract of sale of an automobile on the installment plan, evidence held sufficient to show that a new deal between the seller, the original contractor for the car, who had paid part of the price with money fraudulently obtained from plaintiff, and his assignee, purporting to cancel the assigned contract and to make a new contract of sale direct with the assignee, was a mere subterfuge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 600–603; Dec. Dig .⟸372.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Grace M. Carter against Ira W. Holt and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant Linney appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Robt. T. Linney and Kendrick & Ardis, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Ralph W. Schoonover and Harriman, Ryckman & Tuttle, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The complaint shows that by means of fraud and false representations defendant Holt obtained from plaintiff the sum of $1,151.37; that he entered into a contract with an automobile company for the purchase of an automobile for the sum of $1,375, and of the money so fraudulently obtained from plaintiff he paid thereon $625; that thereafter, and before the filing of the complaint herein, Holt was arrested, charged with the embezzlement of said sum of money so procured from plaintiff; that he employed defendant Linney as attorney to defend him upon said charge of embezzlement, and to whom he assigned said contract for the purchase of the automobile upon which he had paid $625 of plaintiff's money; "that said assignment was made without consideration and after knowledge by said Linney that said automobile had been purchased with plaintiff's money and funds as aforesaid"; that the automobile is in the possession of Holt and Linney. In addition to general relief asked, the prayer of the complaint, so far as appellant is concerned, is that plaintiff be declared the owner of said contract and automobile to the extent of the application of plaintiff's money in the purchase thereof so made by Holt.

The court, among other things, found that plaintiff was entitled to an equitable lien upon the automobile to the extent of $625 so invested therein, and that Linney held the car charged with such lien. Judgment followed, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, Linney appeals.

[1, 2] Appellant's first contention is that the complaint (to which no demurrer was interposed) fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against him. This for two reasons: First, it is not alleged that title to the automobile passed to Holt, but that he merely held a contract in the form of a lease for its purchase. No ground is assigned for this contention, and we perceive no reason why, in a proper case, a trust might not be impressed upon a contract or lease, as well as upon other property. Second, it is claimed the complaint fails to show that prior to Linney's acquiring the automobile and contract of purchase he had knowledge of plaintiff's rights therein. In the absence of a special demurrer, we think the allegation that the assignment was made to him by Holt without consideration and "after knowledge by said Linney that said automobile had been purchased with plaintiff's money and funds as aforesaid," was a sufficient showing of the fact. The words "as aforesaid" refer to the fraudulent acts of Holt by means whereof he obtained the money and invested it in the automobile, all of which, it is alleged, was known to Linney.

[3] It is next claimed that the judgment is not supported by the findings, in that it appeared that after Linney acquired the contract upon which Holt had paid the $625, he paid thereon $260, and the judgment accorded plaintiff a lien thereon for her $625 which was declared prior to any rights of Linney by reason of the $260 so paid by him. Since Linney took the contract with knowledge of plaintiff's rights thereunder, his position as to money loaned or paid thereon must be deemed that of a second lienor, just as if he had a second mortgage on the property.

[4, 5] Defendant Linney appeared in court by an attorney of record, who conducted his case to a point in the proceedings where defendant Linney proposed to cross-examine one of plaintiff's witnesses; whereupon, it appearing that he would be a witness in his own behalf, the court denied him the right to cross-examine the witness. Thereupon his attorney of record continued the conduct of the case, cross-examining the witness. It is claimed this was reversible error. Had appellant had no attorney of record representing him, no doubt exists as to his right to appear in propria persona and conduct his case, and notwithstanding the incidental inconvenience, he could also have appeared as a witness. But where a party appears in court as a litigant represented by an attorney of record, the court may insist that such attorney and not his client, appearing as a party litigant only, conduct the trial. Boca, etc., R. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 153, 88 Pac. 718. Indeed, courts have not infrequently insisted that where more than one attorney appears, one only shall conduct the examination of witnesses. But, however this may be, and conceding the ruling was error, it is impossible to perceive how defendant was prejudiced thereby, and hence it may be disposed of by applying thereto the provisions of section 4½, article 6 of the Constitution.

[6] There is no merit in the contention that the court failed to find upon an issue tendered by the answer, to the effect that appellant purchased the auto from the Studebaker Company by an independent contract after it had repudiated the contract made with Holt and which he had assigned to Linney. As to this the court, in effect, found that upon Linney presenting the assignment to the company it, in writing, recognized and approved the assignment; whereupon Linney paid the installments thereon then due; that thereafter the company, having knowledge that the $625 paid to it by Holt was plaintiff's money, and after the assignment made to Linney with its approval, attempted to rescind the contract after Holt had assigned the same to Linney who had, by reason of said assignment, paid the arrearage. The finding is sufficient to negative the allegation made in the answer.

[7] Appellant attacks as being without support a number of findings based upon and in accordance with facts, which the evidence and fair inferences to be drawn therefrom tended to prove. The evidence tends to establish the fact that appellant, when he acquired the assignment from Holt, knew the manner in which the latter had obtained plaintiff's money, and knew that he had wrongfully and in violation of the trust reposed in him invested $625 thereof in the automobile, upon which there were some installments due and unpaid. Linney, accompanied by Holt, went to the office of the Studebaker Company, the seller of the car, where the assignment of the contract was made, Linney stating that he desired to get the car the possession of which it appears Holt had theretofore delivered to the company. Upon the making of the assignment and Linney paying the installments then due and unpaid, the company indorsed thereon, "We, the Studebaker Company, consent to the assignment, and fully release Mr. Holt hereunder," signed by William J. La Casse, sales manager, and thereupon delivered the automobile to Linney. Several days afterwards, all the parties ignoring this completed transaction, made a new deal which purported to cancel the contract so assigned by Holt to Linney and pursuant to which the company had delivered the car to Linney, and a new contract was made direct with Linney which, so far as it concerned the amount, terms, and conditions, was identical with the terms and conditions contained in the contract made with Holt and by him assigned to Linney. The company recognized the existence of its contract with Holt and his right to assign the contract, pursuant to which it delivered the car to Linney and released Holt from further liability thereon. The court was justified, under all the circumstances, in its conclusion that this was a mere subterfuge.

The judgment, which appears to be a righteous one, and the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

29 Cal. App. 8

AMERICAN EXCHANGE NAT. BANK OF DULUTH v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY, et al. (Civ. 1848.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 17, 1915.)

1. GARNISHMENT ⊜123—RIGHTS OF PERSONS GARNISHED.

Where writs of garnishment to reach the property of a payee of a check were served both on the drawer of the check and the bank on which it was drawn, the reasons given by the bank for dishonoring the check are not available to the drawer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 243, 248; Dec. Dig. ⊜123.]

2. PAYMENT ⊜21 — CHECKS — LIABILITY OF DRAWER.

By agreement a check may be taken in absolute payment, in which case the drawer is liable only as an indorser, and not on the original debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 86; Dec. Dig. ⊜21.]

3. GARNISHMENT ⊜51—DEPOSIT IN BANK—CHECKS—EFFECT OF.

A check is so far a payment that until dishonored the drawer cannot be garnisheed as a debtor of the payee in respect to the debt for which it is given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 97–101; Dec. Dig. ⊜51.]

4. GARNISHMENT ⊜232—EFFECT OF.

Defendant, after giving a check in payment of a debt, was garnisheed by creditors of a payee. The check had already been indorsed over to plaintiff. Both defendant and the bank on which the check was drawn refused payment on the theory that payment could not be enforced until the disposition of the prior suits. Held, that as the garnishee's liability in the case of a debt due from him is limited by his liability to the defendant in the principal action, whereby the latter has, at the time of the garnishment, a cause of action, payment of the check could not be denied until disposition of the garnishment proceedings, for the check, until dishonored, was a payment of defendant's debt, until which time the principal debtor in the garnishment proceeding had no right of action against defendant, and plaintiff could not recover unless it was the legal holder of the obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 445–453; Dec. Dig. ⊜232.]

Petition by the American Exchange National Bank of Duluth, a corporation, for a writ of mandate, against the Superior Court of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, and John W. Shenk, Judge. Writ issued.

Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. C. H. Brock and M. P. Frasier, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. On petition for writ of mandate. An action numbered B–16352 and entitled American Exchange National Bank of Duluth, Plaintiff, v. Title Insurance & Trust Company, Defendant, was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county on September 11, 1914, and is now pending. In that action the plaintiff seeks to recover a sum of money due upon a check assigned to it by one J. H. Constantine. This check was issued by the Title Insurance & Trust Company to Constantine on May 12, 1914, and was thereafter indorsed and transferred by Constantine to the plaintiff. The action was brought against the defendant company after presentation of the check by the plaintiff to the bank against which it was drawn and refusal of payment by that bank. The action of plaintiff against the Title Insurance & Trust Company came on regularly for trial on June 3, 1915, counsel for the respective parties being present in court. Thereupon the defendant moved the court for a stay of proceedings in the action until final determination of another action pending in that court, numbered B–25383, and entitled Herbert Freston, Plaintiff, v. J. H. Constantine, Defendant. An order was made, granting said motion, and in accordance therewith the superior court refused to proceed with the trial of the case. The petitioner alleges that by reason of said order and action on the part of the respondent, petitioner is unable to proceed with its said action, and unless relief be granted in this proceeding, the action cannot be tried until final judgment shall have been rendered in the Freston Case.

[1-4] The motion of the defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company for stay of proceedings in the action against it was made—

"on the grounds that the defendant in this action has been served with notice of garnishment in said case of Herbert Freston, Plaintiff, against J. H. Constantine, Defendant, as aforesaid, as will more fully appear by the affidavit marked 'Exhibit A' attached hereto and made a part hereof."

The affidavit shows that the action of Freston v. Constantine was commenced on June 2, 1915; that a writ of attachment was issued in that action against the property of the defendant Constantine; that the writ, with notice of garnishment of the funds and property of Constantine and of any indebtedness due to Constantine from the Title Insurance & Trust Company, was served on the company on June 2, 1915; and that the Freston action is still pending. The affidavit, which is by the secretary of defendant company, closes by saying:

"That it was sought by said writ of attachment and notice of garnishment to attach all indebtedness, if any, of the defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company to J. H. Constantine, under and by virtue of the identical check sued upon in this action."

The notice of garnishment as served by the sheriff upon the defendant company is attached to the answer of respondent herein, and does not, in any way, pretend to describe or identify said check. It purports only to give notice of attachment of all moneys, goods, credits, effects, debts due or owing, or any other personal property belonging to defendant Constantine in the possession or under the control of the Title Insurance & Trust Company. If the obligation sued upon by the plaintiff in action No. B–16352 is not a debt owing by the defendant company to Constantine, the garnishment proceeding can furnish no reason for postponing the plaintiff bank in the enforcement of its demand. The subject-matter of the complaint in the Freston Case has no relation whatever to the check sued on in action No. B–16352. A judgment in favor of plaintiff bank in its action against the Title Insurance & Trust Company cannot possibly be rendered, except upon a finding that the plaintiff bank is the legal owner of the obligation, to wit, the check indorsed to it by Constantine. If it is such legal owner, we can find no reason or rule of law under which it should be compelled to postpone realization upon its demand until the settlement of a controversy between its assignor and some one claiming to be his creditor.

It is claimed by respondent that progress in the action against the Title Insurance & Trust Company should be stayed for the further reason that, as shown by the answer in that action, another attachment in the case of one Lovell against J. H. Constantine (No. B–12286 of said superior court) was issued and garnishment notice therein served on the Title Insurance & Trust Company and also on the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank, drawee of the check so assigned by Constantine to the petitioner herein, plaintiff in action No. B–16352; that the refusal of the bank to honor and pay the check was solely on account of said notice of garnishment served on it. This matter is probably extraneous to the case presented for our decision, since the motion for stay of proceedings in action No. B–16352 referred only to the attachment proceedings in the Freston Case. But even conceding that the garnishment in the Lovell Case is a proper subject for consideration here, we do not think that the respondent is in any better position on that account. We apprehend that the reason given by the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank for not honoring the check and the notice of garnishment served upon that bank are not available to the defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company as a ground for abatement of proceedings in the action against it. So far as the notice of garnishment is concerned in the action of Lovell against Constantine, it is of no more importance with respect to the matters involved herein than is the garnishment notice in the Freston Case.

"By agreement a check may be taken as absolute payment, and the drawer will then be liable only as an indorser, and not on the original debt. And a check is always so far payment, until dishonored, that, after its delivery, the drawer cannot be garnisheed as debtor of the payee in respect to the debt for which the check is given." Morse on Banks and Banking (4th Ed.) § 543.

"A check given by a debtor in settlement of an account is so far payment as to discharge the drawer as trustee of the payee, service being made on him after giving the check but before presentment; the check is payment unless dishonored." Id. § 545; Getchell v. Chase, 124 Mass. 366.

A garnishee's liability in the case of a debt due from him is grounded upon and is limited by his liability to the defendant in the principal action whereby the latter has, at the time of the garnishment, a cause of action, present or future, against him. Drake on Attachment (7th Ed.) § 463. But Constantine had no right of action against the Title Insurance & Trust Company, for its check issued in his favor, either in payment or in conditional payment of its obligation to him, was not dishonored while in his hands.

Being of the opinion that the notices of garnishment relied upon by the respondent herein were not sufficient to impose upon the Title Insurance & Trust Company any liability affecting the check issued by it to Constantine, we think that the court erred in granting the motion for stay of proceedings in said action No. B–16352, and that the plaintiff therein is entitled to have the case proceed to trial and judgment the same as if neither of said garnishments had been issued.

Let peremptory writ issue.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 41

KEISER v. LEVERING. (Civ. 1390.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 22, 1915. Rehearing Denied Dec. 21, 1915.)

1. PLEADING ⊂⊃310 — COMPLAINT — SUFFICIENCY.

Recitals in a chattel mortgage incorporated in the complaint in an action to recover possession as to the value of the property will not supply the want of averments as to value in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 345, 944, 946, 947; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃ 310.]

2. REPLEVIN ⊂⊃107—ACTIONS—JUDGMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 667, declaring that in an action to recover possession of personal property judgment shall be for possession of the property or the value thereof, a judgment not in the alternative is not necessarily void, and may, under particular circumstances, be upheld.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. §§ 424–428; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃107.]

3. REPLEVIN ⊂⊃107—ACTIONS—JUDGMENT.

In an action to recover possession of personal property claimed under a chattel mortgage, the first count of the complaint averred the giving of a mortgage to secure a note and the amount due thereon, but did not aver the value of the property claimed. The second count averred the execution of another note and mortgage that the value of the property was $1,200, while the sum alleged to be due on the second mortgage was $359. It appeared that some of the property was subject to both mortgages. Code Civ. Proc. § 667, declares that in an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment may be for the possession or value thereof in case delivery cannot be had. The judgment was for the property or its value, which was stated as $970. Held, that as the first count of the complaint did not state the value of the property claimed, and as the value was in excess of the amount of the indebtedness set forth by the second count, the judgment could not stand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. §§ 424–428; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃107.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by S. W. Keiser against J. H. Levering. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Harry L. Dearing and T. C. Gould, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. A. C. Galloway, Wm. L. Jarrott, and James S. Jarrott, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action to recover possession of personal property. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, the defendant appeals.

By the first count of the complaint it appears that the defendant made to the plaintiff a chattel mortgage securing a note on which there was due at the time of filing the complaint the sum of $835. The mortgage contained the usual provision entitling plaintiff to possession of the property with right of sale to satisfy his claim whenever default should be made on the defendant's obligation. The facts of such default and of demand for possession and of refusal by the defendant are alleged, which the plaintiff averred are to his damage in the sum of $835. Defendant demurred separately to each count of the complaint on the general ground as to each count that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and also on special grounds which we need not discuss. The demurrer was overruled, and an answer filed.

[1] In support of the general demurrer, defendant contends that the first count does not contain any allegations showing the value of the demanded property, and claims that an allegation of such value is essential to the cause of action. The plaintiff in this first count alleges the execution of the mortgage, a copy of which is attached to the complaint, "and made a part hereof to all intents and purposes the same as if recited at length herein." The schedule of mortgaged articles as set forth in the mortgage purports to give the value of some of those articles. Allowing this as an allegation of value, it would only specify the values at the date of the mortgage and not as of the time of filing the complaint, unless we could assume that such values continued unchanged. It is settled law that recitals in a contract incorporated in a complaint will not supply the want of essential averments in the pleading. Thus, where the complaint alleged the making of a note set forth by copy and the note recited that it was "secured by mortgage of even date herewith," it was held that this did not amount to an averment that the note was secured by mortgage. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. Thornton, 117 Cal. 481, 49 Pac. 573; Hayt v. Bentel, 164 Cal. 681, 686, 130 Pac. 432.

[2, 3] The contention that a statement of value of personal property in an action to recover possession thereof is essential to the cause of action seems to be based upon the fact that in such action judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession, or the value thereof in case delivery cannot be had, and damages for the detention. Code Civ. Proc. § 667. In the earlier cases it was held to be imperative that the judgment be in the alternative form, and such judgments for possession only, without providing for a recovery of the value thereof in case delivery could not be had, were reversed even at the instance of the defendant. Berson v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 550; Stewart v. Taylor, 68 Cal. 5, 8 Pac. 605, and other cases. But this rule was seriously questioned in Claudius v. Aguirre, 89 Cal. 506, 26 Pac. 1077, and Erreca v. Meyer, 142 Cal. 308, 310, 75 Pac. 826. The law seems to be that, while the judgment must ordinarily be in the alternative, yet "a judgment that is not in the alternative is not, however, void, and whether or not such a judgment is even erroneous must depend upon the facts of the particular case." These later decisions might be sufficient to support a complaint and judgment for mere possession of property without regard to the value thereof, if the case as a whole appeared to be within the jurisdiction of the court; but could not possibly support a judgment for the value as specified by the court in its findings where no value was alleged in the complaint. This is important in the present case, as will appear in our further statement of it.

The second count of the complaint in this action alleges the execution of another note and chattel mortgage by the defendant to the plaintiff, upon which at the date of filing the complaint there was alleged to be due the sum of $359.12. This count is similar to the other, except that the second count alleges the value of the property sought to be recovered therein to be the sum of $1,200. The property described in the second mortgage is in part identical with that described in the first mortgage, but some of the original items are omitted and others are added. The defendant in his answer did not deny the allegation of value set forth in the second count, and the court found—as the defendant also admitted—the amount of indebtedness on each mortgage note to be substantially as stated in the complaint. The court found as a fact the total value of the property in the possession of the defendant to be the sum of $970. The judgment is for possession of all of the mortgaged property described in the findings and judgment, or if delivery thereof could not be had, that plaintiff recover from defendant the sum of $970 and specified costs.

Manifestly the judgment is for an excessive amount. For the reasons heretofore stated, no part of the $970 can be charged against the cause of action stated or attempted to be stated in the first count of the complaint; and as to the second count, although it may be that the property involved therein is worth as much as $970, the debt for security of which it was mortgaged by the second mortgage did not amount to half that sum, as stated in the complaint. In Pico v. Martinez, 55 Cal. 148, which was an action of claim and delivery of personal property, it was held that, where the goods had been taken from the defendant and the judgment was that the defendant was entitled to possession of them, and it further appeared that the defendant had only a special and limited interest in the property, the amount of his recovery under the alternative provision in the judgment must be limited to the value of his special and limited property in the goods, and was not to be measured by the entire value thereof. If this is the rule applicable in the instance of a judgment in favor of the defendant, under section 667, Code of Civil Procedure, it is equally applicable in the case of a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Since in the present case the plaintiff's right to have possession of the described property is only claimed for the purpose of satisfying his claims for an indebtedness unpaid to him, and since no special damages are either alleged or proved, it is clear that the value of the property to him cannot exceed the amount of the indebtedness unpaid; and this amount in the present state of the pleadings is limited to the indebtedness shown in the second count of the complaint.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are reversed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 5

STROUD v. FAIRBANKS. (Civ. 1767.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 17, 1915.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1011 — FINDINGS — CONCLUSIVENESS.

The trial court's findings of fact made on conflicting evidence cannot be questioned on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3989; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃1011.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; John C. Covert, Judge.

Action by B. K. Stroud against H. W. Fairbanks. Judgment for defendant, motion for new trial denied, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

E. L. Foster, of Bakersfield, and Frank H. Short, of Fresno, for appellant. Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, and George E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This case is brought into this court on an appeal taken by the plaintiff from an adverse judgment, and also from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant brought this action to recover profits alleged to have accrued on account of a joint enterprise entered into between himself and the respondent with respect to the purchase and sale of certain oil-producing lands in the county of Kern. We are asked only to consider one point, to wit, as to whether the evidence sustains the findings made by the trial judge. A careful examination of the testimony as it is set out in the bill of exceptions leads us to the conclusion that as to the main issues in controversy there was testimony before the court from which the conclusions of fact as set forth in the findings might naturally and legally follow. From this testimony it appears that in the year 1908 appellant was employed by the Fairbanks Oil Company, which was operating in Kern county, as superintendent of its field plant; that respondent was connected with that corporation; that upon the occasion of a visit made by respondent to the oil fields respondent and appellant made a short trip for the purpose of viewing certain undeveloped land lying in that neighborhood of which a certain section 14 was a part; that as to the north half of this section 14 some conversation took place between the two; that this ground was held by several individuals under placer locations; that appellant and respondent had some talk with one McReynolds, who represented himself and other of the locators on section 14. Following this a contract was made by respondent and McReynolds which provided for the acquiring by respondent of a certain interest in the north half of section 14 upon consideration that Fairbanks should develop the property within a certain period of time in that contract mentioned. The terms of this agreement were not complied with on the part of respondent, and shortly after default had been made of some of the conditions therein set forth, respondent and associates other than appellant entered into a contract with McReynolds and others whereby a large body of land, including several sections, and including the north half of section 14, which was the subject of the first contract, was provided to be taken over by respondent and his associates and developed. Later the contract rights so acquired were negotiated to other interests, and respondent received a considerable sum of money in exchange for his interest. It was the claim of appellant that respondent and he held a partnership interest as to the rights acquired by the first contract affecting the north half of section 14, and that, when the sale was made of the total interests involved in the second contract, some accounting should have been made to him for his interest in the first contract. Respondent denied positively that there was any partnership interest agreed to be given to the appellant under the first agreement. His statement, as shown in his testimony, was that the understanding expressed between himself and appellant was that, if a corporation could be organized to handle the placer rights on the north half of section 14, and if the appellant would assist in the forming thereof, that he (respondent) would see that appellant was given employment as superintendent of the proposed company and receive some shares of stock therein as additional compensation. So it first appears that there was a conflict in the testimony as to what the agreement between the parties really amounted to. The further fact appears without dispute that appellant did nothing at all in the direction of assisting in the organization of a company to promote and develop the north half of section 14. It is also clear that the rights of respondent in the first contract made with McReynolds had become subject to forfeiture at the time the second contract was made, which included many times the acreage of ground described in the first contract. McReynolds testified as to the termination of the first contract as follows:

"After the contract was signed Dr. Fairbanks arranged for some material and, as I recollect it, arranged to have it hauled to the ground, and about the 15th of December advised me that he was unable to go ahead with the contract—unable to fulfill its terms. Nothing was done after that; no other development or work was done under the conditions and terms of that contract. Dr. Fairbanks and I agreed that the contract was at an end. This contract of November 30th was not performed."

Appellant admits that there was testimony in contradiction of his own as to the principal circumstances relied upon as tending to establish his case. He claims, however, that certain letters written by respondent constitute admissions conclusive in their nature against the respondent, and which statements were not refuted. In view of the testimony introduced on behalf of the respondent and denial of the principal occurrences as testified to by appellant, we do not think that the letters constitute admissions conclusive in their nature as to appellant being possessed of any legal claim for the compensation asserted by his complaint. Without reciting in detail the contents of these letters, it is enough to say that such contents may properly be resolved in accordance with the oral testimony of the respondent and against the contention of appellant. In one of the letters respondent refers to arranging to give the appellant something on account of that first contract, but expresses it as being such "an amount which might be held as morally due you for your interest." Resolving the case briefly, the record presents a state of conflicting evidence upon which the findings of fact as made by the trial court cannot be questioned on appeal.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 1

PEOPLE v. ANDRADE. (Cr. 427.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 17, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸763, 764—INSTRUCTIONS—INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

In the absence of direct testimony or other overwhelmingly convincing evidence connecting defendant with a homicide charged, other than the circumstances of an alleged confession and his failure to testify in his own behalf, an instruction that defendant does not deny the killing, but claims that it was done in self-defense, is erroneous, as usurping the functions of the jury, and is in violation of Const. art. 6, § 19, which provides that judges shall not charge juries on matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731–1748, 1752, 1768, 1770; Dec. Dig. ⟸763, 764.]

2. WITNESSES ⟸300 — INSTRUCTIONS — COMPELLING ACCUSED TO BE A WITNESS AGAINST HIMSELF.

Such an instruction is a violation of Const. art. 1, § 13, and Pen. Code, § 1323, which secure a defendant from being a witness against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1042, 1042½; Dec. Dig. ⟸300.]

3. Criminal Law ⟸778 — Instructions — Burden of Proof.

Such an instruction throws upon defendant, without the verdict of a jury in the matter, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation or of justification or excuse, contrary to Pen. Code, § 1105, which imposes this burden, except when the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1846–1852, 1854–1857, 1960, 1967; Dec. Dig. ⟸778.]

4. Criminal Law ⟸1169 — Cure of Evidence—Error in Admission.

When evidence of a custom of deceased in carrying considerable sums of money with him is received to prove a motive for his murder, and is subsequently stricken, such striking cures the error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 754, 3088, 3130, 3137–3143; Dec. Dig. ⟸1169.]

5. Homicide ⟸166 — Admission of Evidence.

In a trial for murder, testimony as to a specific sum of money which deceased had upon his person two days before his death was received upon the assurance of the district attorney that knowledge of the possession of this sum by the deceased would be brought home to the defendant, and other evidence was received showing the possession of money by the deceased the day previous to his death, and exhibited by him in the presence of defendant. Held, that such evidence was properly received, notwithstanding the fact that it was also shown that a certain sum of money was found in the pockets of the deceased after his death, as such a circumstance, while favorable to the defendant on the question of motive, was properly subject to the consideration of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 320–331; Dec. Dig. ⟸166.]

6. Criminal Law ⟸519 — Evidence — Confession—Admissibility.

A confession made by a defendant to a sheriff, which is shown, and properly determined by the court, to have been made voluntarily and without any of those promises, threats, or other means of coercion which would require exclusion of a so-called confession, is admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1163–1174; Dec. Dig. ⟸519.]

7. Homicide ⟸142—Information—Proof.

Where the information charges that defendant "did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought kill and murder," etc., the fact that the people attempted to prove that the motive was robbery does not confine the charge to one of murder committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate robbery, and a requested instruction to the contrary is properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 250–259; Dec. Dig. ⟸142.]

8. Homicide ⟸142—Information—Proof.

Under an information charging that defendant "did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought kill and murder," etc., any kind of willful killing is sufficient, under Pen. Code, § 189, defining murder and its degrees, to constitute the crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 250–259; Dec. Dig. ⟸142.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Jose Andrade was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed.

Edwards & Smith, of Dinuba, and Ralph H. Walker, of Visalia, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of murder and sentenced to imprisonment for life. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On the morning of January 10, 1915, the dead body of one Ina P. Cook was found on a public road in the county of Tulare, and from the evidence it clearly appears that his death had been caused by a bullet wound in the head. The evidence further shows that on the previous afternoon and evening he had been traveling along that road in an open buggy and in company with the defendant. When the deceased was last seen alive, so far as the evidence shows, he was in company with the defendant. There are no eyewitnesses to the attack which caused the death of deceased, and in that respect the defendant has been convicted entirely upon circumstantial evidence, with the single exception of an alleged confession by the defendant. The sheriff of Tulare county gave testimony concerning an interview between himself and the defendant after defendant's arrest and that in that interview the defendant admitted that he had shot Mr. Cook. The precise words covering this point, as stated by the sheriff, were that:

Defendant "said that he did not remember whether he shot him as he was getting up or after he got up. After he shot him he ran away. He did not know where he throwed the gun."

[1, 2] The defendant did not testify in his own behalf, but stood silent under his plea of not guilty. On this state of the record the court charged the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that the defendant does not deny that he killed one Ina P. Cook on the 9th day of January, 1915, but claims that such killing was done in self-defense."

The defendant claims that the giving of this instruction constitutes prejudicial error; and with this contention we are constrained to agree.

"No person shall * * * be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. * * *" Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13.

"A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself. * * * His neglect or refusal to be a witness cannot in any manner prejudice him nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding." Pen. Code, § 1323.

"Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." Const. Cal. art. 6, § 19.

[3] In giving the foregoing instruction the court usurped the functions of the jury. It withdrew from the jury the determination of the essential question whether or not the deceased came to his death at the hands of defendant, and, without a verdict of the jury upon this fact, threw upon the defendant the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation or of justification or excuse. Pen. Code, § 1105. Thereby the failure of the defendant to give testimony in his own behalf was used against him at the trial, notwithstanding his plea of not guilty addressed to the entire issues of the case. In the absence of direct testimony or other overwhelmingly convincing evidence connecting the defendant with this homicide, other than the circumstances of the alleged confession, we are unable to say that the giving of such instruction was nonprejudicial error, or that the jury necessarily would have convicted the defendant if such instruction had not been given. The substantial effect of the record is that the judge set up the unsworn statement of the defendant that he did kill the deceased against the unsworn statement implied in his plea of not guilty, and made a finding of fact thereon which could lawfully be made by the jury only. People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151.

[4, 5] Appellant claims that the court erred in permitting the introduction of certain testimony of the witness Jarrad with respect to the amount of money which deceased had on his person on the 8th day of January, and as to the custom of the deceased as to carrying considerable sums of money with him. The second specific part of this testimony, that relating to the deceased being accustomed to carry money with him, was afterwards stricken out by the court, and we think the error was thereby sufficiently corrected. The testimony as to the specific sum was received upon the district attorney's assurance that knowledge of the fact would be brought home to the defendant. Other evidence was introduced showing the possession of money by the deceased on the 9th day of January and exhibited by him in the presence of the defendant. We think that this evidence was properly received. It is true that the evidence further showed that about $20 was found in the pockets of the deceased after his death, but this circumstance, so far favorable to the defendant on the question of motive, was properly subject to the consideration of the jury.

[6] The objection that the alleged confession as detailed by the sheriff in his testimony should have been rejected because not proved to be a voluntary statement by the defendant cannot be sustained. It was sufficiently shown and the court was authorized to determine that the statement was made freely and voluntarily and without any of those promises, threats, or other means of coercion which would require exclusion of a so-called confession. People v. Miller, 135 Cal. 69, 67 Pac. 12.

The other contentions made in the brief with respect to the reception of evidence are of minor importance, and do not disclose any errors requiring discussion here, if indeed any there were.

[7, 8] It is further claimed that the court erred in refusing to give to the jury the following instruction:

"Before you can convict the defendant of the crime charged, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that he did commit such a crime with the intent and motive of robbery, and, if you do not so find from the evidence herein, you must acquit him."

The fact that the people introduced testimony for the purpose of showing the intent and motive of robbery did not have the effect to confine the charge to one of murder perpetrated in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate robbery. The information charged that the defendant committed the crime of murder in that he "did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought kill and murder one Ina P. Cook, a human being," etc. The particular motive above mentioned was not necessary to a successful prosecution in this case. Any kind of willful and premeditated killing would be sufficient to constitute the crime. Pen. Code, § 189.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are reversed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 37

BENSON v. BENSON. (Civ. 1429.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 20, 1915.)

1. DIVORCE ⇐172—JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS—PLEADING AS DEFENSE—NECESSITY.

In a husband's suit for divorce, where, answering the wife's cross-complaint charging cruelty and desertion, he did not plead a former judgment for himself in an action for divorce by the wife against him, and no proof of such former judgment was offered under the plea of estoppel set up by the wife in her answer to the complaint, the judgment roll in the former action not being introduced in evidence by either party, and defendant wife merely pleading in her answer the cross-complaint, in the former action, of the then defendant husband and the judgment in such action, there was nothing in the record disclosing the grounds upon which defendant wife, as plaintiff in the former action, relied for a divorce, to render the former judgment conclusive in the suit upon her right to maintain her cross-complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 559–561; Dec. Dig. ⇐172.]

2. DIVORCE ⇐171—CONCLUSIVENESS OF ADJUDICATION—SUBSEQUENT MATTERS.

Where a wife sued for divorce, charging cruelty and desertion, and judgment was for the husband, who thereafter committed acts of cruelty and desertion, the judgment was not conclusive upon the wife's right to maintain a crossbill, based on such acts, in a subsequent action for divorce by the husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 554–558; Dec. Dig. ⟸171.]

3. Divorce ⟸184—Proceedings—Appeal—Harmless Error—Evidence.

In a husband's action for divorce, where both parties had, on sufficient grounds, persistently been engaged in an effort to get rid of each other as husband and wife, and the wife brought a cross-bill charging cruelty and desertion, the ruling sustaining defendant's objection to plaintiff's question to her on cross-examination as to whether she was willing to go back to plaintiff and live with him was harmless, if erroneous, and not ground for reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 570–573; Dec. Dig. ⟸184.]

4. Divorce ⟸308—Allowance for Support of Children—Propriety.

Where the husband, against whom a divorce was awarded, was a carpenter and building contractor, making good wages and usually employed, an allowance to the wife, solely for the support and maintenance of three minor children, of $15 a month each, was proper as not unreasonable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 801, 802; Dec. Dig. ⟸308.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action for divorce by Carl Benson against Gerda Benson. From an interlocutory decree adjudging defendant to be entitled to a divorce on her cross-complaint, and awarding her a one-half interest in the community property, the custody of the children, and making an allowance for their support, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Austin Lewis, of San Francisco, and R. M. Royce, of Oakland, for appellant. Willard & Ferrell, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. The court below rendered and entered its interlocutory decree, adjudging the defendant to be entitled to a divorce upon her cross-complaint, and awarding her a one-half interest in the community property and the custody of three minor children, issue of the marriage of the parties, and making an allowance of $15 per month to each of said children for their support and maintenance. This appeal is by the plaintiff from the judgment so rendered and entered.

The complaint is in two counts, the one in due form charging the defendant with willfully deserting the plaintiff in the month of October, 1908, and the second alleging extreme cruelty on the part of the defendant toward the plaintiff. Certain specific acts of cruelty are set forth in the latter count, and, in substance, they are: That the defendant had been in the habit of bestowing unbecoming attention on men other than her husband, and that in the month of July, 1908, the plaintiff discovered "that she had a man other than her husband in her bedroom"; that defendant on numerous occasions expressed to the plaintiff a preference for other men over him; that the defendant abused their children, being in the habit of addressing them in harsh and abusive language, and had threatened to kill said children on many occasions; that she refused to prepare meals for said children, and refused to "dress them" or give them other necessary attentions due from a mother to her minor children, with the result that the plaintiff was required to prepare their meals for them and otherwise minister to the necessities of said minors; that on the 8th day of December, 1912, the defendant said to the plaintiff that she desired to have nothing more to do with either their minor children or him; and that she "refuses to have anything to do with the said children, and that plaintiff provides for them in every respect," etc.

The defendant answered the complaint by specific denials of the allegations of each of the counts thereof, and, furthermore, pleaded in bar of the plaintiff's action a former judgment in an action for a divorce, wherein the defendant here was plaintiff and cross-defendant and the plaintiff here defendant and cross-complainant. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint herein, in which she charges, separately and in different counts, that the plaintiff had willfully deserted her, had neglected and failed to provide for her the common necessaries of life for and during the year immediately preceding the filing herein of her cross-complaint, and that the plaintiff had been guilty of extreme cruelty towards her in divers ways and on numerous occasions; such acts of cruelty being specifically set out. The plaintiff made answer to the cross-complaint. No evidence was offered in support of the defendant's plea of res adjudicata.

The court made no findings upon the causes of action for desertion and failure to provide set up in the defendant's cross-complaint. It did, however, in substance, find as to the cause of action therein stated, involving the charge of extreme cruelty, that the plaintiff for and during the course of a number of years prior to the date of the institution of this action by the plaintiff and cross-defendant, on numerous occasions, and often in the presence of other persons, had called the defendant and cross-complainant vile and, indeed, unprintable names; that he during that time told other people, in her absence, that she was an immoral woman, and that the persons to whom he so spoke of her had communicated to her the fact of his denunciation of her in the manner indicated; that, without cause or provocation therefor, he attempted to strike her on one occasion, and but for the interference and protection she received at the hands of a Mr. Ellis, who was then present, he would have struck and inflicted upon her serious bodily injury; that on said occasion he, in the presence of strangers, called her a liar, a thief, and a fool, and said she was not a moral or respectable or virtuous woman, and asseverated "that he would not live with said Gerda Benson again, even if she begged him to allow her to live with him"; that for many years he had kept up a continuous abuse of the defendant and cross-complainant of a character which made it impossible for her to live in peace or happiness with him.

There is no claim here that the evidence does not support the allegations of cruelty of the cross-complaint or the findings upon which the judgment is planted. It is contended, however: (1) That each and all of the matters set up by the defendant in the several counts of her cross-complaint were made issues by the respective pleadings in the former divorce action between the parties and were adjudicated by the judgment therein, whereby the court denied to both of the parties the relief prayed for in their complaint and cross-complaint, respectively, filed in said action, and dismissed the said action and all the proceedings therein; (2) that the court erred to the serious detriment of the rights of the plaintiff by refusing to allow certain testimony to be received; (3) that the allowance for the support of the minor children is too large and not justified.

[1, 2] There are two conclusive answers to the first of the propositions above stated: (1) That the plaintiff, in his answer to the cross-complaint of the defendant, did not plead the former judgment, nor was there proof thereof offered or received under the plea of estoppel based upon said judgment set up by the defendant in her answer to the complaint. The judgment roll in said former action was not introduced in evidence by either party, and, the defendant having merely pleaded in her answer the cross-complaint of the plaintiff here (defendant there) and the judgment in said action, there is nothing in the record disclosing the grounds upon which the defendant here, as plaintiff in the former action, relied for a divorce. (2) It appears that the acts of cruelty charged in the cross-complaint of the defendant in the present action occurred after the judgment in the former action was rendered and entered, and in such case, of course, the plea of res adjudicata cannot be maintained. There is nothing said in Civille v. Civille, 22 Cal. App. 707, 136 Pac. 503, cited by appellant, in conflict with this declaration.

[3] Counsel for the plaintiff asked the defendant on cross-examination the following question, to which objection was made by the defendant and sustained by the court: "Are you willing to go back to Mr. Benson and live with him?" It is here urged that the ruling was error and prejudicial. Of course, if a reply to the question had been allowed, and the defendant had answered in the affirmative, it might have had some tendency to weaken her testimony as to the nature and extent of the acts of cruelty of which she said her husband had been guilty. But, having given testimony in the most emphatic manner of outrageous acts of cruelty habitually inflicted upon her by the plaintiff for many years prior to the filing of her cross-complaint in this action, it is more than probable that the defendant would not have answered the question in the affirmative, as evidently counsel desired might be the answer. But, however that may be, we do not think that the ruling, even if not strictly correct, should be held to afford a sufficient reason for sending the cause back for retrial, particularly since it appears to be true that both parties have persistently been engaged in an effort to get rid of each other as husband and wife upon what appears to be sufficient reason. As to the last of the propositions above stated, it is said that "the allowance to the wife is out of all proportion to the financial status of the parties."

[4] The allowance was not made to the wife, but solely to and for the support and maintenance of the minor children of the parties. The amount allowed for that purpose to each of said children is $15, or a total of $45, per month. The evidence showed that the plaintiff is a carpenter and building contractor, earns good wages, and is usually employed. We cannot say that the allowance is unreasonable as to the plaintiff or beyond what may be reasonably required to support and maintain the children in a manner consistent with the plaintiff's circumstances and earning ability.

No other points are raised.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

29 Cal. App. 24

ANDERSON v. LEWIS, County Auditor.

(Civ. 1730.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 20, 1915.)

1. OFFICERS ⇐104—DE FACTO OFFICER—VALIDITY OF ACTS.

The acts of a person performing assumed duties as an officer de facto are ordinarily regular and valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 173; Dec. Dig. ⇐104.]

2. OFFICERS ⇐95—COMPENSATION—DE FACTO OFFICER.

The collection of the salary or compensation of an office is an incident to the title to such office, and not to its occupation and exercise by a de facto officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 134, 139; Dec. Dig. ⇐95.]

3. COUNTIES ⇐63 — ASSISTANT PROBATION OFFICER—VALIDITY OF APPOINTMENT—SALARY.

Const. art. 11, § 7½, par. 5, as amended October, 1911, authorizes freeholders' charters for counties to provide that boards of supervisors shall, by ordinance, regulate the appointment and number of assistants, etc., in the county offices, their compensation and the manner of their appointment and a county board, by ordinance, allowed the probation officer, assistant probation officers, to be appointed by him. Pol. Code, § 4024, provides that every county officer may appoint deputies by appointment in writing filed in the office of the county clerk; section 910 requires deputies, etc., within ten days after notice of their appointment, to take and file an oath; and section 894 provides that the appointment of deputies, etc., not otherwise provided for, shall be in writing, filed in the office of the appointing power. Petitioner, by appointment in writing filed in the office of the county clerk, was appointed an assistant probation officer by the judge of the superior court, and the probation officer thereafter recognized her as one of his assistants. Held, that as the board of supervisors had not provided the manner of appointing subordinate officers, the general laws of the state governed, and that petitioner was not legally appointed, and could not collect salary as an assistant probation officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 87–90; Dec. Dig. ⟸63.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Mandamus by Mrs. P. T. Anderson against Walter A. Lewis, Auditor of the County of Los Angeles. Writ issued, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. J. Hill, County Counsel, and Roy V. Reppy, Asst. County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Ford & Hammon and Tyrrell, Abrahams & Brown, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Respondent herein petitioned the superior court to issue a writ of mandate compelling appellant, as the auditor of the county of Los Angeles, to issue to her a warrant on the county treasurer for the sum of $100 as salary to which she claimed to be entitled. It was alleged that during the month of December, 1914, respondent occupied the position of assistant probation officer of the county of Los Angeles. The writ was issued, and the auditor appealed.

It is urged that the judgment was unwarranted because of the insufficiency of the evidence as to several material matters embraced within the findings of the court. The trial judge, in brief, determined the facts to be that: Petitioner, on the 12th day of December, 1913, was on the civil service list as an eligible for appointment as assistant probation officer, and that on or about said 12th day of December, 1913, she was nominated, and appointed to the position by the chief probation officer and assigned to duty, and that she entered upon her duties as such officer and ever since that time, to and including the month of December, 1914, continued to so act under the direction of the chief probation officer; that the salary attached to the position had been duly fixed by ordinance of the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county at the sum of $100 per month; that petitioner had presented her demand to appellant auditor, which he had refused to comply with, and that there was sufficient funds in the treasury of the county of Los Angeles available to pay the claim. The facts as they were presented to the trial judge are set out in abstract in a bill of exceptions. It appears that Hugh C. Gibson, the probation officer, testified that on the 12th day of December, 1913, there were vacancies in several of the positions designated as assistant probation officer, and that the petitioner was at that time nominated by the probation committee of the juvenile court as a candidate to fill one of such positions, and that thereafter she was "appointed to said vacant position by Fred H. Taft, judge of the juvenile court of said county." Further, that the appointment was made in writing, filed in the office of the county clerk, and that petitioner thereupon took the oath of office. This witness further testified that on the 15th day of December, 1913, he assigned petitioner to duty in her office, and that she had since that time continued to act. Further, the bill of exceptions also contains this clause:

"The witness testified further that on the 12th day of December, 1913, he consented to and was willing that said Mrs. P. T. Anderson be appointed to the said position, and that he did not at any time discharge her."

Gibson testified that he had recognized and considered petitioner as the duly qualified and appointed assistant probation officer of Los Angeles county during all the times material to the controversy. Three letters were introduced in evidence, the first of which was written to Gibson as chief probation officer by the county civil service commission, requesting Gibson to give the names of persons added to his department. This letter bore date of the 19th day of December, 1913. The second letter was one written by Gibson in answer to the letter just referred to, wherein he (Gibson) stated the names of persons added to his department, which included the name of this petitioner as assistant probation officer. The third letter was written later by Gibson to the probation committee of the county wherein again was given a list of all employés in the probation office, which list included the name of petitioner as assistant probation officer. An ordinance of the board of supervisors was introduced in evidence, which provided for officers in the probation department as follows:

"Section 28. Probation officer, one hundred and fifty dollars per month: Provided it shall be and there is hereby allowed to the probation officer the following assistants, clerks, deputies and employés, who shall be appointed by the probation officer from the eligible civil service list, and shall be paid as follows: * * * Sixteen assistant probation officers at a salary of one hundred dollars per month."

This ordinance was shown to have been adopted in June, prior to the date of the alleged appointment of petitioner. It will be noted that the evidence showed that the formal appointment of petitioner as assistant probation officer was attempted to be made by the judge of the superior court. This procedure no doubt was adopted because of the view held by the judge of the juvenile department that under the state juvenile law the power to appoint the probation officers rested with him. In the case of Gibson v. Civil Service Commission of the County of Los Angeles, 150 Pac. 78, this court decided that, under the provisions of the county charter, the board of supervisors was authorized to make provision for the appointment of these officers, and that where such appointment had been so provided for the state law ceased to operate as to that matter.

[1-3] Appellant's claim is that the petitioner herein was not shown to ever have been legally appointed and that because of such fact she was not entitled to collect salary. It is admitted that at all times material to matters in issue she was at least a de facto officer. The acts of a person performing assumed duties as an officer de facto ordinarily are regular and valid. However, it does not follow that such de facto officer may claim the compensation attached to the office for the performance of such duties. It is held that the collection of the salary or compensation is an incident to the title of the office, and not to its occupation and exercise. Burke v. Edgar, 67 Cal. 182, 7 Pac. 488. There is then squarely presented the question as to whether petitioner herein, during the time covered by her claim for compensation, was acting under a valid appointment. The amendment to the state Constitution adopted in October, 1911, authorized for the first time the framing of freeholders' charters for counties. Const. art. 11, § 7½. By the terms of this amendment the several things which it is competent for such charters to provide for are set forth in a number of paragraphs. It is therein stated to be competent for charters to provide, and the phrase is used, "and the same shall provide," among other things:

"5. For the fixing and regulation by boards of supervisors, by ordinance, of the appointment and number of assistants, deputies, clerks, attaches and other persons to be employed, from time to time, in the several offices of the county, and for the prescribing and regulating by such boards of the powers, duties, qualifications, and compensation of such persons, the times at which, and terms for which they shall be appointed, and the manner of their appointment and removal. * * *"

The italics have been indicated by us to give emphasis to the clause to be particularly considered in determining the question stated. The ordinance passed by the board of supervisors in June, 1913, which has been referred to and wherein the offices of probation officer and assistant probation officer were provided for, makes no mention of the manner in which said appointments shall be made. It is respondent's argument that, as the question of the "particular manner of the appointment" was left to the board of supervisors, in the absence of any action by ordinance taken to that end, no particular form of appointment was requisite, and that such appointment might be made orally. This argument assumes also that because of the charter provisions and the constitutional permission authorizing the adoption of charters, the effect of all general laws touching the matter of the appointment of deputies or assistants is completely nullified. It is admitted that by section 4024, Political Code, appointments of deputies are required to be in writing and filed with the county clerk. Our opinion is that, where the board of supervisors has failed or declined to exercise a right to legislate as to the manner of appointment of subordinate officers, the general laws of the state touching such matters should govern. The constitutional amendment referred to seems not to restrict the operation of general laws in that regard by any express terms or definite suggestion. There are other sections of the Political Code than the one cited which declare that appointments of deputies must be in writing and that an oath of office must be taken by the persons appointed. We may refer to Political Code, sections 894 and 910. Section 910 particularly refers to the matter of the oath, and provides that deputies, clerks, and subordinate officers must, "within ten days after receiving notice of their appointment, take and file an oath in the manner required of their principals."

The position of respondent that no written appointment was required to be made, would have found some authority in precedent were there an entire absence of statutory law upon the subject. Bonds v. State, Mart. & Y. (8 Tenn.) 143, 17 Am. Dec. 795. Respondent urges, nevertheless, as further ground for sustaining the regularity of petitioner's appointment, that the letters introduced in evidence expressed sufficient to show an appointment in writing made by the probation officer. The case of People v. Fitzsimmons, 68 N. Y. 514, is cited as an authority. In that case the mayor, who legally had the right to appoint certain excise commissioners, but thinking that he only had the right to recommend to a city council for confirmation such appointments, did transmit to the latter body in writing his recommendation containing the names of three persons whom he designated as nominees. It was held that such a writing constituted a sufficient appointment. It is well to note that in the opinion the court there says that the mayor "selected the men; he appointed them, and they were no less his appointments after confirmation by the common council." It was clear enough in that case that the persons who assumed office were persons actually selected and nominated in writing by the mayor. But the same court in a later decision entitled Babcock et al. v. Murray et al., 70 N. Y. 521, declared that the decision in the Fitzsimmons Case, supra, had been made with "considerable hesitation and not without great doubts." As we understand the attitude of counsel, as impressed in the argument in briefs, it is not contended that if section 4024 of the Political Code is of effect as governing the manner of appointment of assistant probation officers, the letters would be sufficient evidence of compliance with the requisite formalities. That section provides as follows:

"Every county, township, or district officer except a supervisor or judicial officer, may appoint as many deputies as may be necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Such appointment must be made in writing, and filed in the office of the county clerk; and until such appointment is so made and filed, and until such deputy shall have taken the oath of office, no one shall be or act as such deputy."

While it is not argued, we have taken notice of the fact that the provisions of section 4024 might be construed as applicable only to deputies or assistants appointed in excess of those specifically provided for by law. In that event the section would not apply to the assistant probation officers. For that reason we have called attention to section 894, Political Code, which provides:

"The appointment of deputies, clerks, and subordinate officers, when not otherwise provided for, must be made in writing, filed in the office of the appointing power or the office of its clerk."

If we are to say that the last provision was the one under which the appointment should have been made, then it would have been the duty of the chief probation officer to make a record of the appointment in his office in some substantial form and for the person so appointed to take the oath of office. The question is not raised, but, parenthetically, we may suggest that nowhere in the findings of fact does it appear to have been determined that the petitioner ever took an oath of office at all. That point, however, not having been suggested, no reason for this decision is in any particular to be ascribed to the lack of such finding. The evidence, to our minds, in no wise shows that Gibson, the probation officer, ever selected as his appointee, directly or impliedly, this petitioner. It appears expressly by the evidence that such selection was made by the judge of the juvenile court who, as we have heretofore determined, had no power to appoint. By every reasonable inference to be drawn from the testimony, it seems clear beyond any doubt whatsoever that the chief probation officer assumed that the judge had the right to make the appointment and accepted the appointment of the petitioner because of that fact and that fact alone. We attach no weight as determinative of this matter to the statement contained in the evidence that the probation officer consented to and was willing that the petitioner be appointed to the position. He did not so appoint her, and the letters written by him were apparently merely by way of compliance with the regulations of the civil service commission, under the control of whom, as to the making of the reports of his office, he seemed to be.

Having reached the conclusion that the evidence was insufficient to justify the material finding made by the court that petitioner was regularly appointed to her position, we do not think it necessary to pass upon the question suggested in conclusion by the appellant. In the petitioner's complaint it did not appear that the auditor, before demand for the salary warrant was made upon him, had received a certificate from the civil service commission certifying to the correctness of the demand, as section 38 of the Los Angeles county charter provides. Appellant has contended that the auditor could not be compelled by mandate to act until such certificate had been furnished him. In answer to this proposition, respondent contends that the general duties of the auditor, as set forth in section 4091 of the Political Code, do not admit of this certificate being insisted upon as a prerequisite to the issuance of a warrant for a salary amount which is fixed by law. There is no doubt at all but that in defining the duties of the civil service commission it was competent for the charter to provide that such commission should furnish to the auditor evidence that the officers had performed their duties. As to whether, however, the presence of this certificate was a necessary prerequisite to the issuing of the warrant to an officer whose salary is fixed by law, we do not decide.

Under the conclusions expressed it must follow that the petitioner is not entitled to the relief.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 12

PEOPLE v. SIDWELL. (Cr. 316.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 18, 1915.)

1. HOMICIDE ⊂⊃339, 340 — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR—INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Defendant, a special officer, who shot and killed another while endeavoring to force his way into a room where he suspected gambling was going on, was denied the right to introduce evidence showing his duty to force his way into the room. The court also erroneously charged that defendant's act in forcing his way into the room was unlawful. Held, that the error was harmless, for the jury in convicting accused of involuntary manslaughter must have found that he was guilty of culpable negligence, and that is the gravamen of the offense under Pen. Code, § 192, regardless of whether the negligence occurred in the commission of a lawful or unlawful act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 714–717, 720; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃339, 340.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1159—APPEAL—REVIEW.
A conviction cannot be reversed unless the appellate court can, as a matter of law, say that the verdict was not justified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074–3083; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃ 1159.]

3. HOMICIDE ⊂⊃255—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.
Evidence held to warrant a conviction of involuntary manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 539–541; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃255.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃957 — VERDICT — IMPEACHMENT.
As a verdict cannot be impeached by the affidavits of the jurors themselves, accused was properly denied a new trial, notwithstanding affidavits by jurors that they deemed he was entitled to an acquittal, and that none of the jurors understood the offense of which they convicted him was a felony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2392–2395; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃ 957.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

W. P. Sidwell was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, and, from the judgment and an order denying new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Pardee & Pardee, of Susanville, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was charged by information duly filed in the superior court of Lassen county with the crime of murder, and, upon his trial on said charge, was convicted of the crime of involuntary manslaughter, and thereafter sentenced by the court to serve a period of one year in the state penitentiary. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The homicide occurred at the town of Westwood, in said county of Lassen, on the 14th day of March, 1915. It appears to be conceded, although we have been unable to find the facts to have been shown by the evidence, that the town of Westwood has been brought into existence within the last three years by the Red River Lumber Company, a corporation, maintaining an extensive lumber manufacturing plant there; that said company owns all the real estate within said town or upon which it stands; and that the town has a population of approximately 2,500, all of whom are employés, or members of the families of employés, of said company. It appears from the record that the company maintains a number of boarding, lodging, and bunk houses, in which many of its employés are housed and boarded, and also a number of private residences for use by employés having families. One of the places so established and maintained by the company is the "Hotel Seville," in which a number of employés, principally those of the Spanish and Mexican races, occupied apartments. It seems that the company, from the beginning of the time at which it established its enterprise at Westwood, laudably attempted to maintain the town as a peaceful and law-abiding community, and to encourage and promote habits of sobriety and industry among its employés, and to that end adopted and promulgated a rule prohibiting gambling and the use of intoxicating liquors within the town limits among and by such employés. To enforce said rule, it was, quite naturally, deemed essential to police the town, and to some extent this was done, and thus a necessary and reasonable surveillance over the employés maintained. The defendant had been commissioned by the company to discharge the duties of a special police officer and, to vest him with authority to make arrests and otherwise enforce the law and the rules and regulations of the company within the limits of the town of Westwood, he was appointed a deputy sheriff by the sheriff of Lassen county. He had been given instructions by the officers of the lumber company to report to them any gambling among the employés of the company within the town which he might discover, and, furthermore, was instructed that, in the event he had reason to believe that gambling was being carried on in any room of any of the lodging and bunk houses, to break open the door of such room, if necessary, so that he might be able to identify and report to the company the names of the employés thus engaged in violating the rule against that practice.

The immediate facts and circumstances of the shooting are correctly told in the brief of counsel for the defendant as follows:

"About midnight, between the 13th and 14th of March, 1915, defendant, being on duty, took with him one Robert Weber, who was in the employ of the company and acting as night watch at the time, and started out to see if any of the men were gambling in any of the company's lodging or bunk houses. At about half an hour after midnight in the morning of March 14th, they came to a lodging house known as the Hotel Seville, and, seeing from the outside that there was light in one of the rooms on the first floor of the building, they went inside and by listening at the door of room No. 8, they heard what they believed to be the noise of gambling from within, and, finding the door locked, defendant determined to break it open. With this in view, according to his statement, he took his pistol—a Colt army special, double action revolver of 38 caliber—from his hip pocket and placed it in his left hand, so that he might take the door knob in his right hand and put his right shoulder against the door. The gun was not cocked—of this he is very positive—but the very instant the door was broken open the gun was discharged. This is shown by the evidence of five witnesses for the prosecution who were in the room at the time.

"By the evidence of the prosecution it is shown that there were, at the time, in the room, nine persons, all of them being Spaniards. They were sitting around a table gambling. One sat in a chair behind the table facing the door. Three sat on a bed on the left-hand side of the room and two on a chair, which was turned down, between the table and the door, so that the one man could sit on the legs of the chair, and the other on the back of the chair; the top of the chair back resting on the bed which was on the right-hand side of the room as you go in.

"The man sitting on the legs of the chair, with his back to the door, was Francisco Escrivano, the one who was killed. The evidence shows that he was shot through the body, the bullet having entered a few inches above the crest of the hip and about half an inch to the left of the spine, the point of exit being about 1½ inches above the navel and half an inch to the left of the middle line of the front of the body, the bullet having taken a horizontal course through the body, perforating the stomach and the bowels in several places.

"Defendant testified that he first thought, when he heard the discharge of the gun, that some one in the room had shot him, but he soon realized that he was not hit and that Escrivano was wounded. In any case, it is clear from the evidence that Escrivano immediately made an outcry in Spanish, and got up and moved about in such a way as to lead the witnesses to think at first that he was wounded in his leg. Almost immediately upon discovering that the man was wounded, and believing the wound to be in the leg, and therefore not necessarily serious, Sidwell gave his gun to Weber, told him to keep all the men in the room, and ran upstairs in the building to the clerk's room where there was a telephone, and called up a nurse at the hospital, to have the doctor come at once to the Seville, that a man was shot in the leg. He then went back downstairs, by which time the man's friends had opened his clothing and discovered that he was shot through the body. When the defendant returned to the room and found this state of facts and found the man on, or partly on, his feet, he told the men to lay him on one of the beds; that he was too badly hurt to be allowed to stand up and walk around; and then immediately ran upstairs again and called up the stable to have a conveyance sent at once, to use as an ambulance, to take the man to the hospital. After coming downstairs the second time, Sidwell became impatient because the doctor did not arrive promptly and, after a few minutes, started to the hopsital to see what was delaying him. He met the doctor near the hospital and returned with him to the Seville. Escrivano was placed in a wagon—on a cot—but, the road being rough and causing him much pain, the cot was taken from the wagon and he was carried to the hospital by hand; the defendant assisting him. The doctor gave such attention to the case as was possible, but Escrivano died about 8 o'clock on Monday evening, March 15th."

The above embraces a synoptical statement of all the facts brought to the attention of the jury.

The defendant complains: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict; (2) that the court erred to his prejudice by its rulings excluding certain testimony; (3) that it likewise erred in its refusal to adopt and read to the jury certain instructions proposed by him; (4) that prejudicial error was committed in the order denying him a new trial on the ground of the alleged misconduct of the jury whereby a fair and due consideration of the case was prevented.

[1] While it instructed the jury that the Red River Lumber Company, being the owner of the Hotel Seville, had the right to make a rule that no gambling would be permitted in any room or part of said hotel and the further right to "direct and instruct the defendant to use all lawful means for the purpose of detecting persons engaged in gambling" in any of the rooms of said hotel, the court refused to instruct, as requested by the defendant, that the said company had the right to direct and authorize the accused to break into such rooms or houses, if necessary, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the rule of the company against gambling was being violated, and that the defendant, when breaking into the room of the deceased on the occasion of the shooting, "was actually within his legal rights." To the contrary, the court told the jury that the breaking into the room of the deceased by the defendant "was a wrong."

The court refused to permit the defendant to show that the penalty of violating the rule against gambling would be the discharge of those found engaged therein from the employment of the company, and, furthermore, disallowed testimony offered by the defense which would have shown or tended to show that the employés of the company expressed dissatisfaction with the company's inhibition against gambling and that certain of them, not named and perhaps not individually known, had threatened to resist by violent means any attempt of the defendant or any special officer of the company to enter their rooms for the purpose of detecting them in the act of violating said rule.

"Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice. It is of two kinds: (1) Voluntary—upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion. (2) Involuntary—in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to a felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection." Pen. Code, § 192.

Thus it will be observed that, while involuntary manslaughter may be committed in two different ways, the Legislature has not recognized, as between those two ways, any distinction in the degree of turpitude characterizing that crime. In other words, the crime is that of involuntary manslaughter whether the killing be committed in the execution of an unlawful act, etc., or in the execution of a lawful act, etc., or where death, not willfully or intentionally produced, is, nevertheless, caused by the gross or culpable negligence of the defendant—negligence which, in degree, goes so far beyond that negligence merely which suffices to impose a civil liability for damages as to constitute it criminal negligence for which the party guilty of it may be held criminally liable.

Now, conceding that the court erred in instructing the jury that the defendant committed a wrong by breaking open the door of the room in which the deceased and others were supposed to be gambling, or, in other words, that the defendant had no legal right to break into a room or house of the company for the purpose of apprehending its employés in the act of violating the rule against gambling; conceding further that the court should have allowed the defendant to prove that the employés were dissatisfied with said rule and had threatened to do violent injury to the defendant or any other employé who might undertake to detect them in the act of gambling in the houses or rooms of the company, and further assuming that the court erred in not permitting the defendant to show what would be the result to the employés if found in the act of gambling contrary to said rule; conceding, furthermore, what is true as a legal proposition, that the defendant had the right to carry a deadly weapon upon his person and the right, in view of the threats above referred to and which had previously been communicated to him, to carry such weapon in his hand at the time he attempted to ascertain whether gambling was going on in the room in which the fatal shooting occurred—conceding, we say, the legal integrity of all the foregoing propositions, still one of the issues involved in the charge against the defendant was whether, in the handling of the weapon, at the time of the fatal shooting, he was culpably negligent, and, if so, whether such negligence was the cause of the death of the deceased, and, in view of the conclusion of the jury that the accused was guilty of involuntary manslaughter, which crime involves no element of intent but proceeds solely from a degree of negligence which makes the act of killing unlawful, it cannot be conceived or justly be declared that he suffered any prejudice by reason of the alleged errors complained of, for, by the verdict, he was given the full benefit of whatever force there might have been in the excluded testimony and the instructions proposed by him but disallowed by the court. Whether the killing was the result of "the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to a felony," or occurred "in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution or circumspection," the defendant could obviously have been convicted of no less a crime than that of which he was found guilty, even if the testimony and the instructions whose disallowance by the court constitutes the ground of the objections under consideration had been admitted and given. In other words, it being true, as the Code section declares, that involuntary manslaughter may be committed while the party responsible for the killing is doing a lawful act, and, assuming that the rejected testimony and instructions would have conveyed to the jury certain facts and principles of law in all respects sound and pertinent to the charge as laid in the information, yet if the evidence was sufficient to convince the jury that the discharge of the weapon was directly due to to the gross or culpable negligence of the defendant in the handling of the weapon at the time of its discharge and that such negligence was the cause of the death of Escrivano, then, since he was found guilty of the lowest crime of which he could be convicted under the information, the rulings excluding the proffered testimony and disallowing the proposed instructions could not have had a harmful or prejudicial effect upon the substantial rights of the accused.

As we conceive it, the principle thus applied is the same as where an erroneous instruction peculiarly applicable to a charge of murder of the first degree has been given and the verdict is one of guilty of murder of the second degree or of manslaughter. Repeatedly it has been held that in such case, even though the instruction might be prejudicially erroneous where the verdict was of the first degree, a verdict of guilty of the lesser degree of murder or of manslaughter would render the instruction innocuous in its effect upon the rights of the accused.

[2, 3] We now come to a consideration of the proposition, urged with much vigor by the defendant, that the jury were not justified by the evidence in finding him guilty of any crime or degree thereof embraced within the crime charged.

The question, however, with respect to the evidence which this court is alone authorized to determine, is whether we can say, from the record, as a matter of law, that the jury were not justified in finding the verdict they returned; and it may just as well here be stated that, after a careful review of the whole record, we are constrained to the conclusion that we would not be justified in so declaring. In other words, the evidence as it is brought before us is such that whether the defendant was culpably negligent in the handling of the weapon at the time the fatal shot was discharged therefrom and, if so, whether such negligence was the cause of the death of Escrivano, are questions which it was for the jury to determine and not within the legal competence of this court to review.

The general facts of this most unfortunate affair are given above. But precisely how or in what manner the pistol was discharged, the evidence does not disclose, nor, indeed, under the circumstances, is it to be supposed that any one would know, unless it was the defendant himself. He, however, declared that he could not, except by mere conjecture, explain the direct cause of the discharge of the weapon, although the theory advanced by the defense is that he must have had his finger upon the trigger of the weapon when he was in the act of forcing the door open and have unconsciously pulled the trigger as the door gave way under the force he put upon it.

The weapon, according to the evidence and the testimony of the defendant himself, was what is known as a "self-cocker" and operates automatically; that is, it is one of those revolvers that are discharged by means of pressure upon or the pulling of the trigger. As seen, at the time the defendant attempted to and did shove the door in, he held the weapon uncocked in his left hand, using his right hand and shoulder to break open the door. The instant the door gave in from the force applied to it by the defendant, the weapon exploded. In other words, the giving way of the door and the discharge of the pistol were approximately simultaneous. The only plausible explanation of the cause of the discharge is that either the trigger came in contact with some part of the door when it was forced open in such manner as to throw the lock back or, as the defense suggests, the defendant had his finger upon the trigger at the moment he exerted the force necessary to shove the door in and at the same instant of time involuntarily pulled the trigger—a movement which could be influenced or caused by the exertion employed in breaking open the door by means of the force required to be exerted for that purpose. This latter theory is the more plausible of the two and, as seen, coincides with the view of the defendant as to the cause of the discharge of the weapon. It, however, only emphasizes the fact of the recklessness in handling a loaded firearm near the presence of others when the party handling it is at the same time attempting some other act which must necessarily distract his attention from the weapon. But whatever might have been the direct cause of the discharge of the weapon, the fact remains that it was discharged through some cause while in the hand of the defendant and while he was engaged in forcibly effecting an entrance into a room where there was gathered a number of persons sitting about a table in close proximity to the door broken open by him and of whose presence there he was aware.

The handling of a loaded firearm in a public street or in a building or other place where a number of people are assembled or are passing to and fro is always attended with more or less danger, even where some degree of care is exercised in the handling of such weapon; but how much more danger must there be in the handling of such weapon by a person at a time when his mind is occupied by another matter of paramount concern to him. His mind could not at that time be upon the weapon to such a degree as to enable him to handle it with the care and caution with which ordinarily he would probably handle it. That the defendant's mind was not upon his weapon as he was forcing the door open is very clear from the fact that he did not know precisely how it came to be discharged. It would seem to be true that the act of the defendant in holding in his hand a loaded weapon at the time he was engaged in forcing an entrance into the room, thus bringing into play much, if not all, of his physical power, and with his mind centered upon getting into the room, itself constituted gross or culpable negligence. At all events, the jury could reasonably have so viewed that act, and their verdict implies that they did thus view it, and, as before stated, we are unprepared to say, as a matter of law, that they reached an erroneous conclusion, or that the result of their consideration of the evidence is not justified.

[4] The next and last point to be considered involves the question of the alleged misconduct of the jury.

It appears that, after the case had been submitted to the jury and the latter had retired to the jury room for deliberation and had thus been out for some time, they caused to be conveyed to the judge information that they desired further instruction as to the amount of punishment to which the defendant would be amenable in the event of the return of a certain verdict. The court thereupon ordered the jury to be brought before it, and, this being done, the foreman, after stating that they had not agreed upon a verdict, remarked:

"The jury would like to ascertain the degree of punishment that would follow conviction of either one of the degrees of murder charged in the complaint."

To which the court replied that, except as to the crime of murder of the first degree, the matter of punishment was wholly a province of the court, and, consequently, one with which the jury had no concern, and declined to give them any information upon the subject. The jury were thereupon returned to the jury room for further consideration of the case.

In support of his motion for a new trial upon the ground of the asserted "misconduct of the jury by which a fair and due consideration of the case has been prevented" (section 1181, subd. 3, Pen. Code), the defendant filed and introduced affidavits by two of the jurymen in which they alleged that they were at all times during the deliberations of the jury of the opinion that the defendant was entitled to an acquittal at their hands and so voted up to the time that they were led to believe that the crime of involuntary manslaughter "was and is not a felony under the laws of the state of California; and affiants further say that to the best of their knowledge and recollection each and every member of said jury, while deliberating upon said case, expressed himself as believing that the crime of involuntary manslaughter is and was not a felony under the laws of the state of California"; that, had they known or believed that the crime of involuntary manslaughter was a felony under the laws of the state of California, they "never would have consented or agreed to a verdict of guilty of such crime in said action."

The reply to the contention that the showing thus made entitled the defendant to a new trial is that the affidavits of jurors cannot be received or considered for the purpose of impeaching their verdict. People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 632, 39 Pac. 59; People v. Soap, 127

Cal. 408, 411, 59 Pac. 771; People v. Emmons, 7 Cal. App. 685, 95 Pac. 1032. In the Soap Case, supra, the ground of the alleged misconduct of the jury was precisely the same as that upon which the defendant in the case at bar based his affidavits alleging misconduct. The court in that case said:

"It has been definitely settled that the affidavit of a juror cannot be received to impeach the verdict except where it is the result of a resort to the determination of chance."

We have now considered and disposed of all the points urged for a reversal.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

CHIPMAN, P. J. I concur.

BURNETT, J. I concur in the judgment and the foregoing opinion, but I desire to add that, in my judgment, if the defendant had shown the facts that he sought in vain to introduce in evidence, it would have afforded no justification nor excuse for his conduct in needlessly imperiling the lives of the men in the room. The mere circumstance that gambling was being carried on was not sufficient, as I view it, to warrant the defendant in breaking down the door, with a loaded pistol in his hand. Especially would this be true when he had reason to believe that a fatal affray might ensue. His desire and that of the company to suppress gambling was, of course, commendable; but the method resorted to was too drastic. Human life is too precious to be jeopardized for the purpose of ascertaining whether parties are engaged in a peaceful game of poker. Defendant should have directed the inmates to open the door before resorting to such violence, and I think he should have gone away rather than plunge into the room with his loaded revolver in his hand. Our aversion to vice should not blind us to the more vital consideration of life itself.

29 Cal. App. 31

LUND et al. v. LACHMAN. (Civ. 1562.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District. California. Nov. 20, 1915. On Petition for Rehearing, Dec. 20, 1915.)

1. SALES ⟸369—REMEDIES OF SELLER—SUIT FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Where the buyer of wine bottles refused to accept them, and title thereto had not passed from the sellers, who thereupon resold the bottles at private sale, their only remedy was to sue for damages for breach of the contract of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1083, 1084; Dec. Dig. ⟸369.]

2. SALES ⟸384—REMEDIES OF SELLER—SUIT FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—DAMAGES—STATUTE.

In a suit for damages by the sellers of wine bottles against the buyer, who refused to accept, the measure of damages was regulated by Civ. Code, § 3353, providing that in estimating damages the value of property to a seller is deemed to be the price which he could have obtained therefor in the market nearest the place at which the property should have been accepted by the buyer, and at such time after the breach of the contract as would have sufficed, with reasonable diligence, for the seller to effect a resale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1098–1107; Dec. Dig. ⟸384.]

3. SALES ⟸384—REMEDIES OF SELLER—ACTION FOR BREACH — DAMAGES — STATUTE — "MARKET VALUE."

Under said section, where the sellers of wine bottles, upon the buyer's refusal to accept, commissioned their agent to resell, who, being ignorant of the condition of the market, did so at private sale below market price, which, at the time, was over the contract price, the sellers could not recover the difference between the price at which their agent sold and the contract price, since the statute does not provide that the value of property to the seller is the price which he, personally, or his agent, can obtain for it, regardless of the market price, while "market value" is the highest price of a commodity in the market where it is offered for sale which those having the means and inclination will pay, a value controlled by the condition of the market with reference to supply and demand, rather than by the selling ability of the seller.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1098–1107; Dec. Dig. ⟸384.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Market Value.]

4. SALES ⟸334—REMEDIES OF SELLER—RESALE—TIME.

While a seller of goods need not resell immediately after repudiation of the contract of sale by the buyer and his refusal to accept, nevertheless he must exercise reasonable diligence in locating the nearest market and ascertaining the prevailing market price for the rejected goods to sell thereat.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 920; Dec. Dig. ⟸334.]

5. SALES ⟸383 — REMEDIES OF BUYER — ACTION FOR BREACH—MARKET VALUE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by the sellers of wine bottles, who, upon the buyer's refusal to accept, resold at private sale through their agent, who, through his ignorance of the market, secured less than market price, evidence held sufficient to justify a finding that the market price for bottles prevailing on the day and for many days after their tender and rejection by the buyer was at a substantial advance over the contract price which would have covered the expense of drayage, storage, and insurance for a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1097; Dec. Dig. ⟸383.]

6. SALES ⟸384—REMEDIES OF SELLER—ACTION FOR BREACH—DAMAGES.

Where the sellers of wine bottles failed, after rejection by the buyer, to take advantage of prevailing market prices so much greater than the contract price that a sale in the market would have made them whole, they could not predicate a claim for damages on account of interest upon damages accruing from the breach, or for compensation for making a resale at less than market price in the form of a commission upon the price obtained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1098–1107; Dec. Dig. ⟸384.]

On Petition for Rehearing.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1073—DISPOSITION —REVERSAL—FAILURE TO GRANT "NOMINAL DAMAGES."

Where a judgment is erroneous only in that it fails to include "nominal damages," an inconsiderable, trifling sum, it will not be reversed, unless it be made to appear that such damages, if allowed, would have carried costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4240–4247; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 1073.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Nominal Damages.]

8. New Trial ⟸74—Grounds—Failure to Include Nominal Damages.

Where a judgment is erroneous only for failing to include nominal damages, new trial will not be granted unless such damages would have carried costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 150; Dec. Dig. ⟸74.]

9. Costs ⟸22—Costs in Superior Court—Amount of Judgment.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1022, 1025, regulating the matter, to carry costs a judgment of the superior court must amount to $300, so that a judgment for nominal damages will not do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 47–73; Dec. Dig. ⟸22.]

10. Sales ⟸384—Remedies of Seller—Action for Breach of Contract—Nominal Damages.

Where the contracted sellers of wine bottles, upon the buyer's refusal thereof, failed to resell at a prevailing market price that would have more than made them whole, they were entitled only to nominal damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1098–1107; Dec. Dig. ⟸384.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by Henry Lund and Henry Lund, Jr., copartners, etc., against Arthur Lachman. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying them a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Judgment and order affirmed.

H. W. Glensor, of San Francisco, for appellants. Jesse H. Steinhart, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action for damages for the alleged breach of a contract to purchase personal property. The appeal is from the judgment in favor of the defendant and from the order denying a new trial.

The facts of the case as revealed by the pleadings and proof are substantially these: On November 30 and December 1, 1910, the defendant entered into two contracts with the plaintiffs for the purchase of certain specified quantities of claret quart bottles, to be shipped from Sweden during the months of February or March, 1911. The contract price was $5.85 per gross, and delivery was to be made from the ship's side at San Francisco. The bottles arrived at San Francisco on the steamship Strathbeg on June 15, 1911. They were tendered to the defendant on June 16, 1911, and refused by him. The bottles were thereupon removed to a warehouse by the plaintiffs, where they were stored and insured, and from time to time sold at private sale at varying prices for the aggregate sum of $2,912.85, which was $12.15 less than the sum total of the purchase price specified in both contracts.

The trial court in its findings of fact found that the plaintiffs did not use due or any diligence in making sales of the bottles; that the several sums obtained therefor at the several sales were not separately or in toto the highest obtainable market price; and that plaintiffs were not compelled to have such bottles removed to a warehouse because of the defendant's breach of the contracts.

[1, 2] The bottles having been sold at private sale, and it being an admitted fact in the case that title to the bottles had not passed from the plaintiffs, it is conceded, as it must be, that plaintiffs' only remedy was damages for the breach of the contracts (Cuthill v. Peabody, 19 Cal. App. 304, 125 Pac. 926), and that the measure of the damages alleged to have been thereby sustained is to be found in section 3353 of the Civil Code, which provides that:

"In estimating damages, the value of property to a seller thereof is deemed to be the price which he could have obtained therefor in the market nearest to the place at which it should have been accepted by the buyer, and at such time after the breach of the contract as would have sufficed, with reasonable diligence, for the seller to effect a resale."

In addition to claiming that the findings are contrary to the evidence concerning the market value of the bottles and the necessity for their removal to a warehouse as a result of the defendant's breach of the contracts, it is insisted that the plaintiffs should have been allowed 5 per cent. commission as compensation for the cost of making the several resales of the bottles.

[3] The evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs shows that the bottles were sold at a series of sales made during a period of time extending from July 6, 1911, to March 20, 1912, at approximately $5.75 per gross, and there was some evidence, competent and uncontradicted, adduced upon behalf of the defendant to the effect that during the month of June, 1911, there was in the city and county of San Francisco, the place where the bottles should have been accepted by the defendant, a well-established and active market price for bottles similar to those contracted for by the defendant, which ranged from $6.25 to $7.25 per gross. The evidence also shows that the business of the plaintiffs was that of steamship freighters, importers, and exporters, and that the sale of the bottles in question was intrusted to a salesman of the plaintiffs, whose specialty was that of selling iron, coke, and pig iron; and Carl Bundschu, manager of the Gundlach-Bundschu Wine Company, as a witness for the defendant, testified that:

"About in the month of July, 1911, there was sold to us by Henry Lund & Co. a gross of claret bottles at $5.85 a bale. That was below the market price, cheaper than I could buy elsewhere."

The salesman of the plaintiffs, in explanation and justification of the price procured for 387 bales of the bottles in question, which he had sold in or about the month of March, 1912, to one Rosenberg, testified that at that time he was unaware of the fact that there was a scarcity of bottles in the local market resulting from a scarcity of bottles in Germany and Sweden, and that it was this fact known to Rosenberg at the time of the sale which prompted the latter to make the purchase.

Counsel for the plaintiffs, in effect, concede that such evidence was sufficient to warrant and support the finding of the trial court that the plaintiffs had failed and neglected to procure the highest obtainable market price for the bottles, if section 3353 of the Civil Code is to be construed "as requiring the seller, regardless of his business capacity or ability along the particular line of goods forming the subject-matter of the broken contracts, to go into the open market and obtain for the rejected goods a price as high or higher than any other firm or individual is getting. * * *" In other words, it is the contention of the counsel for the plaintiffs that it was the intent and purpose of section 3353 of the Civil Code to provide that the value of the property to the seller is the price which he personally could obtain for it, regardless of what the market price thereof may have been. That this contention is utterly without merit is, we think, manifest upon a casual consideration of the language employed in the Code section under discussion; but, even if that were not so, the section has, in effect, been held to mean that the seller of rejected property who seeks to recoup his loss, if any, by a private sale, must resort to such resale in the open market and at market values. Hill v. McKay, 94 Cal. 5, 29 Pac. 406; Wilson v. Gregory, 2 Cal. App. 312, 84 Pac. 356; Welch v. Nichols, 41 Mont. 435, 110 Pac. 89. Obviously the market value of a commodity is the highest price in the market where it is offered for sale which those having the means and inclination to buy are willing to pay for it; and it is equally obvious, we think, that market values are created and controlled by the condition of the market with reference to supply and demand, rather than by the particular or peculiar selling ability of the seller.

[4, 5] This view of the law compels the conclusion that the evidence sustains the finding of the trial court concerning the failure of the plaintiffs to procure the highest market price obtainable for the bottles in question; and, inasmuch as there is some evidence tending to show that at the very time the contract was breached, and subsequently, there was at San Francisco an active market for bottles of the character and quantity called for in the contracts in controversy, with a market price therefor ranging from $6.25 to $7.50 per gross, which was far in excess of the contract price, it cannot be said that the evidence does not support the finding of the trial court to the effect that the plaintiffs were not compelled to store the bottles because of the defendant's failure to accept them. While it was not incumbent upon the plaintiffs to make the resale immediately after the repudiation of the contract by the defendant, nevertheless the plaintiffs were required to exercise reeasonable diligence in locating the nearest market, and ascertaining the prevailing market price for the rejected bottles; and there can be no doubt that there was sufficient evidence to justify the trial court in finding that, if the plaintiffs had seen fit to seek and take the market price for the bottles which prevailed on the day and for many days following their arrival and tender and rejection at San Francisco, they could have sold them at a substantial advance over the contract price which would have more than covered the expense of drayage, storage, and insurance for a reasonable time had such expense been found to be necessary, and therefore in no event would the plaintiffs have been entitled to recover such expense from the defendant.

[6] What we have said thus far in effect disposes of the point that the plaintiffs were entitled to interest upon the amount of damage accruing from the defendant's breach of the contracts, and to compensation for making the resale in the form of a commission upon the price obtained. Assuming that the plaintiffs ordinarily would have been entitled to recover such items as a part of their damage, nevertheless it is obvious that, if the plaintiffs failed—as the court upon sufficient evidence found—to take advantage of prevailing market prices which would have more than made them whole, they cannot now predicate a claim for damage upon such items any more than upon the other elements of damage already considered.

The view which we have taken of the meaning and intent of section 3353 of the Civil Code compels the conclusion that the trial court did not err in its rulings permitting evidence of the prevailing market value during the period following the tender and rejection of the bottles.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [7-10] On petition for rehearing the only point urged is that the original opinion failed to take cognizance of the point presented and discussed in the briefs of counsel for the plaintiffs that the judgment should be reversed because the trial court refused to allow the plaintiffs at least nominal damages. While this point did not escape the attention of this court upon the original consideration of this case, a discussion of it was inadvertently omitted from the opinion. It will suffice to say at this time that it is the settled rule that, where a judgment is erroneous only in the particular that it did not include nominal damages, it will not be reversed nor a new trial granted unless it be made to appear that such damages, if they had been allowed, would have carried costs. Sutherland on Damages, § 11; Kenyon v. Western Union, etc., Co., 100 Cal. 454, 35 Pac. 75. Nominal damages have been defined to mean merely an inconsiderable, trifling sum, such as "a penny, one cent, six cents" (Davidson v. Devine, 70 Cal. 519, 11 Pac. 664; Maher v. Wilson, 139 Cal. 514, 73 Pac. 418); and to carry costs a judgment of the superior court must amount to the sum of $300 (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1022, 1025). Such a judgment obviously could not be considered to be one for nominal damages as above defined (Broads v. Mead et al., 159 Cal. 765, 116 Pac. 46, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1125); and, as the judgment in the present case would have to amount to $300 before it could carry costs, it follows that a judgment for nominal damages would not carry costs. We are satisfied that in no event could the plaintiffs, under the pleaded and proven facts of the present case, have been allowed more than nominal damages; consequently the error, if any, in the particular stated will not suffice under the authorities above cited to warrant the reversal of the judgment or the granting of a new trial.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

29 Cal. App. 45

MARTHA WASHINGTON COUNCIL NO. 2, DAUGHTERS OF LIBERTY OF CALIFORNIA et al., v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, et al. (Civ. 1768.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 23, 1915. Rehearing Denied Dec. 23, 1915. Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 20, 1916.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⟸159—APPEAL—UNDERTAKINGS—DISMISSAL—STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 974, gives an appeal from the judgment of a justice's court at any time within 30 days after its rendition, and section 978A provides that the undertaking on appeal shall be filed within 5 days after the filing of the notice of appeal, and that notice of its filing shall be given to the respondent, who may except to the sufficiency of the sureties within 5 days thereafter, and that unless they or other sureties justify within 5 days thereafter, the appeal shall be regarded as if no undertaking had been given. Petitioner suffered judgment in justice's court, and duly filed and served a notice of appeal and an undertaking on appeal, with notice to plaintiff therein of the filing, and plaintiff duly excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties named in the undertaking, and petitioners without attempting to have such sureties justify, on the next day filed a new undertaking, with notice thereof to plaintiff, and on plaintiff's motion the appeal was dismissed on the ground that the sureties on the first undertaking or other sureties in their stead had failed to justify after exception to their sufficiency. Held, that the dismissal was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 544, 550–578; Dec. Dig. ⟸159.]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ⟸159 — APPEAL UNDERTAKING—VALIDITY.

An appeal undertaking was not invalid by reason of the inadvertent omission of the word "house," in the expression "is a householder," in that part referring to the qualifications of the sureties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 544, 550–578; Dec. Dig. ⟸159.]

Petition for mandamus by Martha Washington Council No. 2, Daughters of Liberty of the State of California, and others against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and George E. Crothers, one of the judges thereof. Writ denied.

Clarence A. Henning, of San Francisco, for petitioners. T. C. Van Ness, Jr., of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. In this proceeding the petitioners seek the issuance of a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to vacate a certain order made by it, dismissing an appeal taken by the petitioners from a judgment rendered in an action tried in the justices' court. Such judgment was entered on the 31st day of December, 1914, in favor of one E. F. Trimble, the plaintiff therein, against the petitioners here who were the defendants in that action. Thereafter, and on the 30th day of January, 1915, the petitioners filed and served a notice of appeal from the judgment of the justices' court, and on the same day filed an undertaking on appeal, and served notice on the plaintiff therein of the filing thereof. Subsequently, to wit, on February 3, 1915, the plaintiff excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties named in the undertaking. Fearing that said undertaking was defective because of the omission of the word "house," in the expression "is a householder," in that part of the bond referring to the qualifications of the sureties, the petitioners made no attempt to have the sureties on that bond justify, but on February 4th filed a second undertaking on appeal, in which the omission was inserted, and on the same day served the plaintiff with notice of the filing of the new undertaking. Upon motion of the plaintiff the superior court, after a hearing had thereon, dismissed the appeal upon the ground that the sureties upon the undertaking of January 30, 1915, or other sureties in their stead, had failed to justify after written exception to their sufficiency had been served as provided by law. It is to compel the vacating of such order of dismissal that the writ of mandate in this proceeding is sought.

[1] We think the order of the superior court must be sustained. An appeal from the judgment of a justices' court may be taken at any time within 30 days after the rendition of the judgment, and the appeal is taken by filing a notice with the justice and serving a copy thereof on the adverse party. Code Civ. Proc. § 974.

"The undertaking on appeal must be filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal, and notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to the respondent. The adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking, and unless they or other sureties justify before the justice or judge within five days thereafter, upon notice of the adverse party, to the amounts stated in the affidavits, the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given."

[2] According to the wording of the latter part of section 978A, Code of Civil Procedure, we do not doubt that it was the duty of the appellants, after the exception to the sufficiency of the sureties was duly taken, to cause those sureties—or others in their place—to justify after notice and within the time specified in the statute, and that, in failing to do so, the appeal was unavailing. It may be that the course of action adopted by the appellants in filing the second bond would have been correct if the first bond, as they seem to suppose, was absolutely void because of the failure to declare in the affidavit accompanying it that the sureties were freeholders or householders. In that event the bond might perhaps have been regarded as almost a blank piece of paper, but the first undertaking in fact filed was not invalid by reason of the inadvertent omission of the word "house." Rauer's Law & Collection Co. v. Sup. Court, decided Feb. 11, 1915 (Sup.) 146 Pac. 866.

That part of section 978A of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the justification of sureties is but a re-enactment of the same matter which theretofore was a part of section 978 (Jeffries v. Sup. Ct., 13 Cal. App. 193, 196, 109 Pac. 147), and hence the early cases construing that language, of course, are unaffected by the amendment. In the case of Wood v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. 115, 7 Pac. 200, the appellant in perfecting his appeal from a judgment in the justices' court, gave an undertaking, and upon exception having been taken to the sufficiency of the sureties the appellant, instead of having those sureties—or others in their stead—justify, filed a new bond with new sureties, and in so doing, says the court—

"he gave no notice as required by the last clause of section 978 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such being the case, 'the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given.' The statute is peremptory. Without the justification of the sureties named in the undertaking, or other sureties in their stead, upon notice to the adverse party, the appeal was not perfected, and the superior court had no jurisdiction of the case."

That case was followed by the Supreme Court in Herting v. Sup. Ct., 10 Pac. 514.[1] There, after notice had been filed and served on appellant, excepting to the sufficiency of the sureties in an undertaking on appeal from a judgment of the justices' court to the superior court, a new undertaking was filed, with new sureties, but no notice of the justification of the sureties in that undertaking was given to the adverse party; and it was held that the appellant had lost the benefit of his appeal.

In Allen v. Napton, 24 Mont. 450, 455, 62 Pac. 686, the court passed upon the point here involved, and construed the same language. There, too, exception to the sufficiency of the sureties upon an appeal bond had been taken. Within the 5 days allowed for the justification of the sureties the appellant filed and gave notice of the filing of a new undertaking, executed by sureties other than those who had signed the first undertaking. None of the sureties justified, nor was notice that they would justify ever given. The court held that the section was mandatory; that, unless the original sureties, or other sureties, justified within 5 days after the exception taken, upon notice to the adverse party, the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given; the appellate court in such a case had no jurisdiction of the action upon the appeal—citing Wood v. Sup. Ct., supra; McCracken v. Sup. Ct., 86 Cal. 74, 24 Pac. 845; Moffat v. Greenwalt, 90 Cal. 368, 27 Pac. 296.

For the reasons stated, we think the appeal was not effectual for any purpose, and that the superior court acquired no jurisdiction of the case.

Counsel for the petitioner in his brief has, for some reason not apparent to the court, seen fit to indulge in a flood of abuse directed against his opponent. Especially is this court surprised at the conduct of counsel in this respect, inasmuch as respondent's counsel presented his argument with courtesy, dignity, and ability. Such a brief is of no assistance to this court, nor in our opinion should its files be marred by a document of the character in question. It is therefore ordered that the said brief of petitioner be stricken from the files.

For the reasons heretofore stated the writ is denied.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

28 Cal. App. 371

HUGHES v. CHUNG SUN TUNG CO.

(Civ. 1536.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 18, 1915.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜935—PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING COURT BELOW—STATUTE.

Where the order of the trial court setting aside its first judgment was made within the time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that on application made within six months the court may relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, in the absence of a record showing the basis of the court's action, such order will be presumed to be regular.

[1] Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 69 Cal. xv.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3783–3786; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 935.]

2. Appeal and Error ⇐82 — Finality of Determination—Order After Judgment.

An order of the court vacating and setting aside a judgment, being an order made after final judgment, was appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 379–385, 414, 416, 478, 479, 482, 483, 517–522; Dec. Dig. ⇐82.]

3. Appeal and Error ⇐871—Decisions Reviewable—Order on Appeal from Judgment—Statute.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 956, providing that on appeal from a judgment the court may review the verdict or decision and any intermediate order or decision excepted to involving the merits or necessarily affecting the judgment, except a decision or order from which an appeal might have been taken, where defendant took no direct appeal from an appealable order of the court vacating and setting aside its judgment for defendant, the insertion, in defendant's notice of appeal from a second judgment recovered by plaintiff on his second amended complaint, of the language that the appeal was taken from "every interlocutory and intermediate order made in said case adverse to defendant," did not bring up for review the order of the court vacating the former judgment, the time for an appeal from which had expired.

[Ed Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3526–3529; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 871.]

4. Pleading ⇐248—Amendment.

In an action by a loan broker for a commission, where the original complaint sued for commissions for the procurement of a loan which defendant was alleged to have received and accepted under an express contract with the plaintiff allowing the latter a certain percentage for the procurement of such loan, allowance of the filing of the amended complaint, averring that plaintiff had performed his contract to procure the loan in the required amount, but that defendant had refused to accept it, was not improper as introducing a new cause of action, since the gravamen of the action was the breach of the contract, and its averment in one form or other would not amount to a change in the nature of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 686, 687, 689–706, 708½, 709; Dec. Dig. ⇐248.]

5. Brokers ⇐63 — Contract with Loan Broker—Breach.

Where defendant agreed to take a loan of $26,000 from any party, if negotiated, and to pay plaintiff loan broker a commission of 7½ per cent. on the amount, and defendant either accepted and received the loan and then refused to pay the commission, or refused to accept and receive the loan when procured by plaintiff broker, defendant broke its contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 79, 81, 94–96; Dec. Dig. ⇐63.]

6. Appeal and Error ⇐1011 — Review — Findings Below.

A finding of the trial court on substantial conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3989; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 1011.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; A. E. Graupner, Judge.

Action by Jessie J. Hughes, administratrix, substituted in place of Jesse Hughes, deceased, against Chung Sun Tung Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court, 154 Pac. 301.

Wm. Hoff Cook, of San Francisco, for appellant. Wm. F. Herron, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the recovery of commissions claimed to be due under a contract to procure a loan, and it is also an appeal expressly taken from "every interlocutory and intermediate order made in said case adverse to defendant."

[1-3] The facts of the case requisite to a review of the questions presented upon this appeal are substantially as follows: The plaintiff brought this action to recover his commissions, alleging the procurement of the loan in question in his original and first amended complaints. Issue being joined, the case went to trial. At the close of plaintiff's case a motion for nonsuit was made on behalf of the defendant, and was granted by the court, and a minute record of judgment in favor of defendant was thereupon entered on September 19, 1912. On February 11, 1913, the court made an order vacating and setting aside said judgment, and also appears to have made an order permitting the plaintiff to file a second amended complaint. The moving papers and proofs upon which these two orders were predicated are not before the court, but the order of the court setting aside its first judgment having been made within the time permitted by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was within the power and jurisdiction of the court, and, in the absence of a record showing the basis of the court's action, will be presumed to be regular. Besides, this order of the court, being an order made after final judgment, was an appealable order, from which the defendant took no direct appeal. The insertion in defendant's notice of appeal of the language above quoted would not have the effect of bringing up to this court for a review the order of the court vacating the former judgment, since the time for an appeal from that order had long since expired. It cannot therefore be reviewed upon this appeal under the express exception of section 956 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiff having filed his second amended complaint, and issue being joined thereon, the cause again proceeded to trial, at the conclusion of which the plaintiff recovered jugdment against the defendant for the sum of $1,950, with interest and costs. It is from this judgment that the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[4, 5] It is the contention of the appellant that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to file his second amended complaint for the reason that a new cause of action is therein attempted to be set forth. In his original and first amended complaints the plaintiff sued for commissions for the procurement of a loan of a certain sum of money, which the defendant was alleged to have received and accepted, under an express contract with the plaintiff allowing him a certain percentage for the procurement of such loan. In the second amended complaint the plaintiff averred that he had performed the terms of his contract by the procurement of the loan in the required amount, but that the defendant had refused to accept or receive the same. We do not perceive that this change in the form of the plaintiff's averment of the defendant's breach of his contract introduces a new cause of action. The contract between plaintiff and defendant is in the form of an application by the latter to the former, who was a loan broker, for a loan of $26,000, wherein the applicant agrees "to take the above loan from any party if negotiated, and will pay C. U. Barlow & Co. a commission of seven and one-half per cent. on the amount loaned." Under such a contract, the defendant's breach would consist in either accepting and receiving the loan and then refusing to pay the commission, or in refusing to accept and receive the loan when the brokers had procured it by the production of a person ready and willing to make the loan in the amount and according to the terms of the defendant's obligation; in which case the brokers would be entitled to their commissions. Maxon v. Jones, 128 Cal. 77, 60 Pac. 516. The gravamen of the action is the breach of the contract, and the averment of such breach in one form or the other would not amount to a change in the nature of the action. With the discretion of the court in permitting the plaintiff to file his second amended complaint we are not concerned upon this appeal, for there is no record before us showing the reason or lack of reason which led the court to make the order.

[6] The final contention of the appellant is that the findings of the court are not justified by the evidence, but upon a careful reading of the record we find that the testimony of the witness Stidger, if believed by the court, was sufficient to show that the plaintiff did actually produce a person ready and able and willing to make the loan in question. This being so, a substantial conflict in the evidence was presented to the court, and its finding thereon will not be disturbed upon this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

(28 Cal. A. 371)

HUGHES v. CHUNG SUN TUNG CO. (S. F. 7611.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 15, 1915.)

Action by Jessie J. Hughes, administratrix, substituted in place of Jesse Hughes, deceased, against the Chung Sun Tung Company. On petition to have the cause determined by the Supreme Court after judgment in the Appellate Court (154 Pac. 299). Petition denied.

PER CURIAM. The petition to have the above-entitled cause heard and determined by this court after judgment in the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District, 154 Pac. 299, is denied. See Burke v. Maze, 10 Cal. App. 206, 211, 101 Pac. 438, 440; People v. Vaughn, 25 Cal. App. 736, 740, 147 Pac. 116, 117. See, also, Prince v. Hill, 149 Pac. 578, 580.

(171 Cal. 610)

MANNING v. APP CONSOL. GOLD MINING CO. et al. (S. F. 6741.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1915. Rehearing Denied Jan. 22, 1916.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸542—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — WHAT ARE — ASSUMPTION OF DEBTS.

A conveyance of the property of a corporation whereby the grantee company assumed the debts of the grantor is based on a valuable consideration, and is not fraudulent within Civ. Code, § 3442, declaring that a voluntary conveyance by an insolvent shall be fraudulent as to existing creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2154–2160; Dec. Dig. ⟸542.]

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸542—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

Where one corporation conveyed all of its property to a foreign corporation so that threatened litigation might be conducted in the federal courts, instead of the courts of the residence of the grantor corporation, such fact does not show that the conveyance was fraudulent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2154–2160; Dec. Dig. ⟸542.]

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸318 — TRANSACTIONS — RATIFICATION.

Where the directors of two corporations were the same persons, and the majority of the shares were owned by the same person, a transaction between the two corporations is only voidable, and may be ratified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1363, 1364; Dec. Dig. ⟸318.]

4. CORPORATIONS ⟸123 — TRANSFERS OF SHARES—VALIDITY.

Where a pledge of corporate stock was not recorded on the books of a corporation, it is, under Civ. Code, § 324, valid as between the parties, and the act of the corporation in issuing a new certificate for the pledged stock cannot be questioned by a third person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 481, 491, 507–512, 537, 539–546, 569, 618; Dec. Dig. ⟸123.]

5. CORPORATIONS ⟸548 — ACTION TO SET ASIDE CONVEYANCE — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit by a judgment creditor of a corporation to set aside a conveyance of its property to another corporation, which assumed the debts, evidence held insufficient to show that the conveyance was fraudulent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2182–2186; Dec. Dig. ⟸548.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Daniel Manning against the App Consolidated Gold Mining Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Cannon, F. J. Solinsky, and Paul C. Morf, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Samuel M. Shortridge, of San Francisco, F. E. Cook, of Fresno, and Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Appeal by plaintiff from the judgment. Plaintiff sued as a judgment creditor of the App Consolidated Gold Mining Company (which hereafter we shall designate as the "App Company"). The complaint charged that certain conveyances and other transactions upon the part of the App Company and the other defendants were fraudulent, and that the property and assets of that corporation were transferred for the purpose of preventing him from securing anything in satisfaction of his judgment. We shall abbreviate the names of the other corporate defendants, the Rawhide Gold Mining Company and the Central Land & Trust Company to "Rawhide Company" and "Trust Company," respectively.

According to the allegations of the complaint the corporate defendants Rawhide and App Companies were engaged in gold mining in Tuolumne county. William A. Nevills owned a majority of the stock of each corporation. In February, 1902, the plaintiff, who was employed in a mine belonging to the App Company, was seriously injured by a falling timber. In April, 1902, the said corporation conveyed all of the property of which it was then the owner to the Rawhide Company in consideration of the issuance to it of $14,975 of the stock of the latter company; that consideration being named in the instruments of conveyance. In the month of May, 1902, plaintiff sued the App Company for damages on account of the injuries received in its mine, and in November of that year obtained judgment for $5,000. The order of court denying a new trial in that case was reversed by this court in March, 1906. On November 12, 1906, William A. Nevills (so it is alleged), owning a majority of the shares of stock of the App and the Rawhide Companies, and being indebted to the Trust Company for $100,000 loaned and advanced to him personally for his own use, procured the execution by the Rawhide Company of a promissory note in the sum of $100,000. On the same day, it is alleged, the Rawhide Company executed a trust deed conveying to F. H. Short and J. P. Bernhard in trust as security for the payment of the said note all of the mining property described in the complaint and other valuable property belonging to Nevills or to him and his wife, Delia F. Nevills, who is also a defendant in this action. In February, 1910, Manning's action against the App Company was again tried, resulting in a judgment in his favor for $17,500. An appeal was taken by the defendant, but it was not perfected, and the judgment became final in July, 1912.

It is also averred in the complaint that prior to the commencement of this action proceedings were pending in Tuolumne county to foreclose under the deed of trust; the amount then due on the promissory note being more than $120,000. It is alleged that the property conveyed by the App Company to the Rawhide Company was worth $500,000, and that after the said conveyance no assets of any sort out of which Manning could satisfy his judgment remained in the possession of the App Company.

The complaint also contains averments to the effect that Nevills dominated both mining corporations, and that all of the transactions were done according to his wishes and commands; that he owned 146,080 of the 150,000 shares of the stock in the App Company, and 14,980 of the 15,000 shares of the Rawhide; that the deed of conveyance from the former to the latter was without consideration, and that Nevills caused said conveyance to be made for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the App Company, particularly the plaintiff. Upon information and belief it is pleaded that the indebtedness evidenced by the promissory note to the Trust Company has been paid by the proceeds from the pledged property; that Nevills and the officers of the Trust Company have conspired to pretend that no portion of the principal sum of the note has been paid and to cause the sale of said property under the terms of the deed of trust; that said property is to be purchased for them at such sales and to be conveyed at some future time to Nevills, and that such course has been and is to be pursued for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff and other judgment creditors; that in pursuance of said conspiracy the trustees have been notified of the alleged default in payment of the note, and have been directed to sell the property in accordance with the terms of the trust deed; and that the trustees have prepared to foreclose and unless they be restrained will sell the property, thereby impairing plaintiff's lien. The prayer is for judgment for the amount of plaintiff's claim, and, besides, the plaintiff asks for an accounting by the Trust Company for all moneys received by it from the Rawhide Company, from Nevills, and from the operation of the mining property described in the conveyances. Plaintiff also prays for restraining orders which will prevent further activities by any of the defendants looking to the disposition of the property, and especially does he ask that the trustees be restrained from any further proceedings under the deed of trust.

The substantial averments of the complaint are denied by the defendants in their answer. They deny any conspiracy to defraud creditors either in the transactions between the App and the Rawhide Companies, resulting in the purchase of the property of one by the other, and allege that the deed of trust was made in good faith and received by the Trust Company without any knowledge of any matters alleged in the complaint. The payment of the indebtedness evidenced by the promissory note is also denied, and they plead a judgment of the superior court given on July 8, 1912, whereby it was found that the Rawhide Company was indebted to the Trust Company in a sum in excess of $120,000, and, while admitting that the proceeds of the pledged properties have been applied to the indebtedness evidenced by the note, they assert that no accounting is necessary to determine the balance due, for the reason that such accounting has been ordered by the court in another action and has been accomplished.

The findings are to the effect that all of the transactions denounced in the complaint as fraudulent were in good faith, and that the trust company had no knowledge or notice of the alleged fraudulent practices in the dealings between the App and the Rawhide Companies. The court also found that the Trust Company knew of no claim or demand of the plaintiff against the App Company or of the suit for damages.

An attack is made by appellant upon the findings on the theory that the evidence does not support them. The plaintiff insists, moreover, that the evidence shows without contradiction a state of facts leading, as matter of law, to the conclusions for which he contends. These propositions are, in brief: (1) That the conveyance by the App Company to the Rawhide Company was made without consideration, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors of the App Company; (2) that the deed of trust was executed as security for the personal debt of Nevills and in pursuance of his intention to create a large indebtedness against the property so fraudulently transferred, ostensibly in the name of the Rawhide Company, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the plaintiff; (3) that the Trust Company at all times had full knowledge of all of the alleged frauds; and (4) that the indebtedness evidenced by the promissory note has been paid, but that Nevills and the Trust Company fraudulently conspired to pretend that no such payment had been made. Appellant seems to pin his faith upon the first and third propositions; therefore we will consider: (1) Whether or not there is any evidence to sustain the finding of the superior court that the conveyance of the App Company to the Rawhide Company was made for a consideration and without intent to hinder, delay, or defraud plaintiff; and (2) if it be determined that the finding was unsupported, and that said conveyance was made with the intent alleged, whether or not the Trust Company had knowledge of the fraud when the deed of trust was executed. If neither of these problems must be solved in favor of defendants, the judgment must be affirmed.

[1] Respondents insist that the question of fraudulent intent is one of fact to be determined by the trial court, and not one of law arising from the proven or admitted facts. It is the contention of respondents that there is no presumption of fraud arising out of the transfer of all of the property of the App Company to the Rawhide Company because there was not lacking a valuable consideration, and because the transfer was not made in contemplation of insolvency. Section 3442, Civ. Code. Mr. Ricketts, who was attorney for the App Company at the time of the said transfer, testified that the corporation did receive 14,975 shares of the Rawhide stock. Mr. Lang's testimony was to the same effect. It is true that the 14,975 shares were subject to a prior pledge to J. S. Doe, who held as collateral security for a loan to Nevills substantially all of the stock of the original issue of the Rawhide Company. The amount of the stock was reduced in accordance with the laws of West Virginia, in which state the Rawhide Company was chartered. It is stoutly asserted by appellant that there was obvious fraud in thus reducing the number of shares of capital stock while the original issue was outstanding and in Mr. Doe's hands, and that in any event the new issue was of no value because all of its equivalent was held by the pledgee. Respondents are of the opinion that the facts shown would only subject the new shares of the Rawhide to Mr. Doe's prior lien, and, as there were, according to the testimony of Mrs. Nevills, about $3,000,000 worth of securities in Mr. Doe's hands to protect a debt of something like $200,000, it could not be said that the shares transferred by the Rawhide to the App were without value because, under the doctrine of marshaling of securities, resort must first be had to other personalty held by the pledgee before he would be justified in applying the Rawhide stock to the payment of the debt of Nevills. There is much force in this position, but we are not compelled to consider the legality of the change in the amount of capital stock nor the value of the new stock when issued to support the finding that there was a valuable consideration for the transfer of the App Company's property. The Rawhide Company assumed the current indebtedness of the App Company in consideration of the deed, and debts were paid by it. The promise of a grantee to pay a grantor's indebtedness is a valuable consideration. Saunderson v. Broadwell, 82 Cal. 133, 23 Pac. 36; Gladwin v. Garrison, 13 Cal. 332; Carty v.

Connolly, 91 Cal. 19, 27 Pac. 599; Greenwalt v. Mueller, 126 Cal. 639, 59 Pac. 137. Such assumption removes the transaction from the operation of section 3442, Civil Code. The same principle was announced by the Supreme Court of Nevada in Ivancovich v. Stern, 14 Nev. 341.

[2-5] Mr. Ricketts testified that long before Manning was hurt a plan was discussed for transferring the property of the App (a Californian corporation) to the Rawhide; the primary purpose being to vest the property in the West Virginian corporation in order that certain threatened litigation might be conducted in the courts of the United States, rather than in those of this state. There was nothing essentially fraudulent, or even improper, in such a purpose. Nor did the fact that Nevills was the owner of practically all of the stock of both companies render the transaction fraudulent. Indeed, so far as Nevills was concerned, he was liable as a stockholder of either company, and was personally liable as a stockholder of the Californian corporation. At the time when the first judgment was given in favor of Manning, Nevills was evidently solvent because he and his wife offered themselves and were accepted as sureties on the appeal bond. It is argued that such a course was entirely inconsistent with any idea of trying to defeat the collection of Manning's claim, and that, if Nevills had sought fraudulently to prevent such collection, he would have made some apparent disposition of his individual property for the same purpose. There is force in this position, and doubtless the argument received due weight in the mind of the trial court. Nor is the fact that the directors of the App and the Rawhide Companies were all or most of them holding like positions in both corporations conclusive as to the bad faith of the transaction between them. Such dealings are not void, but voidable only, and may be ratified by either party by conduct having that legal effect. Sausalito Bay Land Co. v. Sausalito Improvement Co., 166 Cal. 306, 136 Pac. 57. It needs no argument to demonstrate that the stockholders of both companies by their subsequent actions ratified the transfer. For example, the Rawhide defended and compromised a suit which had been commenced in a federal court on a liability which was originally that of the App Company.

Doubtless it was an irregularity as against Doe for the Rawhide Company to issue the certificate for the reduced stock without naming Doe therein as pledgee. Spreckels v. Nevada Bank, 113 Cal. 274, 45 Pac. 329, 33 L. R. A. 459, 54 Am. St. Rep. 348. Notwithstanding the pledge to Doe, Nevills continued to own the stock, and the transfer of it to Doe, not having been entered on the corporation's books, was good only as between the parties. Section 324, Civ. Code. Doe was paid eventually, and the 14,975 shares of stock transferred by Nevills to the App Company was in essence the same stock which he had pledged to Doe. Nor does fraud inhere in the fact that Nevills furnished the consideration which passed between the corporations. He was virtually the sole stockholder of each company. If he transferred shares in the Rawhide, which he personally owned, to the App (of which he was the holder of practically all of the stock), it would not alter his financial interest.

We conclude, therefore, that to the trial court was given the duty of determining the question of alleged fraud as a matter of fact, and not as a matter of law arising from the undisputed or admitted facts; that there is a substantial basis for the court's conclusion that the transaction attacked by plaintiff was not fraudulent and void; that the findings in this regard are supported by evidence; and that we cannot, therefore, disturb the judgment.

The conclusion which we have reached makes it unnecessary to examine the other contentions of appellant relating to the transactions between the Trust Company, the Rawhide Company, Nevills, his wife, and others, because there is no alleged fraud connected with that branch of the case which is not charged as having its origin in the asserted original bad faith and alleged sinister practice by which the properties of the App Company were transferred to the Rawhide.

From the foregoing it follows that the judgment must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

171 Cal. 633

In re SCHWARTZ et al. (S. F. 6892.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1915.)

1. PARENT AND CHILD ⇐2—ABANDONMENT OF CHILD—CONDUCT OF PARENT.

Petitioner, on the birth of his daughter in 1906 and on the death of her mother a few days later, having then no home, asked his aunt, living with his father-in-law, to bring the child up, and left the child with her, and during the next four years visited relatives in Europe, worked in various places, and remarried in 1910, and in January, 1911, sued out a writ of habeas corpus to obtain custody of the child. In October, 1912, he obtained the vacation of an order of adoption consented to by the aunt as guardian, and in September, 1913, applied for revocation of her letters of guardianship, which had been granted in 1911 without notice to him. Held, in the absence of evidence that it was not for the child's best interest to be left with the aunt and of any demand on him for its support, not to show abandonment of the child by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–32; Dec. Dig. ⇐2.]

2. PARENT AND CHILD ⇐2—CUSTODY—RIGHT OF FATHER—FITNESS.

In view of Civ. Code, § 197, declaring the father of a minor child entitled to its custody, the father, who was an industrious man of good habits having a comfortable home and whose wife was willing to care for it, was competent and fit to have its custody, and was entitled thereto, as against a guardian who had been appointed without his consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–32; Dec. Dig. ⇦2.]

Angellotti, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bradley V. Sargent, Judge.

Petition by Adolph Schwartz for the revocation of letters of guardianship of Rosa Gertrude Schwartz, his minor child, issued to Amalia Schwartz, and for the termination of said guardianship. Petition denied, and petitioner appeals. Order reversed.

Olin L. Berry, of San Francisco, for appellant. George Appell and C. H. McConaughy, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Adolph Schwartz appeals from an order denying his petition for the revocation of letters of guardianship of Rosa Gertrude Schwartz, his minor child, issued to Amalia Schwartz on March 16, 1911, and for the termination of said guardianship.

The child has no property of any description. The said guardian was appointed solely upon the ground that the father had abandoned the child and that it needed the care and attention of some fit and proper person. In denying the petition of the father for revocation the court made findings to the effect that the father had abandoned the child prior to the appointment of Amalia Schwartz as guardian, and that he was not a fit or proper person to have its custody. We are of the opinion that the evidence does not justify either finding. The following is a statement of the facts shown by the evidence, relating to abandonment:

[1] Amalia Schwartz is the aunt of the child's father and mother, who were cousins. She was the sister of the father of Adolph Schwartz and of the mother of Sophie Schwartz, his wife, who was the daughter of Adam Stern. The wife of Stern was for many years in delicate health, and Amalia Schwartz lived as a member of the family of Stern and was the housekeeper. She had raised Sophie Schwartz, the wife of the appellant. Schwartz and his wife, at the time of her confinement, were living at the house of Adam Stern in Los Angeles. The child was born on December 4, 1906. Its mother died on December 18, 1906. Schwartz and Stern were both barbers by occupation. Upon the death of the child's mother, Schwartz, having no home or place to keep it, asked his aunt, Amalia Schwartz, to take the child and raise it, which she then agreed to do. Thereupon he left the child with her. Shortly after making this arrangement Schwartz left the house of his father-in-law and never afterwards lived there as a member of the family, although he visited the family several times a year. From 1906 to 1911 Schwartz lived in various places. He went first to Jamestown, Va., and then to Europe on a visit to his relatives. He also worked in Los Angeles and in Nevada, and in the beginning of 1910 he settled in Seattle and there married his present wife, by whom he has a child which was about two years old at the time of the making of the order appealed from. About the first of January, 1911, Mrs. Stern, Schwartz's mother-in-law, died. Upon learning of her death, Schwartz wrote to Adam Stern suggesting that he would take the child to his own home and away from the home of Stern. Up to that period the relations between the parties appear to have been entirely harmonious. His suggestion that he wanted to take the child himself was met with objections, and from that time forward all of his relatives manifested a disposition to resist his purpose. Stern wrote to Schwartz advising him not to attempt to take the child away, that it would make trouble. Thereupon Schwartz went to Los Angeles to get the child, and, failing to find it, caused a writ of habeas corpus to issue for its custody. This writ was served upon Stern, but not upon Amalia Schwartz. The child had been taken to San Francisco by Amalia Schwartz, and was at that time in the home of Calvin C. Eib, its uncle by marriage. Failing in this proceeding, Schwartz returned to Seattle. In March, 1911, without notice to Schwartz, Amalia Schwartz obtained the appointment as guardian in the superior court of San Francisco, as above stated, for the purpose of retaining custody of the child. In November, 1911, Calvin C. Eib and his wife, without the consent of Schwartz, obtained an order of the superior court of San Francisco whereby they adopted the said child, Amalia Schwartz consenting thereto as its guardian. In May, 1912, Schwartz moved to San Francisco and then discovered that the child was in the custody of Eib and wife. He then again resorted to a writ of habeas corpus to get the child and was defeated by the order of adoption and the guardianship, of both of which he then heard for the first time. In October, 1912, he applied to the superior court to set aside the order of adoption aforesaid, and in May, 1913, the said order was vacated accordingly. In September, 1913, he filed the present application for the revocation of the letters and termination of guardianship.

It is clear from this conduct of Schwartz that he never intended to abandon the child. Having arranged with his aunt for its care, it cannot be said that his conduct in allowing her to keep it was an abandonment. From all that appears in the evidence it was for the best interests of the child that it should be left with the aunt, at least until Schwartz married. There is some conflict in the evidence as to whether he contributed anything to the child's support. On the other hand it does not appear that any demand was ever made upon him for assistance of that kind. Under the circumstances, his failure to pay for its maintenance did not constitute an abandonment. The evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the child was abandoned by the father.

[2] With respect to the father's fitness to have the custody and care of the child, the evidence to sustain the finding is equally deficient. He appears to be an industrious person of good habits. He has a comfortable home into which he can take the child. His present wife is desirous of having the child and is willing to care for it. The finding that he is unfit to care for the child seems to be based entirely upon the fact of his making divers demands upon Stern and Eib for money as a condition of his consent that the child might be kept away from him. These occurred after the controversy arose, and in the course of his negotiations and efforts to get possession of his child. In February, 1911, he said to Charles Stern that he had had bad luck that year, and had been in the hospital, and that if he could get $500 he would consent to allow the child to remain where it was, and made a like proposal to Adam Stern, asking for $1,000. He was referred by Adam Stern to Mr. Eib. Thereupon he began the proceeding in habeas corpus, which, as before stated, failed of its object. In May, 1912, in a conversation with Eib in San Francisco, he again intimated that if $1,000 were paid he would not press his claims for the child. No other conduct of his was proven tending to show unfitness for the care of the child. The appellant himself denies that he made these requests as a condition of giving up the child. Whatever may have been the reason for his conduct in this particular, we do not think it is sufficient to justify the finding that he is not a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of his child. The court below appears to have made its decision as it did because of its belief that the financial interests of the child would be promoted if it were left with its relatives, rather than given over to its father. The law does not recognize this as a cause for depriving the father of the custody of his own child. No sufficient reason appears why the father should not be allowed to take care of and rear his child, as he apparently desires to do. The father is competent and fit to have its custody, and, being willing and able to care for it, he is entitled thereto. Civ. Code, § 197. The guardianship is no longer necessary and should be terminated. We think the court below erred in refusing the relief asked by the father.

The order is reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I dissent, being of the opinion, after full consideration of the record, that the evidence sufficiently supports the finding of abandonment.

171 Cal. 637

GRAY v. UNION TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 6761.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1915. Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1916.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=150 — RIGHT OF TRUSTEE—BENEFIT OF OTHERS.

In an action to terminate a trust to manage the property and to pay the net income to the trustor during her lifetime, and providing that on her death the property should go as provided in her last will, or, if she left no will, to her heirs at law, the defendant trustee had a right to appeal from a decree for plaintiff if it believed that the rights of other persons than the trustor would be impaired or destroyed by its termination, as it owed precisely the same duty to protect the rights of the indeterminable class of beneficiaries as to protect the rights of the trustor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 934–946; Dec. Dig. ⊂= 150.]

2. TRUSTS ⊂=135 — CONSTRUCTION — "DRY TRUST"—STATUTE.

Such trust was not a "dry trust," since active duties were imposed on the trustee during the life of the trustor, and after her death in ascertaining the persons entitled to take the property; and, under the express provision of Civ. Code, § 863, the trustee of such express trust took the whole legal title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. ⊂=135.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Dry Trust.]

3. TRUSTS ⊂=59—REVOCATION—STATUTE.

Such trust instrument, reserving no power of revocation, created a trust irrevocable by any act of the trustor, as, under the express provision of Civ. Code, § 2280, a trust cannot be revoked by the trustor, after its acceptance by the trustee and beneficiaries, unless the declaration of trust reserves a power of revocation in the trustor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 78–81; Dec. Dig. ⊂=59.]

4. TRUSTS ⊂=61—TERMINATION—POWERS OF EQUITY—PARTIES.

It is only when all the parties interested in a trust are before a court, when each is sui generis and all join in the application that a court of equity ever terminates a valid trust, and, even in such circumstances, it does not do so by force of the application but only when such a decree is proper, and even then the court is not required to terminate the trust, but may do so in its discretion; and, conversely, equity has no power to terminate the trust if all the parties in interest are not before the court, as Civ. Code, § 2280, declares that a trust shall not be revocable except by the consent of all the beneficiaries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 83–87; Dec. Dig. ⊂=61.]

5. TRUSTS ⊂=140—ESTATE OF BENEFICIARIES —VESTED "REMAINDER"—STATUTE.

A trust in real and personal property was created to manage and invest and to pay the income to the trustor for life, irrevocable during her lifetime, and under which on her death the property should go as provided in her last will, and, if she left no will, to her heirs at law according to the succession laws of California existing at its creation. Civ. Code, § 769, declares that when a future estate other than a reversion depends on a precedent estate, it may be called a "remainder," and be created and transferred by that name. Section 773 provides that a remainder may be created to commence at a future day and be limited upon a life estate, and section 781 provides that a general or special power of appointment shall not prevent the vesting of a future estate limited to take effect in case such power is not vested. Held, that the trust created vested remainders in the trustor's heirs, subject to divestiture only upon her exercise of the power of nomination by will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 183–187; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃140.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Remainder.]

6. REMAINDERS ⊂⊃14—ALIENATION.

Such remainders in trust, whether regarded as vested or contingent, were alienable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Remainders, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃14.]

7. DEEDS ⊂⊃128—RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE—EFFECT OF ABOLITION.

The effect of Civ. Code, § 779, repealing the rule in Shelley's Case, was to restore to courts of equity their right to construe apt words to create a remainder as a limitation, in accordance with its plain import and intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 413–415, 419–421, 427; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃128.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Helen D. Gray against the Union Trust Company of San Francisco, to terminate a trust. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to deny plaintiff the relief sought.

Heller, Powers & Ehrman, of San Francisco (Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, of counsel), for appellant. Edwin L. Forster and Robert R. Moody, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff, by two instruments of the same date and forming "parts of the same transaction," made by one of them a transfer to defendant, absolute in form, of certain property, real and personal. By the second, contemporaneous therewith, she declared the trusts upon which the defendant, as trustee, was to hold this property. At the time when plaintiff executed the transfer and trust agreement she was and still is an unmarried woman over the age of 21 years, having no child nor other lineal descendant. Plaintiff's mother, however, is living, and her mother would be entitled to inherit, and succeed to all the property, real and personal, of plaintiff if she should die intestate and unmarried, leaving her mother surviving. Plaintiff also has other relatives now living who would be entitled to succeed to and inherit her property if she should survive her mother and thereafter die intestate unmarried, leaving no child surviving her and leaving surviving her the other relatives referred to or any of them. Helen D. Gray subsequently brought this action to terminate the trust, her contention being that, notwithstanding she did not reserve in the instruments creating it any power of revocation, nevertheless by virtue of the terms of the trust itself it is determinable at her pleasure. The terms of the trust itself therefore demand presentation.

The conveyance was made to defendant "to manage said trust property as hereinafter provided." The property subject to the trust came to plaintiff through the will of one Mary E. Bithell. The "original investment" of funds received from the estate of Mary Bithell could be made only with the concurrence of the trustor. After this original investment, made with the concurrence of the trustor, the trustee is empowered "thereafter from time to time to make investments and reinvestments as in its discretion may seem necessary and proper without consulting the trustor." Certain limitations upon the power of the trustee to make these investments are declared, but they have no bearing upon the question presented on this appeal. "The net income and revenue and profit, less the charge for services of the trustee, shall be paid by said trustee to said trustor," and an accurate account is to be kept. The trustee is entitled to receive for its services 2 per cent. of the gross income of the trust property, and finally the trust instrument declares:

"This trust shall be irrevocable and shall last during the lifetime of said trustor, and upon her death the trust property shall go to and vest as she shall provide in her last will and testament, and leaving no last will and testament, said property shall go to and vest in her heirs at law, according to the laws of succession of the state of California as such laws now exist."

The facts were stipulated, the stipulation embracing the matters of fact above set forth. Drawn from these facts the court made additional findings of fact which are in reality misplaced conclusions of law. The most important of these is as follows:

"That plaintiff is the only person having any interest in any of the real or personal property mentioned in the said assignment or in the said agreement, except said defendant, Union Trust Company of San Francisco, for the compensation which it is entitled to receive for its services as trustee, under the terms of the said trust agreement."

[1] It was under this finding, which manifestly is a conclusion of law embodying the court's construction of the trust and its determination that defendant held but the naked fee, while every beneficial interest in all of the property was vested in plaintiff, that the court concluded that the trust was one which should be dissolved and terminated by its decree, and gave judgment accordingly. From that judgment defendant appeals, and no serious objection can be raised to its right to appeal. Indeed, it is its duty to do so if it believes that there be other persons than Helen Gray whose rights would be impaired or destroyed by the dissolution of this trust. Those persons, if they exist, would be Helen Gray's "heirs at law according to the laws of succession of the state of California as such laws now exist." But those persons, in the contingency provided for by the trust, would not take as inheritors from Helen D. Gray. The laws of succession as they existed at the time of the creation of the trust would fix the class entitled to take, and that class would take, not as heirs of Helen Gray by virtue of her intestacy, but as a class designated in the trust instrument in the event that Helen Gray failed to exercise her power to nominate others. In other words, by a change in the laws of succession conceivably it could happen that those who would be entitled to take under the trust instrument in the event of the death intestate of Helen Gray, would no one of them be an heir at law of Helen Gray at the time of her death. And, finally, upon this proposition it should be pointed out that upon the death of Helen Gray intestate, it would not be the court in probate which would determine to whom the trust property should go. The class entitled to take would be determined by a court of equity in an action brought by the trustee to determine that precise question. The trustee, therefore, owes precisely the same duty to protect the rights of this indeterminable class of beneficiaries as it does to protect the right of the named beneficiary, Helen D. Gray.

[2, 3] The ultimate question then is the power of the court of equity to terminate such a trust as this. The primary questions first to be determined, and in whose determination the answer to the ultimate question will be found, go to the nature and scope of the trust itself. What then are the nature and scope of the trust? First there is conveyed to the trustee the whole legal title, since so much is plainly necessary for the purposes of the trust (Civ. Code, 863), which general purposes are to give to plaintiff the usufructuary benefit of the property during her lifetime and upon her death to see that the property goes to her nominees under her will, or, failing of such nomination, to those who are her heirs at law at the time of her death under the laws of succession as they existed at the time of the making of the trust. Plaintiff's usufructuary interest in the whole estate during her life is her equitable life estate, to which is added the power of nominating those who shall take the legal and equitable fee at her death and thus terminate the trust. The trust itself is not a dry, naked trust, since active duties are imposed upon the trustee during the life of the plaintiff, and a no less active duty upon her death in causing to be determined, should she fail to nominate, those entitled to take the property. The settlor or trustor reserved no power of revocation, and the trust is therefore irrevocable by any act of plaintiff. Civ. Code, § 2280; Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 449, 11 Pac. 659; Scrivner v. Dietz, 84 Cal. 297, 24 Pac. 171; Kopp v. Gunther, 95 Cal. 63, 30 Pac. 301; Salisbury v. Bigelow, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 174; Stone v. Hackett, 12 Gray (Mass.) 227; Viney v. Abbott, 109 Mass. 300.

We have so far refrained from using the word "remainder" or "remaindermen" in connection with this trust, for the creation by the trust of such remainders and remaindermen is the very heart of the controversy between these litigants. By appellant it is contended that such remainders are created and with them estates in the remaindermen, which it is beyond the just exercise of the powers of equity to destroy. Upon the other hand, it is contended that no such remainders are created; that the whole equitable estate is in the trustor, plaintiff herein, and that she is entitled to address herself to equity for the relief here obtained—the relief which will terminate a dry and naked trust, establishing the legal estate in the person who possesses the full equitable estate.

[4-6] It is only when all the parties in interest are before a court, when each is sui generis, and all join in the application, that a court of equity ever terminates a valid trust. And even when all these circumstances exist, equity does not do so by force of the application, but only when a decree so doing is meet and proper. When such circumstances exist power is in the court of equity to terminate the trust, but with that power is not necessarily imposed the duty so to do. It is still discretionary. Perry on Trusts, § 920; 39 Cyc. 99; Eakle v. Ingram, 142 Cal. 15, 75 Pac. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 99; Hildreth v. Eliot, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 293; Wenzel v. Powder, 100 Md. 36, 59 Atl. 194, 108 Am. St. Rep. 380; Godfrey v. Roberts, 65 N. J. Eq. 323, 55 Atl. 353; May v. Walter's Executors, 97 S. W. 423, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 59; In re Lewis' Estate, 231 Pa. 60, 79 Atl. 921; Estate of Yates, 149 Pac. 555. The converse of this proposition follows as matter of course. If all the parties in interest are not before the court, equity has no power to terminate the trust. Civ. Code, 2280; 2 Perry on Trusts (6th Ed.) § 920; Brown v. Brown, 97 Ga. 531, 25 S. E. 353, 33 L. R. A. 816; 39 Cyc. 99. The importance of this consideration arises from the fact that if remainders and remaindermen were created, admittedly the latter were not before the court and its decree must fall. And thus by this different method of approach we are brought to the vital consideration in the case: Were such remainders created? Our Civil Code, § 769, declares that:

"When a future estate, other than a reversion, is dependent on the precedent estate, it may be called a remainder, and may be created and transferred by that name."

We have in this trust apt language to create such a future estate, dependent for its enjoyment upon the termination of a precedent life estate. We have therefore apt language to create a remainder, and it is quite permissible that it should be created to commence at a future day and be limited upon a life estate. Civ. Code, § 773. There is in this trust a power of appointment or nomination reserved to the trustor. It can be exercised in but one way, and that is by her will. But such power of appointment does not prevent the vesting of the future estate in remainder. Civ. Code, § 781. Everything then which the law contemplates shall exist for the creation of equitable remainders or remainders in trust is found in this trust. Whether they be regarded as vested or contingent is immaterial, for in either case the estate and interest are alienable. Davis v. Willson, 115 Ky. 639, 74 S. W. 696; McDonald v. Bayard Sav. Bank, 123 Iowa, 413, 98 N. W. 1025; Sikemeier v. Galvin, 124 Mo. 367.[1] But in truth these remainders are to be regarded as vested remainders, subject to divestiture only upon the exercise of the power of nomination by will reserved to the trustor. A case substantially identical with this was presented by Crackanthorpe v. Sickles, 156 App. Div. 753, 141 N. Y. Supp. 370. There, as here, the plaintiff, an unmarried woman, conveyed property to a trustee to invest and manage and pay the net income thereof to her during her life, and at her death to distribute it to such persons as she might designate by her will, or, should she die intestate, then to divide the property among her lawful issue, which she might leave surviving. In that case, as in this, plaintiff sought a dissolution of the trust, claiming to be the only person beneficially interested therein. The court in disposing of these contentions said:

"It must therefore be determined just what the interest of these children is. The effect of the deed was to vest in the plaintiff an equitable life estate in the property, with a general power of appointment by will to any person or persons whom she might designate. In default of an appointment of successors to the property pursuant to the power, the deed created a remainder to the lawful issue of the plaintiff who should survive her. It is a well-established rule, both of the common law and by statute, in this state that estates in remainder which are limited to take effect upon default in the exercise of a power of appointment are not prevented from vesting by the existence of the power, but take effect in the same manner as if no power existed, subject, however, to be divested by an exercise of the power. * * * By virtue of this clause of the deed there sprung into being upon the birth of each child of the plaintiff a vested remainder, subject to open up and let in afterborn children, and to be divested either by the death of such child without issue before the death of the plaintiff or by the plaintiff's exercising her power of appointment by will. It is needless to add that such an interest is alienable. Moore v. Littel, 41 N. Y. 66; Campbell v. Stokes, 142 N. Y. 23, 36 N. E. 811; Matter of Chapman, 133 App. Div. 337, 117 N. Y. Supp. 679; Shindler v. Robinson, 150 App. Div. 875, at page 881, 135 N. Y. Supp. 1056; New York Real Property Law, § 40. It follows, therefore, that the children of the plaintiff are persons beneficially interested in the deed of trust, and it cannot be revoked without their consent. They are also necessary parties defendant."

[7] Respondent places reliance upon certain cases as supporting the decree of the court terminating this trust. Those cases, however, deal with a dry, naked trust, or with a trust where every party in interest is before the court in joining in the application or rest expressly or by necessary implication upon the rule in Shelley's Case. But this ancient rule was of feudal origin and policy, and did deliberate and designed violence to the deed of the grantor or the will of the testator, to the end that the laws of inheritance should prevail over the wish of the grantor or testator. It arbitrarily declared that apt words which indisputably created a remainder in the heirs should be held as a "limitation." In other words, as a definition of the estate which the grantee or devisee took, and that that estate was the fee simple, the remaindermen being thus cut off and taking nothing. So obnoxious was this rule to justice that it was always subjected to rigidly strict construction, till finally in many states, as in this state, it was absolutely repealed. Civ. Code, § 779; Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 37 Pac. 1049. The effect of the repeal of this arbitrary rule is to restore to courts of equity their right to construe this language, in whatever instrument it may be found, in accordance with its plain import and intent.

A brief review of the cases relied on by plaintiff should follow the general statement concerning them which has been given above. The first of these is Eakle v. Ingram, 142 Cal. 15, 75 Pac. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 99. Mrs. Hammack had conveyed certain property to her daughter, Mrs. Eakle, in trust, to pay over the rents and profits of the property to the mother during her lifetime and after her death to pay them to her son, Henry Hammack. There was no remainder over after the termination of these equitable interests for life. Mrs. Hammack died, leaving as her heirs four children, Mrs. Eakle, Mrs. Bean, George and Henry Hammack. Mrs. Eakle resigned as trustee, and Ingram, defendant in the action, was appointed in her place. Mrs. Hammack's four children who had thus inherited the trust property, and one of whom was beneficially interested in the rents and profits of the property during his life, all joined in their petition to the court to have the trust annulled. Every party in interest was before the court. The only person whose rights could be injuriously affected by the termination of the trust was Henry Hammack, who joined in the request that it be terminated. Under this condition the court in equity terminated the trust, not under the compulsion of any rules or principles of equity, but because all the parties in interest being before it, all assenting and indeed requesting that the court do this thing, it was within its power so to do in a proper case, and it considered that to be a proper case. Manifestly this decision has no bearing upon the questions involved in the case at bar, where the gravamen of the complaint is that all of the parties in interest are not before the court and are not consenting. It is perfectly plain, for example, that if Henry Hammack had objected, the court in equity could not have destroyed his equitable life estate.

[1] 27 S. W. 551

In Dodson v. Ball, 60 Pa. 492, 100 Am. Dec. 586, the rule in Shelley's Case, prevailing in Pennsylvania, is the unquestioned foundation of the construction of the trust and of the decree given. The discussion is too long to quote, but the holding is that the words employed bring the trust within the rule in Shelley's Case; that remainders therefore are not created; that all the equitable interest is in Mrs. Dodson; and that the legal estate should therefore be executed in her. And a sufficient exemplification of this may be found in the following single sentence, where that court, after reviewing many of its own authorities, said:

"Those cases decide that a devise for life, with remainder to children and their heirs, and in some of the cases with superadded words of distribution, gave an estate of inheritance to the life tenant."

In Raffel v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 100 Md. 141, 59 Atl. 702, the plaintiff had executed a deed of trust to pay the net income of the property conveyed to her, "reserving, however, the right by a last will and testament to bequeath and devise all the property that may be a part of the trust estate" and upon failure to execute such last will the part undisposed of at the time of her death "to vest in her next of kin or heirs according to law." The case is not a simple one in its facts. The equitable questions touching the construction of the instrument are complicated by the contention of the trustor that she did not understand what she was doing; that she believed she had retained a power of revocation; that she was inexperienced in business matters and did not at all understand the effect of her deed. Discussing these considerations, sufficient in themselves to work an avoidance of the trust, the court said:

"According to the facts and preponderance of proof in the case the appellant did not intend by the deed to surrender control of her property, and that it was executed by her under a mistaken belief as to her power to revoke it. It also appears that she was misadvised as to the legal effect of the deed and her rights under it."

So far as the construction of plaintiff's deed is concerned, the rule in Shelley's Case prevailing in the state of Maryland, the court's discussion is addressed to the application of that rule, to a review of its cases based on that rule, and the determination is reached that plaintiff is the sole party in interest since—

"there are no vested rights in remainder created by the deed, nor are the rights of third parties or creditors in any way involved."

The court's conclusion upon the whole matter is that:

"A deed executed under such circumstances, * * * cannot be upheld, nor 'treated as the free, voluntary, and unbiased act of the grantor.'"

Cornwell v. Orton, 126 Mo. 360, 27 S. W. 537, was not an action to terminate a trust, but an action in ejectment brought by the heirs at law. The grantor conveyed property to a trustee on the trust that he would allow Mrs. Cornwell to occupy the property conveyed and have all the rents and profits thereof, and that the trustee would, at any and all times thereafter, at the request and direction of said Catherine Cornwell, expressed in writing, signed by her, or by her authority, bargain, sell, mortgage, convey, lease, rent, or thereupon dispose of said premises or any part thereof, and that he would at her death convey and dispose of the premises and all profits and proceeds thereof in such manner, to such person or persons, and at such time or times, as Catherine Cornwell by her last will and testament, or by any other writing signed by her or her authority, direct or appoint, and in default of such appointment then he would convey said property to James Cornwell, his heirs and assigns, James Cornwell being the husband of Catherine. The contention upon the one hand was that the deed vested a fee-simple estate in Mrs. Cornwell, and that the direction of the trustee to convey to James Cornwell, his heirs and assigns, in the event that Catherine Cornwell failed to nominate, was a nugatory provision, as it was an attempt to create a remainder upon an absolute fee. The opposing contention was that under the true construction of the deed it conveyed a life estate only to Mrs. Cornwell, with power in the trustee to convey the fee in remainder to her husband or his heirs, in the event that she failed to exercise her right to appoint. The court considered at length the terms of the trust, the absolute power of disposition given to Mrs. Cornwell over all of the property during her lifetime, the compulsion upon the trustee to do any and all things concerning the property which Mrs. Cornwell might direct, declared that the language was inadequate to create a mere life estate, and was fully adequate to the creation of a fee simple absolute, and determined that the trust was a naked trust, and that the fee simple absolute did vest in Mrs. Cornwell; wherefore the remainder attempted to be erected upon it was void. It needs no argument to show that such a conclusion could not and would not be arrived at in construing a trust such as this, where the beneficiary of the equitable life estate not only has no power of disposition of the corpus of the trust property, but no power to control its investments, no power even to dispose of the property except by a disposition taking effect upon her death under her will, which, to be a will, must of course be an instrument complying with all the terms of our statutes in regard thereto.

Sears v. Choate, 146 Mass. 395, 15 N. E. 786, 4 Am. St. Rep. 320, was an action brought by the plaintiff to terminate a trust created for his benefit by the will of his father. By this will the father devised his residuary estate to trustees, who were to pay to plaintiff at the age of 21 a certain sum of money; thereafter the sum of $4,000 annually until he was 25 years of age; thereafter $6,000 annually until he was 30 years of age; and thereafter $10,000 annually. This son was his only child and sole heir at law. There was no limitation over to any person upon the death of this son. The court points out this fact, saying:

"There is in the will no limitation over of the estate in any contingency to any other person."

The son was the sole person in interest, and was before the court, and says the court further:

"Where property is given to certain persons for their benefit, and in such a manner that no other person has or can have any interest in it, they are in effect the absolute owners of it, and * * * should have the control and disposal of it, unless some good cause appears to the contrary."

Here was a plain case where equity, not under compulsion, but in the exercise of its wise discretion, deemed it advisable to terminate a trust and did so. It presents similar features of equitable consideration to those which appeared in Estate of Yates, 149 Pac. 555, where this court refused to terminate a trust.

In Warner v. Sprigg, 62 Md. 14, the testator devised his estate to three trustees to hold for his three children, and then provided:

"After the decease of my said sons, respectively, their shares to go to their several heirs at law, as also the share of my said daughter, should she die, having made no testamentary disposal thereof."

It is held that the trust in the real estate involved no powers or duties in the trustees. By virtue of the statute of uses of St. 27 Henry VIII, ch. 10, it was therefore executed in the children, who thereby took legal estates under the will, while as to the devises to their heirs at law after their decease, under the rule in Shelley's Case, remainders were not created, but the children took the fee. In this state neither the statute of uses nor the rule in Shelley's Case forms a part of the body of our law.

In Angle v. Marshall, 55 W. Va. 671, 47 S. E. 882, a life tenant, becoming physically infirm, conveyed his life estate to a trustee to manage the farm, but always under the control and advice of the life tenant. This was all of the trust. The remaindermen—the children of the life tenant—subsequently conveyed their title, and the life tenant thereupon conveyed his interest to the same grantee. The trust deed of the life tenant declared that it was irrevocable. The court held that the trust deed was in fact nothing more than an agency or power of attorney, and that, notwithstanding that it was declared to be irrevocable, as the power was not coupled with an interest, it was always revocable. The inapplicability of this decision to the questions here calling for determination is, we think, most obvious.

This concludes the review of all the cases upon which respondent relies, and if it shall be thought that this review does not justify to the fullest extent the comments heretofore made as to their general inapplicability, it may be said in conclusion upon the matter that the question is satisfactorily and conclusively disposed of against respondent's contention by our own decision in Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 37 Pac. 1049. There was a grant of lands to the "party of the second part, for and during his natural life, and to the issue and heirs of the body of the said party of the second part." This court, declaring that under the rule in Shelley's Case this language would vest the fee simple absolute in the party of the second part, held and declared that by force of section 779 of the Civil Code that rule was abrogated and remainders were created, saying:

"By section 779 of the Civil Code the term 'heirs' is changed from a word of limitation to one of purchase, and becomes a specific designation of a class which will have the right to the property upon the termination of the life estate. Upon that event they take the property, not by descent or as successors of the plaintiff, but by virtue of the remainder which was created for them at the execution of the deed to him. This remainder, although not capable of immediate enjoyment (Civ. Code, § 690), and therefore denominated a future interest, is nevertheless an estate in the property capable of being transferred in the same manner as a present interest (Civ. Code, § 699). Counsel for appellant states in his brief that the only question on this appeal is 'whether the deed in question conveyed an estate in fee simple to plaintiff, or a life estate to plaintiff, with remainder in fee to the issue and heirs of his body;' and we therefore limit our decision to this proposition, and hold that by the instrument in question a life estate only was conveyed to the plaintiff."

The conclusiveness of this determination, its immediate and direct bearing upon the language of this trust deed, are so plain as to relieve the question from the need of further discussion.

The decree appealed from is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to deny to plaintiff the relief sought.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(171 Cal. 621)

WHITTEN et al. v. DABNEY et al. (MASON, Intervener; two cases).
(S. F. 6486, 6591.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1915. Rehearing Denied Jan. 26, 1916.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸99—SALES OF STOCK—ISSUANCE IN PAYMENT OF PROPERTY.

It was within the power of a corporation to issue all of its stock in payment of leaseholds upon oil lands transferred to it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 444–446; Dec. Dig. ⟸99.]

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸211—STOCKHOLDER'S ACTION ON BEHALF OF CORPORATION—PLEADING.

In a stockholder's action on behalf of the corporation against persons then or previously in control of the corporation, the issuance of all of the stock of the corporation to certain of the defendants in payment of leaseholds upon oil lands transferred to the corporation was not shown to be corrupt by alleging that it was the outcome of a conspiracy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 814–818, 820, 821, 823, 824; Dec. Dig. ⟸211.]

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸204—STOCKHOLDER'S ACTION ON BEHALF OF CORPORATION—RELIEF OBTAINABLE.

A stockholder's action on behalf of the corporation may be maintained only for the purpose of redressing wrongs and impositions which the corporation itself has suffered, and individual wrongs of the stockholders are not subject to redress in such an action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 783–790; Dec. Dig. ⟸204.]

4. CORPORATIONS ⟸204—STOCKHOLDER'S ACTION ON BEHALF OF CORPORATION—RELIEF OBTAINABLE.

Where persons, to whom all the stock in a corporation was issued in payment of property, falsely represented in selling such stock that it was treasury stock, and that the proceeds of sales would go into the treasury and be used in developing the corporation's business, such fraudulent representations did not constitute a wrong against the corporation, but merely gave the defrauded purchasers a right to proceed against the persons making the fraudulent representations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 783–790; Dec. Dig. ⟸204.]

5. CORPORATIONS ⟸211—STOCKHOLDER'S ACTION IN BEHALF OF CORPORATION — COMPLAINT.

In a stockholder's action for an accounting the complaint showed that the corporation agreed to issue all of the stock to D. and M. in payment for leaseholds on oil lands, but that it was not issued; that D. and M. agreed to contribute 250,000 shares to be treated as treasury stock, which offer was accepted; that afterwards when this was a fully completed gift, the agreement was amended so that stock theretofore sold was to be considered as treasury stock and the proceeds of sales paid into the treasury and other stock sufficient to make up the 250,000 shares taken over by the corporation; that the proceeds of sales were not turned over to the corporation; that D. and M. agreed to sell the stock to B. and agreed that he should have the naming of the entire directory; that M. and D. would vote for such directors as he should designate, and that he would sell the treasury stock turning the proceeds into the treasury, less 50 per cent. to be retained as commission; that thereunder B. took and retained absolute dominion and control of the corporation; that to stimulate sales of stock false dividends were declared out of proceeds of sales of stock; that D. and B. owed the corporation money and had falsified the corporation's books so that the indebtedness appeared to be paid, specific instances of this being given; that B. took commissions from sales of stock without authority from the corporation and with the knowledge of the other defendants, and that he falsely represented the financial condition and future prospects of the corporation as an aid to the plan of stock jobbing into which defendants had entered. Held, that this complaint charged sufficient facts to demand an investigation and inquiry by a court of equity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 814–818, 820, 821, 823, 824; Dec. Dig. ⟸211.]

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸37 — LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE—STOCKHOLDER'S ACTION —"LIABILITY CREATED BY LAW."

Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, requires actions for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake to be brought within 3 years, and provides that the cause of action is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake. Section 359 provides that that title does not affect actions against directors or stockholders of a corporation to recover a penalty or forfeiture or to enforce a liability created by law, but that such actions must be brought within three years after the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts upon which the penalty or forfeiture attached or the liability was created. Held, that a stockholder's action to require an accounting by persons controlling the corporation whose fraudulent acts had caused loss to the corporation, was governed by section 338, and not by section 359, since while every liability is in a sense created by law, section 359 uses the phrase "liability created by law" as referring to liabilities in the nature of penalties or forfeitures.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 182–186, 477; Dec. Dig. ⟸37.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Liability Created by Law.]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸100—COMPUTATION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION—STOCKHOLDER'S ACTION.

Notice to stockholders in a corporation of the fraudulent acts of persons in control of the corporation for such a length of time as would bar an action by them on behalf of the corporation did not bar the rights of the corporation when prosecuted by another stockholder, as limitations will not run against the corporation while it remains in control of a board of directors accused of participation in the fraud, and a stockholder suing on behalf of the corporation sues purely as a trustee, and while he has an unquestioned right to sue it is in no sense his duty to sue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 323, 480–493; Dec. Dig. ⟸100.]

8. CORPORATIONS ⟸207½, New, vol. 10 Key-No. Series—STOCKHOLDER'S ACTION IN BEHALF OF CORPORATION — COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

In a stockholder's action for an accounting against a person in control of the corporation and persons who formerly owned all of the stock, a judgment was rendered for defendants on demurrer and an appeal taken, pending which an agreement was made between plaintiffs and certain of the defendants reciting that there had been a complete settlement and adjustment between plaintiffs and such defendants as to all claims of plaintiffs against such defendants; and that it was not deemed advisable to dismiss the appeal as to such defendants at that time, but providing that if the appeal was sustained and the cause remanded the plaintiffs should amend so as to eliminate such defendants. Held, that a motion to dismiss the appeal as to such defendants based on such composition agreement was not properly before the appellate court, as a stockholder suing on behalf of the corporation sues as a trustee, and will not be permitted to take any act which has not first received the sanction of the court, and until the trial court, after scrutiny and examination, should determine that the composition agreement fully protected the corporation's rights, it could not be given the slightest efficacy.

9. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸75—MOTIONS FOR SUBSTITUTION OF ATTORNEYS.

In a stockholder's action on behalf of the corporation, a motion for the substitution of other attorneys in place of those appearing for the corporation could better be made and determined in the trial court than in an appellate court, and where the judgment must be reversed a motion for such substitution would be denied without prejudice to its renewal in the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 110–119; Dec. Dig. ⟸75.]

10. COSTS ⟸98 — PERSONS LIABLE — INTERVENERS.

Where, in a stockholder's action on behalf of the corporation, a stockholder other than the original plaintiff petitioned for and obtained leave to intervene and filed a complaint in intervention, the trial court's discretionary power with respect to costs did not authorize it to award against him any costs which accrued before he connected himself with the litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 383; Dec. Dig. ⟸98.]

Department 2. Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; William S. Wells, Judge.

Action by D. D. Whitten and others against Joseph B. Dabney and others, in which Frederick E. Mason intervened. From a judgment for defendants on demurrer, plaintiffs and intervener separately appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, and Gibson & Woolner, of Oakland, for appellants. W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, and W. H. H. Hart, of San Francisco, for respondents. John Ralph Wilson, of San Francisco (Walter G. Bonta, of San Francisco, of counsel), for intervener.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiffs, as stockholders of the Dabney Oil Company, sued defendants Dabney, Miley, and Butler, alleging certain fraudulent impositions practiced by them upon the Dabney Oil Company, resulting in great loss to that company. They asked for an accounting on behalf of the company against these defendants, and a recovery into the treasury of the company of the amount of which it might be determined that the company had been defrauded. A conspiracy to commit these asserted fraudulent acts is charged against the three men. Their control of the corporation through its board of directors and the refusal of the corporation upon demand to prosecute this action is also set forth. Frederick E. Mason, another stockholder, petitioned for leave to intervene, and permission was granted. His complaint in intervention set up the same wrongs pleaded by plaintiffs and joined with them in their prayer for relief.

A general demurrer was interposed to these complaints and was sustained. So also was a demurrer raising the bar of the statute of limitations to the prosecution of the action. From the judgment which followed, plaintiffs appeal in San Francisco No. 6486. From that same judgment the intervener appeals in San Francisco No. 6591. Both of these appeals present the same asserted error of the court in sustaining the general demurrer for absence of facts. Both, too, present a like question upon the bar of the statute of limitations. In both also is involved the question of the right of defendants Dabney and Miley to be dismissed from the action by virtue of a composition agreement entered into between them and the plaintiffs, to which composition agreement the intervener was not a party. And, finally, the intervener's appeal (San Francisco No. 6591) presents a minor question of the imposition upon him of certain costs growing out of the award of the judgment in favor of the defendants.

[1-3] Saving in the particulars which may be pointed out the complaints of plaintiffs and intervener may be treated as a single pleading and spoken of as the complaint. The complaint charged that in January, 1901, the defendants "entered into a conspiracy to defraud the future stockholders of the Dabney Oil Company." In furtherance of this conspiracy they caused the Dabney Oil Company to be incorporated, and Dabney and Butler conveyed to it certain leaseholds upon oil lands which they owned and which were of the value of $50,000, the Dabney Oil Company issuing and transferring to Dabney and Miley for these leaseholds all of the stock of the corporation, the directors agreeing to issue to Dabney and Miley, or to such persons as they should direct, this stock as fully paid up and nonassessable stock of the corporation. It was quite within the power of the corporation for it to issue all of its stock in payment of the property which it received. Turner v. Markham et al., 155 Cal. 562, 102 Pac. 272; Garretson v. Crude Oil Co., 146 Cal. 184, 79 Pac. 838; Lum v. A. W. & V. Co., 165 Cal. 657, 133 Pac. 303, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 816. Up to this point, therefore, no illegal or fraudulent conduct is shown, and the acts of these defendants, so far innocent in themselves, were not made corrupt by designating them as the outcome of a "conspiracy." And we here pause to point out that there seems to have been some confusion in the mind of the pleader as to the wrongs which he could right in this form of action. Thus he charges the creation of the conspiracy as being designed "to defraud the future stockholders of the Dabney Oil Company." But no one of the individual wrongs of any of the stockholders is subject to redress in this action. Plaintiffs are allowed to prosecute this action by virtue of their stockholder's relationship to the corporation, but only for the purpose of redressing wrongs and impositions which the corporation itself had suffered. Turner v. Markham et al., supra. These stockholders, as plaintiffs, therefore occupied a strict fiduciary relationship to the corporation whose interests they were representing. Their position may not inaptly be compared to that of a guardian ad litem, to which consideration we will later return.

[4, 5] Proceeding now with the complaint and summarizing its allegations of wrongdoing on the part of these defendants, those allegations amount to this: That Dabney and Miley, having thus acquired title to all the stock of the corporation, entered into a secret agreement with Butler, by which upon terms Butler should purchase from them this stock, and for the purpose of inducing the public to purchase this stock they represented to intending purchasers that the stock was treasury stock and that the proceeds from the sale of it would go into the treasury of the company and be used in developing the oil mining industry of the corporation. Again we must pause to say that these fraudulent representations, however injuriously they may have wronged the purchasers of stock, do not constitute a wrong against the corporation, which does not appear at this time to have had any treasury stock at all. The right of the individual stockholder thus defrauded would manifestly be simply the right to proceed against the wrongdoers who had made these fraudulent representations to his injury. However it does appear that in furtherance of the design of these defendants to unload their stock upon the market as treasury stock they did commit certain flagrant wrongs upon the corporation itself. Thus it is made to appear that the stock was not issued to Dabney and Miley, but remained in the corporation stock book subject to issue upon their demand. In August, 1901, they agreed in writing to contribute of their holdings 250,000 shares of the stock, to be designated and treated as treasury stock, and this offer was accepted by the corporation. In 1902 these defendants procured the corporation to accept an amendment to the terms of this gift, which at the time was a fully completed gift. By this amended agreement all of the stock sold prior to March, 1902, was to be considered treasury stock, and the proceeds thereof, amounting to $76,000, accruing from the sale of 99,000 shares was to be paid into the treasury of the corporation, and additional stock of Dabney and Miley (in indicated proportions) was to be taken over by the corporation as treasury stock sufficient to make up the 250,000 shares. It is charged that this was but a colorable transaction, and that Dabney, Butler, and Miley failed and refused ever to turn over to or credit the corporation with this $76,000. In March, 1902, Dabney, Miley, and Butler entered into a secret agreement whereby Butler was to buy the stock of Dabney and Miley, making payments at specified times in specified amounts. It was agreed that Butler "shall have the naming of the entire directory of the company," and Miley and Dabney agreed that they would always vote their remaining stock "for such persons as directors as shall be designated by" Butler. And finally this agreement provided that Butler would from time to time sell the treasury stock and turn into the treasury of the company the proceeds thereof, "less 50 per cent. which he shall retain as commission." Under these agreements Butler took the active management and control of the corporation in 1902, and continued in such absolute possession, dominion, and control through dummy directors up to and including the date of the commencement of the action. To stimulate the sale of the stock false dividends were declared and paid, not out of the earnings of the corporation, but out of the proceeds of the sale of the stock. Further it is charged that Dabney and Butler owed the corporation large sums of money; that they never paid these indebtednesses, but caused false credits to be entered and appear on the books of the corporation, whereby these indebtednesses were made to appear to have been paid and canceled. Specific instances of this are given. Further, it charged that Butler took commissions to the amount of $38,000 from the sale of the treasury stock of the corporation without authority from the corporation; that these acts of wrongdoing and misappropriation of funds were either known to the defendants, or were done by Butler in furtherance of the conspiracy to unload their stock, in which the three defendants had joined. Finally it is charged that from time to time Butler, for the purpose of stilling the alarms of the stockholders and lulling them into repose, put forth false representations as to the financial condition and future prospects of the corporation, and specifically in 1908, sent out a circular report to the stockholders in which he declared that he had never "received one cent in salary or one cent in cash or stock as dividends upon my holdings, or one cent of advantage from the company in any way, either directly or indirectly. * * * It is true I have sometimes been forced to sell stock, but I have never sold any except to procure money to loan to the company, or to use directly in the promotion of its interests." The falsity of these representations is asserted, and it is charged that they were made in aid of the iniquitous plan of stock jobbing into which the defendants had entered.

This sufficiently indicates the gravamen of the charges of wrongdoing as they affect the corporation, and it certainly needs no discussion to establish that they charge sufficient facts to demand an investigation and inquiry by the court of equity, to which the appeal has been made. So true and so apparent do we think this is that we conclude that the court sustained the demurrer upon the ground that the statute of limitations was well pleaded, and to this proposition we next come.

Plaintiffs allege that in 1905 one Gilbane, a stockholder, "and a few other stockholders, all residents of Providence, Rhode Island," attempted to secure full knowledge of the condition of the affairs of the corporation. They employed an accountant to examine the books of the corporation. He was allowed to examine only the books which were turned over to him by Butler as the books of account. They were not the original books, but contained only rewritten portions of the books. In 1906 this accountant made an incomplete report to these stockholders and stated these facts, and, further, that it appeared from his investigation that Dabney and Butler were indebted to the corporation, but that Butler informed him that portions of the rewritten books were erroneous in this particular, and that the original books and a correct accounting would show the contrary, namely, that the corporation was indebted to Butler and Dabney. Butler told him the books were in California, and Gilbane made a trip to California to obtain them. Butler informed him that the books were in the possession of Dabney, and Gilbane was unable to find Dabney in California. On 1907 Gilbane again came to California to find the books, and was again unable to locate Dabney or the books. Returning to New York, where Butler was located, he learned that Butler was in Europe, and was unable to do anything further before 1908. In 1908 Dabney was in Europe and the books could not be located. Butler continued to represent that the original books would show the true state of the accounts of himself and Dabney with the corporation, and that the corporation was largely indebted to them. Throughout 1908 Gilbane's efforts to secure further information were fruitless. In 1909 he came again to California and then saw Miley and Dabney, and was told by them that none of the money obtained from the sale of any of the stock of the corporation belonged to the corporation, but that all of the stock of the corporation and all of the proceeds of the sales thereof were the property of Dabney, Miley, and Butler. The agreements hereinbefore referred to between Dabney, Miley, and Butler were then for the first time exhibited, and their existence for the first time made known to Gilbane. Up to this time the existence of these agreements had been sedulously concealed from Gilbane and all the other stockholders. Shortly after this, in 1910, Gilbane disclosed to these plaintiffs the information which he had thus acquired, including his knowledge that dividends had been paid out of the capital of the corporation. Prior to this information thus received in 1910, the plaintiffs had no knowledge or suspicion of the existence of any of these facts, or of any such wrongdoing upon the part of the defendants. These plaintiffs were not amongst nor of those stockholders who induced Gilbane to make these investigations, but promptly after receiving this information from Gilbane they instituted this action, after demand upon and the refusal of the corporation so to do.

[6] Touching the question of which provision of the statute of limitations is applicable to this action, discussion is indulged in. Unquestionably the right to prosecute this action is governed by the provisions of section 338, subdivision 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is not the action contemplated by section 359 of the same Code "to enforce a liability created by law." True it is that, in a sense, every liability enforceable by action is one created by law. But section 359, when it uses that phrase, is dealing with liabilities in the nature of penalties or forfeitures (noscitur a sociis) as is clearly disclosed by a reading of the section. This same construction was put upon the language of a like statute by the court of New York in Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 99 N. Y. 190, 1 N. E. 663.

Respondents argue that from this pleading it is shown that the stockholders' alarms were excited; that they instituted inquiry and were thus put upon notice in 1906, and that this action not having been commenced until 1910 they have waited too long, and relief must be denied. This contention demands again a brief consideration of this peculiar character of action.

[7] A stockholder who institutes it sues purely as a trustee to redress corporate injuries. He has the unquestioned right to sue, but it is in no sense his duty to sue. An individual stockholder may be put upon notice that his corporation has been defrauded. Indeed, complete disclosure of these facts may be made to him. He gives consideration to the time, trouble, and expense of the litigation and the loss in which he would be involved if he failed to prevail, and decides that he will not begin the suit. Some years afterwards another stockholder for the first time gains knowledge of these same facts and institutes the action. It is susceptible of demonstration that the first stockholder knew of all these matters, and that as to him this right of action may be barred. Is this also a bar to the prosecution of the same action by another stockholder who has acted promptly upon learning of the fraud? Clearly this cannot be so. So long as the corporation itself remains under disability and is powerless to act by virtue of the fact that its control is in the hands of a board of directors accused of participation in the frauds, the statute of limitations does not run against it. It is like the minority of an infant. His rights are not lost until he, after attaining majority, acquiesces for the prescribed time, and by acquiesence affirms the acts done against his interests. So that even if it be said (and in saying it we do not decide it) that such a complaint as this shows that the plaintiff stockholder has waited too long before commencing his action, and that therefore the plea of the statute of limitations must be sustained against his action, this does not operate as a bar to the corporate rights when prosecuted by another stockholder. Otherwise we would have the anomalous and absurd condition presented of a complacent stockholder waiting for three years, pleading facts showing that his right of action was thus barred and thus sweeping away every right of the corporation by the judgment which would have to follow. Whatever, therefore, may have been the rights of the Providence stockholders to prosecute this action after notice, the right of these plaintiffs is not barred under their allegation that they first acquired notice and knowledge of the efforts of the Providence stockholders in 1910.

[8] A motion is made by defendants Dabney and Miley to dismiss the appeals as to them. This motion is based upon an unusual agreement entered into between the plaintiffs and Dabney and Miley after the rendition of judgment in the trial court and appeal taken to this court. It is declared that under the circumstances it is deemed advisable that the appeals from the judgment in favor of Miley and Dabney should not be dismissed at the present time, but plaintiffs stipulate that if the appeal is sustained and the cause remanded to the trial court "that as soon as the said cause shall be so returned to said superior court the plaintiffs shall cause their said complaint to be so amended as to eliminate any cause of action against the said Dabney and said Miley, and that the said plaintiffs will not ask said court or any court for any judgment against the said Dabney and Miley or either of them." All this is based upon a recital that "there has been a complete settlement and adjustment between the plaintiffs and defendants Miley and Dabney as to all claims of the plaintiffs against said Miley and Dabney as set forth in the plaintiffs' complaint." Herein is the extraordinary misconception of the nature of this litigation and of the rights of the plaintiffs under it, to which we have heretofore had occasion to advert in discussing their complaint. And here again it becomes necessary to call attention to the fact that these plaintiffs have no personal wrongs for which they are entitled to seek redress in this action.

"The stockholder does not bring such a suit because his rights have been directly violated, or because the cause of action is his or because he is entitled to the relief sought. He is permitted to sue in this manner simply in order to set in motion the judicial machinery of the court." 3 Pom. Eq. (3d Ed.) § 1095.

And yet we find in this agreement the plaintiffs declaring that there has been a complete settlement and adjustment "of all claims of the plaintiffs against Miley and Dabney as set forth in plaintiffs' complaint." What is the exact situation of a plaintiff in such an action? He is a trustee pure and simple, seeking in the name of another a recovery for wrongs that have been committed against that other. His position in the litigation is in every legal sense the precise equivalent of that of the guardian ad litem. The guardian ad litem stands as the representative of some person incompetent to sue or be sued directly. He is appointed by the court to represent that incompetent's interests; to prosecute or defend with the highest diligence and good faith. The stockholder beginning this action does not even occupy the position of a creditor suing on his own account and on account of his fellow creditors. In the latter case the creditor plaintiff has a direct personal interest in the litigation, and within limitations not here necessary to discuss, may deal with that litigation as his own. But the stockholder acts in purely a representative capacity. He is a guardian ad litem by virtue of statutory authority, empowered to do precisely what a guardian ad litem appointed by a court may do. He has gone into equity seeking redress for a corporation under disability to obtain relief itself, precisely as the guardian ad litem goes into court to obtain like redress for a client under disability by reason of incompetency or nonage. The principles governing the conduct of a guardian ad litem are in full strictness applicable to the conduct of such a plaintiff stockholder. Not only should a plaintiff in such a fiduciary capacity be willing to take no act that did not first receive the sanction of the court of equity to which he has appealed, but, more than this, he is not permitted to take any act without such sanction. Waterman v. Lawrence, 19 Cal. 210, 79 Am. Dec. 212. Where an action is prosecuted by a guardian ad litem, the infant is the real party. Bowers v. Kanaday, 94 Ga. 209, 21 S. E. 458. And the guardian ad litem cannot even be considered a party to the cause. Thomason v. Gray, 84 Ala. 559, 4 South. 394; Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 36 Md. 619; Tate v. Mott, 96 N. C. 19, 2 S. E. 176; Duffy v. Pinard, 41 Vt. 297; Ingram v. Little, 11 Queen's Bench Div. 251. And what are the principles governing the conduct of a guardian ad litem? It is the right and duty of the court to protect the interests of the incompetent represented by the guardian ad litem and to exercise supervision over the conduct of that guardian. Hutchinson v. McLaughlin, 15 Colo. 492, 25 Pac. 317, 11 L. R. A. 287; Lloyd v. Kirkwood, 112 Ill. 329; Hauly v. Crozier, 14 La. Ann. 304; Revely v. Skinner, 33 Mo. 98; Newland v. Gentry, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 666;

Alling v. Alling, 52 N. J. Eq. 92, 27 Atl. 655; Moore v. Moore, 4 Sand. Ch. (N. Y.) 38; Richards v. Tenn., etc., R. R. Co., 106 Ga. 614, 33 S. E. 193, 45 L. R. A. 712.

"The court must be satisfied that the incompetent has had a full opportunity to have his day in court by a proper and suitable guardian, and should see, notwithstanding any admission of facts even by such guardian that his rights are not sacrificed." 22 Cyc. 632; Austin v. Charlestown Female Sem., 8 Metc. (Mass.) 198, 41 Am. Dec. 497; Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 130, 37 Am. Dec. 299; U. S. Bank v. Ritchie, 8 Pet. 128, 8 L. Ed. 890.

The court and not the guardian ad litem has the power to compromise the rights of minors under suitable circumstances. So far, therefore, as this motion to dismiss is concerned it is not even properly before this court for consideration. It is based upon the composition agreement above adverted to. That composition agreement is cognizable by the trial court alone, and will not be given the slightest efficacy until, after scrutiny and examination, it shall be determined by that court that the corporation's righs are fully protected.

It follows that the motions of defendants Dabney and Miley to dismiss the appeals so far as they are concerned should be and are denied, and they will address to the trial court whatever application for relief they may think they are entitled to under their agreement with plaintiffs.

[9] A motion has been made to substitute other attorneys for the attorney of record of the corporation. Opposing affidavits are filed upon the motion. It has already been said that the judgment of the trial court must be reversed. This reversal opens the case to the full equity jurisdiction of the trial court. The motion for substitution can the better be made and determined there, and is here denied without prejudice to its renewal in the trial court. The same disposition is made of the motion to substitute the corporation in the place of the plaintiffs and intervener. This motion may be renewed before the trial court, which will grant or decline to grant it, with due regard to the direct rights of the corporation itself and to the indirect rights of its stockholders.

[10] Finally, intervener appellant complains of an award made against him for costs arising before he was connected with the litigation. It was unquestionably erroneous for the court to have awarded costs against the intervener, which costs accrued before he connected himself with the litigation. Railsback v. Patton, 34 Neb. 492, 52 N. W. 277. The discretionary power of the court in the matter of these costs does not go to the extent here exercised.

The judgments appealed from are therefore reversed, the motions denied, and the causes remanded.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

171 Cal. 466

PEOPLE v. ROBBINS. (Cr. 1908.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸511 — ACCOMPLICES — CORROBORATION.

Under Pen. Code, § 1111, as amended by St. 1911, p. 484, declaring a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice unless he is corroborated by other evidence connecting the defendant with the commission of the offense, it is necessary that the evidence of corroboration shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, and it is insufficient if it merely casts suspicion on accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1128–1137; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 511.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸511 — OFFENSES — EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION.

In a prosecution for the crime against nature, evidence of corroboration of accused's accomplice held insufficient to warrant conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1128–1137; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 511.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸507 — OFFENSES — "ACCOMPLICE."

Where a boy 16 years of age accompanied accused to a room without objection and made no protest to accused committing the crime against nature, making no complaint until questioned by others, the boy was an accomplice, and his testimony must be corroborated before conviction can be had.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1082–1096; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 507.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accomplice.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸511 — ACCOMPLICES — CORROBORATION—STATUTES.

Amendment of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 484), whereby Pen. Code, § 1111, formerly declaring that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself and "without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice" tends to connect defendant with the crime, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense, was changed so as to omit the expression "which in itself and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice" did not change the meaning of the statute, and will not allow a conviction upon accomplice testimony, where the accomplice is corroborated only as to statements concerning acts having no essential connection with the crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1128–1137; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 511.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸511—ACCOMPLICES—OFFENSES.

Proofs of mere suspicious circumstances and of an opportunity to commit the crime will not warrant conviction on the testimony of the accomplice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1128–1137; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 511.]

Lawlor, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Samuel P. Robbins was convicted of the crime against nature, and from the judgment and an order denying new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

George A. Knight, J. F. Sheehan, and Knight & Heggerty, all of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and C. M. Fickert and Alexander O'Grady, both of San Francisco, for the People.

MELVIN, J. The District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District filed an opinion in this case, but this court ordered the transfer of the action, to the end that we might further consider the two questions: (1) Was the complaining witness an accomplice? and (2) If an accomplice was he sufficiently corroborated?

The opinion of the learned District Court of Appeal was as follows:

"The defendant in this case was informed against and convicted of the infamous crime against nature, and thereafter sentenced to 5 years in the state prison. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

"The only evidence adduced upon the entire case as to the actual commission of the offense is to be found in the testimony of the complaining witness, a boy of about the age of 16 years. His testimony reduced to narrative form is as follows: 'I live at 1638 Baker street and go to school at the Emerson primary school. On September 15, 1913, I was living there with my father, mother, grandmother, uncle, and the landlady of the house, Mrs. Nute, who is the housekeeper. I know and for 5 years past have known the defendant, Samuel P. Robbins. On September 15, 1913, he came to my house at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. I heard from him before he came to the house. When I came home to lunch at about 12 o'clock he phoned and asked me if he could come up and see me at the house, and I said, "Yes," and he said he would be up about 3 o'clock. I saw him at 3 o'clock in the hall of my residence. I said, "How do you do?" He replied, saying, "How do you do?" We went into the dining room and played dominoes for 25 minutes. Then we went down into the yard and played a game of tennis ball for 25 minutes. After that we went upstairs to the bathroom because he wanted to wash his hands. We entered the bathroom together, as he had asked me to go there with him. He locked the bathroom door. It locks with a bolt and he put a handkerchief over the lock. He pulled down the shade on the window, not all the way but only about halfway down. The glass on the window is lumpy glass that you can't see through, that is, it is frosted. Robbins let the water run in the faucet in the washbasin.'

"Further details of the testimony of this witness as to what occurred need not be narrated here. It will suffice to say that his testimony was to the effect that the crime alleged was perpetrated upon him in the bathroom; and that while in the consummation of the act charged a noise was heard at the bathroom door, and the defendant thereupon said he must stop because he was afraid of being caught. Further testifying, the witness said in substance that after he heard the noise at the door Robbins, the defendant, washed his hands with the flowing water in the basin and rearranged his clothes, unlocked the door, and, after saying good-bye, left the house.

"Mrs. Nute, the landlady and housekeeper above referred to, was called as a witness for the prosecution, her testimony, reduced to narrative form, being as follows: 'I live with the father and mother of the complaining witness. I have lived there 2 years and 4 months as a housekeeper. The boy is 16 years old. I was living with them on September 15, 1913. I do not know the defendant, Robbins, personally, but have seen him at the house of the father and mother of the boy. I saw him there on September 15, 1913. He was coming through the hall going to the dining room. He remained in the dining room 20 or 25 minutes with the boy; then he went down in the back yard with the boy and played ball with him about 20 or 25 minutes. The defendant, Robbins, then came up and went into the bathroom with the boy. They both entered and the door was closed. I was at my bedroom door and I saw Robbins and the boy enter the bathroom. I hear the door closed and bolt thrown back. I heard the bolt—a patent bolt—click. I went to my room, which looks out at the bathroom window in the light well right off of the hall the same as the bathroom. The bathroom window overlooks the light well, and so does mine. The bathroom window glass is frosted and cannot be looked through. I went into my room and looked through the lace curtains. It was kind of dark in my room. I looked over at the bathroom window. It was up about eight inches. It was open. I saw Robbins go up to the window and look over towards my room and pull the window down. I saw Robbins hauling on the window. My window is about eight feet from the bathroom window. I saw the window shade drawn down. I do not know who did it. Then I went out of my room to the bathroom door and heard the water running. It had been running quite a while before I got there. I was going to stand at the door and listen, but my hand accidentally knocked against it and made a noise. I heard Mr. Robbins talking to Sidney, but could not hear what he said. I stepped back to the kitchen, stayed there about five minutes, and saw Sidney and Mr. Robbins come out. I did not see Robbins after that. I went into my room and closed the door. There is no keyhole in the bathroom, simply a bolt. If there had been I would have peeked through it like any other woman.'

"The primary point presented upon this appeal is that the evidence shows that the complaining witness was an accomplice in the crime charged, and that the defendant was convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

[1, 2] "It is conceded, as indeed it must be, that the complaining witness was an accomplice; and that the verdict and judgment cannot be sustained, unless there is in the record evidence sufficient to corroborate the story told by the complaining witness. Section 1111 of the Penal Code explicitly declares that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof. It will thus be seen that the statute imperatively makes corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice an essential prerequisite to the conviction of a defendant where the crime charged rests primarily and solely upon the testimony of an accomplice; and it is apparent, therefore, that the court has no control over the subject except to apply the statute. The court has no discretion in the matter, but is bound to apply the statute indiscriminately to all cases wherever an accomplice appears as a witness, and the state's case depends solely upon his uncorroborated testimony.

"We are of the opinion that the circumstances attending and preceding the entrance of the boy and the defendant into the bathroom, as narrated by the witness Mrs. Nute, are not sufficient singly or all together to constitute that corroboration which, in the eyes of the law, will support a verdict founded primarily upon the testimony of an accomplice. The rule in this behalf is well and tersely stated in 12 Cyc., at page 456, where it is said: 'It is necessary that the evidence corroborating an accomplice shall connect or tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Corroborative evidence is insufficient where it merely casts a grave suspicion upon the accused. It must not only show the commission of the offense and the circumstances thereof, but must also implicate the accused in it. * * * But where the circumstances, when proved, taken separately or collectively, are consistent with the innocence of the accused, there is no corroboration, and a verdict of conviction thereon will be set aside.'

"In the present case the entrance of the defendant and the boy into the bathroom after having played a game of tennis was neither unnatural nor suspicious; and the fact that the bathroom door was closed and locked, and the window pulled down and the shade partly drawn, would not ordinarily be considered as preparation for an evil purpose. The turning on of the water in the bathroom was but natural and to be expected under the circumstances; and the fact that the conversation of the boy and the defendant could not be heard outside the bathroom door is of no particular significance. Necessarily a conversation carried on behind a closed door is more or less muffled. None of these facts and circumstances is inconsistent with the innocence of the defendant. On the contrary, they are all consistent with an innocent purpose. People entering a bathroom for the usual and ordinary purposes of such a room as a matter of course lock the door and draw the blinds and use the water at hand. Surely if all of these circumstances be consistent with an innocent purpose, it cannot be said that any of them tended to connect and implicate the defendant with the commission of the offense charged. The fact that the defendant had an opportunity to commit it is of no particular significance as far as corroboration is concerned. Of course the opportunity of the defendant to commit the particular crime for which he is on trial may always be shown in connection with other facts to establish his guilt; but we know of no rule which holds that mere opportunity to commit a crime is an incriminating corroborating circumstance. Following the rule that evidence offered for the purpose of corroborating an accomplice must tend to connect the accused with the offense charged, it has been held that there must be corroborating testimony by some witness other than the accomplice as to some act or fact which is an element of the offense charged. Cooper v. State, 90 Ala. 641, 8 South. 821. Therefore the fact that the witness Mrs. Nute either intentionally or inadvertently struck the door of the bathroom while she was endeavoring to hear the conversation of the boy and the defendant, was a comparatively unimportant fact which, in our opinion, had no tendency to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. At its best it did no more than confirm the boy's testimony that he heard a noise at the door, but it does not tend to show that the defendant was engaged in a criminal act. The fact that the suspicion of this witness was aroused because she saw the defendant and the boy enter the bathroom, is not in our judgment corroborative evidence in any sense of the term, The most that can be said in favor of the prosecution upon this phase of the case is that for some reason not explained or detailed the suspicions of the witness were aroused; but it is the rule, and the well-settled rule, in this state, that the corroborative evidence required to convict the defendant in addition to that of the accomplice is not sufficient if it merely tends to raise a suspicion of the guilt of the accused. This is all that the circumstances of the present case did in the mind of the witness Mrs. Nute; and we are satisfied that those circumstances as narrated by her upon the witness stand could do no more than raise a suspicion in the minds of the jury as to the guilt of the defendant. Mere suspicion, as has been shown, will not suffice as corroborative evidence; and where the evidence relied upon as corroborative of the accomplice is, as in the present case, only such as to raise a suspicion of the guilt of the defendant, the verdict must be set aside."

[3] We are in accord with the foregoing discussion and with the conclusions reached. The learned Attorney General insists that he did not "concede" in the hearing before the District Court of Appeal that the boy was an accomplice. Be that as it may, he has made the point here that, so far as the testimony reported in the transcript shows, it does not necessarily appear that there was any consent to the defendant's acts, but merely passive submission. The obvious answer to this is the simple one that the burden of proof is upon the prosecution. If the alleged victim of defendant's depravity was not sui juris, that was something for the prosecution to prove. People v. Dong Pok Yip, 164 Cal. 143, 127 Pac. 1031, is cited as authority upon this question. In that case the child upon whom the assault was committed was a little fellow 9 years of age, and not of ordinary intelligence for his years, and it was held that his mere failure to repulse the assault of the defendant was not in law a consent. In this case the facts were different. The boy was 16 years of age, and while it appears that he had only attended school for a short time, there was nothing in the evidence to indicate that he was not possessed of the average mentality of lads of his age. According to his own testimony he submitted to a removal of a part of his clothing by the defendant, and even obeyed the suggestion of the latter that he assume a posture convenient for the perpetration of the crime. He made no outcry and no complaint until Mrs. Nute interrogated him, on the following day, with reference to the occurrences in the bathroom. His conduct as described by himself was within the meaning of the definition of an accomplice in People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 448, 119 Pac. 907, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704, where Mr. Justice Henshaw, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Where the act requires the co-operation of two persons, and their co-operation is criminally corrupt, the relationship of accomplice is at once established, as in adultery and fornication."

That this case was tried upon the theory that the boy was an accomplice there can be no doubt. The learned judge of the superior court properly instructed the jury upon the necessary corroboration of an accomplice which would justify a conviction. He gave no definition of the term "accomplice," and left to the jury the decision of no question of fact upon which, under the law, it would follow that the complaining witness was or was not an accomplice. We are convinced that this course was the proper one, because taking the testimony of the complaining witness as true, he was undoubtedly an accomplice.

[4] Was the boy sufficiently corroborated? Before discussing this question we will dispose of the contention of the learned Attorney General that the rule with reference to corroboration has been changed by the amendment of 1911 to section 1111 of the Penal Code. Before its amendment that statute was as follows:

"A conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient, if it merely shows the commission of the offense, or the circumstances thereof."

In the year 1911 the section was amended and its language is now as quoted below:

"A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless he be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof." Stats. 1911, p. 484.

It is argued that this section, as amended, may be paraphrased as follows:

"A conviction can now be had on the testimony of an accomplice if he is corroborated by other evidence, which not necessarily in itself, but with the aid of the testimony of an accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense."

This is only another way of interpreting the section to mean that a conviction may be had upon the testimony of an accomplice if the prosecution can produce any corroboration of any of his statements even if the acts described by him and so corroborated have no essential connection with any crime and may be as consistent with innocence as with guilt. It is not our duty to speculate with reference to the intention of the Legislature in passing any given law, but if we should hazard a guess upon that subject we should say that probably the language contained in the section in its earlier form, but omitted from the later enactment, was thought by the legislators to have a tendency to mislead jurors into the false belief that a complete case for the prosecution must be established without reference to the testimony of the accomplice. Whatever may have been the purpose in modifying the phraseology of the section, we cannot see that its meaning has been changed at all. In discussing the reasons for the rule, Mr. Justice Henshaw, in the opinion in the case of People v. Coffey, supra, said (161 Cal. 438, 119 Pac. 901, 39 L. R. A. [N. S.] 704):

"In this state, the rule of positive law since the year 1851 is as has been declared in section 1111 of the Penal Code. Time has not changed the value of such evidence, and succeeding Legislatures have retained the rule, the amendment to the section in 1911 not materially affecting it."

It may be that the quoted language was not necessary to the decision as the old form of the law was under discussion, but the reason for retaining the rule was before the court, and it was interesting as well as valuable to note that no material change had been made in the statute in so many years. Whether the language just quoted from the opinion in the Coffey Case was there obiter or not, it expressed the truth, and we adopt it in this opinion.

The counsel for the state specifies nine reasons and an incidental matter which, it is asserted, amount to corroboration of the lad's testimony. We quote them from one of the briefs as follows:

"(1) Defendant meeting the boy at the latter's house.

"(2) The preliminary games in the dining room and back yard.

"(3) Going into the bathroom with the boy.

"(4) Then the closing of the door.

"(5) Then the locking of the door.

"(6) Then the additional precaution of Robbins pulling the window down.

"(7) The further act of pulling down the curtain although the glass in the window was frosted.

"(8) The noise at the door made by Mrs. Nute as her hand accidentally struck the same while listening.

"(9) The parties emerging together, not immediately, but about five minutes after.

"Incidentally, and in addition to the above, the defendant testified he was 56 years of age, and Mrs. Nute testified that the boy was 16 years old, so the disparity of the ages of the defendant and the boy made this quite an unusual friendship, and therefore is a circumstance to be considered. It would not be so unusual were they related."

We have examined these alleged corroborations in detail, and we cannot see how, singly or in combination, they tend to corroborate the boy's testimony except that they show opportunity of the defendant to have committed such a crime as the boy described. That is not enough. It was in evidence, without contradiction, that the defendant was on terms of friendship with the boy's father and mother, and that he had frequently visited the house. He went there openly and played with the boy innocent games in the dining room and out of doors. What was more natural than the going of the man and the boy to the bathroom to wash their hands after their game in the yard? The closing and locking of the door were not indices of guilt, even if it be conceded that defendant and not the boy performed those acts. There was no corroboration on the part of any one of the boy's statements that Robbins did these things. Mrs. Nute simply "heard the lock click." But even if we regard that as corroboration of the boy's statement, there was nothing sinister in the closing and locking of the door. Nothing could be more natural than these simple precautions on the part of the man or the boy to prevent any one from entering the room while they were removing the dirt from their hands and faces. There was nothing more than enough, perhaps, to create a mere suspicion in the fact, if it were a fact, that Robbins made some adjustment of the window, but there is only partial corroboration of the boy's testimony on that matter by Mrs. Nute. The complaining witness did not say a word about the lowering of the window. He said that defendant pulled the shade halfway down, although the glass was frosted. Mrs. Nute said that she saw Mr. Robbins go to the open window and pull the window down. This she observed from the window of her room across the light well. She said that she saw the shade pulled down. Of course, she could not tell by whom. It is true that the boy and Mrs. Nute agree about the noise at the door, but that corroboration is absolutely unimportant. If the two persons in the bathroom were engaged in perfectly innocent occupations, the noise made by the woman at the door would have been heard by them. The length of time occupied by the man and boy in the bathroom was not an unusual period for the washing of their hands and faces. It by no means indicated the commission of a crime. Nor was the friendship of the middle-aged man for the lad anything to cast suspicion upon the former. In these days of the "big brother movement" thousands of men throughout the country are systematically cultivating the friendship of boys, to the end that the influence of mature thought and association with men may aid in the development of the best qualities of the children. Viewed in the light most damaging to the defendant, the only thing which may be said of the corroborated circumstances related in the boy's testimony is that they might arouse suspicion of wrongdoing on the part of Mr. Robbins. But men are not and should not be convicted of degrading crimes upon mere suspicion plus the story of an accomplice. The useless pulling down of the shade over the frosted window is no more a suspicious circumstance against defendant than is the statement of the boy against the verity of his story when he says that Mr. Robbins covered with a handkerchief the lock of the door which Mrs. Nute says had no keyhole. On cross-examination the boy averred that there was a keyhole in the door. Mrs. Nute most emphatically testified that there was none, and added that if there had been she would have looked through it "like any other woman." We do not mean to insinuate that either the boy or the woman deliberately told an untruth about the keyhole. We simply seek to emphasize the danger of convicting a defendant on "suspicious circumstances."

[5] The proofs of mere suspicious circumstances and of opportunity to commit a crime are never sufficient to justify a conviction upon the testimony of an accomplice. People v. Thompson, 50 Cal. 480; People v. Smith, 98 Cal. 218, 33 Pac. 58; People v. Koening, 99 Cal. 576, 34 Pac. 238; State v. Willis, 9 Iowa, 582; People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 725, 73 Pac. 609.

It follows that the judgment and order must be and they are reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

LAWLOR, J. I dissent. Apart from the question of the legal characteristics of an accomplice, which I do not find necessary to discuss, I am satisfied that the judgment of the lower court should be upheld upon two grounds: First, that under the evidence the jury could have found that the minor was not an accomplice; and, second, assuming that he was an accomplice, his testimony was sufficiently corroborated.

I think it is clear that the jury could have found, as matter of fact, that the minor was not a willing or corrupt participant in the crime, in that he did not form the criminal intent to co-operate with appellant in its commission. A word about the evidence on this point. There is no suggestion in the record that the minor was consulted beforehand concerning the commission of the act, or that he, in any manner, affirmatively participated therein. The jury may have concluded from the evidence that he never acquiesced in the act. It does not appear that he protested against the criminal conduct of appellant, but, nevertheless, if he did not form the intention to join in the commission of the crime, it cannot be said that he consented. Levering v. Commonwealth, 132 Ky. 666, 117 S. W. 253, 136 Am. St. Rep. 192, 19 Ann. Cas. 140. On the subject of consent it was stated in People v. Dong Pok Yip, 164 Cal. 143, 147, 127 Pac. 1031, 1032:

"There is a decided difference in law between mere submission and actual consent. Consent, in law, means a voluntary agreement by a person in the possession and exercise of sufficient mentality to make an intelligent choice, to do something proposed by another. 'Consent' differs very materially from 'assent.' The former implies some positive action and always involves submission. The latter means mere passivity or submission, which does not include consent." (Citing authorities.)

It was said in State v. Orrick, 106 Mo. 111, 17 S. W. 176, 329, that:

"Mere consent to a crime, when no act is given, and no encouragement rendered, does not amount to a participation." (Citing Whar. Cr. § 211d, and other authorities.)

To hold that the minor consented to the act, expressly or impliedly, is to declare that he acted "voluntarily." Whar. Crim. Ev. § 440. The jury was therefore called upon to decide whether the silence of the minor indicated that he performed a voluntary or involuntary part in the transaction. Whether the minor formed the intention to participate with appellant in the act was essentially a question for the jury, and he alone, could give direct testimony upon the point. The jury, however, could infer the state of his mind from the proven circumstances and find the fact either way. The silence or lack of protest on the part of the minor would not be conclusive; it would only be evidence which it would be proper for the jury to consider in connection with other facts tending to solve the question whether he acted "voluntarily, and with common intent" united in the commission of the crime. Whar. Crim. Ev. § 440.

Under all the circumstances, the jury could well have found that the boy was not an accomplice upon any of the theories discussed, and, in my opinion, the judgment should be upheld on that ground alone. The question whether he participated corruptly in the crime should be determined strictly upon the evidence in this case and hence my views are not influenced by the facts in the case of Dong Pok Yip, supra. The minor in this case was only 16 years of age. He did not attend school until he reached the age of 11, notwithstanding that he lived with his parents and grandmother in apparently comfortable circumstances. The minor testified that he did not know, until Mrs. Nute, the housekeeper, informed him, that what appellant did was wrong. From the evidence the jury may have concluded that the minor did not possess the usual intelligence of one of his years, and that he was completely under the control of appellant, who was old enough to be his grandfather. In the eyes of the jury he probably appeared as a passive, undeveloped boy, subject to the will of the appellant and they judged the case accordingly. Furthermore in considering whether the boy consented it must be kept in mind that before the crime was committed appellant preliminarily performed another act upon the minor, which was probably intended to anticipate his resistance to the offense charged and at the same time stimulate appellant's own abnormal desires.

But if the minor was an accomplice his testimony was nevertheless sufficiently corroborated. I shall first consider the character of the corroborative testimony required. The amendment of section 1111 of the Penal Code (Stats. 1911, p. 484) repealed the clause therein—"which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice." The adjudications touching this clause are to the effect that the corroborative evidence must be independent of the testimony of the accomplice. In People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 411, 56 Pac. 44, 48, the rule is thus expressed:

"It could * * * connect him with the crime by considering it with the testimony of the accomplice; yet, if it was necessary so to consider, it would not be legally sufficient. It is legally sufficient only if, standing alone, it tends so to connect him." People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 719, 73 Pac. 609; People v. Lynch, 122 Cal. 501, 55 Pac. 248; People v. Creegan, 121 Cal. 554, 53 Pac. 1082; People v. Sternberg, 111 Cal. 3, 43 Pac. 198.

But the repealed clause was not a part of section 1111 when the case was tried, and it is therefore sufficient, on this appeal, if any corroboration is shown—and it may either be entirely independent of the testimony of the accomplice or confirmatory thereof, provided that it tends to connect the appellant with the crime.

Now, as to the degree of proof required of the corroborative evidence: In People v. Barker, 114 Cal. 617, 46 Pac. 601, it was said:

"The strength or credibility of the corroborating evidence is for the jury. It 'need not be strong; it is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, though if it stood alone it would be entitled to but little weight.' People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480 [24 Pac. 32]. Nor need it extend to every fact and detail covered by the statements of the accomplice. People v. Kunz, 73 Cal. 313 [14 Pac. 836]; People v. Cloonan, 50 Cal. 449."

But although more is required by way of corroboration than to raise a mere suspicion, yet the corroborating evidence is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, although it is slight and entitled, when standing by itself, to but little consideration. People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 348, 351, 15 Pac. 5; People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 614; Kent v. State, 64 Ark. 247, 253, 41 S. W. 849; State v. Hicks, 6 S. D. 325, 60 N. W. 66. It is not necessary to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice by direct evidence. It is sufficient if the connection of the accuser with the alleged crime may be inferred from the corroborative evidence in the case.

These instructions were given to the jury:

"No one can be convicted upon the uncorroborative testimony of an accomplice. * * * If the proof in this case does not satisfy your minds to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt of the guilt of this defendant, it is your duty to find a verdict of not guilty. It is also the law, and I give it to you in this case in behalf of the defendant, that no one can be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. No matter how strong a suspicion of the guilt of the defendant may be established in the minds of the jury by the testimony of an accomplice, no conviction can be had upon such testimony, unless corroborated in some material point."

The testimony of the accomplice is sufficient to prove the actual commission of the offense. People v. Leavens, 12 Cal. App. 178, 106 Pac. 1103; People v. Thompson, 16 Cal. App. 748, 117 Pac. 1033; People v. Barnnovich, 16 Cal. App. 427, 117 Pac. 572. Can it be maintained that, as matter of law, there was not sufficient corroborating evidence within the meaning of the rule to connect appellant with the commission of the crime? The testimony of the minor and Mrs. Nute is fairly stated in the majority opinion, and it will not be necessary to refer to it at length.

Mrs. Nute saw appellant and the boy enter the bathroom together and close the door, and then heard the click of the bolt in the door. She saw the appellant glance over toward where she was concealed behind a lace curtain in her own room and lower the window of the bathroom, and observed by the shadow on the frosted glass that the shade was drawn, but, of course, she could not determine by whom. The boy testified that appellant drew the shade, and, from Mrs. Nute's statements, it is a fair inference, in support of his testimony, that appellant, who lowered the window, also drew the shade. While the fact that Mrs. Nute entertained suspicions of appellant's purpose is not in any sense proper evidence on the question, yet her vigilance throughout may be considered in testing the accuracy of her observations. From her position in her own room she heard the water running quite a while before she started for the bathroom door to listen. She heard the voice of appellant in a low key. It doubtless seemed significant to the jury that the pair were in the bathroom together such a length of time before she made the noise at the door; that they still remained for five minutes; and that appellant should leave the house as soon as he came out of the bathroom.

The inquiry naturally arises from these facts, Why did appellant and the boy go to the bathroom together; why bolt the door, glance over toward where Mrs. Nute was concealed behind the lace curtains, lower the window, and draw the shade? It is incomprehensible that all these precautions would have been taken if the sole object was "to wash their hands." The record is silent on the point whether the bathroom afforded the usual accessories, and this is important in view of the elaborate precautions to avoid observation. Moreover, if the quoted expression was intended to include another use of the bathroom, the indelicacy of such a suggestion would not help the position of appellant.

If the jury believed the testimony of Mrs. Nute, it could have found that the minor was corroborated on "a material point," which the trial court instructed the jury was required. But there was further evidence which may have influenced the jury and led them to reject the testimony of appellant. Does it not seem strange that after making an appointment with the boy at noon for 3 o'clock the domino and tennis games should be of such short duration? It was proper for the jury to consider the conduct of appellant when he was arrested and questioned in the presence of the boy, and thereupon made the incomplete answer: "I don't see why that boy should say that, I did not do." Nor when he said to the officer, on the way to the prison: "I do not know how you feel about it. * * * You are entitled to your opinion and I am entitled to mine. It is his word against my word." His replies were not indicative of one falsely accused, and hardly represented the attitude of an innocent man charged with an unspeakable crime.

His general reputation for the traits involved was put in issue. Code Civ. Proc. § 2053; Pen. Code, § 1102. Two of the five witnesses called on his behalf were asked, on cross-examination, if they had ever heard that he was accused of similar acts upon two other boys of the age of 16 years, which questions were answered in the negative. In rebuttal, the prosecution called the two boys, both of whom gave testimony that his general reputation for the traits involved was very bad. The officer in the case gave similar testimony.

From a study of the entire evidentiary record it is clear that the conduct of appellant throughout was of an equivocal import, which the jury could have resolved either in favor of his guilt or his innocence. It has found against his innocence, and, if the evidence under any theory of fact is susceptible of such a finding, it should not be disturbed on appeal.

(171 Cal. 649)

PEOPLE v. MILLER. (Cr. 1972.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1916.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃789—DEFENSES—INSANITY—DEGREE OF EVIDENCE REQUIRED.

In a prosecution for murder, it was error to require the defendant to establish his defense of insanity by a preponderance of the evidence, at the same time defining "preponderance of the evidence" as that degree of evidence which proves to a moral certainty and produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind, regardless of the number of witnesses from whom it proceeds, since that definition is in effect a definition of proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1846–1849, 1851, 1880, 1904–1922, 1960, 1967; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃789.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃561 — EVIDENCE — DEGREE OF PROOF—"REASONABLE DOUBT."

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt, but is the absence of an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1267; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃561.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Reasonable Doubt.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃560—"PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE."

"Preponderance of the evidence" means only that the evidence on one side outweighs the evidence on the other, not necessarily in number of witnesses or quantity, but in its effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1266; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃560.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Preponderance.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃789 — EVIDENCE — DEGREE OF PROOF REQUIRED—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1826, 1835, defining certain degrees of evidence, have no application to the question as to what is meant by an instruction placing upon the defendant the necessity of establishing his defense of insanity by a preponderance of the evidence, since those sections relate only to the character of evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1846–1849, 1851, 1880, 1904–1922, 1960, 1967; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃789.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1186—APPEAL AND ERROR—REVERSAL.

Where the court required the defendant in prosecution for murder to establish his defense of insanity beyond a reasonable doubt, the error was not such that the decree could be affirmed in accordance with Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting reversal on account of errors in procedure or misdirection of the jury unless the court is of the opinion that the error prejudiced the defendant, where the evidence was such that the jury might reasonably have found for the defendant under a proper instruction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3215–3219, 3221, 3230; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃1186.]

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1086 — RECORD ON APPEAL—CONTENTS.

On appeal the record should not contain the arguments of the counsel on questions of law arising during the trial, since they serve no useful purpose, and their insertion is not required by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2736–2770, 2772, 2794; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃1086.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Thomas Miller was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

John W. Heaney, of San Francisco, and W. C. Gammill, of Santa Barbara, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and E. W. Squier, of Santa Barbara, for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The defendant, charged with murder in the unlawful killing of one Clarence A. Baker, was convicted of murder in the first degree, and adjudged to suffer death. We have an appeal by him from the judgment.

The only defense was that defendant was insane at the time he killed the deceased. The court correctly instructed the jury, in substance, in view of the settled law of this state, that while it was essential to a conviction that the guilt of the defendant be established to their satisfaction beyond all reasonable doubt, except on the single question of insanity, that as to insanity the burden of proof was on defendant, and that it was incumbent on him to show insanity by a preponderance of the evidence before he could be acquitted on that ground. The jury were explicitly and correctly instructed that it was not necessary for defendant to show his insanity beyond all reasonable doubt, but only by a preponderance of evidence, as in civil cases, and also that the proof must be such in amount that, if the single issue of sanity or insanity of the defendant should be submitted to a jury in a civil case, they must find him insane; that, in other words, insanity may be established "by a preponderance of evidence merely." But, having so fully and correctly instructed the jury, the learned trial judge gave a further instruction as to what was meant by the term "preponderance of the evidence," which, so far as we can find, was the only instruction given on the subject. This was as follows, viz.:

"Preponderance of the evidence means that degree of evidence which proves to a moral certainty, or, in other words, that degree of proof that produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind, regardless of the number of witnesses from whom it proceeds."

The court refused to give an instruction requested by defendant reading in part as follows, and being in all other respects a correct statement of the law:

"Then what is the term 'preponderance of the evidence'? By preponderance of evidence is meant the greater and superior weight of evidence; and, if the evidence of insanity preponderates in the slightest degree in favor of the defendant, you must find him not guilty."

[1] Defendant's main contention on this appeal is that the instruction given was erroneous, and we are satisfied that this contention is well based. It is plain to us that the definition thus given by the court was substantially the same as that of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, and that certainly a jury of laymen could find no possible distinction. It is clear that our law contemplates, as does the law generally, a material distinction between the two terms. Always has it been the established rule in this state that proof of guilt beyond all reasonable doubt is essential to the conviction of one of a crime, while a mere preponderance of evidence is sufficient in a civil case, and this rule is expressly stated in section 2061 of our Code of Civil Procedure. The existence of this distinction was fully recognized by the trial judge in this case, who advised the jury as to the necessity of proof of guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, and that defendant was required to prove his insanity only by a preponderance of evidence.

[2] The term "reasonable doubt" was fairly enough defined by him, in accord with the definition thereof given by Chief Justice Shaw in Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. (59 Mass.) 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711, which has been adopted by the courts of this and practically all other states as the best definition, viz.:

"It is not mere possible doubt; because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case, which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. * * * The evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment, of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it."

In instructing the jury as to the meaning of the term "proof beyond a reasonable doubt," the trial judge, in line with this definition, expressly told the jury that "moral certainty only is required or that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind"; and again that "the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it." Clearly the jury was thus given substantially the same definition of both the terms "preponderance of evidence" and the term "proof beyond a reasonable doubt," thus making it essential for the defendant to establish his defense of insanity by evidence showing the same to the satisfaction of the jurors beyond a reasonable doubt. That such is the effect of the instruction given is shown by what is said in People v. Wreden, 59 Cal. 393, and People v. Wells, 145 Cal. 142, 78 Pac. 470, where it is held that an instruction declaring that insanity "must be clearly established by satisfactory proof" is the full equivalent of one making it incumbent on a defendant to establish insanity beyond a reasonable doubt.

[3] No such definition of the term "preponderance of the evidence" as that given by the trial judge is sanctioned by the authorities. The term simply means what it says, viz.: That the evidence on one side outweighs, preponderates over, is more than, the evidence on the other side, not necessarily in number of witnesses or quantity, but in its effect on those to whom it is addressed. As good a definition as we have found is that given in Hoffman v. Loud, 111 Mich. 156, 69 N. W. 231, where it is said:

"In civil cases a preponderance of evidence is all that is required, and by a 'preponderance of evidence' is meant such evidence as, when weighed with that opposed to it, has more convincing force, and from which it results that the greater probability is in favor of the party upon whom the burden rests."

In Parker v. Hull, 71 Wis. 368, 37 N. W. 351, 5 Am. St. Rep. 224, it is said that to say that the evidence of one party must be more weighty, convincing, and satisfactory than the proof adduced by the other party is simply to state the rule of preponderance. In French v. Day, 89 Me. 441, 36 Atl. 909, it was held that an instruction requiring a "clear preponderance of evidence and convincing proof" was erroneous, and that a party was only required to prove his case "by a preponderance of the evidence," not by a "clear preponderance and by convincing proof." In Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., 127 Wis. 273, 106 N. W. 1077, the term is held to be properly defined as the greater convincing power of evidence, and it is said that on a trial that side has furnished the preponderance of evidence which has produced evidence of greater convincing power in the minds of the jury than that produced by the other side.

[4] Of course, these definitions do not mean that the "burden of proof" resting on a party to prove a particular fact, as in this case the burden of proof resting on defendant to prove insanity and thus rebut the presumption of sanity which the law declares, is lifted by the mere fact that he has produced a preponderance of evidence, for, as was well said in Ergo v. Merced Falls, etc., Co., 161 Cal. 339, 119 Pac. 103, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79:

"The evidence tending to prove a fact might be so slight that it would fail to satisfy the jury of the existence of the fact, and yet it might be of greater weight than other evidence introduced which would tend to disprove the fact," and that "in such case the fact could not be said to be proven either by a preponderance of the evidence or at all."

The same idea was expressed in Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., supra. The party on whom rests the burden to prove an alleged fact must produce evidence sufficient in quantity and character to warrant a jury in finding the fact to exist, in the absence of opposing evidence. The question what that evidence must amount to in order to legally support a conclusion by the jury has nothing at all to do with the question what is meant by the term "preponderance of the evidence." The party on whom rests such burden having produced sufficient evidence to support a conclusion in his favor, opposing evidence may also have been introduced, and then only does the question of preponderance of evidence arise. The situation may then be that, in view of the opposing evidence, the jury is in doubt, and not at all satisfied or convinced. In such a situation the decision must be based on the preponderance rule. If in the opinion of the jury the testimony preponderates in favor of the one on whom the burden of proof does not lie, or is equally balanced, the decision must be in his favor, and, if it preponderates ever so slightly in favor of the other party, he is entitled to a verdict. So that in civil cases a party may have established an essential fact by a preponderance of the evidence, although, in the light of all the evidence pro and con, the jury may not be satisfied to a moral certainty of the existence of the fact, and the whole evidence may not be such as to produce conviction in their minds. Under such circumstances, as said in Murphy v. Waterhouse, 113 Cal. 467, 45 Pac. 866, 54 Am. St. Rep. 365:

"The weight of evidence or preponderance of probability is sufficient to establish a fact in a civil case."

The question is not whether, in view of all the evidence, pro and con, the jury are satisfied to a moral certainty of the truth of the fact, or whether conviction as to that fact exists in their minds, but whether there is a preponderance of evidence in favor of the existence of the fact. We cannot avoid the conclusion that the instruction given on this matter most vital to defendant, the only instruction given on the subject, advised the jury that they could not find in his favor on the issue of insanity unless they were satisfied by the evidence, as a whole, "to a moral certainty" that he was insane at the time of the homicide, and "convinced" that such was the case, and we are satisfied that it could have been understood by the jury in no other way.

[4] The error of the learned trial judge in this connection was doubtless induced by certain rather carelessly drawn provisions contained in our Code of Civil Procedure enacted in an attempt to satisfactorily define or declare the degree of proof essential to the establishment of a fact by evidence. See sections 1826 and 1835, Code Civ. Proc. Manifestly these provisions are not in accord with other provisions of law in all respects, even on the subject to which they relate. For instance, in section 1835 it is attempted to declare what is "satisfactory evidence," defining it as that evidence "which ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in an unprejudiced mind," providing that such evidence alone will justify a verdict, and declaring that all other evidence is "slight evidence." Yet by other sections of the same Code it is declared that a presumption is evidence, and that it is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts, and many presumptions, conclusive and prima facie, are stated, and it is expressly provided that as to a prima facie presumption the jury is bound to find according to the presumption unless it be controverted. Of course, also, it is bound to find in accord with a conclusive presumption. See sections 1957, 1959, 1961, 1962 and 1963. All this is true, although the presumption may not be such as to ordinarily produce moral certainty or conviction of the fact presumed in an unprejudiced mind. But whatever force may be attributed to these sections and whatever they may be held to mean, they have no application to the question here involved, viz.: What is meant by the term "preponderance of evidence"? They purport to do no more than to attempt to declare what character of evidence will sustain a verdict, and even in that, as we have seen, when considered in connection with other provisions of law, they are not entirely correct. The instruction given in Ergo v. Merced Falls, etc., Co., supra, relied on by the Attorney General, was one given at the request of the defendant, which was complaining of another incorrect instruction given at the request of the plaintiff, and it was simply held that the instruction so given at the request of the complaining defendant was of such a nature that the court would not be justified in holding the other instruction sufficiently injurious to justify a reversal. The instruction was not upheld as a correct statement of the law.

[5] We regard the error thus made as one most substantially affecting the rights of defendant. In effect, as we have said, the jury was instructed that he could not be acquitted on the ground of insanity unless he established the fact of insanity to their satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt. We have carefully examined the evidence in order to determine whether, in view of the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, the judgment should be affirmed notwithstanding such error, and we are satisfied that the evidence was of such a nature that such a conclusion may not fairly be reached. In saying this we do not desire to be understood as intimating that it is our opinion that the jury should have concluded that the preponderance of evidence was in favor of the theory of insanity. The evidence elicited on the trial was of such a nature that a jury might reasonably find therein basis for a conclusion that insanity on the part of the defendant, within the meaning of our law, had not been shown by a preponderance of evidence. But, according to the record, the case made for defendant on this issue was a substantial one, and the evidence tending to show insanity was such that a jury might reasonably have found therein sufficient basis for a conclusion that the preponderance of the evidence was in favor of the theory of insanity. For aught we know, the jury did so conclude in this case, finding against the defendant on that issue solely because of the erroneous instruction. It is not suggested by the learned Attorney General that, if the instruction be erroneous, the facts nevertheless are such as to warrant an affirmance in view of the rule declared by the provision of the state Constitution referred to.

In view of our conclusion on the point discussed, it is unnecessary to consider any other point made for reversal.

[6] We find on an examination of the reporter's transcript of the proceedings at the trial that the same includes all arguments made by counsel to the court on questions of law arising during the trial. In the aggregate many pages of the transcript are devoted to this use. The incorporation of such arguments in a transcript for use on appeal serves no useful purpose. To the contrary, it not only impedes the examination of the record by an appellate court, but it also unnecessarily adds to the cost of the transcript to the county. The law does not require the insertion of any such matter in a transcript of the evidence to be used on appeal, and the trial judge should see that such a transcript is not unnecessarily lengthened by the incorporation of superfluous matter.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

HENSHAW, J. I concur in the foregoing opinion of the Chief Justice. Section 1835 of the Code of Civil Procedure, like section 1826 of the same Code, is dealing exclusively with evidence in criminal cases. The difficulty is entirely cleared if to the sentence in section 1835, "Such evidence alone will justify a verdict," there be added "of conviction." That these sections have applicability solely to criminal cases is made manifest, not only by the history and development of the law governing criminal trials, but from two additional facts, each equally convincing. The one fact is that, if those sections were made to apply to trials by jury in civil cases, it is within bounds to say that 99 such cases out of 100 would necessarily result in perpetual mistrials. The evidence in civil cases upon either side is most rarely of so convincing a character as to produce "moral certainty or conviction," and, if it be only such evidence in a civil case as "will justify a verdict," then it must result that no verdict can be rendered. As pointed out by the Chief Justice, this distinction is itself noted by our law in section 2061 of the same Code. In subdivision 5 of that section criminal cases and civil cases are put in immediate juxtaposition, and courts are advised to instruct their juries that in civil cases their "decision must be made according to the preponderance of evidence," while "in criminal cases guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt." The second fact, equally conclusive, is shown by the history of these two sections, derived from the notes of the codifiers and commentators. Every word of those notes establishes that the codifiers are dealing with the sufficiency of evidence in criminal cases. Thus, in the note to section 1826 it is said:

"The principal difference to be remarked between civil and criminal cases with reference to the modes of proof by direct or circumstantial evidence is, that in the former where civil rights are ascertained, a less degree of probability may be safely adopted as a ground of judgment than in the latter case which affects life and liberty."

While in the note to section 1835 it is said:

"To acquit upon light, trivial, and fanciful suppositions and remote conjectures, is a virtual violation of the juror's oath, and an offense of great magnitude against the interests of society, directly tending to the disregard of the obligations of a judicial oath, the hindrance and disparagement of justice, and the encouragement of malefactors. On the other hand, a juror ought not to condemn unless the evidence excludes from his mind all reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, and, as has been well observed, unless he is so convinced by the evidence that he would venture to act upon that conviction in matters of the highest concern and importance to his own interests."

In their note to section 1835 the codifiers cite Starkie on Evidence, and Starkie's discussion then may well be quoted. This is what that learned author says:

"Even the most direct evidence can produce nothing more than such a high degree of probability as amounts to moral certainty. From the highest degree it may decline, by an infinite number of gradations, until it produces in the mind nothing more than a mere preponderance of assent in favor of the particular fact.

"The distinction between full proof and mere preponderance of evidence is in its application very important. In all criminal cases whatsoever it is essential to a verdict of condemnation that the guilt of the accused should be fully proved; neither a mere preponderance of evidence, nor any weight of preponderant evidence, is sufficient for the purpose, unless it generate full belief of the fact to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt.

"But in many cases of a civil nature, where the right is dubious, and the claims of the contesting parties are supported by evidence nearly equipoised, a mere preponderance of evidence on either side may be sufficient to turn the scale."

171 Cal. 658

WILLIAMS, Superintendent of Banks, v. CARVER et al. (No. L. A. 3652.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1916. Rehearing Denied Feb. 3, 1916.)

1. STATUTES ⟸161—CONSTRUCTION.

Where there is an apparent conflict between two statutes touching the same subject, they should be construed, if possible, to give force and effect to each, as the law does not favor repeals by implication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 230–234; Dec. Dig. ⟸161.]

2. BANKS AND BANKING ⟸49—STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY—ENFORCEMENT BY SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS—STATUTE.

St. 1909, p. 87, entitled "An act to define and regulate the business of banking," in section 136 providing that the superintendent of banks shall collect all debts due it, and may, if necessary to pay its debts, enforce individual liability of the stockholders, does not authorize the superintendent to enforce the constitutional liability of the stockholder to the creditor fixed by Const. art. 12, § 3, declaring that each stockholder of a corporation shall be liable for such proportion of its liabilities as his stock bears to the whole, since the constitutional right is personal to the creditor, enforceable by him under Civ. Code, § 322, and, not being a debt due the bank, is not enforceable by it or the superintendent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 71–81½, 513, 534, 535; Dec. Dig. ⟸49.]

3. BANKS AND BANKING ⟸49—STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY—ENFORCEMENT BY SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS—STATUTE.

St. 1909, p. 87, entitled "An act to define and regulate the business of banking," in section 136 providing that the superintendent of banks shall collect all debts due it, and may, if necessary to pay its debts, enforce the individual liability of the stockholders, only authorizes the superintendent to enforce against stockholders their liability due the bank, arising upon assessments or nonpayment of subscriptions to the corporate capital, constituting a common fund out of which to pay the cost of administration and corporate debts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 71–81½, 513, 534, 535; Dec. Dig. ⟸49.]

4. STATUTES ⟸107—TITLE — CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Under Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that every act shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, St. 1909, p. 87, entitled "An act to define and regulate the business of banking," by section 136 providing that the superintendent of banks many enforce the individual liability of stockholders, if it authorize him to enforce the liability of stockholders to creditors under Const. art. 12, § 3, is unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 121–134; Dec. Dig. ⟸107.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. D. Murphy, Judge.

Action by W. R. Williams, as Superintendent of Banks, against L. J. Carver and others. From a judgment for defendants on their demurrers, plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

H. W. Johnson, Jr., of San Francisco, and A. A. De Ligne, of Sacramento, for appellant. Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco (Frederick B. Lathrop, of counsel), for respondent L. J. Carver. E. L. Foster, of Bakersfield, for respondents R. McDonald and others. C. C. Cowgill, of Sonoma, for respondent Sarah L. Conner. Thomas Scott, of Bakersfield, for respondent R. E. White.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. This is an equitable action, brought by plaintiff, as superintendent of banks, to recover from the stockholders of the Kern Valley Bank upon their constitutional liability to the creditors thereof. To the first amended complaint defendants interposed demurrers upon both general and special grounds. Their demurrers were sustained by the court, which refused to allow plaintiff to further amend. Judgment followed, from which plaintiff appeals.

It appears that on May 12, 1911, plaintiff, as superintendent of banks, declared the Kern Valley Bank insolvent, for which reason and the fact that it was then unsafe and inexpedient for it to continue its banking business, he took possession of all its property and business for the purposes of liquidation, as provided by law. It is alleged:

"That the conditions and affairs of said Kern Valley Bank are such that, in order to pay the debts thereof, it has become and is necessary to enforce the individual liability of the stockholders of said bank, as provided for by the Constitution and other laws of the state of California, and by virtue of the authority vested in him by said Bank Act of the state of California plaintiff brings this action on behalf of all the creditors of said Kern Valley Bank."

There is attached to the complaint a list of the names of some 1,500 persons, to all of whom it is alleged the bank, within three years prior to the filing of the complaint, became indebted in the aggregate sum of $832,502.54; that by offsets said sum of $832,502.54 has been reduced to $717,574.48, upon which there has been paid, by the superintendent of banks, in the liquidation of its affairs, dividends in the sum of 40 per cent. upon the principal of said indebtedness, and that there remains due to said creditors the sum of 60 per cent. of the whole principal of said indebtedness; that the value of all assets of the bank now in the hands of the plaintiff do not exceed $107,636.10, which sum is—

"probably insufficient to pay the expenses necessary for the completion of the liquidation of the affairs of said bank and an additional dividend of not more than 15 per cent. of the principal of said original indebtedness."

The names of the stockholders, with the number of shares owned by each during the time when said indebtedness is alleged to have been incurred by the bank, together with the proportionate liability of each in the aggregate to all of the depositors based upon the number of shares so owned by each stockholder, are set out in the complaint. The prayer of the complaint is for judgment against each of said defendants in the several amounts specified as being the proportion of all the debts of the bank as the stock held by each bore to the entire subscribed capital stock of the bank, less the deduction which each defendant shall be entitled to by reason of the dividends theretofore paid, or which might thereafter be paid by plaintiff to said creditors.

[1] Plaintiff asserts right to maintain the suit under and by virtue of an act entitled "An act to define and regulate the business of banking" (Stats. 1909, p. 87), section 136 of which, in so far as material to the discussion, is as follows:

"The superintendent of banks shall collect all debts due and claims belonging to it, and upon the order of the superior court may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and on like order may sell all real and personal property of such bank on such terms as the court shall direct; and may, if necessary to pay the debts of such bank, enforce individual liability of the stockholders by action to be brought within three years after the date of his taking possession of the affairs of such bank."

He insists that the "individual liability of the stockholders" therein mentioned, and which he is authorized to enforce, is the constitutional liability of the stockholder to the creditor fixed by section 3, art. 12, of the Constitution, which declares that:

"Each stockholder of a corporation * * * shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred, during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation."

Section 322 of the Civil Code, after reenacting this constitutional provision, provides, among other things, that:

"Any creditor of the corporation may institute joint or several actions against any of its stockholders, for the proportion of his claim payable by each."

The Bank Act makes no reference to this section, nor to section 359, Code of Civil Procedure, which specifies the time when the maintenance of such action by the creditor shall be barred. The position of appellant with reference to these sections is that they "still provide such remedy in all cases except where a bank has been taken over by the superintendent of banks for the purpose of liquidation," in which case the constitutional right of the creditor to pursue the stockholder is, ipso facto, terminated, and the enforcement of the payment of his debt committed to the will of the superintendent of banks, who, if it be "necessary to pay the debts of such bank," may, notwithstanding the claim is barred under section 359, Code of Civil Procedure, bring an equitable action to recover the specific sum due from each stockholder to each creditor, and, when collected, pay to each creditor the sum so collected in his behalf. The law does not favor repeals by implication, and where there is an apparent conflict between two statutes touching the same subject, the construction should be such as to give force and effect to both, if possible.

[2-4] The subject of the legislation, as expressed in its title, is "the business of banking." The constitutional liability of the stockholder to the creditor, as to which no mention is made in the act, is distinct and separate from such business; it constitutes no part of the assets or business of the bank. Two sources exist to which the creditor may look for the payment of his debt: One, the assets of the bank the affairs of which, if in liquidation, are controlled by the superintendent of banks; the other the stockholder therein, as to whom and his direct and primary liability to the creditor neither the bank nor the superintendent of banks has anything to do. Being distinct and separate claims, though based upon the same debt, the creditor may, so long as the bank is a going concern, pursue his remedy against either or both bank and stockholder, or waive it as to either or both. When the superintendent takes possession of a bank for purposes of liquidation, he succeeds to all the rights and property of the bank; but since the stockholder's liability to the creditor is no part of such property or assets, he has no power to act for or on behalf of the creditor in pursuit of his claim for such source. The right to do this is a personal right of the creditor, and, under the Constitutional provision, he not only possesses the right to enforce the same in an action at law in the manner provided by section 322 of the Civil Code, but may insist upon having the proceeds collected applied in liquidation of his debt, free from any depletion due to the intervention of another, or to the extravagance, mismanagement, or expense of the administration of such fund by any other person. Since it is not a debt due to the bank, neither it nor the superintendent of banks as its successor is concerned with the enforcement of such constitutional liability. The "individual liability of the stockholder" which the superintendent of banks is authorized to enforce, since it is not declared to be the constitutional liability due to the creditor, must be construed to be that due to the bank and arising upon assessments made, or nonpayment of subscriptions to the corporate capital, constituting a common fund out of which to pay the cost of administration and corporate debts. So construed, there is no conflict between the Bank Act and section 322, Civil Code; whereas, if we accept appellant's interpretation, the inconsistency is irreconcilable, and the creditor is deprived of his constitutional right to enforce the liability of the stockholder, upon whom additional burdens are imposed, since in the form of action here adopted the chances of all creditors, hundreds of whose claims in the case at bar are less than $5, suing to enforce the same, are largely augmented thereby. Moreover, if the provision be construed as authorizing the superintendent of banks to enforce the constitutional liability of stockholders to the creditors, then it is void as being obnoxious to the provisions of section 24, art. 4, of the Constitution, which provides that every act shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. As stated, the subject of the legislation, as shown by its title, is to "define and regulate the business of banking." The constitutional liability of the stockholders of a corporation to its creditors and the enforcement of such liability is no part of the business of banking. Hence, the subject of the legislation, if its purpose be to deprive the creditor of the right to enforce such liability and confer upon the superintendent of banks the power to act for and on behalf of the creditor in the collection thereof, is not embraced in the title. Indeed, there is absolutely nothing in the title indicating such a purpose on the part of the Legislature.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

Mr. Justice VICTOR E. SHAW, of the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, acted in this case under appointment by this court, in place of Mr. Justice LORIGAN, of this court, who was unable to act.

29 Cal. App. 49

O'REILLY v. ALL PERSONS, etc.

(Civ. 1432.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 27, 1915.)

1. TAXATION ⇐831—TAX TITLES—RIGHTS OF TAX PURCHASER.

As the primary object in selling land for taxes is to enable the state to recover the amount due, a tax purchaser is a mere volunteer as to the amount paid on competitive bidding in addition to the taxes due, and, the tax title being invalid, he cannot recover such amount from the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1645; Dec. Dig. ⇐831.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐171 — THEORY OF CASE—CHANGE.

Where the case was tried below on the theory that an issue was whether defendants were bound to compensate plaintiff for the amount paid for his tax title in excess of the amount due for taxes, it could not on appeal be contended that no such issue was presented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1053–1063, 1066, 1067, 1161–1165; Dec. Dig. ⇐171.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1177 — REVIEW — FINDINGS.

Where, in a proceeding to establish title to land, it was found that plaintiff's tax title was invalid, the appellate court, no finding having been made, should not determine what amount plaintiff paid for his tax title on competitive bidding above the amount of taxes due, but the cause should be remanded for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4597–4604, 4606–4610; Dec. Dig. ⇐1177.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by P. J. O'Reilly against All Persons, and especially against Josephine E. Hopkins and another, to establish title to two parcels of land. From the judgment, the named defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Samuel M. Shortridge and T. J. Sheridan, both of San Francisco, for appellants. Frank J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought under the McEnerney Act to establish title to two parcels of land. Appellants in their answer denied that plaintiff was the owner or in the actual possession of parcel A of the said real estate, and averred that they are and were at the beginning of the action, and had been long prior thereto, the owners of said parcel in fee simple absolute as tenants in common and in the possession thereof, and prayed that plaintiff take nothing as to said parcel, but they did not ask for affirmative relief. No question was raised as to plaintiff's ownership of the other parcel, and it is not involved in this appeal.

At the trial it developed that plaintiff claimed said parcel A under a tax title, and it was admitted that, if said tax title was invalid, then appellants were the owners of said tract, as claimed in their answer. The court found that the said defendants were at the time of the said tax sale, and ever since have been, the owners in fee simple absolute of said real property, and, further, that the said tax sale and the said tax deed executed pursuant to said sale and purporting to convey said property were and are invalid. These findings have not been questioned; the plaintiff not having moved for a new trial or appealed. The court further found, however:

"That the said plaintiff purchased said property from the state of California at a tax sale held on the 7th day of February, 1912, and paid for said property at said sale the sum of $740 in gold coin of the United States of America, and that said plaintiff has since said tax sale aforesaid expended the sum of $15.43 in the payment of taxes regularly levied upon said property."

And the court thereupon decreed that plaintiff have judgment against said defendants for the sum of $740, and interest, the further sum of $15.43, and that said judgment be a lien upon said parcel of real property, and that said defendants be directed to pay the same within 60 days, and in the event of their failure so to do that plaintiff be entitled to have a writ of execution to enforce the same, and that until said payment be made the judgment in favor of defendants be of no force and effect. The court did not find the amount of the taxes, penalties, interest, and costs which were chargeable upon said lands at the time of the said tax sale, but it was conceded at the trial that the amount of the same was $45.82.

Appellants appeal from the portion of said judgment requiring of them the payment of the said purchase price of said parcel of land, and they state in their brief that:

"The substantial dispute between respondent and appellants is whether plaintiff is entitled to the excess of the sum bid and paid by him over and above the taxes, interest, penalties, and costs justly chargeable upon the lands at the time of the invalid tax sale, and that is the sole question presented by this appeal."

[1] That question, it may be said, has been settled by a decision of this court, a petition for hearing in the Supreme Court being denied, and it is sufficient to quote the following from Cordano v. Kelsey, 151 Pac. 391:

"We do not think that the owner should be required to pay whatever competitive bidders may choose to offer for the land in addition to what the law makes it the duty of the owner to pay. The primary object of the state in selling the land is to recover the taxes, penalties, costs, etc., and this is indicated by the requirement of the law that the land must be sold for an amount not less than these enumerated charges. Whoever pays more at the sale does so as a volunteer and at the risk of the proceedings being found invalid. The rule contended for by appellants would relieve the purchaser of all risk, and make it possible for him to invest his money safely by purchases at tax sales at 7 per cent. interest, regardless of any infirmity in his title, and regardless of the amount he might bid for the property. This, we think, would crowd the rule off from its equitable foundations."

[2, 3] The only remaining question is whether upon the record as presented here this court can direct a modification of the judgment so as to require appellants to pay to plaintiff only the amount chargeable for taxes, penalties, and costs. Strictly speaking, no such issue was presented by the pleadings; each of the parties claiming the absolute title. The finding, therefore, as to the $740 was beyond the scope of the pleadings, but we find from the record brought up that evidence as to such payment and also as to the amount actually paid for taxes, penalties, and costs was received without objection, and, indeed, there is no controversy as to said amounts. Hence it could properly be said that the trial was had upon the theory that such consideration was involved in the issues submitted for decision, and neither party at this time could justly disclaim it.

There is no finding, though, as to the amount paid for taxes prior to said sale, and to pursue the course suggested by appellants would be for us to make a finding for the trial court, which, of course, would be a departure from a well-established rule. It is probably true that, if we should direct a modification as requested by appellants, it would be without prejudice, as was the case in Campbell v. Canty, 162 Cal. 382, 123 Pac. 266. However, the more orderly course, we think, and one no more burdensome, would be to direct the lower court to make the additional finding in the usual manner. Indeed, appellants recognized the propriety of such action in their motion for a new trial.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be vacated, and the order denying the motion for a new trial be reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial as to one issue alone, that is, the amount paid by respondent for taxes, penalties, and costs, and upon the determination and finding of said amount, with interest, it is ordered that judgment be entered requiring appellants to pay said amount and that upon the payment of said amount their title to said parcel of real property be established and quieted.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 59

TERRY v. RIVERGARDEN FARMS CO. et al. (Civ. 1413.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 29, 1915.)

1. VENUE ⇐36—CHANGE OF—NATURE OF ACTION.

The nature of the action on a motion for change of venue is determined from the allegations of the complaint and character of the judgment which may be rendered on default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 54, 55; Dec. Dig. ⇐36.]

2. VENUE ⇐40—CHANGE OF—PERSONAL ACTION.

Where the complaint sought rescission of a contract for the purchase of land and return of the purchase money, and no lien was claimed upon any property nor any interest in real property sought to be adjudicated, the action is personal in its nature, the cancellation of the contract being incidental merely to the principal relief; hence defendants are entitled to have the venue changed to the county of their residence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. ⇐40.]

3. VENUE ⇐5—CHANGE OF—REAL ACTIONS.

An action will not be considered a real action for the purpose of determining its venue unless title or interest in real property is involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–11; Dec. Dig. ⇐5.]

4. VENUE ⇐5 — CHANGE OF — RIGHT TO CHANGE.

Though plaintiff joined with a personal action an action involving title to real property, which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 392, should be tried in the county where it was located, such joinder does not deprive defendant of its right to have the personal action tried in the county of its residence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–11; Dec. Dig. ⇐5.]

5. VENUE ⇐40 — CHANGE OF — RIGHT TO CHANGE.

Where an action seeking a cancellation of a contract for the purchase of land was purely personal as to one of the defendants, the only relief sought being a money judgment for fraudulent representations, such defendant is entitled to have the venue changed to the county of its residence, though the title to real property be involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. ⇐40.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by J. R. Terry against the Rivergarden Farms Company, a corporation, and Stine & Kendrick. From an order granting defendants change of venue, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. G. Bailey, of Woodland, for appellant. Arthur C. Huston and Harry L. Huston, both of Woodland, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. [1] This appeal is from an order of the superior court of Yolo county granting a motion for a change of venue to the city and county of San Francisco. Appellant's attack upon the order is based upon the assumption that the action is for the determination of some right or interest in real estate within the meaning of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Manifestly, the nature of the case is determined from the allegations of the complaint and the character of the judgment which might be rendered upon default. McFarland v. Martin, 144 Cal. 771, 78 Pac. 239.

[2-4] It appears from the complaint that the action is one of rescission based upon the ground of fraud. Attached to the complaint is a copy of a contract entered into between the defendant Rivergarden Farms Company and the plaintiff, Terry. It seems that Stine & Kendrick, the other defendants, executed the said contract as attorney in fact for their codefendant. The contract is in the usual form for the sale and purchase of real estate.

The complaint sets forth that certain false and fraudulent representations as to the character and condition of the land were made by the defendants, and it concludes with this prayer:

"That the said contract of sale between plaintiff and defendants for the purchase and sale of said farms Nos. 603 and 604 aforesaid be canceled and declared to be not binding on this plaintiff; that it be adjudged that defendants repay plaintiff the sum of $2,172.12 cash gold coin of the United States, with interest thereon from the said month of November, 1913, at the legal rate; that plaintiff have his costs herein accrued; and for such other relief as may be proper and equitable in this cause."

As is apparent, the specific relief prayed for is the cancellation of the contract and a money judgment against the defendants. It is equally apparent that the main relief is the recovery of the sum of $2,171.12 in money; the cancellation of the contract being merely incidental to that consideration. No lien is claimed upon any property, nor is any right or interest in real property sought to be adjudicated. Manifestly, the judgment will not in any way affect the title to real property. To constitute a real action it must, of course, appear that title or interest in real property is involved. Clark v. Brown, 83 Cal. 184, 23 Pac. 289; Hammond v. Ocean Shore Development Co., 22 Cal. App. 167, 133

Pac. 978. Moreover, if we should admit that the action does concern real property in the sense of said section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is entirely clear that to the extent at least of said money judgment demanded it is a personal action, and, when a real and personal action are joined, the case may be transferred to the residence of the defendant. Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 356; Warner v. Warner, 100 Cal. 11, 34 Pac. 523; Donohoe v. Rogers, 168 Cal. 700, 144 Pac. 958. In the last of these it is said:

"The language that we have quoted from section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure is very broad, and there can be no question as to its including an action to declare a trust in real estate, where land is the exclusive subject-matter of the litigation. See Booker v. Aitken, 140 Cal. 471, 74 Pac. 11; McFarland v. Martin, 144 Cal. 771, 78 Pac. 239. The cases cited by defendants in this regard are all cases in which real and personal actions were joined, and it is well settled that a plaintiff cannot deprive a defendant of his right to a trial of a personal action in the county of his residence, by uniting in his complaint a cause of action for the recovery of or the determination of an interest in real property."

The cases cited by appellant are easily distinguished, as is made apparent by a brief recital of the important facts therein.

Sloss v. De Toro, 77 Cal. 129, 19 Pac. 233, was an action in which a decree revesting the title was sought. The cancellation of a fraudulent sale was demanded and the reinvestment of the title to the land in plaintiff.

In Franklin v. Dutton, 79 Cal. 605, 21 Pac. 964, the plaintiff prayed for a reformation of a written contract of sale, and it was decided that the action was "for the determination of a right or interest in real estate." There is a palpable difference between an action to reform a contract of sale of real estate, and thus continue it in operation as a claim against the property, and where such relief is the only judgment sought and an action like this to rescind such contract and to recover back the consideration paid.

In Herd v. Tuohy, 133 Cal. 55, 65 Pac. 139, it was not decided whether the action was a real action, it being declared by the Supreme Court:

"An action to set aside a deficiency judgment improperly rendered in another county, in a foreclosure suit upon ex parte application, after the right thereto had been lost by the decree, is within the equity jurisdiction of the superior court of the county in which the improper deficiency judgment was levied upon the land of the plaintiff. If such action is a real action, under section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is brought in the proper county; and, if not, the jurisdiction of the court is not affected by the right of the defendant to change the place of trial, and, if he fails to demand the transfer, he waives objection to the venue."

The local nature of the action of Grocers', etc., Union v. Kern, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 466, 89 Pac. 120, is clearly set forth in this quotation:

"An action by a purchaser for a specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and to compel a conveyance under an allegation that the purchase price has been paid, pursuant to agreement, from the proceeds of sales of fruits and lands made by defendant, for which proceeds an accounting is sought, with judgment for a surplus alleged, is in its nature an action to determine a right or interest in real property under subdivision 1 of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, wherever commenced, must be tried, upon demand by the defendant, in the county where the land is situated. The accounting of profits to determine payment of the purchase money and to obtain judgment for any surplus is merely incidental to the real cause of action and relief sought, and does not change the nature of the action."

Hannah v. Canty, 1 Cal. App. 225, 81 Pac. 1035, had for "its sole object to establish and enforce a trust in land," and, of course, was a local action.

Robinson v. Williams, 12 Cal. App. 515, 107 Pac. 705, was "an action to cancel a contract of purchase for nonpayment as provided, and to declare the payments made to belong to the plaintiff, and to have it determined that defendant has no right, title, or interest in and to any of the lands and premises described in the contract, and that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession thereof," and was therefore correctly held to involve the determination of a right or interest in real property.

Bartley v. Fraser, 16 Cal. App. 560, 117 Pac. 683, did not call for a determination of the question whether the action was local or personal, since, as the court said, "in either event it was properly transferred to Mariposa county for trial."

[5] There is this further to be said that, as far as the action against Stine & Kendrick is concerned, it is clearly one for a money judgment in consequence of fraudulent representations. They were not a party to the contract of sale, and the action against them is not remotely connected with any interest in real property.

Assuming, then, for the sake of argument, that the action against the other defendant involves an interest in real estate, the plaintiff cannot thereby deprive Stine & Kendrick of their right to a trial of a personal action in the county of their residence. G. & S. Co. v. M. & H. F. C. Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 Pac. 495. And the fact is that the change of the place of trial was made upon the motion of said Stine & Kendrick and to the place of their residence.

For additional authority we may cite Samuel v. Allen, 98 Cal. 406, 33 Pac. 273; Gallup et al. v. Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage District, 151 Pac. 1142; Anaheim O. F. Hall Ass'n v. Mitchell, 6 Cal. App. 431, 92 Pac. 331.

We think the order was correctly made, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 63

RAGAN v. RAGAN. (Civ. 1422.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 29, 1915.)

1. DEEDS ⊂=208—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE.
Evidence in a suit involving the question of delivery of a deed held sufficient to support a finding of delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 625–632; Dec. Dig. ⊂=208.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=931 — REVIEW — FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.
In case of a finding on conflicting evidence, the appellate court must be controlled by that favorable thereto, there being no inherent improbability therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3728, 3762–3771; Dec. Dig. ⊂=931.]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂=267 — COMMUNITY PROPERTY—CONVEYANCES.
Under Civ. Code, § 172, providing that the husband cannot convey community property without a valuable consideration, unless the wife consent, her consent is unnecessary to his conveyance for a valuable consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 896, 929–938; Dec. Dig. ⊂=267.]

4. EVIDENCE ⊂=471 — CONCLUSION—AMOUNT PAID.
The question, "What is your estimate of the amount of money you paid?" appearing to be one calling for the best recollection of witness, and to be so understood by him, he having stated that he had no memorandum of what he paid, and could not state it exactly, but that he had it in his mind, was not objectionable as calling for a conclusion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149–2185; Dec. Dig. ⊂=471.]

5. EVIDENCE ⊂=143—ADMISSIBILITY.
Sustaining an objection to the question "You thought it would be better to record the C. deed?" was not error; what witness thought of it being no consequence, aside from the fact that it was quite apparent from her conduct that she did think it was better to record that deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 424, 426–428; Dec. Dig. ⊂=143.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by C. K. Ragan against Chase S. Ragan. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for appellant. John G. Covert, of Hanford, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff is the son, and defendant the brother, of one C. K. Ragan. Shortly after the birth of plaintiff, his mother obtained a divorce from his father, and the latter remarried in the year 1877. The father had no children by his second marriage, and he died intestate, on May 27, 1910, in the county of Kings, this state, leaving as his only heirs his widow, Mary E. Ragan, and plaintiff.

The complaint alleges that C. K. Ragan and his wife, after the year 1891, and prior to the 21st of November, 1906, acquired certain community property, including the land in controversy in this action, consisting of 80 acres of the value of $8,000; that on the 21st day of November, 1906, C. K. Ragan signed an instrument purporting to be a deed conveying to the defendant said 80 acres of land. It is alleged, on information and belief, that said deed was never delivered, that there was no consideration for it, that it was in the nature of a gift and was signed without the consent of the wife of said C. K. Ragan and with the intention on his part to defraud his wife and his son of their rights in the property. The complaint further alleged that plaintiff has been the owner of an undivided one-half interest in this real property since said 27th day of May, 1910. The prayer was for a decree quieting plaintiff's said title and canceling said pretended deed. The answer put in issue the material allegations of the complaint, and the findings and judgment were in favor of defendant.

In his reply brief appellant declares:

"It will be noticed from an inspection of these specifications (in the bill of exceptions) that the real question at issue was whether or not the deed under which defendant claims title was ever in fact delivered by plaintiff's intestate, C. K. Ragan. Plaintiff also specifies certain errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by him, consisting largely of rulings of the court in the admission of testimony."

[1] As to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of delivery, we can perceive no possible doubt. The law is, of course, as quoted by appellant from Hayden v. Collins, 1 Cal. App. 263, 81 Pac. 1120:

"But it is absolutely essential to the validity and effectiveness of a deed in escrow that it be delivered to a third person for the grantee, beyond any power in the grantor to recall or revoke it. The grantor must clearly and unequivocally evidence an intent and purpose to part with the possession and control of the deed for all time. In short, the delivery and transfer must be irrevocable."

The question of escrow, however, need not be considered, as there is a sufficient showing to support the finding that:

"Said deed was thereafter, to wit, on or about the 25th or 26th of April, 1910, duly and regularly delivered by said C. K. Ragan to said defendant, Chase S. Ragan, at the home of said Chase S. Ragan."

Witness Charles Tomer testified:

"I visited C. K. Ragan frequently during his illness and talked with him about various matters. I remember a conversation with him about two weeks before his death; I remember the substance of what was said at that time about a deed to Chase S. Ragan of that land. Mrs. Chase Ragan was present. I can state the substance of the conversation. He said he had sold Chase Ragan that place, and he had paid for it and he had given him a deed."

Defendant testified:

"I bought the ranch and was to pay for it yearly. The agreement was oral. C. K. Ragan said that I could have this piece of land if I would pay him at the rate of 8 per cent. interest a year as long as he lived, providing he didn't live over ten years, if I would pay him $320 a year, and I spoke about not having the money then and he said he would let me have $500 the same as he did the ranch if I would pay him 8 per cent. on it, so I bought it under those conditions. * * * I told him I would take the ranch under those conditions and I took possession of the ranch; I don't know just exactly the day of the month, but it was in 1906; I came here to town and of course we talked it over and we had made the bargain for the ranch. * * * He handed me this deed; he says, 'Here, Chase, is the deed to your piece of land out there,' and he says, 'You take it and look at it and see that it is all right,' so I says, 'I don't know whether it is right or not,' and if my memory serves me right I took the deed over to Frank Hight and I think that Frank Hight found some little mistake in the deed and corrected it and I took it back and gave it to C. K. Ragan and asked him what he was going to do with it; he said he was going to put it in escrow; I didn't pay any attention to it; * * * I took him out to my house and looked after him; * * * he said if he died before the payments were made I was to have my deed and the place was paid for."

The witness further stated that he took possession of the land in pursuance of his agreement with C. K. Ragan, and, furthermore, that he put improvements upon the land of the value of $2,500, and that two or three weeks before his brother died—

"my wife and me was sitting by his cot; he was quite sick and he had that little tin box and was looking over his papers, and we sat there and he come to that deed and he handed it to me and he says: 'Chase, here is the deed to your place, and I told Judge Ferguson to take this deed in and have it recorded with the rest of them;' * * * and I saw him a day or two later and paid him for recording the deed."

There is other corroborative testimony, but from the foregoing it is certainly a rational conclusion that, about three weeks before he died, the grantor delivered to said grantee the deed with the intention that the title should vest absolutely in the latter, whatever doubt may be entertained as to the sufficiency of the first manual tradition of the deed to constitute a legal delivery.

[2] Of the contention that decedent had executed a prior deed of the same premises to Ida M. Ragan, the wife of defendant, and therefore had no title to convey to respondent, it is sufficient to say that there is sufficient evidence to support the theory that said deed was never delivered, and, if delivered, that it was subsequent to the delivery of said deed to respondent. It is hardly necessary to add that we must be controlled by the evidence favorable to respondent's contention rather than that which seems to support appellant's view. Extended consideration is devoted in the briefs to the question of the credibility of the evidence in support of the findings, but it is not of moment here, since we discern no inherent improbability therein.

[3] The second point made by appellant is that the deed to respondent was and is void because in contravention of that portion of section 172 of the Civil Code providing that the husband "cannot make a gift of such community property, or convey the same without a valuable consideration, unless the wife, in writing, consent thereto." There would seem to be force in the contention of respondent that this provision was enacted for the sole benefit of the wife, and that no other person could or would have a right to complain of its violation, and that since she was not a party to the action or directly or indirectly interested therein, the objection cannot be considered. However, the soundness of this view need not be asserted, as there is an answer to appellant's contention that cannot be gainsaid. The court found on sufficient evidence that the husband conveyed the property not only for a valuable, but for an adequate, consideration. This unquestionably he had a right to do, under said section 172, without the consent of his wife. The evidence in support of this finding is set forth in the brief of respondent, and need not be repeated here. The court being of the opinion—and that opinion being legally supported—that the husband had conveyed the property for a valuable consideration, it was, of course not erroneous to sustain an objection to the offer to show that the wife's consent to the transfer was not obtained. This consideration, as well as the question whether said land was community property, was rendered immaterial by the finding and evidence already mentioned as to the sale for a valuable consideration.

[4] An objection as calling for the conclusion of the witness was made by appellant to this question asked of defendant:

"Well, what is your estimate of the amount of money you paid, Mr. Ragan?"

The context, however, shows that counsel was calling for the best recollection of the witness, and the question was so understood. He had stated that he had no memorandum of the amount he had paid and he could not state it exactly, but he had it in his mind. The evidence was somewhat uncertain, but we think it was admissible for what it was worth.

[5] We can see no error in sustaining an objection to the following question asked of Mrs. Ragan:

"And you thought it would be better to record the Chase S. Ragan deed?"

What she thought in reference to it was of no consequence, and, besides, it was quite apparent from her conduct that she did think it was "better" to record that deed. It may be said, also, that she substantially answered the question subsequently.

Two other alleged errors in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence are suggested, but they seem so inconsequential as not to merit specific attention. Indeed, in view of the theory of the case adopted by the trial court, it could not be held that any or all of the rulings upon the admission of evidence, if technically erroneous, resulted in any prejudice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 87

GLINDEMANN v. EHRENPFORT.

(Civ. 1580.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 1, 1915.)

1. FRAUD ⟸58—VALUE AT TIME OF SALE—NECESSITY OF EVIDENCE.

Judgment for plaintiff in an action for fraud in the sale of stock cannot stand, absent evidence of its value at time of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 55–59; Dec. Dig. ⟸58.]

2. FRAUD ⟸58—VALUE AT TIME OF SALE—STOCKS—DIVIDENDS—EVIDENCE.

Failure to pay dividends on stock is not evidence, in an action for fraud in its sale, that it had no value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 55–59; Dec. Dig. ⟸58.]

3. FRAUD ⟸59—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The damages for fraudulent representations in the sale of stock is the difference between its value at the time and what it would have been had the representations been true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 60–62, 64; Dec. Dig. ⟸59.]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸179—FRAUD—COMPLAINT.

Relative to the statute of limitations, the allegation of the complaint, in an action for fraud, that it was not known or discovered by plaintiff till a certain day, is insufficient to excuse delay in bringing action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 668, 669; Dec. Dig. ⟸179.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Adolphus E. Graupner, Judge.

Action by William Glindemann against William Ehrenpfort. From an adverse judgment and order, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Liess & Sweasey, of San Francisco, for appellant. James M. Hanley, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This action was brought to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff, William Glindemann, by reason of certain alleged false and fraudulent representations made by defendant concerning the value of certain shares of corporate stock, and the interest or dividends that such stock paid, whereby plaintiff was induced to purchase said stock from the defendant. The case was tried with a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $420, and this appeal is from the judgment rendered thereon and from the order denying the defendant a new trial.

It is insisted by the appellant that there is no evidence upon which the verdict and judgment can be sustained.

The facts leading up to the transaction, briefly stated, are these: In February, 1906, the defendant purchased ten shares of the capital stock of the Central Trust Company for the sum of $1,100. One month thereafter he received a semiannual dividend of $25 from profits earned by the stock prior to his purchase, the rate of dividend being approximately 5 per cent. per annum. Shortly thereafter the fire of 1906 occurred in the city and county of San Francisco, causing a suspension of the dividends upon the stock. On January 3, 1907, ten months after defendant had received the dividends referred to, he sold said ten shares of stock to the plaintiff herein for the sum of $1,100; said sum being the exact amount that defendant had paid for the stock eleven months previously. The following day plaintiff resold the stock to his sister-in-law, a Mrs. Schweitzer. No dividends were declared on said stock during the succeeding years of 1907 or 1908, or until July 1, 1909, when a dividend of $3 per share was paid, followed semiannually by similar dividends up to the time of the trial in March, 1914. In February, 1911, at a point of time four years and over subsequent to the date of the sale and transfer of the stock to Mrs. Schweitzer, the Central Trust Company and the Anglo-California Trust Company became merged. At the time of the merger Mrs. Schweitzer delivered up her shares, and received in exchange therefor six shares of Anglo-California Trust Company stock, and the sum of $80, which sum was the equivalent of a fractional two-thirds share of said stock. On February 1, 1913, six years after the sale of the stock to the plaintiff, he was informed that his sister-in-law, Mrs. Schweitzer, felt bitter towards him on account of his having sold her the stock; and upon interviewing her upon the subject she informed him that she had not received any dividends on the stock until July, 1909, and also that he had misrepresented the value of the stock to her, and that it was not worth the sum of $110 per share at the time of her purchase. Thereafter plaintiff claims he paid to Mrs. Schweitzer the sum of $420. This sum, it appears, was the difference between $800, which was the value that the plaintiff and Mrs. Schweitzer determined the stock to be worth, and the sum of $1,100, the price paid to plaintiff by Mrs. Schweitzer for the stock; and it seems this sum was sufficient to include interest from the date of the investment. On May 16, 1913, six years and four months after the sale by defendant to the plaintiff of the stock, and four years subsequent to the resumption of the payment of regular dividends thereon, plaintiff filed his complaint herein alleging fraud in the procurement of the sale.

[1] Plaintiff alleged in his complaint, as a basis for his cause of action, that, at the time of the sale by defendant to plaintiff, the defendant represented to him that said stock was worth the sum of $1,100, being $110 per share, and was bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The evidence in support of this allegation shows that defendant informed plaintiff that he had paid the sum of $110 per share for the stock. With reference to the alleged representations of defendant concerning the interest, the evidence is not clear upon the point as to whether or not the defendant represented that the stock was paying 5 or 6 per cent. at the time of its transfer from the defendant to plaintiff. However that may be, the judgment cannot stand for the reason that there is absolutely no evidence in the record of the value of the stock either at the time of its transfer from the defendant, or at the time of its transfer from the plaintiff to Mrs. Schweitzer. The only evidence relating in any way to that phase of the case consisted of the testimony of Mr. Ouer, a witness for the plaintiff, who is the cashier of the Anglo-California Trust Company, and who was the assistant cashier of the Central Trust Company during the years 1906 and 1907. His testimony was to the effect that the nonpayment of dividends would not necessarily indicate a decrease in the actual value of the stock, and that the stock would really be worth more by the nonpayment of dividends, providing the company was doing a profitable business. He also testified that the stock was not a listed one; that he could not give its actual value in January, 1907; and that its value depended entirely upon supply and demand. From this testimony counsel for plaintiff argues that it follows that the stock was worthless at the date of both sales, and only became valuable at the time of the merger of the Central and Anglo-California Trust Companies, four years thereafter, at which time the damages became crystallized and fixed, and that therefore the date of the merger is the only date possible at which damages could be assessed in view of the plaintiff's alleged excusable delay in the discovery of the alleged fraud.

[2, 3] While the payment of dividends and the amount thereof are elements affecting the value of corporate stock, it by no means follows that such stock has no value because of the failure to pay dividends thereon. Wegerer v. Jordan, 10 Cal. App. 362, 365, 101

Pac. 1066. In cases of this character the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the stock at the time of the transaction if the alleged representations had been true, and what it was then actually worth. However, the amount of the verdict was undoubtedly based upon the compromise agreement made between plaintiff and his sister-in-law six years after the transaction took place; and that this is so is evident from the fact that the verdict is for the exact amount claimed to have been paid to her by the plaintiff. Conceding that this sum represented the difference in value of the stock between the time of sale and the date when the merger of the companies took place, it by no means affords a criterion of the value of the stock at the time of the sale. We conclude therefore that, there being no evidence of the value of the stock at the time of the transfer, there is absolutely no basis upon which a verdict could be predicated.

[4] Defendant also invokes the statute of limitations as a shield to the action. As before stated, the complaint was filed six years and four months after the alleged fraud. No facts are pleaded showing why the alleged fraud was not sooner discovered. The complaint contains the mere statement that the fraud was not known or discovered by the plaintiff until about the 1st day of February, 1913. Such an allegation is insufficient to excuse the delay in bringing the action. People v. San Joaquin, etc., Ass'n, 151 Cal. 797, 91 Pac. 740; Truett v. Onderdonk, 120 Cal. 581, 589, 53 Pac. 26.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(29 Cal. A. 68)

PERKINS v. PERKINS. (Civ. 1773.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 29, 1915.)

1. DIVORCE ⇐150 — TRIAL — FINDINGS OF FACT.

Finding in a divorce suit, that the evidence does not prove extreme cruelty and is insufficient to warrant a divorce, is insufficient as a finding of facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 499–508; Dec. Dig. ⇐150.]

2. DIVORCE ⇐150 — FINDINGS OF FACT — NECESSITY—"AS IN OTHER CASES."

The words "as in other cases," in Civ. Code, § 131, providing that in actions for divorce, the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases, and if it determines that no divorce shall be granted final judgment must thereupon be entered accordingly, refer to the form of the findings, and do not relieve the court of the necessity of making findings of facts, where defendant defaults, though divorce be denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 499–508; Dec. Dig. ⇐150.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, As In Other Cases.]

3. DIVORCE ⇐27 — GROUNDS — EXTREME CRUELTY.

A continual course of conduct of a husband, consisting of acts calculated to irritate and humiliate her and produce the exceedingly high state of nervous tension and distraction to which she is thereby finally driven, is enough to constitute extreme cruelty as ground for divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 62–83; Dec. Dig. ⇐27.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Extreme Cruelty.]

4. DIVORCE ⇐116—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff in divorce may testify as to specific acts of cruelty, though there can be no corroboration thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 379–385; Dec. Dig. ⇐116.]

5. DIVORCE ⇐127 — EVIDENCE — CORROBORATION.

The physicians of plaintiff in divorce for extreme cruelty may, as corroboration, testify generally to the subject to which she ascribed her condition when she consulted them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 403–407; Dec. Dig. ⇐127.]

6. DIVORCE ⇐127 — EVIDENCE — CORROBORATION.

Under Civ. Code § 130, providing that no divorce can be granted on the uncorroborated testimony of the parties, the main purpose of which is to prevent collusion, all the matters testified to by plaintiff need not be corroborated, but the cruelty alleged consisting of successive acts of cruelty, it is enough that a considerable number of them are testified to by others, or that there is other evidence strongly tending to strengthen and confirm her statements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 403–407; Dec. Dig. ⇐127.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Emily S. Perkins against Gregory Perkins, Jr. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hutton & Williams, Edwin A. Meserve, and Shirly E. Meserve, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal taken from a judgment denying the plaintiff a decree of divorce. The defendant suffered default, and the court heard testimony at great length, all of which is presented here by transcript of the reporter. The ground alleged was extreme cruelty. As described in the complaint, the facts relied upon were those which it is asserted established a course of cruel conduct practiced by the defendant against the plaintiff, and which commenced within a few weeks after their marriage in June, 1911, and continued almost uninterruptedly for a year and a half, or until the plaintiff left the defendant. At the conclusion of the testimony the court orally summed up the case as being one of incompatibility of temperament for which no divorce could be granted, and declared that the proof did not show extreme cruelty. No findings of fact were made.

[1, 2] The only purported finding of any kind is the recitation found in the judgment as follows:

"The court finds the evidence did not prove extreme cruelty, and is insufficient to warrant a decree of divorce."

This finding, if it was intended as a finding of fact, and if written findings are required to be made in divorce actions, was wholly insufficient. Franklin v. Franklin, 140 Cal. 607, 74 Pac. 155. One of the claims of appellant is that the judgment should be reversed, because it is unsupported by findings which it is argued are required to be made under the provisions of section 131, Civil Code. This contention presents for consideration the question as to whether in actions for divorce, where the adverse party has made default, the court is required to express its decision in the form of findings of fact. Section 632, Code of Civil Procedure, requires the court generally, where a trial of a question of fact is had, to give its decision in writing. In the case of Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 52 Pac. 122, 65 Am. St. Rep. 147, it was held that in a divorce case where no answer was filed there was presented no issue of fact, strictly speaking, to be determined by the court. And in Waller v. Weston, 125 Cal. 201, 57 Pac. 892, considering the requirement of section 632, Code of Civil Procedure, it was said:

"It is contemplated by our law that findings of fact shall be made only upon issues joined by the pleadings under section 590 of the Code of Civil Procedure. * * *"

At the time these decisions were rendered section 131 of the Civil Code did not contain the provision requiring the court to make its decision in divorce cases on the questions of fact in form as in other cases. That section in its first provision is as follows:

"In actions for divorce, the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases, and if it determines that no divorce shall be granted, final judgment must thereupon be entered accordingly. * * *"

In construing that portion of this section which declares that in divorce actions the decision and conclusions of law shall be filed "as in other cases," we are inclined to the view proposed by the appellant, which is that the words "as in other cases" refer to the form of the findings, and should not be taken as intended to relieve the trial judge, in cases where default has been entered in a divorce case against one of the parties, from making his decision in writing. This section coming as new legislation, following the decision in the Foley Case, we may, we think, properly indulge the presumption that the Legislature intended to correct what it deemed to be a deficiency in the law. Moreover, it seems to us not to be correct to say that there are no issues to be tried in divorce actions, when the law requires strict proof to be made of a plaintiff's cause of action. Section 130, Civ. Code. In this view we are in strict accord with the reasoning of the court in the case of Nelson v. Nelson, 18 Cal. App. 602, 123 Pac. 1099, where the court, by Justice Burnett, said:

"Ordinarily, there would be no 'trial of a question of fact' where the fact is admitted by the failure to deny it, but where the asserted fact is the ground upon which a party relies for divorce, it must be established as though denied, since 'no divorce can be granted upon the default of the defendant, or upon the uncorroborated statement, admission or testimony of the parties.'"

The court in that decision takes notice of the provisions of section 131, Civil Code, and concludes that where a cross-complaint stands in an action for divorce without answer, the trial judge is not excused from making his decision in writing upon the issues of fact proposed therein. It is only fair that a party who has suffered an adverse decision at the hands of the court, based upon alleged insufficient proof, should have the benefit of a written declaration as to the particular conclusions arrived at by the court. This case most aptly illustrates the sound reason for such a requirement. For aught that appears from the judgment made by the court in this case, the trial judge may have considered that all of the facts alleged had been sufficiently proven and corroborated, but had determined from those facts that as a legal conclusion the acts complained of did not amount to extreme cruelty.

[3] If such was his conclusion, it may be unhesitatingly said, upon the complete record of the testimony as it is presented, that such a determination is not borne out by the proof. The plaintiff here relied upon a course of conduct practiced by the defendant habitually, regularly, and almost continuously from a date a few weeks after the marriage, down to the day that she finally left him. This conduct, as alleged and testified to by her, consisted in acts which were calculated to irritate and humiliate the plaintiff and produce the exceedingly high state of nervous tension and distraction to which it was shown she had finally been driven. It will serve no useful purpose to recite the evidence with great detail. In the main, the facts were: The plaintiff, at the time of her marriage to the defendant, was a widow, having two sons by a former marriage to whom she was much attached, and who were members of her household at the times they were not away at school and college; that defendant prior to his marriage represented that he had a business by which he earned about $300 per month; that plaintiff was possessed of a considerable amount of property and an income large enough to supply all the needs of herself and family; that knowing defendant had habitually supported an invalid mother, immediately upon her marriage with him and in order to provide for the support of this mother during the time that plaintiff and her husband would be away on their wedding trip, she gave the defendant $6,000 for the use of his mother; that thereafter she proposed and was willing to allow him several hundred dollars per month for his personal use out of her own estate in return for very nominal services to be performed by him in connection with the management of her property; that she desired to and did retain direct charge of large property interests, and that from the beginning this attitude on her part to manage her own affairs seemed to exasperate the defendant; that he became moody, and upon many occasions shown in the testimony would become sullen and cry and refuse to mingle with the household, although he persisted in remaining in the presence of the plaintiff practically all the time, both day and night; that so persistent was he in his personal attentions that plaintiff could not even visit her bathroom without his accompanying her; that upon one occasion he removed the lock from the bathroom door in order to prevent the plaintiff from denying him access to that room while she was making use of it; that he would not allow her to telephone to her lady friends without being present and standing near the telephone and at times, if anything was said which did not particularly please him, he would take the telephone away from the plaintiff and hang it up; that in the presence of her lady friends and generally in the presence of guests he would act in a moody, sullen, and insulting manner toward her; that upon one or more occasions he insisted upon her leaving the house at a very early hour in the morning to attend communion service when she was in a sick condition, and when she desired to have a cup of coffee before starting and when the servant offered her the coffee, he rudely seized her by the arm, forced her through the door, and compelled her to go with him in her weak condition without nourishment; that when he became displeased at anything, which was a frequent and constant occurrence, he would sulk and cry and stare at plaintiff, and when plaintiff would beg him to tell her what was the matter would make no response, and would sometimes continue in that attitude for three or four days, not once speaking to the plaintiff; that the defendant on various occasions accused the plaintiff of being untruthful and treated her in an uncivil and contemptuous manner, both in the presence of her friends and strangers and privately.

This course of conduct was shown to have been quite the regular thing with the defendant. The evidence showed that plaintiff was naturally a nervous woman; that she had always dwelt in a peaceful and harmonious atmosphere and had been very happy in her family relations; that the conduct of the defendant so preyed upon her nervous organism that she became restless and sleepless, and when examined by her family physicians after having lived with the defendant for some time, was found to be in such a condition of nervous unrest as to threaten her complete prostration. These physicians had known the plaintiff prior to her marriage, and were able to testify that she had always been normal, and, as one of them said, organically she was without disease. That the general course of conduct was as has been described, the plaintiff testified to fully, and in a general way all of the facts stated by her were corroborated by independent witnesses. While we think that the judgment in this case must necessarily be reversed for lack of any findings of fact, we have deemed it advisable to consider the evidence as though the law did not require such findings in default divorce cases. We do this more particularly because the question of the sufficiency of the evidence is argued in the very able brief presented by counsel for appellant, as well as certain alleged errors which the court committed in the course of the trial. To a proper end, too, this discussion may be of benefit to the trial court upon a rehearing of this matter in the event that any such is had. We may fairly surmise from the oral remarks made by the trial judge, which of course have no formal potency as indicating what his findings of fact might have been, that he did not consider that the evidence, assuming the whole truth of it and assuming sufficient corroboration, as there was, showed a case of extreme cruelty within the meaning of the definition given by the Civil Code.

In the earlier decisions of our Supreme Court, in consonance with the ancient rule, it was in effect announced that there could be no extreme cruelty as a result of mental irritation until a perceptible effect had been produced upon the body or health of the complaining party. In the case of Waldron v. Waldron, 85 Cal. 251, 24 Pac. 649, 9 L. R. A. 487, the court, in a majority opinion, said:

"Although the character of the ill treatment, whether it operates directly upon the body or primarily upon the mind alone, and all the attending circumstances, are to be considered for the purpose of estimating the degree of the cruelty, yet the final test of its sufficiency, as a cause of divorce, must be its actual or reasonably apprehended injurious effect upon the body or health of the complaining party."

This was what might be called "the rule of the Puritans," and it is a cause for gratification to know that our law as it has since been established proposes no such extreme and harsh definition for extreme cruelty as it may furnish ground entitling a party to a divorce. In the Waldron Case, Justice McFarland, dissenting, sounded the note which resulted in a later modification of the rule announced in that decision. His words of protest may well be remembered, when he said:

"This doctrine makes legal cruelty depend, not on the misconduct of the husband, but on the endurance of the wife; not on the guilt of the wrongdoer, but on the vitality of the victim. The anguish of the mind must have eaten through the flesh and exhibited itself in bodily disease before there can be any legal evidence of cruelty. But some women, like some men, have inherited from sturdy ancestors physical constitutions so robust, with bone and blood, and muscle and nerve, and heart and lungs, so charged with vitality, that the woes of a Lear would not wear out the machinery or obstruct the currents of healthy physical life. Must such a woman suffer on forever, and only the weak who faint at a gentle reproach be relieved?"

Our Supreme Court receded from the conclusions of the rule asserted in the Waldron Case when it considered the case of Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660. In the opinion there it was said:

"The common judgment of mankind recognizes the fact that there may be unfounded charges and cruel imputations which are not more easily borne than physical bruises, and the necessary effect of which is to cause great mental distress to the person against whom they are made. Whether in any given case there has been inflicted this 'grievous mental suffering' is a pure question of fact, to be deduced from all the circumstances of each particular case, keeping always in view the intelligence, apparent refinement, and delicacy of sentiment of the complaining party."

We cannot imagine from the proof made in this case that the trial judge was impressed with the view that the plaintiff was not a woman of great refinement of sensibility, intelligent and cultured, for the evidence tends to show nothing else. Even where the judge, prompted evidently by personal acquaintance with the parties, sought to show that the plaintiff had always been of a nervous temperament, the answers given in the affirmative would tend to add to, rather than detract from, the strength of the plaintiff's proof, in that they assisted to show that she was of such a temperament as would be more easily and deeply affected by the reprehensible conduct of the husband. In fact, upon all of the material issues presented by the complaint, there is nothing in the record which suggests a case which might be termed one of conflicting evidence.

[4] During the progress of the trial, counsel for the plaintiff, apparently to prove with exactness the disagreeable conduct of the defendant, asked the plaintiff while on the witness stand to describe exactly the acts of the defendant at the times when he would intrude himself upon her privacy, and the court interrupted and told counsel that he ought not to embarrass the witness in regard to matters that could not be corroborated, saying: "I don't pay any attention to those things." Counsel suggested, and very correctly, that all of the matters offered in proof in a divorce action did not need corroboration, but the court did not recede from the attitude expressed in the statement referred to, and counsel then desisted from further examination along that line. We think that the action of the court in this regard placed an improper restriction upon the plaintiff in the conduct of her case. As a litigant before the court she was entitled to offer and have received all competent legal testimony, and it was not for the court to prejudge the effect of this testimony and to announce or suggest in advance that that testimony, taken in connection with all of the proof made in the case, would be of no value and would be disregarded by him. The plaintiff as a witness was being examined by her own counsel. She was "in the hands of her friends"; hence, why this extreme solicitude on the part of the court lest her own attorney should embarrass her by requiring intimate disclosures to be made? She was there under the necessity of making such intimate disclosures in order to apprise the court fully of the discomfort of the position she had occupied with the defendant and of the degree to which her mental sensibilities had been preyed upon. We agree very completely with the statement made in the brief of counsel that trial judges have not the duty in divorce cases to do anything except to see that the law is strictly and fairly complied with. A suitor in a divorce action must, as a litigant, stand in as favorable a light before the law as the plaintiff in a suit on a promissory note. Our Legislature has declared the policy of the law as it shall affect actions for divorce, and has provided that relief shall be granted to parties when certain grounds have been established. In the establishment of these grounds the complaining party has the same right as any other litigant in any other class of actions, not only to the opportunity to present fully his or her case, but to every reasonable assistance of the court to be lent in that direction. We think that the attitude of the trial judge in restricting counsel in his examination of the plaintiff as to the matter adverted to was error of a prejudicial kind. The case of Pratt v. Pratt, 141 Cal. 247, 74 Pac. 742, is in point.

[5] We think, too, that the court might properly have allowed the physicians of the plaintiff to testify generally as to the subject to which plaintiff ascribed her disturbance of mind and health when she consulted them. Not that it would have been proper to have admitted her statement in detail as to any acts committed by the defendant, but merely as tending to show that her disturbed condition was due to marital difficulties. Such evidence is admitted as corroborative in its tendency, just as in criminal actions where the charge may be rape, it is allowed to be shown that the prosecutrix made complaint of the fact that she had been raped at a time reasonably near to that of the alleged occurrence. Such testimony may, in a general though perhaps not in a strict sense, be classed as part of the res gestæ.

[6] It was not necessary that all of the matters alleged and testified to by the plaintiff should be supported by corroborative evidence.

"Where the cruelty consists of successive acts of ill treatment, it is not necessary that there should be direct testimony of other witnesses to every act sworn to by the plaintiff; it is sufficient corroboration if a considerable number of important and material facts are so testified to by other witnesses, or there is other evidence, circumstantial or direct, which strongly tends to strengthen and confirm the statements of the plaintiff. The main purpose of section 130 is to prevent collusion." Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 186, 52 Pac. 298; Avery v. Avery, 148 Cal. 242, 82 Pac. 967.

Our conclusion is, not only that the judgment lacks the support of sufficient findings of fact, but that the evidence does not sustain the judgment denying a divorce, and that the court committed error as to its rulings on the admission of testimony which was prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 78

JOHNSON v. HINKEL et al. (Civ. 1542.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 30, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 28, 1916.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸264—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY — LIMITATIONS — ACCRUAL OF ACTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 359, providing that the title does not affect actions against directors or stockholders of a corporation to recover a penalty or forfeiture imposed, or to enforce a liability created by law, but that such actions must be brought within three years after the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts upon which the penalty or forfeiture attached, or the liability was created, an action against corporate stockholders to enforce their liability for its breach of a lease agreement must be brought within three years from the breach, since the section makes the discovery the starting point of the period of limitation only in cases of actions to recover a penalty or forfeiture, and in actions to enforce a liability created by law the period of limitation is three years from the creation of the liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1084–1098, 2274; Dec. Dig. ⟸264.]

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸264—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—INITIATION OF STATUTORY PERIOD.

For the purpose of the statute of limitations, the liability of an oil company, upon a lease agreement not to remove the casing from oil wells upon abandonment, was created, not by the execution of the agreement, but by the removal of the casing from a well. Such a liability is created by the act or omission by which it is incurred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1084–1098, 2274; Dec. Dig. ⟸264.]

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸80—OIL LEASE—BREACH OF AGREEMENT—DAMAGES.

Under Civ. Code, § 3300, providing that for a breach of contract a party may recover an amount which will compensate him for all the detriment proximately caused by the breach, or which, in the ordinary course of events, would be likely to result therefrom, the lessor of desert lands, which proved to contain no oil, the agreement providing that, if oil was found in certain quantities, the lessee at his option might purchase for $20,000, could not, for breach of the lessee's agreement not to remove casing from a well on abandonment, recover the full damages prayed for of $22,500, irrespective of whether there was oil in the land or not, whether the well was of any value at the time of the removal of the casing, whether it would have been of any value if restored, or whether, as left, the well could have been made useful at a less cost, since, except where exemplary damages are allowable, a party cannot recover for breach of contract more than he would have received by its due performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. ⟸80.]

4. DAMAGES ⟸120—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Except where exemplary damages are given, courts will not allow a party to a contract to recover upon its breach more than he would have received by its due performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 291–305; Dec. Dig. ⟸120.]

5. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸80—OIL LEASE—BREACH—DAMAGES.

Where an oil well was sunk in barren and desert land, valueless except for its oil contents, and such land contained no oil, the only damage suffered by the lessor through the lessee's breach of agreement not to remove casing from a well upon abandonment was the value of the casing when removed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. ⟸80.]

6. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸80 — DAMAGES—OIL LEASE—BREACH.

Where land leased for the purpose of sinking oil wells contained oil, and it was necessary that the casing of a well should be left in it for its further and proper operation, the damage sustained by the lessor by the lessee's breach of its agreement to leave the casing in a well upon abandonment was an amount which would compensate him for all injury or detriment caused by its removal, or which might result therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. ⟸80.]

7. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸80—OIL LEASE—VALIDITY—STATUTE.

A lease of supposed oil lands providing that the lessee should not remove the casing from wells or plug them without the written consent of the owner upon abandonment was not void under St. 1903, p. 399, requiring that upon abandonment of any oil well the owner shall withdraw the casing therefrom and fill up the well, as the statute was not designed to affect the matter, while the lessor had the right to reserve to himself the right to further prosecute the development of the land, though the lessee might conclude to abandon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. ⟸80.]

8. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸80—OIL LEASE—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

A proclamation of the President of the United States withdrawing mineral lands from entry, issued after an oil company entered upon part of such lands as lessee of the occupant and removed the casing from a well, in contravention of the lease, did not affect the right of the lessor to recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. ⟸80.]

9. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸61—ESTOPPEL TO DENY TITLE.

Where the lessor of oil lands was in possession thereof as a locator under the mining laws of the United States when his lessee broke its lease agreement not to remove casing from a well on abandonment, in the lessor's suit for damages the lessee could not question the lessor's title on account of a proclamation of the President withdrawing the lands from entry, the lessor's right to the land as against everybody, except the United States, being the same as though he held in fee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 151, 152, 187–196; Dec. Dig. ⟸61.]

10. Mines and Minerals ⇐80—Oil Lease—Action for Breach of Covenant—Question not to be Litigated.

The validity of a proclamation of the President withdrawing mineral lands from entry could not be litigated in an action by the lessor of part of such lands for breach of the lessee's agreement not to remove casing from an oil well upon abandonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. ⇐80.]

11. Courts ⇐121—Superior Court—Jurisdiction.

The superior court, in an action to enforce the liability of corporate stockholders for its breach of contract, had no jurisdiction as to defendants against each of whom damages for less than $300 were prayed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 410, 413–426, 428, 437, 450, 452, 458, 459, 466; Dec. Dig. ⇐121.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by James B. Johnson against John Hinkel and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying defendants a new trial, they appeal. Judgment and order reversed with directions to dismiss the action as to two defendants.

A. L. Weil, of San Francisco, and Everts & Ewing, of Fresno, for appellants. Barbour & Cashin, and Short & Sutherland, all of Fresno, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover damages in the sum of $22,500 upon a stockholder's liability against defendants, who were stockholders in the Lorene Oil Company, a corporation.

The damage claimed arose from the removal of a quantity of casing from a certain oil well which had been drilled by the Lorene Oil Company upon the plaintiff's land in the Coalinga oil fields upon the abandonment by that company of said lands and of its operations thereon under a certain lease. The action was based upon a breach of the terms of the lease, which had been entered into by the parties thereto under the following circumstances: On the 16th day of March, 1907, the plaintiff entered into a lease with one Wilcox with the object in view that the former's land should be explored for oil and developed. The agreement required Wilcox to drill a well to a depth of at least 3,000 feet, unless oil should be discovered in quantities of 25 barrels of oil per day at a less depth. If oil was discovered, the lessee was to pay to the lessor one-eighth royalty, and he was also given an option to purchase the property for the sum of $20,000. Shortly thereafter, and during the same year, Wilcox assigned his interest in this agreement to the Lorene Oil Company, which assumed all his obligations thereunder. The company drilled a well to a depth of 3,660 feet, being 660 feet deeper than was required by the contract, and, not having made a discovery of oil, abandoned the property. The lease contained the following provision with reference to abandonment:

"In the event oil is not found in paying quantities by the lessee on the land so leased after the compliance with the terms herein, and said lessee desires to abandon the enterprise and to be released from the terms hereof, he shall have the privilege of removing all engines, tanks, and fixtures above ground which he may have placed on said land, but shall not remove the casing from any well or plug any wells thereon without the written consent of said lessor."

Upon the abandonment of the property the company, contrary to this last-mentioned provision, removed over 10,000 feet of casing without the written consent of the lessor, and the breach of the agreement in this respect gave rise to the present controversy.

Plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendants in the sum of $22,500, and this is an appeal from such judgment and from an order denying defendants a new trial.

The defendants make the following points for a reversal of the judgment: (1) That the action was barred by the statute of limitations; (2) errors in the instructions and in the admission of testimony concerning the measure of damages; (3) that the contract was illegal and consequently no recovery could be had thereon; and (4) that the court had no jurisdiction as to two of the defendants.

In support of the first contention it is the claim of the defendants that the action is barred by virtue of the provisions of section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The action was commenced as to certain of the defendants on October 23, 1912, and additional defendants were added by an amended complaint filed March 27, 1913. It is argued that, as it appears on the face of the complaint that the damages were sustained on November 1, 1909, the demurrer should have been sustained as to the parties joined as defendants under the amended complaint; and as to the other defendants, there being a conflict of testimony, that the question should have been left to the jury as to whether the damage was done on October 6, 1909, as testified to by defendants' witnesses, or on November 10th, as stated by the witnesses produced on behalf of the plaintiff. The amended complaint upon which the case went to trial alleged that the fact upon which liability was asserted was not discovered by plaintiff until November, 1910. If the right of action accrued at this date, the statute does not operate as a shield to any of the defendants, except as hereinafter stated. It is insisted by defendants that an action against stockholders in this state is barred within three years from the time the liability is created, and the fact that discovery is not made of the liability within that time is of no consequence, the element of discovery not being a factor for consideration under the section. The trial court instructed the jury as follows:

"I instruct you that, if you find that the plaintiff commenced this action against defendants within three years after the discovery by him that the Lorene Oil Company had committed the acts complained of, and that plaintiff used reasonable diligence in the discovery of the fact that the acts complained of had been committed, and if you further find that the said acts of the Lorene Oil Company resulted in an injury for which plaintiff is entitled to damages, then each of the defendants is individually and personally liable. * * *"

It is conceded that, if counsel for the appellants is correct in his construction of section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial court was in error in so instructing the jury, and that such error is sufficiently important to justify a reversal of the case.

[1] Section 359 reads as follows:

"This title does not affect actions against directors or stockholders of a corporation, to recover a penalty or forfeiture imposed, or to enforce a liability created by law; but such actions must be brought within three years after the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts upon which the penalty or forfeiture attached, or the liability was created."

In support of his contention that the proper construction of the statute is that such action must be brought within three years after the liability is created, and that it does not extend to three years after the discovery of the fact creating such liability, it is argued that neither grammatically nor logically does the section warrant the construction placed upon it by the trial court, and that the appellate courts of this state have never considered this doctrine of the discovery of facts applicable to stockholders' liability, and that the phrase "discovery by the aggrieved party" refers to the facts upon which a "penalty or forfeiture attached," and does not refer to the "liability created by law"; that it refers to illegal acts of directors for which they are liable to either a penalty or forfeiture, and does not apply to the ordinary civil obligation created by law against the stockholders.

The element of discovery in actions of this character was recognized in Moore v. Boyd, 74 Cal. 167, 15 Pac. 670, but in the later case of Royal Trust Co. v. MacBean, 168 Cal. 642, 144 Pac. 139, it would seem that this doctrine has been rejected; for it is there said that a fair reading of the section makes the discovery the starting point of the period of limitation only in cases of actions to recover a penalty or forfeiture, and that in actions to enforce "a liability created by law" the period of limitation is three years from the creation of the liability. We conclude, therefore, that the court erred in giving the instruction complained of.

[2] It is further contended with reference to the statute of limitations that the liability was created at the time of the execution of the lease and prior to the breach thereof by the Lorene Oil Company. In this behalf it is the claim of the defendants that this is the only logical construction to be drawn from the decisions of the Supreme Court; and it is argued that, the Lorene Oil Company having assumed all obligations under the lease in 1907, the liability of the stockholders became fixed at that time, and the statute of limitations was immediately set in motion. In Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 614, 34 Pac. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87, it was held that, whatever the character of liability might be, "it is created by the consummation of the contract, act, or omission by which the liability is incurred." The liability here claimed was not created at the time the lease was assigned to the corporation in 1907, but was so created by the act of the corporation in removing the casing from the well. Upon this question involving the statute of limitations, therefore, we conclude that the objection of the defendants is not well taken.

[3-6] As stated by counsel for both parties, the important question to be determined in the case is the correct measure of damages for the breach of the contract in removing the casing from the well. Plaintiff and defendant have quite different theories upon this subject. It is the claim of plaintiff that, the lessee not being permitted under the terms of the lease to remove any casing from the well without the written consent of the lessor, upon proof of such removal the only question of fact to be determined by the jury was the amount which it would cost to replace the well in the same condition it was in at the time the Lorene Oil Company abandoned the premises and removed the casing. The theory of the defendants was and is that the land where the well was situated was barren, desert land, and valuable only if it contained oil; that the well itself was of value only in so far as it could be used to produce oil; that no attempt had been made by plaintiff to produce oil from the property since its abandonment and up to the time of the trial, a lapse of time of some four years; that there was no oil in the well; that the Lorene Oil Company had abandoned it after having expended from $40,000 to $60,000 in development work; that neither the plaintiff nor any one else had any wish, desire, or intent to produce any oil from the land or to use the well for that purpose, and that consequently the well was valueless, and the plaintiff suffered no damage, no matter what was done to it. It is admitted that the Lorene Oil Company had removed some 10,000 feet of inner casing from the well, but left the well cased from top to bottom. It is also conceded that it was a practical impossibility to take the casing that had been removed from the well and put it back so as to restore the well to its former condition, and that it was less costly and far more certain in results to drill an entirely new well than to attempt to replace the casing in the old one, and that a new well would cost anywhere from $40,000 to $60,000. The amount of damages claimed by plaintiff was $22,500, a sum much less than the minimum amount which, according to the evidence, it would take to put the well in the same condition that it was in before the casing was removed from it.

The trial court adopted the plaintiff's theory that the cost of replacement was the proper measure of damages, and instructed the jury to find an amount sufficient to put the well in the condition it was before the removal of the casing. The instruction given upon this point was as follows:

"I instruct you that under the terms of the lease involved in this action the plaintiff, as lessor, was entitled to have any well drilled by the Lorene Oil Company on the premises described in the lease left in the condition as to the casing therein in which said well was at the time said Lorene Oil Company ceased drilling said well with the intention of abandoning the same; and in this connection I charge you that the plaintiff's right to have said well so left was irrespective of the question whether oil had been discovered on said land, or whether there was reasonable ground to believe that oil would be discovered thereon. If, therefore, you find that the Lorene Oil Company did not leave the well drilled by it in the condition above described, then your verdict must be for the plaintiff in an amount sufficient to place said well in such condition, not exceeding, however, the sum of $22,500."

Under this instruction the jury was practically told to find for the full amount of damages prayed for, regardless of whether there was oil in the land or not, or whether the well was of any value at the time of the removal of the casing, and regardless of whether the well would have been of any value if restored, or whether the well as left could have been made thoroughly useful at a less cost. We are of the opinion that the instruction was erroneous.

The instruction was based on the theory of plaintiff that he was entitled to have the casing remain in the well, for the reason that the lease so provided, and that this right was not dependent or based upon the use to which the lessor might thereafter put such well, or whether thereafter he ever used it at all; that it was enough for the corporation to know that it was "so nominated in the bond." It is a fundamental rule of law that courts will not, except where exemplary damages are given, allow a party to a contract to recover upon its breach more than he would have received by its due performance. The Civil Code, in providing for the measure of damages in the case of a breach of contract lays down the rule that a party is entitled to recover an amount which will compensate him for all the detriment proximately caused by the breach or which in the ordinary course of events would be likely to result therefrom. Civ. Code, § 3300. In the early case of De Costa v. Massachusetts Min. Co., 17 Cal. 613, where the plaintiff had brought an action for damages for the digging of a ditch across a piece of land, the court below awarded sufficient damages to pay the expense of filling and restoring the land to its original condition; and the Supreme Court, in reversing the judgment, said:

"In assessing the damages the court proceeded on an incorrect basis, and, of course, arrived at an erroneous result. The plaintiff could not recover beyond the injury sustained, and it was improper to award compensation for an expense which might never have been incurred. It is possible that the cost of filling up the ditch may far exceed any injury resulting from its present condition, and in that case, it is not probable that the amount would ever be used for that purpose."

See, also, Harvey v. Sides Silver Min. Co., 1 Nev. 541, 90 Am. Dec. 510.

So here defendants sought to ascertain from plaintiff whether or not he ever intended to pursue development work for oil, but upon objection by his counsel his intention was kept from the jury. Under the instruction here given, irrespective of the testimony of defendants' witnesses that the land in question was not oil land, and that therefore the leaving of the casing in the well according to the agreement would have availed plaintiff nothing, the jury was obliged to find the amount of damages claimed, based on the cost of the well, although convinced that plaintiff would have gained nothing by a full performance of the contract except the value of the casing when removed from the well. Again, by reason of the instruction the value of the casing was ignored, and by it the first cost was made the criterion, irrespective of the fact that the well was useless. Defendants introduced evidence, upon which there was a conflict, to show that in order to make the well a producing one it would be less troublesome and expensive to accomplish this purpose with the casing taken out of the well than if left in. By this instruction the latter question was eliminated from the consideration of the jury. This was a proper matter to be considered in the assessment of the damages suffered; as plaintiff is entitled, and only entitled, to recover his pecuniary loss. In our opinion, these and kindred questions are proper ones for consideration by court or jury in determining damages in cases of this kind. If the land upon which the well was situated was barren and desert land, and its only value was for its oil contents, and it could be proved that it contained no oil, then the only damage suffered by plaintiff would be the value of the casing when removed from the well. If, on the other hand, the land contained oil, and it was necessary that the casing should be left in the well for its further and proper operation, then the damage sustained would be an amount which would compensate plaintiff for all the injury or detriment caused by its removal or which might result therefrom, and no more. Here if oil had been discovered the plaintiff would have been entitled to receive the sum of $20,000 as the purchase price of the land had the Lorene Oil Company exercised the option given it. No oil was discovered; and under the theory of the measure of damages adopted by the trial court the plaintiff by the verdict obtains a judgment for $22,500, even conceding the fact to be that the land contained no oil and was otherwise worthless. The law affords no such remedy.

Certain rulings of the court on the admission of testimony are claimed to be erroneous. These rulings in the main were based upon the court's theory of the measure of damages, and it is unnecessary to discuss them in view of what we have already stated upon that subject.

[7] Defendants further contend that, by reason of the fact that the complaint contains an allegation that the land in question is oil land, the provision in the contract that the lessee should not remove the casing therefrom or plug any wells without the written consent of the lessor, makes the contract void upon its face, and that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained upon that ground. The basis of this contention is that such provision is violative of the act to prevent injury to oil or petroleum-bearing strata by the infiltration or intrusion of water therein (St. 1903, p. 399), and which requires that upon the abandonment of any oil well it shall be the duty of the owner to withdraw the casing therefrom and fill up such well. The statute was not designed to affect a case of this character. The lessor had the undoubted right too reserve unto himself the right to further prosecute the development of the land, irrespective of the fact that the lessee might conclude to abandon the lease for the reason that he was of the opinion that it was useless to further prosecute the work of exploration.

[8-10] And, finally, defendants call the attention of the court to the proclamation of the President of the United States withdrawing from entry certain mineral lands, including the land here in question; and they claim that by reason thereof the plaintiff had no title to this land, and therefore has no cause of action. The proclamation referred to was issued July 2, 1910. The time of the entry of the Lorene Oil Company upon the land as lessee and the time of the removal of the casing were both prior to such proclamation. Whatever rights had accrued as between the parties were not affected by it. Moreover, it is a rule of law that a tenant is not permitted to deny the title of his landlord. At the time of the breach of the covenant in the lease the plaintiff was in lawful possession of the land as a locator under the mining laws of the United States, and his right to the land as against everybody except the United States government was the same as though he held the land in fee. Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 25 L. Ed. 240. Then, too, the validity or invalidity of the proclamation is not a matter that could be litigated in this proceeding.

[11] As to the defendants Katharine Brennan and E. H. Pauson the prayer for damages against each of them is for less than $300; and it is conceded that, under the authority of Myers v. Sierra Valley, etc., 122 Cal. 669, 55 Pac. 689, the superior court had no jurisdiction as to them, and a dismissal of the case as far as they are concerned is consented to.

For the reasons given, the judgment and order are reversed, with directions to dismiss the action as to Katharine Brennan and E. H. Pauson.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

29 Cal. App. 115

COATS v. HORD. (Civ. 1729.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 4, 1915.)

1. SALES ⊂⊃261—"WARRANTY"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

In a contract of sale of personalty, it is not necessary, to create an express warranty, that the word "warrant" or any formal words be used, but any affirmation as to the quality or condition of the goods, if so intended, and so relied upon, is a "warranty."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 727–735; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃261.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Warranty.]

2. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY ⊂⊃13—CONTRACTS—RESCISSION—DAMAGES.

Where plaintiff, who exchanged a horse for a jack, sued to rescind because of breach of warranty of the jack, the judgment for plaintiff for the full value of the horse should have provided for the return of the jack on satisfaction of the money judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. §§ 25–29; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃13.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1153—JUDGMENT—MODIFICATION.

In such case, the failure of the judgment to provide for the return could be corrected by judgment rendered on the appeal, without remand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4507–4512; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃1153.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by Lee B. Coats against Warren H. Hord. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Judgment modified.

E. A. Bridgford and William A. Nunlist, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Walter H. Linforth and Linforth & Herrington, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. [1-3] This is an action brought for the rescission of a contract for the exchange of a stallion for a jack mule, the plaintiff averring that the latter animal proved worthless for the purpose for which he acquired it. The cause was tried upon the issues presented by the pleadings. The court found that the exchange had been brought about through certain statements made by the defendant which amounted to an express warranty of the foal-producing qualities of the mule and which had proven untrue. It further found that the stallion was of the value of $500, and the court thereupon rendered a judgment in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $500, but made no provision in such judgment for the return of the defendant's mule.

The respondent argues in support of such judgment that the finding of the court to the effect that the defendant's mule "was useless and worthless for any purpose and of no value" made it unnecessary to order its return; but we think that this finding must be read in connection with the pleadings and proofs in the case, and, so read, must be limited to the valuelessness of the animal for the uses which induced the exchange.

The appellant contends that the findings of the court with reference to the express warranty of the mule by the defendant are not supported by the evidence in the case; but in this we think he is in error, and that there is sufficient evidence in the record to sustain the findings of the court in that regard. It is not necessary, in order to create an express warranty of an article of personal property, that the word "warrant" should be employed, or that any particular or formal words of warranty should be used. Any affirmation, made at the time of the sale or exchange, as to the quality or condition of the thing sold, will be treated as a warranty if it was so intended, and if the other party acquired the property on the faith of such affirmation. McLennan v. Ohmen, 75 Cal. 558, 17 Pac. 687; Luitweiler, etc., Co. v. Ukiah, etc., Co., 16 Cal. App. 198–207, 116 Pac. 707, 712. In this case we think the plaintiff acted in making the exchange upon the defendant's representations as to the foal-getting qualities of his mule, and that he was entitled to rescind, and that he did in fact rescind with sufficient promptitude to satisfy the rule as to rescission.

The appellant's next contention, however, is a more serious one. The judgment of the court, while giving to the plaintiff in the form of damages all that the evidence showed the stallion to be worth, made no provision in the judgment for the return of the defendant's property. We think the court in this respect was in error, but that it is an error which can be cured by a modification of the judgment without the necessity of another trial of the cause.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the trial court be so modified as to provide that the plaintiff shall return to the defendant his property upon satisfaction of the money judgment in the plaintiff's favor, and that each of the parties shall pay his own costs upon appeal.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

171 Cal. 664

FILM PRODUCERS, Inc., et al. v. JORDAN, Secretary of State. (L. A. 4360.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1916.)

CORPORATIONS ⟸62 — CORPORATE STOCK — COMMON AND PREFERRED STOCK—"SHARE."

Civ. Code, § 290, subd. 6, permitting the issuance of preferred stock, declares that no preference shall be granted or any distinction made between the classes of stock, either as to voting power or the liability of the holders to corporate creditors. Section 307 gives to stockholders the right to vote to the extent of the number of shares held by each, while section 322 declares that each stockholder shall be personally liable for such proportion of the corporate debts as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock. The capital stock of a corporation was $1,000,000, divided into 50,000 shares of common stock of the par value of $1 each, and 47,500 shares of preferred stock of the par value of $20 each. Held, that the articles of incorporation, providing for such a division of corporate stock, were contrary to the law, for if the shareholders were each allowed to vote according to shares the holders of the common stock would control the corporation, though their capital invested was much less than that of the holders of the preferred stock, "shares" of stock being but representatives of value, while if the shareholders were liable for such proportion of the corporate debts as the amount of their shares should bear to the whole of the capital shares the holders of the common stock would be liable in an excessive amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 164; Dec. Dig. ⟸62.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Share.]

In Bank. Petition by the Film Producers, Incorporated, for a writ of mandate against Frank C. Jordan, as Secretary of State. Writ denied.

Frank C. Hill, Lynden Bowring, and Geo. S. Hupp, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Mandate to the secretary of state, who has refused to file petitioners' articles of incorporation, seeking a judgment compelling him to do so.

The secretary's refusal is based upon his conviction that the articles of incorporation do violence to the laws of the state in the following particulars: The capital stock of this corporation is $1,000,000, divided into 50,000 shares of common stock of the par value of $1 each, and 47,500 shares of preferred stock of the par value of $20 each. Our law (Civ. Code, § 290, subd. 6) permits the issuance of preferred capital stock, "provided, however, that no preference shall be granted nor shall any distinction be made between the classes of stock either as to voting power or as to the statutory or constitutional liability of the holders thereof to the creditors of the corporation." Touching the stockholder's liability, section 322 of the Civil Code declares that each stockholder shall be personally liable for such proportion of the corporation debts "as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation."

The preferences, which in terms the articles of incorporation give to the preferred stock or stockholders, are not in and of themselves in violation of our law. If our law is violated it is because by virtue of the differing par values between the common and the preferred stock, of necessity preference is given as to voting power to the common stock, while as to the stockholder's liability preference is given to the preferred stock. Section 307 of the Civil Code gives to stockholders the right to vote to the extent of the "number of shares" held by each. These sections of the Code thus given embody the law controlling the decision of the question.

Petitioners first contend that no violation is done to the law forbidding distinctions between the voting power of common and preferred stock, in that the law simply declares that each share of stock shall be entitled to its vote, and that under these articles of incorporation each share is so given its right to vote. This is unquestionably true. Touching the second position taken by the secretary of state it is argued that when section 322 of the Civil Code uses the words "stock" or "shares," it uses the words interchangeably as meaning the same thing, with the result that each stockholder's liability would be proportioned to the number of shares which he owned, regardless of the par value of the shares. Or, if this be not true, and the words above quoted, used as they are in the alternative, are to be construed as meaning different things, it would then follow that the owner of one share of common stock, who thus owned $1 of the capital stock of the corporation, would be subjected to one-twentieth of the liability that would attach to the owner of one share of preferred stock, who thus owned $20 of the capital stock of the corporation. This position would appear to be equally sound.

The difficulty with both of these positions, however, is that they take no account of the intimate relation necessarily existing under our law between the right to vote stock upon the one hand and the stockholder's liability upon the other. A brief discussion will show what is meant. "Shares" of stock are but representatives of value. They are but paper evidence of ownership of the capital stock of the corporation, and that ownership is precisely such as the share itself declares it to be. Where a corporation such as this has a capital stock of $1,000,000, every owner of one preferred share of stock owns twenty-millionths of the capital stock of the corporation. Every owner of one share of common stock owns but one-millionth of the capital stock of the corporation. To say that each of these is a share and that each is given equal representation under the law because each stockholder is permitted to vote each share is but skimming the surface of the question. Each shareholder is entitled to vote in accordance with his ownership of the capital stock. Throughout the whole history of our law all shares of stock in any given corporation have been of identical par value, and no such questions as are here presented, therefore, have arisen or could arise. Every share represented an equal ownership in the capital stock, and it mattered not whether the law spoke of the right to vote or of the stockholder's liability as being based on and proportioned to "the amount of stock" or to "the number of shares."

Reaching into the vitals of the question, therefore, there is a plain distinction in these articles of incorporation made between the classes of stock in that in one class of stock a single share, representing but one-millionth of the capital stock, is entitled to the same vote that another share representing twenty-millionths of the capital stock is given. Or, to epitomize the consideration, if all of the stock of this corporation is subscribed for at par, stockholders owning the common stock and having but $50,000 of investment will control a corporation with a capital stock of $1,000,000, leaving the owners of $950,000 stock in a hopeless minority. Again we have said that there is an intimate correlation between the voting right and the stockholder's liability. It becomes conspicuous when consideration is paid to the latter question. If it shall be said that in this corporation a stockholder's liability is governed by the proportionate number of shares which he owns, then it must result that one who owns a single share of common stock is subjected to the same liability as one who owns a single share of preferred stock, although his investment and ownership in the corporation will be but one-twentieth of that of the man who, with a larger holding, incurs a less liability. Upon the other hand, if it be said that section 322 is to be construed as imposing liability in proportion to the ownership of the subscribed capital stock, then we still encounter the difficulty that the owner of $20 of the capital stock has a voting power only one-twentieth as great as that of the man who owns but a single dollar's worth of capital stock.

The truth of the matter is that our statutes were framed, and our decisions under them based, upon a capitalization represented by shares of a single par value. The market trading in and the market value of these shares can have no bearing upon the construction of the statutes. It was the clear design of our law that liability should be imposed in proportion to the ownership of the capital stock, and where the shares of capital stock had the same par value it was a matter of indifference whether the law declared that the liability should be in proportion to the owned shares or in proportion to the owned capital stock. The law, however, uses both phrases. When it comes to a stockholder's voting power in a corporation it may not be questioned for a moment but that that fundamental right to vote is based upon ownership of the capital stock as distinguished from shares and not merely upon shares, which are but representatives of value. And as little can it be questioned but that the voting power should be given to the stockholders in proportion to their interest in the capital stock of the corporation.

For these reasons mandate is denied, and the writ discharged.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

29 Cal. App. 117

SLYE et al. v. HUNT, Judge of Superior Court. (Civ. 1773.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 7, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 3, 1916.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⇐42—DELAY IN SETTLEMENT—WAIVER.

Where plaintiff obtained a verdict in December, 1913, on which judgment was entered, and defendant moved for a new trial and perfected an appeal, and, within the time allowed by law, prepared and served a proposed bill of exceptions, to which plaintiff in September, 1914, served proposed amendments not accepted by defendants, and defendants delivered them, together with their proposed bill of exceptions, to the clerk of the court for the judge, the taking up of the settlement in March, 1915, when counsel for both parties were present and participating, without objection to its settlement, was a waiver of any prior delay in the preparation or amendment of the bill, whichever party was responsible therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. ⇐42.]

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⇐41—SETTLEMENT —LACHES.

In such case, where the court then suggested that counsel try to agree upon the amendments to be incorporated in the bill, and report as to matters on which they could not agree, and counsel for plaintiffs took and retained the original bill with the proposed amendments during the succeeding four months, for part of which time the court was in vacation, and where defendant put the matter of further proceedings for settlement of the bill on the calendar, there was no such laches on the part of defendant as would justify the court in refusing to settle the bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 65–71; Dec. Dig. ⇐41.]

3. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⇐41—SETTLEMENT —BURDEN.

Ordinarily the burden is on the proponent of a bill of exceptions to bring the matter of its settlement to hearing and determination, even after he has left it, with its amendments, with the clerk for the judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 65–71; Dec. Dig. ⇐41.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐2—PENDING MOTION—STATUTE.

Where defendants took no appeal from an order denying their motion for new trial after verdict, although they appealed from the judgment and attempted to settle their bill of exceptions, a statutory amendment pending such appeal taking away the right of an independent appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial and substituting a provision for a review thereof on the appeal from the judgment applied so as to entitle defendants to the benefit thereof; as laws affecting procedure apply to pending cases where no substantial remedies are impaired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3–7, 1882, 2421; Dec. Dig. ⇐2.]

Petition by Joseph Slye and others for a writ of mandate against John Hunt, Judge of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. Writ to issue.

Louis H. Ward and Robert W. Harrison, both of San Francisco, for petitioners. Harold I. Cruzan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of mandate, directed to the judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, requiring him to proceed to settle the bill of exceptions and statement in the case of Julia A. Roberts et al. v. Joseph Slye et al. (No. 52138), now pending in said court.

The facts of the case as they appear from the petition are briefly these: The said action of Roberts et al. v. Slye et al. was commenced in said court at some time during the year 1913, and came on for trial in the month of December of that year, at which trial a verdict was rendered in plaintiffs' favor on December 18, 1913, for the sum of $4,500, upon which verdict judgment was entered in due course; that notice of intention to move for a new trial was duly given, and that within 60 days after said judgment an appeal therefrom was perfected to the Supreme Court. Thereafter, within the time allowed by law and the stipulations of counsel, defendants prepared and served a proposed bill of exceptions, embracing a statement of the case, consisting of 172 typewritten pages, to which the plaintiffs in due course prepared and served their proposed amendments, numbering 143, and containing some 87 pages of typewriting. Thereupon and in due time the defendants notified the plaintiffs of their nonacceptance of said amendments, and on September 21, 1914, delivered the same, together with their proposed bill of exceptions, to the clerk of the court for the judge thereof, accompanied by a number of affidavits upon which the motion for a new trial was to be made. Thereafter from various causes the settlement of the bill of exceptions, and consequently the motion for a new trial, were delayed for several months, but finally the former came up for hearing on March 24, 1915, and was then taken up by the court, counsel for both parties being present, and no objection to the settlement of the bill of exceptions being made. After the matter of the settlement had proceeded for some time the judge of the court requested counsel for both sides to confer and attempt to agree on certain of the amendments thereto, and report to him as to what could not be agreed upon, and the further hearing of the matter was continued until such report.

It appears that thereafter four months or thereabouts elapsed, during which some ineffectual efforts were made by respective counsel to come to an agreement, and, these having failed, counsel for the defendants caused the matter of the settlement of the bill to be again placed upon the calendar of the court. Thereafter the plaintiffs moved the court to dismiss the motion for new trial on the ground of defendants' laches in prosecuting the same. The matters of the settlement of the bill of exceptions and of the motion to dismiss were upon the law and motion calendar for August 20, 1915. The court granted the motion to dismiss the motion for a new trial solely upon the ground of defendants' laches in procuring the settlement of their bill of exceptions, and a few days later refused to settle the bill of exceptions and caused the same to be dropped from its calendar.

[1] We think the judge of the trial court should have settled the defendants' bill of exceptions. Whatever delays there may have been in the course of the preparation, proposal, or amendment of the bill prior to the 24th day of March, 1915, or whoever may have been responsible for such delays, the fact that on said last-named day the judge of the court took up and proceeded with the settlement of the bill, counsel for both parties being present and participating in such settlement without objection, constitutes a waiver and cure of previous delays. Hicks v. Masten, 101 Cal. 651, 653, 36 Pac. 130; Horton v. Jacks, 115 Cal. 29, 35, 46 Pac. 920; O'Brien v. O'Brien, 124 Cal. 422, 425, 57 Pac. 225.

[2, 3] On said March 24, 1915, and after the judge and counsel had made some progress toward the settlement of the bill, it appears that the judge suggested to respective counsel that they confer in an attempt to agree upon the amendments to be incorporated in the bill, and that they should at some time thereafter report as to such matters as they might not be able to agree upon. This suggestion was adopted; counsel for the plaintiffs taking, and since retaining, the original bill with its proposed amendments. There is some dispute as to who was responsible for whatever delay there was thereafter and during the succeeding four months; but it appears that during a portion of that time the court was in vacation. It is true, as suggested by plaintiffs' counsel, that the cases hold that ordinarily the burden is cast upon the proponents of a bill of exceptions to bring the matter of its settlement to hearing and determination even after the proponents of the bill have left it, with its amendments, with the clerk for the judge. Miller v. Queen Ins. Co., 2 Cal. App. 267, 83 Pac. 287, and cases cited. The present case, however, presents a somewhat different situation. Here the judge, after proceeding some distance in the performance of his duty in the way of settling the bill, referred the matter to both counsel to confer, agree, if possible, and report back such matters as they could not agree upon to the judge. He thus constituted counsel for both parties in a sense his aids in the duty which was primarily his own, and by so doing invested each with the responsibility of reporting back to him their failure, if any, to agree upon the bill; and this, we think, would be peculiarly true when, as is admitted, plaintiffs' counsel took possession of the partly settled bill with its amendments and retained the same until after his motion to dismiss the motion for a new trial had been made. It appears, in addition, that it was the defendants' counsel who caused the matter of further proceedings for the settlement of the bill to be placed upon the calendar prior to notice of the plaintiffs' motion to dismiss.

We think these admitted facts make it clear that there was no such laches on the part of the defendants in these later proceedings subsequent to March 24, 1915, as would suffice to justify the judge of the court in refusing to settle the bill of exceptions.

[4] It is, however, contended by plaintiffs' counsel that, the defendants having taken no appeal from the order dismissing (which was equivalent to an order denying) their motion for a new trial, no useful purpose can be subserved by the issuance of this writ, to which the defendants respond: First, that they are entitled to use the bill of exceptions upon their appeal from the judgment; and, second, that at the last session of the Legislature the law governing new trials and appeals was so amended as to take away the right of an independent appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, but substituting a provision which permits the appellants upon their appeal from the judgment to have reviewed the errors, if any, of the trial court in denying their motion for a new trial. The plaintiff, however, argues that these amendments are not to be construed as affecting pending, but undetermined, motions for a new trial at the time the law took effect. No authority is cited in support of this contention; and we are satisfied that the rule is well settled that such changes in the law affecting procedure apply to cases pending and conditions existing at the time the statutes take effect where no substantial remedies are impaired. This being so, the defendants are entitled to have their bill of exceptions settled and to whatever benefits they may derive therefrom upon appeal from the judgment.

It is therefore ordered that the writ issue as prayed for in petitioners' petition.

29 Cal. App. 111

SWEET v. RICHVALE LAND CO. et al.

(Civ. 1401.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 3, 1915.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸299—REMEDIES OF VENDOR — RECOVERY OF LAND — RIGHT OF ACTION.

Where a contract for the sale of realty provided that the buyer should forfeit all rights upon his failure to comply with its terms, and that the owner should be released from all obligation at law or in equity to convey, and a payment of $600 due under the contract was not made by the assignee of the buyer in possession, whereupon the owner demanded payment or possession of the premises, both of which were refused, and possession unlawfully withheld from the owner, who had complied and was ready and willing to comply with all the terms of the contract, such owner had a cause of action in ejectment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 837–842; Dec. Dig. ⟸299.]

2. Pleading ⟸208—Demurrer—Specification of Objections.

Where defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not "state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action" against them, and that the complaint joined "several causes of action," the demurrer was insufficient as failing to specifically point out the misjoinder of causes of action or of parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 513–519; Dec. Dig. ⟸208.]

3. Pleading ⟸208—Demurrer—Specification of Objections.

Defendants' demurrer to the complaint that it was "uncertain and ambiguous" was defective, in that it did not specifically point out the uncertainty and ambiguity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 513–519; Dec. Dig. ⟸208.]

4. Appeal and Error ⟸1039—Harmless Error—Misjoinder of Causes.

Any error of the vendor of realty, suing the assignee of the buyer and others in ejectment, in joining a claim for a money judgment for the balance due on the contract of sale, was harmless, where he waived any claim for such money judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4075–4088; Dec. Dig. ⟸1039.]

5. Pleading ⟸248 — Amendment after Submission—Propriety.

In an action of ejectment by the vendor of realty against the assignee of the buyer and others to recover possession upon a default in payment, the allowance, after submission of the cause, of an amendment to the complaint, which originally showed that by failure of defendants to comply with its terms they had forfeited the right to possession of the land, which alleged that the contract provided that, in the event of a failure to comply with its terms, the buyer should forfeit all right to the property, and the vendor be released from all obligation in law or equity to convey, was not improper, since the amendment did not change the cause of action of the complaint, while the court may allow an amended complaint to be filed to conform with the proof even after submission of the case, though under such permission plaintiff may not file an amended complaint stating new causes of action distinct from those contained in the original complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 686, 687, 689–706, 708½, 709; Dec. Dig. ⟸248.]

6. Pleading ⟸238—Amendment after Submission—Notice to Adverse Party.

The fact that defendants had but one day's notice of the allowance of a formal amendment to the complaint after submission of the cause, which amendment was otherwise proper, was of no consequence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 602, 620–625; Dec. Dig. ⟸238.]

7. Vendor and Purchaser ⟸299 — Remedies of Vendor—Action for Possession—Judgment.

In ejectment by the vendor of realty against the assignee of the buyer and others upon default in payment, where the contract provided that a default in any of the terms should work a forfeiture, judgment for the plaintiff for possession of the property necessarily involved judgment of forfeiture by defendants, since the defendants' failure to make a payment, forfeiting their right to possession, was such a default as forfeited all their rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 837–842; Dec. Dig. ⟸299.]

8. Costs ⟸47—Person Liable.

In ejectment by the vendor of realty against the assignee of the buyer and others upon default in payment, where the complaint stated no cause of action against a defendant which had and claimed no interest in the property, judgment for costs against such defendant was improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 185–191; Dec. Dig. ⟸47.]

9. Appeal and Error ⟸417—Notice of Appeal—Sufficiency.

In ejectment by the vendor of realty against the assignee of the buyer and others upon default in payment, though the notice of appeal was not several in form, under the prevailing liberal practice as to such matters, it was sufficient as an appeal by a defendant, against whom the plaintiff stated no cause of action, and who claimed no interest in the property, from the portion of the judgment awarding costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2140–2143; Dec. Dig. ⟸417.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Lucy A. Sweet against the Richvale Land Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Judgment affirmed, except as to costs against the named defendant.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for appellants. J. R. King, of Gridley, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action is in ejectment. The basis of the controversy is an executory contract of sale, the parties thereto being plaintiff and one E. A. Rhinesmith, the latter's interest therein having passed by regular assignment to one John S. Hastings. The complaint alleges ownership and the right of possession of the property in plaintiff; that on the 1st day of October, 1912, said Rhinesmith and plaintiff entered into a contract of sale and purchase of said land (setting out said contract); "that under said contract said defendant took possession of said premises; that said contract provides that, in event of a failure to comply with the terms of said contract, defendants forfeit all right to said property, and said plaintiff is released from all obligation in law or equity to convey said property." Then follow allegations of the various assignments of Rhinesmith's interest terminating in said defendant John S. Hastings, "who is now in possession of said premises." It further appears that a payment of $600 due under said contract on October 1, 1914, together with interest on deferred payments, was not made; that demand was made for said payment or possession of the premises, but that both were refused and defendant "unlawfully withholds possession of said premises from plaintiff; that plaintiff has complied and is ready and willing to comply with all the terms of said contract."

[1] That a cause of action in ejectment is thus stated is entirely clear, and the proposition needs no elaboration. It is sufficient to refer to Haile v. Smith, 128 Cal. 415, 60 Pac. 1032; Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 103, 103 Pac. 329; Empire Investment Co. v. Mort (Sup.) 153 Pac. 236. The general demurrer of defendants was therefore properly overruled.

[2, 3] Defendants also contend that there was a misjoinder of two causes of action, that is, for the recovery of the possession of the realty, and also of the amount of money due under the contract; furthermore, that defendant Richvale Land Company was improperly made a party defendant to the action. The demurrer, however, was as follows:

"The defendants Richvale Land Company and John S. Hastings, appearing herein by their attorney, J. Oscar Goldstein, demur to the complaint herein upon the grounds: First, that the complaint does not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action against the defendants herein; second, that the complaint joins several causes of action in one complaint and is uncertain and ambiguous."

Of course, if said defendants intended to rely upon a misjoinder of causes of action or of parties, it should have been specifically pointed out by the demurrer. Their effort in that regard was equally defective as their assignment of uncertainty and ambiguity. It may be said also that, if a demurrer had been interposed on behalf of said company alone, it probably would have been sustained. It is apparently true that no cause of action was stated against it, but the demurrer was a joint one on the part of said company and Hastings. So also in the subsequent proceedings they were treated by their attorney as sustaining the same relation to plaintiff and to the cause of action, and that the complaint and the evidence were sufficient as against Hastings there can be no kind of doubt.

[4] Another thing to be stated is that plaintiff waived any claim for a money judgment, in fact eliminating that feature altogether from the case. So that, if we concede that there was error in misjoining the said two causes of action, it is quite apparent that it was entirely without prejudice.

[5, 6] One or two other considerations remain to be noticed briefly. After the cause was submitted the court allowed an amended complaint to be filed to conform to the proof, and it is contended by appellants that thereby the cause of action was changed. But in this they are entirely mistaken. It is admitted by appellants that:

"The court had the right and power to allow an amended complaint to be filed to conform with the proof, even after submission of the case."

This practice has, indeed, been approved many times by the appellate courts. It has, however, been held that under such permission:

Plaintiff "is not entitled to file an amended complaint containing statements of new and distinct causes of action not contained in the original complaint." Bowman v. Wohlke, 166 Cal. 121, 135 Pac. 37, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1011.

But a comparison of the original with the amended complaint here shows conclusively that no new cause of action was introduced by the latter. The only change of any moment was in adding the allegation:

"That said contract provides that in event of a failure to comply with the terms of said contract that defendants forfeit all right to said property and said plaintiff is released from all obligations in law or equity to convey said property."

This did not change nor affect the cause of action. The original complaint showed that this contract had been executed, and that by failure of appellants to comply with its terms they had forfeited the right to the possession of the land. Indeed, the cause of action was grounded upon this failure to pay the installments as required by said contract, and all that could be said is that the amended complaint stated the cause of action somewhat more fully than the original. The truth is, as we conceive it, that there was no necessity for filing the amended complaint, but it did no harm; neither was it of any consequence that appellants had only one day's notice of it. Indeed, appellants seem to have relied upon said contract, as they introduced it in evidence, and, of course, they were not prejudiced by an amendment to the complaint which simply added a formal allegation of one of the terms of said contract.

[7] As to the judgment of forfeiture by appellants of all rights under the contract, it may be said that it was necessarily involved in the judgment for possession. The right of possession depended upon the question whether appellants had complied with or violated the terms of said contract. And having found that the payments had not been made as provided, it necessarily followed, under the agreement itself, that the contract was forfeited, and therefore the right of possession of the land destroyed. The two considerations were inseparably connected and the determination of one necessarily involved the other, although the essential purpose of the action was to secure the possession of the land.

[8, 9] The only part of the judgment, it may be said, of which the Richvale Land Company can complain is that awarding costs to the extent of $24.20. This seems to be unwarranted, since the complaint really states no cause of action against said defendant, and the evidence shows that said company had and claimed no interest in or to said property. The notice of appeal is somewhat defective, not being several in form, but, under the liberal practice prevailing now, we think it should be held sufficient as an appeal by said company from said portion of the judgment.

The judgment for costs against said Richvale Land Company is therefore reversed, and in other respects the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 92

ULM v. PRATHER et al. (Civ. 1416.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 1, 1915.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸544—RECORD ON APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for a partnership accounting, the court appointed a receiver upon plaintiff's prayer therefor. The transcript on appeal from the order of appointment contained only the complaint, the order, and the notice of appeal, but no bill of exceptions. The order of appointment recited that it appeared from the complaint that plaintiff had a cause of action and that the property was in danger unless a receiver should be appointed. Held that, even if it were conceded that the complaint was insufficient to warrant the appointment of a receiver, the record, in the absence of a bill of exceptions or other showing as to the proceeding had, was insufficient to present on appeal the question of the propriety of the appointment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2412–2415, 2417–2420, 2422–2426, 2428, 2478, 2479; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 544.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸920—SCOPE OF REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of an affirmative showing that the court abused its discretion in appointing a receiver pendente lite in an action for a partnership accounting, it will be presumed that the court's action was regular, and that the order was made on a sufficient showing of facts, though the facts alleged, taken alone, might not warrant the appointment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3714–3721; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 920.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸634—SCOPE OF REVIEW—MOTION TO DISMISS—AFFIRMANCE.

Where the court acquires jurisdiction of a cause on appeal by the filing of the notice of appeal, and the record brought up fails to show on a mere inspection that the appellant is entitled to relief, the cause must on motion to dismiss be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2775, 2829; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 634.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Action by John W. Ulm against Clarence M. Prather and another. From an order appointing a receiver, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Taylor & Tebbe, of Yreka, for appellants. B. K. Collier and Tapscott & Tapscott, all of Yreka, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action for an accounting and thereby a determination and adjudication of the amount to which the parties to this action are, respectively, entitled, by reason of an agreement of copartnership entered into by and between said parties on the 1st day of June, 1909. Besides praying for an accounting, the complaint asks that a receiver to act pendente lite be appointed by the court to take charge of the partnership property and assets, "to properly protect and care for the same, and, as soon as practicable and for the best interests of all concerned, market the aforesaid property, and the whole thereof, under the directions of the court, accounting to this court herein for the proceeds thereof." The court, accordingly, made an order appointing a receiver, naming one Parshall as such, said receiver immediately qualifying as such by taking the oath of office and entering into and filing an undertaking, with approved sureties, in the sum of $6,000, the amount fixed by the court. This appeal is brought here by the defendants from the order appointing the receiver.

The complaint discloses that the plaintiff, a resident of Chicago, was the owner of a 2,000-acre tract of land in Siskiyou county, this state, and also owned farming implements and other personal property, which were, at the time the copartnership agreement was entered into, situated on said land; that defendants were also the owners of certain farming implements and other personal property suitable for farming purposes; that, by the agreement referred to, the defendants were to take possession of said land, together with the personal property belonging to both parties, and were to operate, farm, and manage said ranch for the mutual interest and benefit of the parties for the period beginning with the 1st day of June, 1909, and ending on the 30th day of September, 1913; that the returns to come from the operation of the ranch by the defendants as a stock and hay ranch should, after the payment of all necessary expenses in conducting the business of the ranch and of the money used in buying additional stock, tools, implements, etc., and the payment of the principal and interest of any borrowed money or capital used in the business, be divided equally between the parties, either in money or property. It was further agreed that the parties of the second part (defendants) "shall have the right and privilege of using not to exceed seventy-five dollars per month, during each month, of funds produced hereunder, toward defraying their family expenses, which shall be charged against them and against their interest herein," etc.

The complaint alleges that it was mutually stipulated and agreed by the parties to said agreement that the certain personal property heretofore referred to and separately owned by the parties was, as soon as the agreement was signed, to become the joint property of the first and second parties to said agreement and be equally owned by them half and half, and that any amount due or furnished by the one party over the amount furnished by the other should be considered as money loaned by such party to the coparties, and should draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum and should be a first lien against such joint property and payable, principal and interest, from the joint sales of such property, or of the proceeds of the ranch, "and that, among the terms of said agreement, any party thereto contributing any amount in excess of the amount furnished by the other party should be considered as having loaned the coparties such amount, and same should be treated as above specified." The complaint further alleges that the plaintiff, under the provisions of the said agreement, has received the total sum of $1,520, only, and that, excepting a lot of alfalfa seed of the value of $73.80, he has never received any other or additional amount as his share of the proceeds of the said agreement or the profits derived from the operation of said ranch; that the amount of the advances made by the plaintiff under the said agreement during the life thereof, including interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, is the sum of $3,289.70; that the amount received by the defendants under the provision of the agreement allowing them the privilege of using the sum of $75 per month during each month out of the funds produced on the ranch is the sum of $3,850, and that no portion of said sum has been paid by the defendants or either of them to said coparties, "or at all"; that the said agreement and the term of the life thereof expired on the 30th day of September, 1913, and prior to the filing of the complaint herein; that the plaintiff, prior to that date, notified the defendants that he desired a full and complete settlement at the expiration of the term of said agreement of all transactions had thereunder, "and at the expiration of said term of said agreement said plaintiff personally requested said defendants and each of them to comply therewith, but said defendants then refused, and ever since said last-mentioned date have refused so to do." It is alleged that the defendants have removed from the aforesaid ranch a large portion of the joint property of said parties to the aforesaid agreement, without the consent of the plaintiff, "and said plaintiff is, at this time, without definite knowledge as to the status, on September 30, 1913, or at any time since said last-mentioned date, of the business transacted under and in pursuance to the aforesaid agreement; * * * that by reason of the failure, neglect, and refusal of said defendants and of each of them to render to said plaintiff the statements and reports contemplated by the aforesaid agreement, said plaintiff is unable to ascertain the true condition of affairs of the respective parties to said agreement on September 30, 1913, or since said date."

[1] It is contended by the defendants that the case made by the complaint, a substantially correct statement of whose averments is above given, is not sufficient to have authorized the court, under the terms of section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to appoint a receiver to take charge of the property involved in this controversy and to dispose of the same as specified in the order under the directions of the court. This contention assumes, of course, that the order appointing the receiver was wholly predicated on the ex parte showing made by the complaint; but we cannot say, from the record before us, that such was the case, or that there were not other facts presented to the court in the proceeding than those appearing in the complaint.

There is no bill of exceptions in the transcript on appeal. Embodied in the transcript are the following papers and proceedings only: The complaint; the order appointing a receiver; the oath of the receiver; the bonds of that officer; the notice of appeal from the order appointing a receiver; and a stipulation by the attorneys of the respective parties allowing the defendants additional time over that prescribed by law for preparing and serving the transcript on appeal. Embodied in the transcript is also the certificate of the clerk of the court in which he declares that "the foregoing transcript contains full, true, and correct copies" of the above-enumerated documents, papers, proceedings, notice of appeal, stipulation, etc. It does not appear from the clerk's certificate or otherwise from the transcript that the court, in the appointment of the receiver, acted solely upon or at all considered the disclosures made by the complaint relative to the joint property of the parties or its situation, except in so far as the complaint disclosed that a cause of action existed in favor of the plaintiff and the nature of such action; nor is it made to appear by the transcript whether the court did or did not take oral testimony or receive affidavits or depositions in support of the application. In brief, there is, as stated, no bill of exceptions in the transcript and no record in any other form authorizing a review of the action of the court in appointing a receiver. The order appointing a receiver itself contains the only information furnished by the transcript of the proceedings directly culminating in the making thereof, and it cannot be determined therefrom upon what evidence or considerations the court founded its order. The preamble of the order recites that "it appearing to the court from the complaint that there exists a cause of action in favor of said John W. Ulm against said defendants, Clarence M. Prather and Mary L. Prather, and that there is in existence certain property referred to in said complaint and hereinafter referred to, which is owned jointly by said plaintiff and said defendants, and it further appearing that the aforesaid property is in danger of being removed and the rights of said plaintiff therein jeopardized, * * *" and here follows the order appointing one W. R. Parshall as receiver. Thus it will be noted that, as stated, the order itself does not disclose the nature and extent of the proceedings leading to the making of the order, or what constituted the basis of the court's action in making it.

[2] In the absence of an affirmative showing that the court abused its authority in appointing the receiver, the due regularity of the court's action in that regard will be presumed. In other words, there being no bill of exceptions or other record showing upon what evidence the court based its order, the presumption must be indulged, in support of the order, that the court had before it facts sufficient to justify it in making the order, notwithstanding that the facts which are disclosed by the complaint might not themselves, taken alone, be enough to warrant the appointment of a receiver under section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[3] But what was said by Chief Justice Sullivan, in the very recent case of Borges v. Dunham (Sup.) 145 Pac. 1011, is peculiarly pertinent to the record before us and is decisive of this case:

"If we consider the appeal as taken under the old method, it is ineffectual for the purposes of review, because it contains no bill of exceptions showing what papers were used or what evidence was introduced on the motion. If we consider the appeal as taken under the provisions of sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appeal is abortive, because appellant, after filing notice of appeal, took no further steps under those Code sections to procure a record to be used on appeal. For the reasons stated, it is impossible with the record before us to review the order appointing the receiver. As the filing of the notice of appeal in the court below, treating the appeal as taken under the new method, conferred jurisdiction upon this court, and as a mere inspection of the record shows that appellant is entitled to no relief, the proper order for this court to make in response to the motion to dismiss is to affirm the order appointing a receiver. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Doran, 161 Cal. 118 [118 Pac. 526]."

It follows from the foregoing that the order appointing the receiver must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

29 Cal. App. 97

WILLS v. E. K. WOOD LUMBER & MILL CO. (Civ. 1431.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 2, 1915.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⟸299—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—TITLE OF CREDITOR.

Evidence in a wife's suit to quiet title to property alleged to have been purchased with her money, though the deed was made to her husband, defended on the ground that defendant purchased the property at execution sale on a judgment against the husband, and that, as the husband was insolvent when he conveyed to plaintiff, the conveyance was fraudulent as to existing creditors, held to warrant a finding that prior to the conveyance to plaintiff the husband had the legal title unaffected, so far as his creditors were concerned, by any equity of his wife in the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 876–890; Dec. Dig. ⟸299.]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⟸297—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE — INSOLVENCY OF CREDITOR.

In such suit, evidence held to sustain a finding that on the date of the conveyance to plaintiff by her husband he was insolvent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 891; Dec. Dig. ⟸297.]

3. JUDGMENT ⟸781 — JUDGMENT LIEN AGAINST GRANTOR AS ATTACHING TO LAND —HOMESTEAD.

Land conveyed by a husband to his wife, without consideration and in fraud of creditors, was subject to the lien of a subsequent judgment against the husband obtained by a creditor, though the wife has filed a declaration of homestead in the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1350; Dec. Dig. ⟸781.]

4. BANKRUPTCY ⟸207—TRUSTEE'S SUBROGATION TO LIEN—ACTION BY LIENOR—EFFECT.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67b, 30 Stat. 564 (U. S. Comp. St. 1913, § 9651), provides that, when a creditor is prevented from enforcing his rights as against a bankrupt debtor, the trustee shall be subrogated to the creditor's rights for the benefit of the estate; section 67c dissolves judgments entered within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, with the proviso that if the dissolution of such lien would militate against the best interests of the estate it shall not be dissolved, but the trustee shall be subrogated and empowered to perfect and enforce it as the holder might have done had not bankruptcy intervened; and section 67f provides that all judgments against an insolvent within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy shall be void in case he is adjudged bankrupt, and that the property affected thereby shall pass to the trustee as part of the estate, unless the court orders the right under such judgment preserved for the benefit of the estate, whereupon it shall pass to the trustee. A judgment creditor, whose lien was dissolved by the debtor's petition in bankruptcy, consented to the trustee's subrogation, and on the trustee's petition for subrogation for the benefit of the estate was authorized to prosecute an action to enforce judgment in the name of the trustee and for the benefit of the estate. Held, that the judgment as a preferential lien in favor of the creditor was dissolved, but recognized as a lien for the benefit of all the creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Dec. Dig. ⟸207.]

5. BANKRUPTCY ⟸207—JUDGMENT—SUBROGATION OF TRUSTEE—SUIT.

Although the order in such proceeding in terms authorized the judgment creditor to proceed in the name of the trustee and for the benefit of the estate to annul the bankrupt's voluntary conveyance to plaintiff, his wife, it authorized the judgment creditor to proceed as it might deem best, or to proceed in the name of the trustee, though the method was immaterial, as any favorable result would inure to the trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃207.]

6. BANKRUPTCY ⊂⊃433—DISCHARGE—LIENS.
A bankrupt's discharge releases him from personal liability only, and not from the liens existing against his property, which may be enforced after his discharge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. §§ 808–823; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃433.]

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⊂⊃277—FRAUD—PROOF—STATUTE.
Under Civ. Code, § 3442, making a transfer fraudulent and void as to existing creditors as matter of law, where it is voluntary or without a valuable consideration by one insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, proof of actual fraud is not necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 799, 809–814; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃277.]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃926—PRESUMPTIONS—CONSIDERATION OF IMPROPER EVIDENCE.
In a suit to quiet title as against defendant, claiming under a judgment against plaintiff's husband obtained on the ground that his prior conveyance to plaintiff had been in fraud of creditors, where the court allowed the husband to testify as to his declarations affecting his insolvency on the date of his conveyance to plaintiff, and, on objection, stated that his declarations subsequent to such conveyance would not be considered, it would be presumed on appeal that the court did as it said it would do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1279, 2899, 3729, 3730, 3735–3747; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃926.]

9. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂⊃69½ — MARRIED WOMAN—SEPARATE ESTATE.
A married woman, not living separate and apart from her husband, and having no claim in her own right to lands, cannot acquire title to it as her separate estate by adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 294, 300; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃69½.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Emily Wills against the E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company. Judgment for defendant, motion for new trial denied, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Martin Stevens, of San Francisco, for appellant. Martinelli & Greer, of San Rafael, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff commenced the action to quiet her title to a certain lot situated in San Anselmo, Marin county, as against the claims which, it is alleged, defendant makes to the property. Defendant answered, denying plaintiff's ownership, and denying that defendant's claim to the property is without right. Further answering, it alleges: That defendant is the owner and entitled to possession of the property; that on October 8, 1906, and long prior thereto, plaintiff and one Hamilton Wills were and ever since have been and now are husband and wife, and on said day said Hamilton Wills was the owner, seised in fee and in possession of the whole of said real property; that on said day he was indebted to defendant in the sum of $4,432.72 for goods, wares, and merchandise theretofore sold and delivered by defendant to Hamilton Wills, and in addition to said indebtedness, the said Hamilton was also indebted to divers other persons in large sums of money, the amount of which defendant is unable to state; that on said date, and for a long time prior thereto, the said Hamilton Wills was unable to pay his debts in full from his own means as the same became due in the ordinary course of business, and was insolvent, all of which was well known to plaintiff; that on said day said Hamilton Wills, while so indebted and so insolvent, "and with full purpose and intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, and particularly this defendant, and designing to cheat his creditors, and particularly this defendant, did voluntarily and without valuable consideration make, execute, and deliver to plaintiff a conveyance transferring to plaintiff all of said real property"; that on February 12, 1908, there was still due from said Hamilton Wills to defendant on account of said indebtedness of $4,432.72 a balance of $2,680.82, and that thereupon, upon said last-named day, defendant commenced an action against said Hamilton Wills, in the superior court of said county, to recover said balance; that on June 25, 1908, a judgment was duly given, made, and entered in said action in favor of defendant and against said Hamilton Wills for said balance, together with $15.50 costs of suit, which said judgment was duly docketed in the office of the county clerk of said county; that on the 31st day of October, 1910, a writ of execution was duly issued out of said court in said action, directed to the sheriff of said county, who did, after due proceedings had according to law, duly sell all of said premises to the defendant, and that a certificate of sale was duly issued by said sheriff to this defendant, and thereafter, on January 12, 1912, said sheriff duly executed and delivered to this defendant a deed conveying all of said property, which said deed was duly recorded on January 19, 1912, and ever since said 12th day of January, 1912, this defendant has been and now is the owner of all said property and entitled to possession thereof.

The court found the facts substantially as alleged in the answer, and as conclusions of law found that the transfer of said property by said Hamilton Wills to plaintiff on October 8, 1906, "was fraudulent and void as to this defendant," that plaintiff take nothing by her complaint, and "that defendant is entitled to the judgment and decree of this court that it is the owner of and entitled to the possession of all of said real property," etc. Judgment was accordingly entered for defendant, from which, and from the order denying her motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff testified:

"I am the owner of the property described in the complaint herein. I acquired said property in 1905, and went into possession thereof in September, 1905, and went to live upon the property at that time. At that time I had upon the property a little shack that cost about $200. Ever since September, 1905, I have been living upon that property with my husband. Nobody but myself has been in possession of that property since September, 1905. I have paid all of the taxes which have been levied upon the property since September, 1905, and during all that time I have been in the exclusive possession of that property. I paid $400 for the lot."

There was received in evidence on the part of plaintiff a declaration of homestead by plaintiff, in due form, of date July 7, 1908, duly acknowledged and recorded on that day, "for the joint benefit for myself and husband." The value of the property was "estimated to be $5,000." On cross-examination she testified:

"I acquired the property in June or July, 1905, from Mr. Croker. My husband bought the property from my money. My husband did business for me. I had about $1,500 at that time. I put my money in the First National Safe Deposit, and the next time my husband bought a safe I put it in his safe, in a little tin box, at San Francisco. * * * I came to California in 1888 or 1889. I came here in February, and married Mr. Wills in the following November. I had over $1,000 when I married Mr. Wills. I do not know exactly how much over. I did not have any talk with Mr. Croker. (Mr. Croker conveyed the property to her husband.) I was very sick at the time. I earned money after I was married; I earn it still; I keep boarders. My husband went on the road. I kept boarders, and raised chickens, and made more money than he did. I loaned him money. In the sale and purchase of this property my husband was the agent for me on account of I was not acquainted with this language only a little. I was green to this country. Besides I was very sick. * * * Physically or mentally I was in no condition to transact business in 1905. My husband negotiated with and made the contract with Mr. Croker. Q. Do you know to whom Mr. Croker gave the deed to the property? A. Well, my husband done the business. I was in no condition to transact business. I don't know what they done. My husband took the money out of the safe deposit and paid cash for the property. He took it out of his safe. My husband kept the property in his name for quite a while and the papers were burned up; then I wanted the property recorded in my name; it belonged to me. * * * After the earthquake, when my husband went to the city, he said the whole thing is destroyed, safe and everything in his office, and after that he said, 'All my papers were destroyed.' He said, 'That is destroyed too.' I said, 'You had better go to Mr. Croker, and have a new deed, and have it recorded who it belongs to, in my name.' * * * About this deed I said [to her husband], 'How can we settle it, then? We have no deed. I want to have this property. I am well now, and I want to have it, make it my home, so if anything, business or like such things, I could always make a living on it.' I think he went to Mr. Croker a couple of months after that, when things were getting quiet."

At this point in plaintiff's testimony defendant introduced a grant, bargain, and sale deed, dated October 6, 1906, made by Frederick Croker and his wife to Hamilton Wills, recorded on the same day; also, deed of gift, dated October 8, 1906, from Hamilton Wills to his wife (plaintiff), recorded on the same day. On further cross-examination, she testified:

"In 1905 a little shack was built on that lot. I bought it. My husband paid for it—the lumber. I gave him the bills. Not much lumber was bought from E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company. It only amounted to about $300. My husband had the $400 to buy the lot in his safe. I told him to take it when I was in the hospital. I gave my husband all the money I had just for this property. I wanted to have a home. The doctors told me I must go into the country if I wanted to live. My husband was then a contractor, building houses over in Marin county. I gave him that money to buy a home. * * * After I got out of the hospital, I came over to San Anselmo to live, and the property was bought in June or July, 1905. When I first came to San Anselmo I was just camping; lying on a cot in a tent. In May, 1905, when I was in hospital, I said to my husband, 'Take all you need to get a home—buy a home,' and he took all of the money. I saved all my life for it; that money was over a thousand dollars."

On re-examination she testified:

"Q. Was anything said by either of you as to whose name the property was to be taken in at that time? A. At that time I just say to my husband, 'Buy a property; buy a home.' At the time I just left everything to him as my agent; but I want to have it as my home. Q. You wanted him to buy a home for you with your money? A. Yes, sir; from my money. Q. Did he understand that from you? A. I guess he did. Q. Did you so tell him? A. Yes, sir."

On re-cross she testified:

"My husband handed me the deed, when he put the property in my name in 1906, and said, 'There is your property;' and I say, 'Now, for you to take the deed and put it in the safe deposit.' When he put it in my name, he showed it to me, and he went up to the city. I had no talk with him about the deed at all. I was glad; I had my property; that is all; I saw my name in the deed. * * * When he showed it to me, it had been recorded. I paid a dollar for recording it. * * * When he showed me the deed with my name, he came from San Rafael; it was already recorded; he showed it to me after it was recorded."

Plaintiff rested at this point of the evidence. Concerning the execution of the deed to her husband, witness Croker, Wills' grantor, testified:

"I know Hamilton Wills; known him since 1905. I sold to Mr. Wills a lot in Ross Valley Park, lot 137, being the lot described in plaintiff's complaint, for $400, terms cash; he made a deposit of half the cost and within 30 days, I think, paid the balance; am not sure, though; within the 30 days I made the deed transferring the property to him.

"The Court: Q. What did he say in reference to the purchase, if anything to you? A. I don't remember. Q. Did he say he was purchasing it for anybody? A. No. Q. Other than himself? A. I think not."

Here was introduced a receipt, signed by Mr. Croker, dated June 21, 1905, acknowledging the receipt from Wills of $200 deposit on account of $400, the purchase price of the property. Balance was to be paid in 30 days. He testified that he afterwards made a deed to Wills.

"I made a second deed to him (above referred to, of date October 6, 1906). At the time I made this second deed to Hamilton Wills I do not know whether he asked me to execute the deed to his wife. I don't remember much about what was said by either of us at that time. I know he made some excuse for wanting the second deed. He did not at any time ask me to make a deed to his wife; he gave me some reason for wanting a second deed; it was satisfactory to me."

Witness Studley, before whom the deed was acknowledged by Croker, testified that he knew of the deed formerly given Wills by Croker and asked Wills why he had not recorded it.

"I had been collecting taxes, but I noticed the property was still assessed to Mr. Croker, and I asked him (Wills) why he hadn't recorded the deed. I do not remember his answer at all. Q. Did he at any time say to you the property was the property of his wife, Emily Wills? A. No, sir."

Witness Pitcher, manager of defendant corporation, testified that he knew the land involved and that his company—

"sold to Mr. Wills the materials for improvements or building on that land. He told me he bought the lot and wanted to build a house on it. That was in the fore part of 1905; that was the first business we did with him—to furnish material on this property in question. When we were furnishing lumber to him, he put up one house at first; then I think he put up another house afterwards, and the stable; he did not state to me that was his wife's property. Q. His statement to you was he had bought the property? A. He told me it was his property."

This occurred before Wills conveyed the property to his wife and after Croker had conveyed it to him.

The foregoing is the evidence bearing upon the question of plaintiff's ownership of the land on October 8, 1906, the date of the deed of gift to her by her husband. The court found:

That on that date "Hamilton Wills was the owner, seised in fee and in the possession, of the whole of the real property mentioned in plaintiff's complaint."

Mr. Wills was called as a witness by defendant and testified at some length, mainly concerning his condition as to solvency, which we shall have occasion to notice later. But he said nothing and was asked no question by either party as to what occurred when he made the purchase of the land in question.

The claim of plaintiff is that the property in question was purchased with her money and became her separate estate, though the deed originally was made to her husband, and that when he conveyed the property to her on October 8, 1906, her title was unassailable by the then creditors of her husband. The position of defendant is that on October 8, 1906, her husband was insolvent, and that the conveyance made by him to his wife was voluntary and without consideration, and, under section 3442 of the Civil Code, was fraudulent and void as to existing creditors, "and appellant has no right, title, interest, or claim in or to said property."

[1] It is not shown that defendant or any of the creditors of Wills knew that his wife claimed the property prior to October 8, 1906. Except as appears from her testimony, it was not shown that her husband understood that he was to make the purchase for her. His acts, unexplained, would seem to leave a strong inference that there was no such understanding. Without entering upon an analysis of plaintiff's testimony, we think the facts and circumstances thus far disclosed warranted the court in finding that on October 8, 1906, Hamilton Wills had the legal title unaffected, so far as his creditors were concerned, by any equity of his wife in the property.

[2] The question we are next to determine is: Was Mr. Wills insolvent at that time, and were the subsequent proceedings, as they appear in the record, sufficient to justify the finding that defendant, ever since the 12th day of January, 1912, "has been and now is the owner of all said property." There was evidence that on October 8, 1906, Wills was indebted to defendant in the sum of $4,432.72, on which some payments were afterwards made, leaving due, in February, 1908, $2,680.82, for which defendant brought suit, and on June 26, 1908, obtained judgment against Wills, "which was never vacated, modified, or set aside or appealed from, and duly became a final judgment in said action." It appeared that, on October 16, 1906, Wills made an assignment to E. B. Martinelli of his interest in certain building contracts for the construction of two two-story residences in Ross Valley—

"in trust to be applied by the said Martinelli to the payments of said amounts as may hereafter become due to any person, firm, or corporation on account of materials furnished or labor performed in completing said contracts. Any balance remaining of said moneys after full payment of all amounts which may hereafter become due after completing said contracts as aforesaid shall be paid by said E. B. Martinelli pro rata to the following named persons, who now have claims against the said contracts, to wit: E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company. Fox (electrician). Pearson (plasterer)."

It appeared that this assignment was made because Wills was financially unable to purchase the necessary materials to complete the buildings; that, prior to October 8, 1906, he had been pressed by defendant for payment but was unable to respond; that he paid some installments, and had reduced the debt, as above stated, when defendant brought suit against him. Wills was called as a witness by defendant, and testified that he was solvent at the above date; that he had $1,000 or $1,200 in bank and owned certain personal property the value of which he stated at about $300, besides his interest in the said assigned contracts. His statement that he was solvent was disputed by uncontroverted evidence. He filed a voluntary petition in insolvency on July 10, 1908, on July 17, 1908, was adjudged an insolvent, and on October 31, 1908, he was duly discharged in bankruptcy. In his petition he showed liabilities amounting to $4,241.02 and assets amounting to $3,416.35, of which $658 was claimed as exempt. Among the liabilities was stated $2,680 due defendant "1906-1907." On the schedule were the names of 19 other creditors in various amounts, some of which were of date 1905 and 1906 and some in 1907. Witness Pitcher, manager of defendant corporation, testified that his company continued to do business with Wills after October 8, 1906, and "sold him roughly $9,000 worth of stuff, after October 8, 1906; the last date was February 12, 1909"; and plaintiff contends that this is inconsistent with the claim that Wills was insolvent October 8, 1906. Pitcher testified that of the $4,432.72 due on that date Wills paid all but $2,680.82; "that was part of the indebtedness due to defendant on October 8, 1906; no part of that $2,680.82 has ever been paid to defendant," and this was the amount for which defendant obtained judgment, June 26, 1908, as stated above, and is the amount mentioned as due defendant in Wills' schedule of debts filed in the bankruptcy proceeding. There is no explanation as to the payments made on purchases from defendant after October 8, 1906. Presumably they were met at the time as the claims accrued.

It is urged as unlikely that defendant would continue doing business with Wills, if defendant knew him to be insolvent and unable to pay debts then due defendant. It is not unusual for creditors to give extensions or make advances to debtors to tide them over conditions of financial stress, in the hope that they may find relief from their embarrassments. Indulgences of this character may continue over a considerable space of time, but without favorable results, as appears to have been the case here. If Wills had paid his debts existing on October 8, 1906, and the liabilities which forced him into bankruptcy had arisen after the date named, there might be merit in the contention that he was not insolvent when he conveyed the property to his wife. But the evidence is that he was not then able to pay his debts out of his own means, nor was he so able at any later date. His insolvency existed on October 8, 1906, and continued to the date when he was declared an insolvent; his schedule of debts showing dates prior to 1906. The court found that on that day and for a long time prior thereto Hamilton Wills was indebted to defendant in the amount stated, "and was also indebted to divers and other persons in large and sundry sums of money, and that on said 8th day of October, 1906, Hamilton Wills was unable to pay his debts in full from his own means as the same became due in the ordinary course of business and was insolvent." We think there was evidence sufficient to support this finding.

[3, 4] It remains to notice by what means defendant obtained title to the land. Defendant's judgment was entered June 26, 1908, and Wills was adjudged a bankrupt on July 17, 1908. The judgment having been entered within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, it was dissolved by the adjudication of Wills' bankruptcy (subsection "c" § 67, Bankr. Act), and the trustee of the estate of such bankrupt "shall be subrogated to and may enforce such rights of such creditor for the benefit of the estate" (Bankr. Act, § 67b). The consent of E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company to such subrogation was duly filed. On June 6, 1910, by the trustee of the estate of Wills, a bankrupt, a petition was filed for an order that "the trustee be subrogated to the rights of the said E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company, and that the rights under said judgment pass to and be preserved for the benefit of the estate of the said bankrupt, and for such other and further order as to this court may seem meet and proper." Section 67c, supra, further provides:

"Or if the dissolution of such lien would militate against the best interests of the estate of such person the same shall not be dissolved, but the trustee * * * shall be subrogated * * * and empowered to perfect and enforce the same * * * as such holder might have done had not bankruptcy proceedings intervened."

In his petition the trustee alleged that Wills was the owner of the land in question on October 8, 1906; that on that day he conveyed the property to his wife without consideration; that he was then insolvent, and that said transfer was made with intent to delay and defraud the creditors of said Hamilton Wills; set forth also the facts as to the indebtedness of Wills to E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company and as to its obtaining judgment as hereinabove shown; that Emily Wills had executed a declaration of homestead on said property, as already shown; that Wills had filed his petition in bankruptcy and had been adjudicated a bankrupt, etc.

On June 6, 1910, Milton J. Green, referee in bankruptcy, made his order in which all the foregoing proceedings are recited as set forth in said petition of the trustee; also that said E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company had appeared in open court and agreed with the trustee herein that said company—

"should prosecute, in the name of said trustee and for the benefit of the estate of said bankrupt, an action to set aside the conveyance of October 8, 1906, hereinbefore referred to, from said Hamilton Wills, Jr., said bankrupt, to Emily Wills, his wife, and * * * having further agreed in open court to indemnify the said trustee for all costs, that might be incurred in the said action. It is hereby ordered: [Then follows the order subrogating the trustee to all the rights of said company.] It is further ordered that said E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company * * * be and they are hereby authorized to commence and prosecute such action and to pursue such legal remedies as they may deem proper in order to enforce the rights arising out of the judgment hereinbefore referred to, and to set aside and annul that certain conveyance made by the said bankrupt to Emily Wills, his wife, on the 8th day of October, 1906, * * * and said E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company is hereby authorized to prosecute such action in the name of the trustee herein and for the benefit of the estate of said bankrupt."

Section 67f of the Bankrupt Act provides as follows:

"That all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens, obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, shall be deemed null and void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, and the property affected by the levy, judgment, attachment or other lien shall be deemed wholly discharged and released from the same, and shall pass to the trustee as a part of the estate of the bankrupt, unless the court shall, on due notice, order that the right under such levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien shall be preserved for the benefit of the estate; and thereupon the same may pass to and shall be preserved by the trustee for the benefit of the estate as aforesaid. * * *"

It will be recalled that the judgment was recovered June 25, 1908, by defendant against Wills, and on July 8, 1908, plaintiff filed her declaration of homestead upon the property. On July 16, 1908, Wills filed his petition in bankruptcy, and on the 17th was adjudged a bankrupt. The transfer by Wills to his wife being void as to creditors, defendant, but for the bankruptcy proceedings, would have been entitled to execution on its judgment and sale thereunder, notwithstanding the homestead declaration, for the latter was subject to the lien of the judgment. First National Bank of Los Angeles v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 371, 55 Pac. 980, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64; Bekins v. Dieterle, 5 Cal. App. 690, 694, 91 Pac. 173. The bankruptcy proceedings rendered it impossible for defendant to avail itself of this right. The trustee in bankruptcy became subrogated to defendant's rights, and had it not been for the saving clauses in the bankrupt act the provision of section 67c, under which the lien was dissolved, would have given vitality to the declaration of homestead and the bankrupt would have had the right under the act to have his homestead exempted. But here interposed the provision above quoted that:

"If the dissolution of such lien would militate against the best interests of the estate of such person the same shall not be dissolved," etc.

The effect of the statute was to dissolve the judgment as a preferential lien in favor of the creditor, but recognized the lien and preserved it for the benefit of all the creditors. First National Bank v. Staake, 202 U. S. 141, 26 Sup. Ct. 580, 50 L. Ed. 967.

[5] It was under these provisions of the law that the proceedings above set forth were had, empowering defendant to act in the premises, and it thereupon on October 31, 1910, caused execution to issue on its said judgment and the property to be sold by the sheriff. On December 3, 1910, the sheriff issued his certificate of sale in due form, reciting that he had sold the property to said E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company, and on January 12, 1912, he duly executed and delivered his deed to said property as sheriff to said company, in which the usual recitals in sheriff's deeds are set forth and said deed was duly recorded on the 19th of January, 1912.

Appellant calls attention in her brief to the order of the bankrupt court, authorizing defendant to commence proceedings to annul the conveyance to plaintiff, and now claims that the authority given was to proceed in the name of the trustee and for the benefit of the bankrupt estate, whereas defendant proceeded in its own name for its own benefit, and now holds the sheriff's deed in its own name. There was no demurrer to the answer, and no objection was made to the introduction of the proceedings in bankruptcy, except the general objection of immateriality and irrelevancy. The order is susceptible of the construction that the authority was given to the defendant to proceed as it might deem best or to proceed in the name of the trustee. It is clear, however, that in either case the result should, if favorable, inure to the benefit of the bankrupt estate, and we must presume that the trustee will see to it that the estate gets the benefit.

[6] Appellant is in error in assuming that the discharge of Wills from his liabilities had any effect upon the liens existing against his property. He is released from personal liability only. He has no concern with the property which passed to the trustee. Valid liens may be enforced after the bankrupt is discharged. Loveland on Bankruptcy (3d Ed.) § 385.

[7] Appellant is also in error in her contention that proof of actual fraud was necessary. Section 3442 of the Civil Code makes a transfer fraudulent and void as to existing creditors, as a matter of law, when the transfer is voluntary or without a valuable consideration, by one while insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency. Cook v. Cockins, 117 Cal. 148, 48 Pac. 1025. The claim that the premises in question were always the homestead of plaintiff since 1905 is true only in the sense that they constituted her home. As a homestead in contemplation of the statute, free from the claims of her husband's creditors, it is not true. It was subject to the lien of defendant's judgment, as we have seen, and the lien thus created ripened into complete title adverse to plaintiff.

[8] Error is assigned in permitting the defendant, over plaintiff's objection, to make plaintiff's husband a witness against her without her consent. The court allowed questions to be answered as to declarations and acts of Wills affecting the question of his solvency or insolvency on October 8, 1906. The court, however, finally, on motion to strike out all of Wills' testimony "as to declarations made subsequent to the execution and delivery of deed of gift of October 6, 1906, to his wife," said:

"The Court: They will not be considered. I will simply make a general rule. I will not consider them in deciding the case. You cannot direct me to the particular things at this time. The motion will be granted, if there are any declarations subsequent."

We must assume that the court did as it promised to do. The insolvency of Wills was shown, irrespective of any testimony given by him which the ruling of the court excluded.

[9] Plaintiff claims that she established title by prescription; that her possession after October 6, 1906, was adverse, open, and notorious under claim of separate ownership and continued for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action; and that she paid all taxes which have been levied and assessed upon the premises. Defendant ignores this claim in its brief and has not given the court any aid in solving the question. The undisputed evidence was that plaintiff and her husband were in possession of the lot in 1905 under the deed from Croker to Wills; that on October 8, 1906, Wills conveyed the lot to plaintiff and the deed was recorded on that day; that plaintiff and her husband have ever since had possession of the lot, and plaintiff has paid all the taxes levied and assessed against the property since said date.

We held, in Madden v. Hall, 21 Cal. App. 541, 132 Pac. 291, that a married woman not living separate and apart from her husband and having no claim in her own right to land cannot acquire title to it as her separate estate by adverse possession. The deed to her by her husband we have held was null and void and conveyed no title. She therefore had no claim in her own right, and the rule just stated would seem to apply. If it should be said that her declaration of homestead imported color of title, five years had not elapsed from its date, July 8, 1908, before this action was commenced, to wit, September 23, 1912. It may be doubted, also, whether the adverse claim continued to run after the proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced, and the subrogation of the trustee to the rights of the E. K. Wood Lumber & Mill Company in the judgment which was a lien on the property. These proceedings were had in 1910, under which the property was in that year sold to satisfy the judgment, and the sale culminated in the deed the source of defendant's title.

We have thus endeavored to dispose of the somewhat complicated questions in the case so far as plaintiff has presented them in her brief. Our conclusion is that the evidence supports the findings and the findings support the judgment.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

In re EMMONS. (Cr. 431.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District. California. Dec. 7, 1915.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⊂⊃39—DISBARMENT —CONVICTION AND PARDON.

An attorney cannot be disbarred solely on a record of conviction, where he has been pardoned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. § 52; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃39.]

Disbarment proceeding against E. J. Emmons. Proceeding dismissed.

W. H. Anderson, Loeb, Walker & Loeb, Anderson & Anderson, and E. G. Kuster, all of Los Angeles, and Rowen Irwin, H. E. Johnstone, and J. R. Dorsey, all of Bakersfield, for respondent. James F. Farraher, Deputy Dist. Atty., and Barclay McCowan, Dist. Atty., both of Bakersfield, amici curiæ.

CONREY, P. J. At all times mentioned in the record of this proceeding respondent was, and he now is, an attorney at law admitted to practice in the courts of California. On the 6th day of August, 1915, a petition for his disbarment was filed in the Supreme Court by a bar association of Kern county, and the matter was thereafter transferred to this court. The petition is based upon a judgment of conviction whereby the respondent was convicted of a felony for asking and receiving a bribe, and a duly certified copy of the judgment of conviction is attached to the petition and is a part thereof. That judgment was rendered on October 31, 1905, and on the 12th day of March, 1908, was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal for the Third District. The sentence was for five years' imprisonment, the remittitur was filed on May 18, 1908, and the term of actual imprisonment began a few days later.

The petition for disbarment is based solely on the judgment of conviction. Apart from that judgment no charge is made that the respondent has committed any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, or any other act which would be a cause of disbarment. Code Civ. Proc. § 287. Separate and direct charges would require separate and direct proof, and would open the case to examination by means of other evidence which might be produced by those prosecuting the charge, or by the respondent. Even if (which we do not decide) the judgment of conviction would be receivable as evidence upon such separate charges, it would not be the sole and conclusive evidence provided in a proceeding based solely upon a judgment of conviction of a felony. Code Civ. Proc., sec. 287, subd. 1. The petitioners having relied upon such judgment of conviction as the sole foundation for this proceeding, that judgment is conclusive against the respondent if it is admissible in evidence. If it is not admissible, the case against respondent must fall, because no other evidence can be received in this proceeding.

The respondent has filed herein certain objections which are in the nature both of a demurrer and an answer. We shall not find it necessary to discuss the demurrer. The answer sets forth that the conviction shown by the certified copy of the record of conviction annexed to the petition herein has been annulled and set aside in this, that on the 29th day of June, 1910, respondent received from the Governor of California a pardon for the offense set forth in the judgment of conviction. The respondent submitted to the court with his answer a copy, duly certified by the secretary of state, of the above-mentioned pardon. This document sets forth by way of recital the fact that the defendant had been released upon parole, and since such release had "proven himself to be an industrious, sober, and upright man," and that the state board of prison directors by resolution recommended to the Governor of the state that he do extend executive clemency to the defendant. Thereupon the document concludes that the Governor does, by virtue of the authority vested in him by law, "hereby pardon the said E. J. Emmons and order that he be restored to citizenship." It has been held that a pardon "releases the punishment and blots out of existence the guilt, so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense." Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. Ed. 366. This is nevertheless subject to the limitation that an attorney may be disbarred for acts of a felonious nature where a pardon has followed the conviction of a crime, since evidence of the criminal acts may constitute proof of the charge that the respondent is unfit to be an attorney at law. This is so for the reason that the pardon does not restore his good moral character. Thornton on Attorneys, § 863.

Among the cases to which we are referred is that of People v. George, 186 Ill. 122, 57 N. E. 804, which counsel (amici curiæ) assure us is "practically on all fours with the case at bar." From that decision we learn that Mr. George was disbarred, not only upon proof of charges showing that he had been convicted of a felony and thereafter pardoned, but also because after the pardon he had committed other acts of a criminal nature, convincing the court that, notwithstanding the pardon, the accused did not possess a good moral character, and that he was not a proper person to retain his license to practice law. The question as to whether or not a record of conviction could be made the sole basis of such a charge, and accepted as constituting the sole and conclusive ground for disbarment after the pardon had been granted, did not arise in that case. If that question had been presented, the decision very probably might have been in favor of the respondent. This is indicated by the fact that the court quoted with approval the decision of the Supreme Court of Maine in Penobscot Bar v. Kimball, 64 Me. 146. There the charge was that the respondent was found guilty of dishonesty and bad faith toward clients in several instances, and there was a separate specification that the respondent "does not possess a good moral character," in that at a certain term of court he was convicted of the crime of forgery. As to this particular specification the respondent proved that he had received a pardon for the offense of which he had been convicted. The crime for which he was convicted and sentenced was the forgery of a deposition and caption thereto annexed. Relying upon Ex parte Garland, supra, the court held that the effect of the pardon was not only to release the respondent from punishment—

"but also to blot out the guilt thus incurred, so that in the eye of the law he is as innocent of that offense as if he had never committed it."

But it was pointed out that the respondent in his capacity as attorney had done more than commit the forgery of which he was convicted, in that afterwards he had offered the forged document as evidence in court.

"The executive pardon affords the respondent no protection from the consequences which the law attaches to this offense. Pardon for one crime does not release a party from the penalties and disabilities consequent upon the commission of another. A pardon for forgery does not prevent a party from suffering the consequences attached to a conviction for adultery or larceny, nor blot out the guilt inseparable from such crimes and give their perpetrator a new character for chastity and honesty. The indictment upon which the respondent was convicted contains no count for a violation of his official oath or for a fraud upon the court. The respondent's pardon for forgery can no more obliterate the stain of guilt for those offenses than the judgment in that case would be a bar to an indictment for their commission."

It seems clear that if, as in the case at bar, the Kimball Case had been one where it was sought to disbar the respondent solely upon the ground that he had been convicted of a felony, the subsequent pardon would have been recognized as a sufficient defense.

In Scott v. State, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 343, 25 S. W. 337, it was sought to obtain a judgment of disbarment founded upon article 226, Revised Statutes of Texas, reading thus:

"No person convicted of a felony shall receive license as an attorney at law; or if licensed, any court of record in which such person may practice shall, on proof of a conviction of any felony, supersede his license and strike his name from the roll of attorneys."

The plaintiff in error had been convicted of a felony but immediately thereafter pardoned by the Governor, several years before this proceeding was instituted against him. The court said:

"We are of opinion that after he received an unconditional pardon, the record of the felony conviction could no longer be used as a basis for the proceeding provided for in article 226. This record, when offered in evidence, was met with an unconditional pardon, and could not therefore properly be said to afford 'proof of a conviction of any felony.' Having been thus canceled, all its force as a felony conviction was taken away. A pardon falling short of this would not be a pardon, according to the judicial construction which that act of executive grace has received. Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 344 [18 L. Ed. 366]; Knote v. United States, 95 U. S. 149 [24 L. Ed. 442], and cases there cited; Young v. Young, 61 Tex. 191. Cases may be found holding that a pardon does not operate as a bar against a proceeding to strike an attorney from the rolls on account of the professional misconduct involved in the transaction which culminated in the conviction. Penobscot Bar v. Kimball, 64 Me. 140; In re ——, an Attorney, 86 N. Y. 563. In these cases the proceedings to disbar were not founded on statutes like ours, declaring the effect of a felony conviction, but upon facts showing professional misconduct. Where the proceeding, as in this case, depends alone upon the felony conviction, and that is wiped out by a pardon, the whole case falls."

In legal effect the case at bar comes within the rule, which we think is correctly stated in the Texas case. Notwithstanding that the respondent at one time stood convicted of a felony and that the record of conviction might have been used as the foundation for this proceeding while the judgment of conviction was in force, it is no longer possible, after the pardon, to disbar him by this statutory proceeding wherein, if it is maintainable at all, judgment must go against him without any opportunity to defend against any present imputation against his moral character. If those responsible for this prosecution believe, or have grounds for believing, that the respondent is not now a person of good moral character, or that he has committed any acts which should move the court in its discretion to disbar him at this time, those charges should be framed in such manner as will fairly test the respondent's rights by giving him a full opportunity to defend upon the merits.

The objections made by respondent are (as to the points discussed herein) sustained, and the proceeding is dismissed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

171 Cal. 741

NEWLANDS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (L. A. 4240.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1916.)

1. DIVORCE ⟸286—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Only a clear abuse of discretion of the trial court in granting or refusing temporary alimony given by Civ. Code, § 137, will be reviewed by the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 769, 770; Dec. Dig. ⟸286.]

2. MANDAMUS ⟸32—SCOPE OF WRIT—SUBJECTS OF PROTECTION.

Where the discretion of the trial court in granting, under Civ. Code, § 137, temporary alimony to enable wife to support herself or to prosecute a pending action of divorce, could be exercised in only one way, mandamus to enforce such discretion will issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 73, 78; Dec. Dig. ⟸32.]

3. DIVORCE ⟸182—ALIMONY—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where the evidence showed that the wife had deserted her husband, that her action for divorce was not instituted until after the husband had inherited large estate, and that the husband was the aggrieved party and entitled to a decree, the court may refuse to award alimony under Civ. Code, § 137, pending an appeal from the decree for husband, the fact that the wife was afflicted with a disease incapacitating her for work not rendering her husband liable for her support.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 568, 587, 588, 625, 638, 641, 657; Dec. Dig. ⟸182.]

4. DIVORCE ⟸182 — ALIMONY — ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Where the husband consented that the fees of attorneys for his wife should be determined at the conclusion of her appeal from a divorce decree in his favor, the court may properly deny fees pending appeal, it being no hardship to require the attorneys to wait the determination of the action, as the payment of the fees was not jeopardized by the delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 568, 587, 588, 625, 638, 641, 657; Dec. Dig. ⟸182.]

In Bank. Application by Viola Newlands for writ of mandate against the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles. Mandate denied, and writ discharged.

R. A. Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. George Beebe, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an original petition for mandate to compel the superior court of Los Angeles county and Hon. Charles Monroe, judge thereof, to grant the petitioner alimony pendente lite, attorneys' fees and costs, growing out of the matter of her proposed appeal from the judgment and decree of divorce awarded against her.

By his answer respondent shows that petitioner, Viola Newlands, brought her action against her husband, Joseph R. Newlands, on the 24th day of August, 1914. She charged that the defendant abandoned her in the city of New Orleans on the 3d day of April, 1911, and ever since has without cause failed to provide for her. She also charged him with the infliction of extreme cruelty upon her. The defendant answered and likewise filed a cross-complaint in which he sought a divorce from plaintiff upon the twofold grounds of her desertion and her cruelty. Pending the trial of this action plaintiff, under order not made by respondent, was in receipt of alimony pendente lite. The trial had before respondent resulted in his finding, upon ample legal evidence, that defendant had not deserted plaintiff and had not treated her with cruelty, had not applied to her violent and offensive names, and had never struck or beaten her; that defendant was not, as charged, at the time he contracted marriage afflicted with a loathsome venereal disease; that plaintiff upon the trial introduced evidence to show that she was and had been suffering from a venereal disease called gonorrhea, but neither this nor any other disease had been communicated to plaintiff by defendant; that during their married life together defendant provided for plaintiff according to his circumstances; that they were married in the city of New Orleans in 1909, and came to California in 1910; that on the 3d day of April, 1911, plaintiff, against the protest of her husband, insisted upon returning to New Orleans and did return, deserting and abandoning her husband and her child about one year of age; that defendant protested against this desertion and abandonment of himself and their child, and that plaintiff with profanity declared her intention of returning to New Orleans, and demanded money of defendant to enable her to do so, threatening to commit suicide and to kill herself and child if the money was not forthcoming. Defendant's pleadings were unavailing, and on April 3, 1911, plaintiff took the train and went to New Orleans, where she remained until about the 4th of August, 1914. During the first year of her absence plaintiff wrote several letters to her husband asking him to send her money to enable her to return. The court found that defendant did not send her money directly, but did send money in payment of debts which she had contracted in New Orleans. The court further found that her offers to return and her demand for money were not made in good faith, and that plaintiff was at the time carrying on a correspondence of an improper character with another man in the city of Los Angeles. For about three years before her return to Los Angeles she had no manner of communication with her husband, and made no offer nor effort to return to him and to her child.

Defendant's mother died in 1914, and upon her death he inherited property to the value of at least $100,000. Thereupon a woman, an enemy of defendant, caused advertisements to be published in New Orleans newspapers seeking to locate plaintiff and petitioner. She was thus located, and this woman then wrote to petitioner, telling of her husband's inheritance, and advising her to come to Los Angeles and bring suit and obtain some of the money. As a result of these efforts petitioner returned to Los Angeles in 1914 and began her action for separate maintenance. Upon the trial the respondent found and determined that plaintiff's case was without merit, and found and determined that there was an abundance of competent evidence justifying and demanding of the court the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and decree of divorce, which were given. In view of all these facts and circumstances and of the conclusion of the court embodied in its judgment that plaintiff's cause of action against her husband was without merit and the defendant was entitled to a divorce from plaintiff and petitioner, the respondent, in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by law, denied petitioner's motion for alimony pendente lite, under the conviction that she was no longer entitled to look to her husband for any support, and that her husband was neither morally nor legally bound to contribute to that support. In the matter of the appeal the respondent declares further his conviction that the appeal is not taken in good faith, but that to the end that petitioner may not be deprived of the power to present such matters upon appeal as may be thought to be meritorious, provision has already been made for the payment of the cost of preparing the transcript on appeal, which cost it has been arranged will be met by defendant. In the matter of attorneys' fees, expressing the same conviction that the proposed appeal is without merit and is not taken in good faith, respondent further declares that his discretion in the matter of the fixing of the fee can be the more wisely exercised upon the coming down of the remittitur following the determination of the appeal to this court, and that he is prepared at the present time, upon suggestion or mandate from this court, to fix a minimum fee in the sum of $50, with the understanding that full compensation will be awarded for the services of petitioner's attorney upon the termination of the litigation, when respondent's discretion can be the more wisely exercised to this end.

[1, 2] It must be conceded and indeed is not questioned but that a discretion is vested in the trial court in the matter here under consideration (Civ. Code, § 137), and that only a plain abuse of discretion is subject to correction at our hands (Smith v. Smith, 147 Cal. 143, 81 Pac. 411; Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 240, 79 Pac. 885). Nor does it require the citation of authority to the proposition that even where discretion is vested, if that discretion under the facts can be legally exercised in but one way, mandate will lie to compel the inferior tribunal so to exercise it.

[3] The simple question left for consideration, therefore, is one of fact. Can it be said that under respondent's showing of fact the position which he has taken evinces a plain abuse of discretion? He was the judge who tried the cause. Before him appeared all of the witnesses and he heard all of the evidence. It was his right to take into consideration all of these matters in exercising his discretion in the decision of the motion subsequently made before him. Harron v. Harron, 128 Cal. 305, 60 Pac. 932; Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 238, 79 Pac. 885. His conclusion upon the main case that plaintiff's action for separate maintenance was without merit and that defendant was entitled to a divorce, necessarily contained in it his conviction that the husband was no longer legally or equitably charged with the support of the wife. The affidavits of the wife filed in support of her motion that the venereal disease from which she suffered had impaired her health and rendered her incapable of performing manual labor as a domestic, which, it is said, was the only kind of labor at which she could support herself, would, if petitioner were destitute, make her an object of charity, but did not impose upon the divorced husband the duty of maintenance. The second phase of the matter, namely the costs upon appeal, is sufficiently covered by respondent's answer that costs upon appeal have actually been provided for and the appeal has been taken.

[4] In the matter of attorneys' fees we can perceive no objection to the attitude which the trial court took and has maintained. In all other cases an attorney's compensation is estimated when his services have been performed. It is not even open to question but that the value of those services can be better arrived at after they are performed than before. No more hardship is imposed upon the attorney in such a case than is imposed upon the attorney for an executor or other trustee who must first perform the services and await the settlement of the executor's or trustee's account before receiving his award. Upon the determination of this appeal and the going down of the remittitur, the trial court will still have the parties litigant before it and the respondent can then, as he suggests, the more wisely exercise his discretion in the matter of the allowance of attorneys' fees.

The objection that an allowance of such attorneys' fees cannot be made after the services have actually been rendered, which objection is based upon the declarations in Mudd v. Mudd, 98 Cal. 322, 33 Pac. 114, Loveren v. Loveren, 100 Cal. 493, 35 Pac. 87, and Lacey v. Lacey, 108 Cal. 45, 40 Pac. 1056, is entirely obviated by force of the circumstance that in this case the husband did not object, but stipulated in writing his consent that this might be done. As the husband is the only person whose rights could be injuriously affected by such an order, his consent thereto removes any possible difficulty in the way of its legality and enforcement. And, finally, it may here be said that the same showing which we hold is sufficient to sustain the court's order refusing alimony pendente lite will equally sustain its order refusing any attorneys' fees whatsoever. Therefore it is unnecessary that mandate should issue. A suggestion to the trial court that it proceed to do what it has declared its willingness to do is sufficient in the premises.

Mandate is denied, and the writ discharged.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 691

HOLABIRD v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

(L. A. 3986–3988.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1916.)

CERTIORARI ⊂⊃24—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—FINALITY—PRELIMINARY ORDER.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, authorizes a writ of review when an inferior court, etc., exercising judicial functions, has exceeded its jurisdiction, and there is no appeal nor any adequate and speedy remedy, and section 1074 declares that review shall not extend further than the determination whether such inferior tribunal has regularly pursued its authority. Public Utilities Acts (St. Sp. Sess. 1911, p. 55; St. 1915, p. 161) § 67, provides that one aggrieved by any order of the Railroad Commission may apply to the Supreme Court for a writ of review to determine whether the commission has regularly pursued its authority, and section 60, giving the commission certain powers, does not authorize a proceeding to determine whether a particular person, etc., is carrying on a public utility or a private enterprise. The commission, on complaints of several parties that petitioner, a corporation organized to sell, rent, and distribute water to the public for irrigation purposes, had refused to deliver water to complainants, and seeking an order requiring it to deliver water, over its demurrer to the complaints, on the ground that the commission had no jurisdiction, heard evidence, found it to be a public utility water system, and overruled the demurrer, leaving the case still pending for final determination. Held, that a petition for writ of review of the commission's rulings preliminary to the final determination was premature, and would be dismissed without prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. ⟹24.]

In Bank. Petition for writ of review by W. H. Holabird, receiver of the property of the California Development Company, against the Railroad Commission of the state of California. Petition dismissed, without prejudice.

W. B. Mathews and S. B. Robinson, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Douglas Brookman, of San Francisco (Max Thelen, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent. Haines & Haines, of San Diego, and John M. Eshleman, of El Centro, amici curiæ.

SHAW, J. In each of the aforesaid cases the petitioner seeks to review and annul an alleged decision and order of the Railroad Commission. The order in No. 3986 was made upon the complaint of Louis J. Ivey to the commission; that in 3987 upon the complaint of Adolph Becker; and that in No. 3988 upon the complaint of F. W. Weeks, as president of the Holtville city council. The nature of the proceedings may best be shown by a brief statement of the facts alleged in the complaint of Becker and of the order made in that case.

Becker complained to the commission, alleging that the California Development Company was a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey to carry on the business of selling, renting, and distributing water for irrigation purposes for compensation and hire; that it was operating an irrigation system in the county of Imperial, and thereby distributing, selling, and renting water generally to the public in that county, for the irrigation of the land of the Imperial valley, including a tract of land of Becker containing some 240 acres; that, in an action pending in the superior court, W. H. Holabird had been duly appointed receiver of said company, and in that capacity was carrying on the business of the company; that Becker needed water with which to irrigate his land, and had demanded the delivery thereof from said receiver, offering to pay the usual rate fixed therefor, but that the receiver thereupon refused, and still refuses, to deliver any water to said Becker. The prayer was that the commission make an order requiring the receiver to deliver water to Becker for the irrigation of said land at the same price and terms upon which it delivered water to other persons owning lands under the system. The receiver appeared and filed a paper, denominated a demurrer to the complaint of Becker, on the ground that the commission had no jurisdiction of the proceeding. The particular point stated in the demurrer was that it did not appear that the water supply in charge of the defendant as receiver is, or ever has been, dedicated to public use, or that the system controlled by him is a public utility. The commission did not see fit to rest its determination as to its jurisdiction upon the allegations of the complaint of Becker to which the demurrer of Holabird was addressed, but took evidence on the subject of the character of the company and made findings of fact upon the evidence. Thereupon it made the following order:

"A public consolidated hearing having been held in the above-entitled cases on the question whether the Railroad Commission has jurisdiction over the defendants, and this question being now ready for decision, the Railroad Commission, in reliance on each statement or finding of fact contained in the opinion which precedes this order, hereby finds that the water system of California Development Company is a public utility water system, and that W. H. Holabird, as receiver thereof, is a public utility, subject to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission. It is accordingly ordered that the demurrers in each of the above-entitled cases be, and the same are hereby, overruled, and the defendant in each of said cases is hereby given twenty (20) days from service of a certified copy of this opinion and order in which to satisfy the respective complainants or to answer."

It is this order which the petitioner here seeks to review. In regard to the complaints of Ivey and Weeks like proceedings were had, resulting in orders the same in form as that above given. At the close of its opinion, referred to in the above order, the commission says:

"It will be understood, of course, that the present decision deals only with the question of this commission's jurisdiction. If this decision stands, it by no means necessarily follows that complainants in any or all of these cases will ultimately secure the relief for which they ask."

Each case is still pending before the commission for final determination. The orders asked for have not been made and may yet be denied. No final determination of either case has been made. It may be that the receiver will not be injured or the system he controls at all be affected by the final orders. We think this proceeding is premature.

The writ of review lies only when the final determination of an inferior court, tribunal, or board is in excess of its jurisdiction. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. The language of the section limits it to cases where the tribunal "has exceeded" its jurisdiction. It does not lie to determine the correctness, in point of law, of rulings or decisions made by such court, tribunal, or board, upon objections made or questions arising in the course of the proceeding or cause preliminary and prior to the final determination regarding the action which it is asked to take in the matter. Wilson v. Sacramento County, 3 Cal. 386; People v. County Judge, 40 Cal. 479; Aberding v. Macham, 40 Cal. 656; Lamb v. Schottler, 54 Cal. 320; Sayers v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 642, 24 Pac. 296; Gauld v. Board, 122 Cal. 18, 54 Pac. 272. In Wilson v. Sacramento County the board of supervisors had overruled an objection that it had no jurisdiction over an application for a ferry license, but had not granted or refused such license. In People v. County Judge the judge had entertained an application of certain street commissioners asking him to fix the compensation which they should receive, and had set the application for hearing, but had not otherwise acted upon it. In Lamb v. Schottler one of the points involved was the right to a review of the action of the board of supervisors upon a proposed resolution, which was still pending before it and had not been adopted. In Sayers v. Superior Court the petitioner had been cited to show cause why he should not be punished in contempt for disobeying an order of the superior court, but he had not been adjudged guilty or tried on the charge. In Gauld v. Board an application had been made to the board of supervisors for a telephone franchise and certain proceedings had been taken under the statute toward the granting of such franchise, but none had been granted.

In all these cases it was held that the application for a writ of review was premature, and in each case the proceeding was accordingly dismissed or denied. In People v. County Judge, the court said:

"The writ of certiorari is a writ of review. Its office is to bring up for review final determinations and adjudications of inferior tribunals, boards, or officers exercising judicial functions, when there is no appeal, nor any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. The writ is necessarily founded on a final determination."

It was further said that, if such writ might issue at any step in the proceedings of the inferior tribunal to annul its rulings:

"This would be the exercise of original jurisdiction by the court issuing the writ, and not a review of the determination of the inferior tribunal. The matter complained of would be, not that the tribunal had exceeded, but that it was about to exceed, its jurisdiction."

In Sayers v. Superior Court, the court said:

"The function of a writ of review is not to restrain the proceedings of an inferior tribunal, but to annul proceedings which have been taken without jurisdiction. It cannot be employed to prevent a threatened excess of jurisdiction. It is issued only when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising judicial functions has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer."

The present case cannot be distinguished from those above cited. There has been no final adjudication. The order merely overrules a demurrer. It does not decide the case. The decision of the commission that the California Development Company, through the receiver, is conducting a public utility, is preliminary only. Before proceeding to regulate, the commission must always ascertain that the person or corporation to be regulated is one over whom it is given authority, else it must refuse to act further. As it is a question affecting the jurisdiction of the commission to act at all, it may revoke its ruling thereon at any time before the action invoked by the complainant has been taken or refused, or at any time before the authority to grant a rehearing has expired. A lack of jurisdiction of the subject-matter is sufficient cause for arresting a proceeding at any stage, whenever it appears or is called to the attention of the tribunal, and it is not bound by a preliminary decision thereon.

There is nothing in the Public Utilities Act, under which the commission proceeds, which changes the general rule concerning writs of review in this respect. Section 67 of that act provides that a person claiming to be aggrieved by any order or decision of the commission may apply to the Supreme Court for a writ of review for the purpose of having the lawfulness of the order or decision inquired into and determined, and that:

"The review shall not be extended further than to determine whether the commission has regularly pursued its authority, including a determination of whether the order or decision under review violates any right of the petitioner under the Constitution of the United States or the state of California." Stats. Spec. Sess. 1911, 55; Stats. 1915, 161.

Except for the reference to constitutional questions, which is perhaps unnecessary, the language quoted is similar to that of section 1074 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that the writ of review "cannot be extended further than to determine whether the inferior tribunal, board or officer has regularly pursued the authority of such tribunal, board or officer." There is nothing in section 67 or in any other part of the Public Utilities Act which in any way indicates an intention by the Legislature to enlarge the writ so as to authorize this court to intervene in the course of a proceeding before the Railroad Commission, stop the proceedings, and determine whether or not its intermediate rulings are within its powers. Neither does the act empower the commission to make general adjudications regarding the character of the several water corporations or persons using or disposing of water, or conducting other business enterprises, within the state, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they, or any of them, are public utilities, within the meaning of the Public Utilities Act, and therefore subject to the jurisdiction of the commission. No proceeding is authorized for the mere purpose of determining this question with respect to any person or corporation. Section 60 authorizes the commission, of its own motion, or upon the complaint of any person, to inquire into any act or thing done by any public utility, and to make such order therein as may be necessary to compel such public utility to comply with the law or with the orders or rules of the commission, but it does not authorize a proceeding for the sole purpose of inquiring and determining whether a particular person or corporation is carrying on a public utility, or is engaged in a private enterprise. It follows that the decision of the commission, in the cases here involved, that the California Development Company is a public service corporation carrying on a public service, is not an adjudication of that question which is made final by any provision of the Public Utilities Act, and it remains in fieri, as in any other similar proceeding before a court or tribunal. This being the case, it is not an order or decision which is subject to review by this court. If the final order of the commission in any of the cases is adverse to the interests of the company in charge of the receiver, the decision that it is a public utility, if it then stands unrevoked, may be attacked and reviewed upon an application for the review of such final order.

The petitions are dismissed without prejudice to any subsequent proceeding.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 728

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 7424.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1916.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐250¾, New, vol. 16 Key-No. Series—COMPENSATION FOR INJURIES—INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION—REVIEW OF DECISIONS.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 283) § 12a, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1081, imposing liability on employers without regard to negligence for any personal injury sustained by employés arising out of and in the course of the employment and for the death of any such employé where the injury is proximately caused by the employment with or without negligence, and is not so caused by the intoxication or the willful misconduct of the injured employé, the question whether an employé for whose death the Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation was guilty of willful misconduct when he met his death is a jurisdictional question and subject to review by the Supreme Court.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐87½, New, vol. 16 Key-No. Series—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—WILLFUL MISCONDUCT AS DEFENSE.

Under Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1913, p. 649) § 22 requiring every person operating a motor vehicle on the public highways of the state to do so in a careful and prudent manner, etc., and providing that it shall be unlawful to drive at a rate of speed in excess of 30 miles an hour, and making a violation thereof a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment or both, an employé killed while driving an automobile at a speed of from 35 to 45 miles an hour was guilty of willful misconduct within Workmen's Compensation Act, § 12a, subd. 3, especially where such speed was wholly unnecessary, and it was immaterial that, as found by the Industrial Accident Commission, this speed was not unusual according to the usual custom of drivers of automobiles in the vicinity, and was not so excessive as to amount to speed mania or to foolhardiness or dare-deviltry, or that it was not in violation of any instructions, rules, or orders of the employer.

In Bank. Original application by the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland for a writ of review directed to the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and others. Award of the Commission annulled.

Guy Le Roy Stevick, A. C. Skaife, L. A. Redman, and Jewel Alexander, all of San Francisco, for petitioner. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. By this review petitioner seeks to have an award given under section 84 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913, as that act was amended in 1915, declared invalid. W. D. Head, president and superintendent of the Head Drilling Company, a corporation, was killed. The award was made to his widow. There is thus within this case the question of the power of the commission to make any award in case of death. But, as that question is not necessary to the decision of this case, and as it is now under the consideration of this court in another case, it is here passed over without determination.

[1, 2] The question presented is whether or not Head was guilty of willful misconduct when he met his death. Workmen's Compensation Act, § 12a, subd. 3. This question is a jurisdictional one, and therefore subject to review by this court. Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 149 Pac. 35. Over the facts there is no dispute. In the course of his employment Head, who was at Taft, was directed to go to Los Angeles on the work of his company. He hired an automobile, with a driver, to take him from Taft to Bakersfield, at which point he proposed to embark on a train for Los Angeles. The distance between Taft and Bakersfield is about 40 miles, and he had four hours of time to make the run and catch his train. Leaving Taft, he displaced the driver, and took the wheel himself. It was in the night time. The commission finds the following:

"That at said time he was driving the automobile at a rate of speed from 35 to 45 miles per hour. That said rate of speed was not entirely safe in view of the condition of the road at the place of the accident, but that the evidence is insufficient to establish that such speed was unusual according to the usual custom of drivers of automobiles in that vicinity, or that it was so in excess of customary rates of speed as to amount to speed mania, or that said excessive speed amounted to more than ordinary negligence or amounted to foolhardiness or dare-deviltry; that the act of the deceased in driving at said rate of speed was not in violation of any instructions, rules, or orders made by the said employer, the W. D. Head Drilling Company, for the safety of its employés or any of them."

While so driving the car it ran into a sandy piece of road and overturned. Head was killed, and the driver injured.

The law of this state in the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1913, p. 649) declares:

"Every person operating * * * a motor * * * vehicle on the public highways of this state shall operate * * * the same in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, and no person shall operate or drive" an automobile "or other vehicle on the public highway * * * as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property: Provided, that it shall be unlawful to drive at a rate of speed in excess of 30 miles an hour." Section 22.

A violation of this provision is declared a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment or both. Admittedly, therefore, under the very findings of the commission, Head was violating the express mandate of the law designed for his own protection, for the protection of the other occupants of the car, and for the protection of the general public. His act in so doing was criminal. Much of the finding of the commission which we have quoted at length is quite beside the question and without the slightest persuasive force. It matters not, for example, that the evidence is insufficient to establish that such speed was "unusual according to the usual custom of drivers of automobiles in that vicinity." That 40 men violate the law and commit crimes is neither justification nor excuse for the forty-first man who does the same thing. Nor yet does it matter that Head was not afflicted with "speed mania," nor that his excessive speed did not "amount to foolhardiness or dare-deviltry." Nor is it of the slightest consequence that Head was not violating any rule or order made by his company. Indeed, it would be as remarkable as it would be unnecessary for an employer to give a specific instruction upon a matter completely covered by a penal statute. The plain and unescapable fact is that Head was criminally violating a law designed for his own protection and for that of the general public. The statute itself forbade him from endangering "the life or limb of any person," himself as well as others, and fixed the danger point of speed at 30 miles an hour. The finding is that his rate of speed "was not entirely safe." But even without such a finding, or if the finding declared it to be a safe rate of speed, the fact still remains that the deceased willfully and deliberately misconducted himself and violated the plain mandate of the law. Says Willis (Workmen's Compensation, p. 58):

"Where there is a deliberate and unmistakable act of disobedience to an express order, or where there is a deliberate breach of a law or rule, which is framed in the interests of the workingman, it will be held that such a breach or such disobedience amounts to serious misconduct."

There is no finding and indeed nothing in the record extenuating or excusing the conduct of the deceased. He was not even impelled by the desire to make the train connection. He had four hours in which to travel 40 miles. The conclusion is unavoidable that he was guilty of the willful misconduct contemplated by the law.

For this reason, without consideration paid to any of the other propositions urged upon our attention, the award of the commission must be and hereby is annulled.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(171 Cal. 702)

TUCKER et al. v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 6279.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1916.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⇐103 — INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACKS — LAST CLEAR CHANCE DOCTRINE.

The last clear chance doctrine as to injuries on street car tracks applies in California.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 219; Dec. Dig. ⇐103.]

2. TRIAL ⇐397—FINDINGS—NECESSITY.

In an action for the killing of one on defendant's street car tracks, where the pleadings raised the question whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence proximately causing death, the failure of the court, the action being tried without a jury, to make a finding responsive to this issue, was error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 940–945; Dec. Dig. ⇐397.]

3. STREET RAILROADS ⇐102 — INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACKS—LAST CLEAR CHANCE DOCTRINE.

In view of Civ. Code, § 1714, declaring that every one is responsible, not only for the result of his willful acts, but for an injury caused by his negligence, no conduct of a street railway company, however willful or wanton, will release a person from using ordinary care in preserving himself from danger and injury; consequently, where deceased's contributory negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, the fact that the street railway company's servants were guilty of wanton negligence will not warrant recovery on the last clear chance doctrine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 186, 194, 200, 203; Dec. Dig. ⇐102.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1011 — REVIEW — QUESTION OF FACT.

Where the evidence as to whether the car could have been stopped after deceased's presence was discovered conflicted, and plaintiff relied on the last clear chance doctrine, held, on the evidence, that the question whether her contributory negligence barred recovery is a fact to be determined as such by the trial court, which sat without a jury, and cannot be decided on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3989; Dec. Dig. ⇐1011.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by Theodore N. Tucker and another, heirs of Eva May Tucker, deceased, against the United Railroads of San Francisco, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Wm. M. Abbott and Wm. M. Cannon, both of San Francisco, for appellant. A. M. De Vall and Barclay Henley, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiffs were successful in an action against the defendant for damages for the death of Eva May Tucker, which, it was alleged, was due to the negligence of defendant's servants in the operation of an electric street car. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The accident took place at about 8 o'clock in the evening. The car had just traversed the curve from Clement street to Thirty-Third avenue, in San Francisco, and was proceeding in a southerly direction on the last-named thoroughfare, which at that place is unpaved. The car almost stopped at the curve, but on signal from the conductor the motorman applied the current, and the car moved into Thirty-Third avenue with increasing speed. The night was dark and somewhat foggy. There were no street lights, but the headlight was shining brightly, rendering objects on the track clearly visible for a distance of 40 feet from the motorman's position. The car was brilliantly illuminated within, and its lights could have been seen by a person having normal vision for a much greater distance than 40 feet. The car was a heavy one, and it made considerable noise while in motion, particularly in taking the curve into Thirty-Third avenue. When it began its journey along the avenue, the conductor went forward to the front platform. There was testimony tending to show that thereupon he engaged in some sort of a scuffle with the motorman, and that, putting on the motorman's cap, he took hold of the controller bar. This testimony is disputed, however, as we will have occasion to note in the further discussion of this case. The employés of defendant saw Eva May Tucker when the car had reached a point near the middle of the block about 300 feet from the curve. It was then moving quite rapidly. She was a few feet in front of the car, and was standing or walking on the track with her back partly turned toward the car. The motorman attempted to stop the car, but could not do so until the woman had been struck and killed. The trial was before the court without a jury, and judgment was given in favor of the plaintiffs for $2,500. The court failed to find upon the alleged contributory negligence of the deceased. This is specified as error, and the appellant also asserts that upon the uncontradicted evidence the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence proximately causing her death.

[1] The respondents do not seriously question that the failure of the deceased to take note of the approach of the brilliantly illuminated car and to remain in a place of safety until after it had passed would have amounted ordinarily to negligence, but they insist that her negligence was not the proximate cause of death, because the conduct of the servants of the defendant was gross negligence against which (they say) the defense of contributory negligence is of no avail. They cite numerous authorities from other states upholding the rule that gross negligence, amounting to a reckless disregard of public safety, when the death of another is directly due to such gross negligence, precludes a plea of contributory negligence on the part of the decedent to defeat the action. We will not pause to analyze these authorities, because the doctrine of "last clear chance" is, and for many years has been, a part of the law of California, and that of "comparative negligence" has never held a place in our jurisprudence.

[2] The pleadings clearly raised the issue, and the court was bound to find upon the question whether or not deceased was guilty of contributory negligence proximately causing her death. The failure of the court to make a finding responsive to this issue was error.

[3] We are urged to declare that the scuffle between the car men and the unlawful rate of speed of the car were facts established without controversy, and that therefore gross contributory negligence of the defendant's servants, continuing to the very instant of the impact of the car with the body of the pedestrian, makes the matter of her contributory negligence one of no moment. But the record reveals the fact that there was a conflict of testimony upon the subjects of the car's rate of speed and the conduct of the motorman and the conductor. Some of the witnesses testified that there was a scuffle in which the men exchanged hats, but they denied this, and each of them testified that the conductor removed the motorman's cap for the purpose of consulting the time table pasted inside. There was other testimony that the car was not exceeding the lawful rate of eight miles an hour when it hit the woman.

But really it makes no difference in the analysis of a defense based upon the contributory negligence of a person injured or killed whether the negligence of the defendant was gross, ordinary, or slight:

"Contributory negligence is as good a defense to a claim founded upon gross negligence as to any other." 1 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (6th Ed.) 159.

The rule is thus stated in the opinion of this court in Sego v. Southern Pacific Co., 137 Cal. 407, 70 Pac. 279:

"No conduct on the part of the company, no matter how willful and wanton, will release a person from using ordinary care in preserving himself from danger and consequent injury. As said in the case cited, under such circumstances both of the parties are equally at fault, and there can be no recovery. Even conceding the negligence of the company to be the greater negligence, still in this state the courts do not recognize the principle of law relating to comparative negligence which obtains in some of our sister states."

This quotation merely restates the principle embodied in section 1714 of the Civil Code, which is, in part, as follows:

"Every one is responsible, not only for the result of his willful acts, but also for an injury occasioned to another by his want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his property or person, except so far as the latter has, willfully or by want of ordinary care, brought the injury upon himself."

In Bennichsen v. Market Street Ry. Co., 149 Cal. 20, 84 Pac. 420, the evidence tended to show that the motorman, at the moment of the accident, was looking into the car, instead of fixing his attention upon the track ahead. It was held that such a case can be taken out of the doctrine of contributory negligence only where defendant had actual knowledge of plaintiff's perilous situation. The court cites Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 514, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85, and Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 232, 53 Pac. 651, in support of the rule. This rule has been announced many times. For example, in Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 754, 134 Pac. 709, it was again held that the doctrine of "last clear chance" is based upon the fact that the defendant actually did know of the danger, and not upon the proposition that by the exercise of common prudence he should have been aware of it. Clearly in the case at bar the court erred in failing to find upon this subject.

[4] The only evidence regarding the position of the woman when she first appeared upon the track comes from the two servants of the defendant. The conductor testified that she was six or eight feet in front of the car when he first observed her. At the same moment the motorman "threw off the motor and applied the air." The car moved twelve or fifteen feet between the time witness saw the woman and the moment it stopped. He did not give any estimate of the speed of the car. The motorman testified that the car was running at a rate of speed between eight and ten miles an hour at the time of the accident. According to his estimate the woman was from six to eight feet in front of the car when he first saw her. Witness McCausland, who was a passenger, said that the speed was from six to eight miles an hour. Formerly he had been in the employ of the defendant as a motorman. He said that a car in the position of the one in question, just coming out of a curve on such a grade as existed at that place, could and should have been stopped within five feet. Witness Tucker, another experienced man who had worked as a motorman, testified that a car could be stopped on that grade in five feet. In this state of the evidence, we cannot say that, as matter of law, the defendant was entitled to a judgment based upon the contributory negligence of Mrs. Tucker. The question of "last clear chance" was, under the circumstances, one which the court should have determined (there was no jury) upon the facts presented by the testimony.

It follows that the judgment and order should be, and accordingly they are, reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; HEN SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

(171 Cal. 746)

FLYNN v. FLYNN. (S. F. 6564.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1916.)

1. DIVORCE ⇐⇒91—RESIDENCE—ALLEGATIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

The allegation in plaintiff's complaint for divorce that "plaintiff resides in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and has resided in said city and county for more than four years next immediately preceding the commencement of this action," was a sufficient allegation of the residence required by Civ. Code, § 128, without alleging that the residence was bona fide, since such allegation necessarily implied residence in good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 287–289; Dec. Dig. ⇐⇒91.]

2. DIVORCE ⇐⇒125—RESIDENCE—ADMISSION—PROOF REQUIRED.

Where, in an action for divorce, defendant admitted plaintiff's residence in her answer and the court granted plaintiff a divorce without further proof of residence, the judgment must be reversed on defendant's appeal asserting such ruling as error, since plaintiff's residence is an essential fact to jurisdiction in divorce requiring proof independent of the admissions or statements of the parties under Civ. Code, § 130.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 399–402; Dec. Dig. ⇐⇒125.]

3. DIVORCE ⇐⇒168—COLLATERAL ATTACK—EXPRESS FINDINGS—DECREE—VALIDITY.

It is not essential to the validity of a decree of divorce as against collateral attack that there should be express findings of fact on the question of the essential residence or of other essential facts in the absence of a statute making such findings jurisdictional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 549, 550; Dec. Dig. ⇐⇒168.]

Shaw, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by John Flynn against Ellen Flynn for divorce. Judgment for plaintiff was reversed by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District. Decision of the District Court of Appeal vacated, and case ordered transferred to the Supreme Court for determination. Judgment reversed.

Breen & Kelly, of San Francisco, for appellant. Charles F. Hanlon and Louis H. Brownstone, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action for divorce. Plaintiff was awarded an interlocutory decree, from which defendant appeals. The judgment was reversed by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District, solely on the ground that there was no express finding that plaintiff had resided in the state or in the county in which the action was brought for the periods specified in section 128, Civil Code, that section providing that "a divorce must not be granted unless the plaintiff has been a resident of the state one year, and of the county in which the action is brought three months, next preceding the commencement of the action," and also that there was no evidence adduced on the trial to show such residence. The decision of the District Court of Appeal was vacated and the case ordered transferred to this court for determination because we were not satisfied as to the correctness of certain views expressed by that court in its opinion.

[1] Plaintiff's complaint contains a sufficient allegation of residence in accord with the provisions of said section 128, Civil Code, it being alleged that:

"Said plaintiff resides in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and has resided in said city and county for more than four years next immediately preceding the commencement of this action."

Any suggestion that such allegation is defective for the reason that it is not in so many words alleged that such residence was "bona fide" is unwarranted by anything contained in the statute, and if anything to the contrary is intimated by language used in Coleman v. Coleman, 23 Cal. App. 423, 138 Pac. 362, it must be considered as disapproved. Of course, the residence must be bona fide as a matter of fact, or it is not residence at all. The allegation of residence here necessarily implies residence in good faith, and entirely measures up to the requirement of the statute.

[2] The allegation of residence was not denied by the answer. In fact, in her cross-complaint, stating a cause of action for permanent support and maintenance under section 137, Civil Code, defendant alleged that both parties were and for more than one year next preceding the commencement of the action had been, residents of the city and county of San Francisco. The bill of exceptions, which affirmatively states that it "contains all of the testimony introduced and all of the proceedings had on the trial of said action," shows that no actual proof of residence was required, and that the court accepted the admission of the parties on that proposition, it being stated simply that "it was admitted that * * * the plaintiff had resided in San Francisco, as set forth in the complaint." The court made no express finding as to residence.

In the ordinary case, of course, it would be a complete answer to any suggestion of error warranting reversal under these circumstances, that the allegation of residence was admitted by the pleadings, and also expressly admitted by the parties on the trial. This would obviate the necessity of either proof or finding. But under our law an action for divorce is sui generis. The well-settled policy of the law is to protect the marriage relation and to prevent its dissolution in any case, even where the parties consent to or desire its dissolution, unless cause recognized by the law as warranting the same exists. Section 130, Civil Code, provides, as it has ever since the year 1874, that:

"No divorce can be granted upon the default of the defendant, or upon the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties, or upon any statement or finding of fact made by a referee; but the court must, * * * require proof of the facts alleged."

The object of this provision is, of course, to prevent the obtaining of a divorce by collusion between the parties, where no lawful ground for a divorce exists. Its effect necessarily is to make it erroneous for a court to grant a divorce in the absence of some proof, independent of the admissions and statements of the parties, of the facts warranting such action. That a party appealing from a judgment of divorce may successfully urge such error as a ground for reversal, even though the essential fact was admitted by the pleadings, appears to follow, and was decided in Bennett v. Bennett, 28 Cal. 599.

It must be taken as settled by the decisions that the residence prescribed by section 128, Civil Code, is essential to the jurisdiction of a court to grant a divorce, and also that the complaint must allege such residence. The question whether the residence essential to jurisdiction exists as matter of fact is, of course, one to be determined by the trial court, but obviously, in its determination, the trial court is controlled by the provisions of section 130, Civil Code, and cannot act upon the uncorroborated statement, admission or testimony of the parties. This we think is clearly the effect of the decision in Bennett v. Bennett, supra, which further, as already stated, sustains the right of a party to complain of error in the conclusions of the trial court in this regard, although in such court he had admitted the allegation of residence. In the case at bar the bill of exceptions affirmatively shows that the trial court failed to require the essential proof of residence, and that it acted entirely, so far as that question was concerned, on the uncorroborated admissions and statements of the parties. We are satisfied that under such circumstances the judgment cannot be upheld.

[3] In view of certain language of the opinion in Coleman v. Coleman, 23 Cal. App. 423, 138 Pac. 362, as well as certain language in the District Court of Appeal opinion in the case at bar, we deem it proper to add that it is not essential to the validity of a divorce decree as against collateral attack that there should be an express finding of fact on the question of the essential residence, or, indeed, express findings of fact on any question. A conclusion to the contrary would be opposed to the well-settled presumption in favor of the validity of judgments of courts of general jurisdiction, and would not be warranted in the absence of some statutory provision substantially making such express findings essential to the jurisdiction of a court to grant a divorce. There is no such statutory provision. The only possible effect of a mere failure to make express findings in such a case is that the judgment may be reversed on an appeal taken by one of the parties. Whether a judgment should even be reversed on an appeal for mere failure on the part of the court to make an express finding on some matter essential to the granting of a divorce, where the fact is admitted by the pleadings, and there is no showing that sufficient proof of the fact was not made on the trial, is a question it is unnecessary here to determine. Here we have the showing that proper and sufficient proof of the essential fact was not made on the trial.

It is urged that if the judgment be reversed, we should order, in the exercise of our discretion, that a new trial be limited to the single issue of residence. We have examined the record with this suggestion in view, and are of the opinion that no such limitation should be made.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. I think the case comes within the rule of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. Furthermore, the case was hotly contested in the lower court. There was no collusion. The lack of corroborative evidence was not urged below. The objection should not be allowed to prevail on appeal. It is clearly the result of an afterthought.

171 Cal. 697

In re MURPHY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 4323.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1916.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⊂=111—"ORDINARY PROBATE PROCEEDING"—ATTORNEY'S FEES—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1619, allowing attorneys for administrators a fee out of the estate for conducting the ordinary probate proceedings, an attorney's services in filing a brief in opposition to the petition for revocation of letters of administration granted to the public administrator and in preparing an order therein was not an ordinary probate proceeding, so that there was no basis for the allowance of an attorney's fee.

[Ed. Note.—For other case, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 448–462; Dec. Dig. ⊂=111.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Ordinary Probate Proceedings.]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⊂=111—PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR — ACT—ATTORNEY'S FEE—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1619, allowing attorneys for administrator's fees out of the estate for conducting the ordinary probate proceedings, with a further allowance for extraordinary services, and the county charter of Los Angeles County, by article 6, § 14, creating the office of county counsel, and by article 6, § 21, requiring such counsel to act as attorney for the public administrator, and in every matter to collect the attorney's fee allowed therein by law, and to pay it into the county treasury, the county counsel, who gave no advice and rendered no service to the estate or to the public administrator administering it, except permitting the administrator to sign his name to the petition for letters of administration and other documents prepared by the administrator, and to which his signature would have the same legal effect as the signature of the counsel, was not entitled to an attorney's fee, and hence no sum was allowable to the public administrator administering an estate for services of an attorney in the matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 448–462; Dec. Dig. ⊂=111.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Louise M. Murphy, deceased. From an order refusing to allow an item for attorney's fees set out in his final account, Frank Bryson, administrator, appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Hill, County Counsel, Roy V. Reppy, Asst. County Counsel, and Edward T. Bishop, Deputy County Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Charles C. Montgomery, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Frank Bryson, administrator of the estate of Louise Murphy, deceased, prosecutes this appeal from an order of court refusing to allow the item "Attorney's fees, statutory, $1,142.18," set out in his final account as being by him incurred for attorney's fees for legal services rendered in conducting the ordinary probate proceedings in said estate.

The matter came on to be heard upon objections interposed to the administrator's final account and petition for distribution. The court made findings of fact upon which no attack is made. Appellant, however, insists that the order made is not supported by the findings. It appears that at all of the times in question Bryson was public administrator of Los Angeles county, in which capacity he administered the estate of deceased; that by section 14, art. 6, of the county charter of Los Angeles county there was created the office of county counsel, which office was, during the time of the administration, filled by A. J. Hill, and whose duties as such officer were prescribed by section 21, art. 6, of such county charter, which provides:

"The county counsel * * * shall also act as attorney for the public administrator in the matter of all estates in which such officer is * * * administrator, and the county counsel shall, in every such matter, collect the attorney's fees allowed therein by law and pay the same into the county treasury."

The name of A. J. Hill, but not by him or his deputies, was attached to all papers with his concurrence and with the intention on the part of said administrator of designating Hill as his attorney in the matter of said estate, as provided in said article 6, § 21, of said county charter. Prior to the filing of objections to the final account all papers filed in said estate were prepared by said public administrator, or by his deputies and in his office, with the exception that said Hill, county counsel of the county of Los Angeles, prepared and filed in court a brief upon the legal questions raised by a petition filed in the proceeding asking for a revocation of the letters granted to said public administrator, and said A. J. Hill, county counsel, prepared the order which was signed by the judge of the court and filed, denying the petition for revocation of letters issued to the public administrator. Aside from this, said A. J. Hill, county counsel, did not nor did any of his deputies prepare any paper or make any appearance by personal presence in court, or give any legal advice, excepting in connection with said petition for revocation of letters aforesaid, concerning the administration of the estate. The public administrator, either personally or through his deputies, did, with the exception above noted, perform all the services which were performed in connection with the administration of said estate, and did not, except as stated, find it necessary to obtain assistance or advice from the said A. J. Hill, county counsel, or his deputies, upon any matters connected with the administration of the estate, though Hill was at all times ready to perform legal services in connection with such administration. As conclusions of law the court found that no legal services had been rendered the public administrator in the conduct of the administration of said estate, and that neither Bryson, Hill nor the county of Los Angeles is entitled to be allowed attorney's fees therein in any sum whatsoever.

[1] The service performed in filing the brief in opposition to the petition for the revocation of letters of administration granted to Bryson and the preparation of the order therein was not the ordinary proceeding referred to in section 1619, Code of Civil Procedure, and for which the fees are claimed. If regarded as extraordinary service, no fees were asked therefor. Moreover, in such contest the public administrator was not acting as a trustee of the estate of deceased, but acting solely in and for his own interest or that of the municipality entitled under the charter to the fees of administration. Estate of Lermond, 142 Cal. 585, 76 Pac. 488. Hence the services so rendered constituted no basis for the allowance of statutory fees.

[2] The question then fairly presented upon the findings is this: Is the estate of a deceased person chargeable with attorney's fees where the attorney claiming them gives no advice and renders no service to the estate or administrator thereof, the sole basis for his demand being that he permitted the administrator to sign his name to the petition for letters of administration and other documents prepared by the administrator and to which the latter's signature as administrator would give them the same legal effect as though signed by the attorney? Section 1371, Code Civ. Proc. Appellant quotes from Estate of Goodrich, 6 Cal. App. 730, 93 Pac. 121, where it is said:

> "Under our practice the services of an attorney are not only essential, but the burden and responsibility of his work are usually much greater than those of the executor or administrator. The effect of the law is simply to allow the executor an additional fee for a certain expense of administration."

While this is true, we know of no law which requires an administrator to employ an attorney, and conceding that, where one is employed and acts as attorney his responsibilities are as great as those of the administrator, certainly the fact in this case that the administrator performed all the services himself without the assistance or advice of counsel, not only shows that no necessity existed for employing an attorney, but also shows, since he did nothing, the attorney claiming the fees assumed no burden or responsibility whatever. The fees demanded are the statutory fees provided by section 1619, Code of Civil Procedure, for services rendered in the conduct of the ordinary probate proceedings. This section provides that the court may make further allowance for "extraordinary services such as sales or mortgages of real estate, contested or litigated claims against the estate," etc. Upon the presentation of a claim based upon alleged extraordinary services, it would devolve upon the attorney to show that he had rendered the service, and in the absence of such showing it would be the duty of the court to disallow such claim. Likewise, where a claim for statutory fees is presented for services rendered in conducting the ordinary probate proceedings, the burden, where objection is made thereto, rests upon the attorney to show that he has rendered such service. We know of no law, statutory or otherwise, which requires an administrator to employ an attorney; nevertheless, if it appears that he has employed an attorney who has rendered the ordinary service contemplated by the statute in such proceedings, he is entitled to the statutory fees. Estate of Goodrich, 6 Cal. App. 730, 93 Pac. 121. The charter provision does not purport to be a revenue measure in the interest of the county. It contemplates that the county counsel shall act—that is, do something in conducting the probate proceedings—and section 1619, Code of Civil Procedure, contemplates that the attorney shall render some service in conducting the ordinary probate proceedings as a basis for his claim of compensation. Hill neither acted within the meaning of the charter nor performed any service whatsoever for the estate. In our opinion, it would be a travesty upon the law to uphold appellant's demand based as it is upon a mere pretense that he has rendered professional service to said estate.

This view renders it unnecessary to discuss the question of the validity of the charter provision. Suffice it to say that, assuming Hill had, at the administrator's request, rendered services to the estate, then, conceding the act invalid as claimed by respondent, he would nevertheless be entitled to the fees provided by section 1619, since it would be immaterial what motive prompted the administrator in employing him.

As stated, the appeal is prosecuted by the administrator, whose right so to do is not questioned by the respondent. Whether or not he is an aggrieved party possessing the right of appeal, since the statutory changes in sections 1616 and 1619, Code of Civil Procedure, providing for the making of an allowance direct to the attorney out of the assets of the estate and as to which the administrator incurs no liability, is not decided.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 719

LARKIN et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SHASTA COUNTY. (Sac. 2451.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1916.)

1. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸45—INVOLUNTARY—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 583, declaring that any action shall be dismissed by the court in which it shall have been commenced, or to which it may be transferred on motion of defendant after due notice to plaintiff, unless it is brought to trial within five years after defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended, is mandatory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Dec. Dig. ⟸45.]

2. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60—INVOLUNTARY—STATUTES—STIPULATION OF PARTIES.

Under such statute, a stipulation by counsel of the respective parties for an extension of the time of trial is a stipulation of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. ⟸60.]

3. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60—INVOLUNTARY—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Where the answer was filed June 30, 1909, and the minutes of the court showed that on November 27th, the date set for trial, the parties appeared in court and through their counsel stipulated that trial should be fixed for April 11, 1910, and the court so ordered, that on April 11, 1910, the case was continued until June 29th, and on June 29th the case was again continued until September 19th, but there was no record entry of independent stipulation in writing providing that time of trial should be extended beyond the five-year limit, the action must be dismissed under Code Civ. Proc. § 583, declaring that an action not brought to trial within five years after answer shall be dismissed, unless extended by written stipulation of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. ⟸60.]

4. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60—INVOLUNTARY—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

That the original defendant administrator died within the five-year period after answer in which actions must, under Code Civ. Proc, § 583, be brought to trial, and no other administrator was appointed until after the expiration of that period, will not excuse plaintiff's failure to bring the action to trial and so preclude dismissal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. ⟸60.]

5. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60—INVOLUNTARY—PERSONS BOUND TO BRING ACTION TO TRIAL.

After defendant's answer, plaintiff's attorney died, and defendants served no notice on plaintiff in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 286, declaring that when an attorney dies or ceases to act a party to an action for whom he was acting must, before any further proceedings are had against him, be required by the adverse party by written notice to appoint another attorney or appear in person. Section 583 provides that if an action is not brought to trial within five years after answer it shall be dismissed. Held that, as defendants were not actors, their failure to file notice demanding appointment of an attorney did not preclude them claiming a dismissal for plaintiff's failure to bring the case to trial within five years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. ⟸60.]

6. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60—INVOLUNTARY—GROUNDS.

In such case, the fact that one of defendant's counsel died within the five-year period and the other ceased to act will not excuse plaintiff from bringing the action to trial within that time, as he could have required defendants to appoint another attorney, or appear in person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. ⟸60.]

7. QUIETING TITLE ⟸39 — ACTIONS — CROSS-COMPLAINT.

In a suit to quiet title, judgment in defendant's favor protects him against any of plaintiff's claims, so a cross-complaint praying that title be adjudged in defendant is effective merely to prevent plaintiff from dismissing it before trial without the consent of defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. ⟸39.]

8. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⟸60—INVOLUNTARY—RIGHT TO DISMISS.

In a suit to quiet title, though defendant filed a cross-complaint asking that his title be adjudged good, the suit may be dismissed under Code Civ. Proc. § 583, for plaintiff's failure to bring it to trial within five years after answer, for the filing of the cross-complaint did not make defendant an actor, as it would give defendant no greater rights than he would have had under an answer denying plaintiff's title, but merely precluded plaintiff from dismissing without his consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. ⟸60.]

9. MANDAMUS ⟸43—ISSUANCE OF WRIT—DISCRETION.

Where, under the statutes, defendant is entitled to dismissal of plaintiff's action for want of prosecution, mandamus to compel the lower court to order dismissal will not be denied on the ground that the writ is discretionary, and will not be issued where it will cause injustice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 88, 89; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃43.]

10. MANDAMUS ⊂⊃180—RIGHT TO—REFUSAL.
Where one of several defendants defaulted, and the others were entitled to dismissal for want of prosecution, and the defendants who answered moved for a dismissal as to them, their application for a writ of mandamus to compel the trial court to order dismissal will not be denied under the rule that a petitioner for mandamus is concluded by the terms of the alternative writ, and, as the alternative writ prayed a dismissal of "the action," it was not wholly authorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 401–405; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃180.]

11. MANDAMUS ⊂⊃180—RIGHT TO—RULES.
The rule that where an alternative writ is awarded for a purpose, partly proper and partly improper, the court will not grant peremptory mandamus, is not an iron-bound one, but is to be applied with principles of justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 401–405; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃180.]

In Bank. Original application for mandamus by John Larkin, as administrator of the estate of Alexander Hulsey, deceased, and others, against the Superior Court of the County of Shasta. Petition granted.

W. D. Tillotson, of Redding (Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, of counsel), for petitioners. Chenoweth & Leininger, of Redding, and Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an original application to this court for a writ of mandate to compel respondent to dismiss an action pending therein, instituted by the Potosi Land & Mining Company, a corporation, against a former administrator of the said estate of Alexander Hulsey, N. L. Peterson, James E. Lutman, the Shasta Dredging Company, a corporation, and certain fictitious defendants. The action was one by the plaintiff therein to quiet its alleged title to certain land in Shasta county. The action was commenced May 6, 1907, and summons was served during that year on all the above-named defendants. No appearance was ever made by the Shasta Dredging Company, and it must be accepted as a fact from the record before us that the plaintiff is entitled to a default judgment against that defendant. The other defendants filed their answer on June 30, 1909, denying plaintiff's alleged title, claiming title in themselves, and praying for a judgment establishing and quieting their title to said land. The action has never been tried. On November 3, 1915, these petitioners, being all of the defendants except the Shasta Dredging Company, gave notice of a motion in the superior court for the dismissal of said action as to them, on the ground that the same had not been brought to trial within five years after they had filed their answer. The motion thus noticed was duly heard and denied by the superior court, and this proceeding was then instituted to compel the dismissal asked.

[1-3] Petitioners' motion in the superior court and their proceeding here are based on the second paragraph of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, enacted in 1905. The section is as follows:

"The court may in its discretion dismiss any action for want of prosecution on motion of the defendant and after due notice to the plaintiff, whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed to bring such action to trial. Any action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced or to which it may be transferred on motion of the defendant, after due notice to plaintiff or by the court on its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial with five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended."

It is obvious, from a mere reading of the second paragraph of this section, that a dismissal is mandatory in any case where the facts bring it within its provisions. It was so declared in Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 Pac. 1002.

Various reasons are urged why this law has no application here.

As we have said, the answer of these petitioners was filed June 30, 1909. The following facts are alleged in the answer of respondent, and are not disputed by petitioners: On November 20, 1909, the court ordered that on November 27, 1909, the time of trial should be fixed. The minutes of the court show that on November 27, 1909, the parties appeared in open court by their respective counsel and stipulated that the trial should be fixed for April 11, 1910, and the court so ordered; that on April 11, 1910, with the same procedure, the trial was continued to June 29, 1910; and that on June 29, 1910, with the same procedure, the trial was continued to September 19, 1910. Nothing further appears with reference to the proposed trial of the action, other than that after November 3, 1915, more than five years after the date to which it had last been continued, the action was set for trial on December 20, 1915. No stipulation in writing relative to time or continuance of trial was ever made "in writing," unless an agreement of counsel for the respective parties made in open court and entered on the minutes satisfies the provision of the section in this regard.

We are satisfied that there is no force in the suggestion that "the parties" can be said to have stipulated within the meaning of the section only when they personally do so. It is clear that a stipulation by respective counsel for the parties would be a stipulation of the parties. Whether they can be said to "have stipulated in writing" within the meaning of the section, when they have simply orally agreed in open court and their agreement is entered on the minutes, is a more serious question. However, we regard this question as of minor importance in view of the fact that we are satisfied that no stipulation of the character described, either oral or written, was ever made. This point, not suggested in the oral argument, has been forcibly made in petitioners' brief filed since, and to their contention we can see no good answer. The stipulations shown by the minutes were, first, one fixing as the time for trial a date within one year from the filing of the answer, and, second, two continuing the trial, the later one carrying it to a date within 15 months after the filing of the answer. The statute says that the court must dismiss the action "unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the defendant has filed his answer, except where the parties have stipulated in writing that the time may be extended." This seems to us to say very clearly that unless the parties have, in effect at least, stipulated in writing that the action need not be brought to trial within five years from the date of the filing of the answer, it must be dismissed at the expiration of such five years, if not "brought to trial" within that time. A stipulation in terms waiving the benefit of this section, or one in terms providing that the time fixed by the section within which trial must be had shall be extended indefinitely or for a definite time, or a series of stipulations continuing the trial to a date beyond the five-year period, might any of them suffice as an answer to a motion to dismiss, and constitute a stipulation in writing that the time (the five-year period) shall be extended. But no such effect can fairly be given to a stipulation fixing a trial date within one year of the filing of the answer, or to two others continuing the trial date to a time within fifteen months of such filing. There is nothing in this that can fairly be taken as indicating any consent on the part of the defendants that the five-year period shall be extended by as much as a single minute, or as intimating to plaintiff that any such extension would be permitted. It is a stipulation in writing extending the five-year period that the statute provides for, and without such a stipulation, certainly in the absence of some element of estoppel, there can be no effective answer to a motion to dismiss, if the action has not been "brought to trial" within such period. The language of the statute is so plain in this regard that no other intent can be attributed to the Legislature. We are not concerned here with the exact meaning of the term "brought to trial," for it is manifest that with whatever liberality we construe it in favor of plaintiff here, this action was not brought to trial within five years of the date of the filing of the answer.

[4] It appears that the former administrator of the estate of Hulsey, the original defendant administrator, died in February, 1915, and that petitioner Larkin was not appointed administrator until October 30, 1915, and was not substituted herein as a party until November 2, 1915. All this, however, was after the expiration of the five-year period, and cannot by any possibility affect the determination of this proceeding.

[5] It further appears that one Mr. Isaacs was the original attorney for plaintiff, that he died June 8, 1911, and that from June 8, 1911, to October 19, 1915, plaintiff had no attorney in the action. No notice was served on plaintiff requiring it to appoint another attorney in place of Mr. Isaacs or to appear in person, until September 23, 1915. It is claimed that, under these circumstances, the running of the five-year period was suspended from June 8, 1911, to September 23, 1915. This contention is based on section 286, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that:

"When an attorney dies, or is removed or suspended, or ceases to act as such, a party to an action, for whom he was acting as attorney, must before any further proceedings are had against him, be required by the adverse party, by written notice, to appoint another attorney, or to appear in person."

Clearly this section has no application here. It means no more than it plainly says, viz., that no proceedings may be had against him, no judgment or order or other step in the action taken, until he appoints an attorney, unless the prescribed notice be first given. The mere running of this five-year period, which had commenced to run prior to the death of Mr. Isaacs, was not a "proceeding" had against the plaintiff, even under the very liberal definition given that term as used in section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, in Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 43, 29 Pac. 332. A good illustration of what is meant by the term "proceedings," as here used, is the dismissal sought by motion in the superior court in this very case, prior to the making of which motion the defendants gave the notice contemplated by the section. It must be confessed that the opinion of the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, in Troy Laundry, etc., Co. v. Drivers', etc., Co., 13 Cal. App. 115, 109 Pac. 36, supports the claim of respondent as to the effect of section 286 in this regard, but we are satisfied that the views there expressed are erroneous. No petition for a hearing of that matter by this court was ever presented, and the opinion therein has never received our approval. The court might well have refused to dismiss the appeal there involved in the exercise of a wise discretion, thus reaching the same result that it did reach, but to hold that the death of the appellant's attorney during the time allowed for the filing of the opening brief ipso facto extended the time for the filing of such brief is not warranted by anything said in section 286, Code of Civil Procedure, or by any other rule of law of which we are aware.

[6] The original attorneys of the petitioners as defendants, in said action, were the firm of Reed & Dozier. According to the answer, Mr. Reed died shortly after the death of Mr. Isaacs, and Mr. Dozier in December, 1908, or thereabouts, removed his office from Redding to San Francisco and ceased to act as attorney for any of said defendants. Even assuming that for a portion of the five-year period there was no acting attorney of record for any of the defendants, we cannot see that such fact avails plaintiff in that action at all. The plaintiff could nevertheless have brought the case to trial, resorting to the procedure contemplated by section 286, Code of Civil Procedure, which we have just referred to.

We see no force whatever in the claim that, under the circumstances of this case, petitioners are estopped to claim that the action should be dismissed.

[7, 8] Respondent urges as material the fact that the action was one to quiet title, and that the defendants in their answer set up their own alleged title, and asked that they be adjudged the owners. Reliance is placed upon what is said in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal of the First District in Hickman v. Lynch, 149 Pac. 997, to the effect that, upon the filing of a cross-complaint by a defendant, the defendant became an aggressive and interested actor in the presentation of at least one phase of the case, and was therefore charged in part with the duty of bringing the case on for trial. The court therefore held that section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, had no application. That action was one for the recovery of money, in which the defendants, some two years and a half after the filing of the answer, had obtained leave to file and had filed a cross-complaint. Whatever may be said as to the correctness of the views of the District Court of Appeal as applied to such a case as the one before it, it is clear that they have no application here. While it is settled in this state that, in an action to quiet title, a defendant called upon by plaintiffs' action to quiet title to land to set up his own claim of title may file a cross-complaint setting up his own alleged ownership and asking that he be adjudged the owner, or may do the same thing in his answer, ordinarily no such practice is essential to his protection, as a conclusion against the plaintiff upon the issues raised by the complaint and answer fully determines the title as between the parties, and protects the defendant against any claim of the plaintiff as to title as fully as an affirmative decree in his favor would do. There is nothing before us to indicate or suggest that the action here involved is out of the ordinary in this regard. The principal object of such a practice would appear to be to prevent a plaintiff from dismissing his action before trial without the consent of the defendant. Subdivision 1, § 581, Code Civ. Proc. See Islais, etc., Water Co. v. Allen, 132 Cal. 432, 64 Pac. 713. What a defendant so situated is doing is really and substantially purely defensive. Brought into court by the plaintiff to defend his alleged title, he is simply defending it. It would seem unreasonable to hold that simply by reason of the fact that a defendant, whose alleged title is thus assailed by a plaintiff, asks for a decree adjudging that it is good as against such plaintiff, becomes an actor in the case in the sense that any duty devolves on him to bring the plaintiff's asserted claim to trial. We do not think that section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, should be so construed.

[9] It is urged that the issuance of a writ of mandate is not a matter of right, but a matter of discretion, and should never issue where it will work injustice or operate harshly or where it will not promote substantial justice. If we assume all this to be true, we still have no basis on which to hold that the dismissal of the action here involved will have any such effect. As has been said, as to the matter of discretion in such cases, "where one has a substantial right to protect or enforce, and this may be accomplished by such a writ, and there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, he is entitled as a matter of right to the writ," and a court cannot lawfully refuse it. Gay v. Torrance, 145 Cal. 144, 148, 78 Pac. 540. This, in view of what we have said, is such a case.

[10, 11] It is suggested that in no event can the action be dismissed as to the Shasta Dredging Company, and that as petitioners sought a dismissal of "the action," and as the alternative writ heretofore issued required a dismissal of "the action," a writ should not issue requiring a dismissal of the action only as to the petitioners here. The rule invoked is that a petitioner for such a writ is concluded by the terms of the alternative writ, and that, where the alternative writ is awarded for a purpose partly proper and partly improper, the court will not enforce it by a peremptory mandamus as to that which is proper, but will give judgment for the respondent. Gay v. Torrance, supra. A ruling in favor of respondent on this point would be of little avail to plaintiff in the action, as what we have already said makes it manifest that the superior court would be compelled to dismiss the action as to these petitioners, either on its own motion or their motion hereafter made. But we think the rule invoked should not be applied under such circumstances as appear here. No such point is made by anything alleged in the answer of respondent. The motion for dismissal already made in the superior court was, as appears from the notice of motion annexed to the petition, simply for the dismissal of the action "as to these defendants," viz., the petitioners here. In the light of all the circumstances, the proceedings here, including the alternative writ, may fairly be regarded as simply looking to the dismissal there sought, a dismissal of the action as to the petitioners, the only thing in which petitioners appear to have any beneficial interest. It may properly be added that the rule invoked is not an iron-bound one, to be enforced by a court regardless of circumstances, but is one to be applied in consonance with principles of fairness and justice.

What we have said disposes of the many points made by learned counsel for respondent. We see no answer to the claim that in view of the provisions of section 583, Code of Civil Procedure, the superior court is without authority to take any course in the action referred to, so far as petitioners are concerned, except to order the action dismissed as to them.

Let a peremptory writ of mandamus issue requiring respondent to dismiss, as to the petitioners, the action referred to.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SHAW, J.

(171 Cal. 672)

RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 1500 v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SUTTER COUNTY et al. (Sac. 2361.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1916.)

1. DRAINS ⟸17 — RECLAMATION DISTRICT — OFFICERS—DUTY.

The imposition on reclamation district No. 1500 of the duty of building a levee by its creative act (St. 1913, p. 130) is an imposition of such duty on its directing officers, since a corporation, either public or private, can act only through officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 11, 12; Dec. Dig. ⟸17.]

2. INJUNCTION ⟸85—"OFFICER OF THE LAW"—RECLAMATION DISTRICT.

Such officers are "officers of the law" within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 3423, subd. 4, forbidding the issuance of an injunction to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 155, 156; Dec. Dig. ⟸85.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Officer of the Law.]

3. DRAINS ⟸6 — RECLAMATION STATUTE — PUBLIC BENEFIT—PRESUMPTIONS.

The building of the levee by such officers as directed by such reclamation act is for the public benefit, since, if the act is valid, its provisions must be deemed to have been enacted for the public benefit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. ⟸6.]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸38—STATUTES—CONFLICT WITH CONSTITUTION.

An act of the Legislature which is in conflict with the Constitution is utterly void, having no force or legal existence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. ⟸38.]

5. INJUNCTION ⟸85—PUBLIC OFFICERS EXECUTING PUBLIC STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

The provisions of Civ. Code, § 3423, subd. 4, prohibiting injunctions against the execution of public statutes by public officers, refer solely to injunctions against the execution of valid statutes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 155, 156; Dec. Dig. ⟸85.]

6. STATUTES ⟸105—ACTS EXPRESSING SUBJECT IN TITLE—CONSTRUCTION.

Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that every act shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, is to be liberally construed to effect its object of preventing the passage of acts bearing deceitful or misleading titles.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 117, 118; Dec. Dig. ⟸105.]

7. STATUTES ⟸123 — EXPRESSION OF SUBJECT IN TITLE.

The title of the act creating reclamation district No. 1500, and prescribing its duties (St. 1913, p. 130), was "An act creating a reclamation district, * * * providing for the management and control thereof. * * *" One of the provisions of the act was that the district construct a levee along a certain described line. Held, that such provision was not invalid as in conflict with Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that the subject of a legislative act be expressed in its title, since, the building of levees being a usual method of accomplishing reclamation, the provision therefor was sufficiently expressed as a detail incident to the general purpose of reclamation set out in such title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 176–183; Dec. Dig. ⟸123.]

8. DRAINS ⟸2 — RECLAMATION DISTRICT — LEVEE—FIXING LOCATION.

It is no objection to the provision of such act for the building of a levee on a certain line therein specified that the location of levees is committed to the board of trustees by Pol. Code, § 3454, relating to reclamation districts, since in passing such reclamation act the Legislature was not bound to follow the procedure laid down in the general law governing reclamation districts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. ⟸2.]

9. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸31 — RECLAMATION DISTRICT — DAMAGING COUNTY PROPERTY WITHOUT COMPENSATION — VALIDITY OF STATUTE.

The act creating reclamation district No. 1500 (St. 1913, p. 130) and providing for the building of a levee is not violative of Const. art. 1, § 14, prohibiting the taking or damaging of private property without compensation, in that such levee will destroy or damage county roads, bridges, and buildings by inundation, since such structures are not private property of the county, but are held by it on behalf of the state for governmental purposes; the county having no proprietary interest therein as against the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. ⟸31.]

10. COUNTIES ⟸24—PROPERTY—LEGISLATIVE CONTROL—COMPENSATION.

In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the Legislature has full control of the property held by the counties as agencies of the state, and may dispose thereof without the consent of or compensation to the counties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. ⟸24.]

11. PROHIBITION ⟸9—SCOPE OF WRIT.

The writ of prohibition will not issue to restrain mere errors by the court below; its office being to prevent acts in excess of jurisdiction only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 35; Dec. Dig. ⟸9.]

12. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂⊃55—PREVENTING EXECUTION OF PUBLIC STATUTES.

Civ. Code § 3423, subd. 4, forbidding the issuance of injunctions to prevent the execution of public statutes by public officers, is not a legislative invasion of the functions of the judicial department of the government, since such subdivision simply enunciates an old and generally recognized rule of equity jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 58–69, 71, 80, 81, 83; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃55.]

13. PROHIBITION ⊂⊃3—EXCEEDING JURISDICTION—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

The writ of prohibition will not issue to restrain an act in excess of the jurisdiction of the court below where there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition; Cent. Dig. §§ 4–19; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃3.]

14. PROHIBITION ⊂⊃10 — RECLAMATION DISTRICT—BUILDING LEVEE — INJUNCTION EXCEEDING JURISDICTION—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

Where, in an action brought by a county to enjoin the construction by the officers of a reclamation district of the levee provided for by its creative act (St. 1913, p. 130), the superior court of Sutter county, in excess of its jurisdiction, issued a temporary injunction and set the cause for trial, the writ of prohibition will issue to prohibit the further prosecution of the action, since, being prevented by the temporary injunction from performing its duties under such creative act during the pendency of such action, the reclamation district is without adequate remedy at law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 37–56; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃10.]

In Bank. Application by Reclamation District No. 1500 for a writ of prohibition against the Superior Court in and for the County of Sutter, State of California, and others, to prohibit further proceedings in an action for an injunction instituted by the County of Sutter against petitioner. Respondents' demurrer to the petition overruled, and writ issued as prayed.

A. C. Huston and Harry L. Huston, both of Woodland, and Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for petitioner. Arthur Coats, of Yuba City, W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and Lawrence Schillig and M. E. Sanborn, both of Yuba City, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The petitioner has applied to this court for a writ prohibiting the respondents from taking any further proceedings in an action instituted in the superior court of Sutter county.

The action in question was instituted by the county of Sutter as plaintiff against reclamation district No. 1500, the petitioner herein, its trustees, and other parties for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining said defendants from constructing certain levees or completing their construction. The complaint alleged that the construction of such levees would, at times of high water, flood a large tract of land which, under natural conditions, was not subject to inundation, and would destroy or injure the county courthouse, jail, hall of records, and grounds of Sutter county, as well as numerous bridges and many miles of highway belonging to said county. The petitioner herein and its trustees appeared in said action and objected to the issuance of any injunction upon the grounds that are now relied upon as justifying the writ of prohibition here sought. Notwithstanding their objections, the superior court issued a temporary injunction restraining the construction of the greater part of the levee work described in the complaint, and thereafter set the cause for trial. The petitioner now seeks to prohibit the further prosecution of the action, contending that the superior court is without jurisdiction to grant the relief sought therein.

Reclamation district No. 1500 was created by an act of the Legislature approved April 30, 1913. Stats. 1913, p. 130. By section 1 of the act a reclamation district, to be known as reclamation district No. 1500, was created, and its boundaries were described. The same section contains the following provision:

"It shall be the duty of said reclamation district No. 1500 to construct a levee, forming the south side of Tisdale by-pass, and a portion of the westerly side of the Sutter basin by-pass, the center line of which levee shall be substantially along the following lines, the same having been approved by the state reclamation board March 31st, 1913: [Here follows a description of the line of the levee.]"

The Tisdale by-pass mentioned in the act forms the northerly boundary of district No. 1500. The described levee line along a "portion of the westerly side of the Sutter basin by-pass" is the easterly boundary of the district. This portion at its southerly end touches the left bank of the Sacramento river at a point known as Wild Irishman Bend, and the act declares:

"It shall be the duty of said reclamation district No. 1500 to continue the construction of a levee along the left bank of the Sacramento river, or adjacent thereto, from the said Wild Irishman Bend, upstream, to the place of beginning."

The Sacramento river, from said "place of beginning" on the Tisdale by-pass to Wild Irishman Bend, forms the westerly and southerly boundaries of the district, so that the levees described in the act would completely enclose the said district. The portion of the work sought to be enjoined is that bordering on the Tisdale by-pass and the Sutter basin by-pass. Section 2 of the act provides for the management and control of the district in accordance with the provisions of the Political Code, names five trustees who are to hold until the election and qualification of their successors, and declares that the district shall have the powers conferred by law upon reclamation and swamp land districts and certain other powers. The remaining sections of the act have no bearing upon the questions here involved.

The property which, as the complaint in the injunction suit alleges, will be damaged by the construction of the levee is not within the boundaries of reclamation district No. 1500. The petitioner's contention that the superior court is exceeding its jurisdiction in undertaking to restrain the acts complained of in the action pending before it is based upon the provisions of sections 3423 of the Civil Code and 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Each of these sections declares that:

"An injunction cannot be granted: * * * (4) To prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit."

The construction of the levee in question is, by the act creating the district, made the duty of the district, and it is contended that an injunction which restrains the performance of this duty comes directly within the terms of the Code sections cited.

[1-3] It will not be questioned that the act which creates reclamation district No. 1500 is a public statute. It is equally clear that the construction of the levees designated in the act constitutes the execution of such public statute. The injunction complained of restrains the district and its trustees from proceeding with the erection of such levees. The statute does not in terms impose the duty of building the levees upon the trustees. Such construction is declared to be the duty of the district. But, since a corporation, public or private, can act only through its officers or agents, the statutory imposition of a duty upon the district necessarily imposes the duty upon the directing officers of the district. We need not therefore inquire whether the reclamation district, as such, may be regarded as an "officer of the law" within the meaning of section 3423 of the Civil Code. It is enough if the trustees who are parties defendant in the injunction suit answer that description. The officers of an irrigation district have been held to be public officers of the state (Re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 296, 322, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106), and the trustees of the reclamation district created by the act of 1913 occupy an analogous position. They are officers of the law within the meaning of the Code section under discussion. That section declares that an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit. If the statute creating reclamation district No. 1500 is valid at all, its provisions must be deemed to have been enacted for the public benefit. People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 Pac. 207; Heffner v. Case and Morgan Counties, 193 Ill. 439, 450, 62 N. E. 201, 58 L. R. A. 353.

[4, 5] The argument, in any case, against the validity of an injunction issued to restrain the execution of a statute, rests, of course, on the premise that the statute in question is a valid exercise of the legislative power. An act of the Legislature which is in conflict with the Constitution is no statute at all. It "is utterly void, has no force or legal existence. * * *" Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 228, 92 Pac. 353. The provisions of section 3423, subd. 4, of the Civil Code "refer solely to injunctions against the execution of valid statutes." Wheeler v. Herbert, supra.

[6, 7] The respondents attack the validity of the act creating reclamation district No. 1500, and the soundness of their contentions in this regard must be examined. The title of the act is as follows:

"An act creating a reclamation district to be called and known as 'reclamation district No. 1500,' providing for the management and control thereof and dissolving all levee districts, swamp land districts, and reclamation districts, lying wholly within the boundaries of said reclamation district No. 1500, providing for the liquidation and winding up of said dissolved districts, and excluding from any levee district, swamp land district and reclamation district any land lying within the boundaries of said reclamation district No. 1500."

The main contention of the parties attacking the validity of the law is that the provision making it the duty of the district to construct certain levees deals with a subject which is not suggested by the title of the act, and that this provision, therefore, must fall because of the terms of article 4, § 24, of the Constitution. That section reads:

"Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in its title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed in its title."

The constitutional provision respecting the titles of acts has frequently been the subject of construction by this court. It is thoroughly settled that the provision is to be liberally construed with a view to effecting the object of the provision, viz., to prevent the passage of acts bearing deceitful and misleading titles. Ex parte Lidell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251.

"It is not necessary that the title of an act should embrace an abstract or catalogue of its contents." Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 229, 24 Pac. 383.

"When the general purpose of the act is declared, the details provided for the accomplishment of that purpose will be regarded as necessary incidents." Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. at page 637, 29 Pac. 251; People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 Pac. 207.

The title of the present act states, among other things, that it is an act creating a reclamation district and providing for the management and control thereof. These words indicate plainly that the act is designed to erect a district for the purpose of reclaiming lands lying within its borders, and to prescribe the mode of managing and controlling such districts. Lands may be reclaimed by protecting them from overflow; and the most usual method of accomplishing this result is to surround the lands with levees. How, then, can it be argued that a provision that protective levees shall be constructed along the boundary of the proposed reclamation district is not within the scope or the purposes contemplated in the creation of the district, or that such provision is not suggested by the title of an act which declares that its purpose is the creation, management, and control of such reclamation district? It is true that the act contains provisions relating to certain levee work beyond the boundaries of the district, but this work is not involved in the injunction suit. If the provision requiring this exterior construction is invalid—we are not to be understood as intimating that it is—the county of Sutter is not claiming to be affected by it, and is in no position to attack it.

[8] One ground of objection urged by respondents is that while, under the provisions of the Political Code relative to reclamation districts, the location of the levees and other details of the plans of reclamation are committed to the board of trustees (Pol. Code, § 3454), the present act by its own terms provides for the location of the levees. But since, as is well settled, districts of this kind may be created by special act (People v. Levee District, 131 Cal. 30, 63 Pac. 676; People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 Pac. 207), the Legislature in passing such act is not bound to follow the procedure laid down in the general law governing reclamation districts. It may adopt such procedure as it deems necessary or expedient, and there can be no constitutional objection to a location in the act itself of the lines of the proposed levees.

The petition herein refers to other acts of the Legislature (and an act of Congress) which contemplate the formation and adoption of a plan for the general control of flood conditions in the Sacramento valley under the joint direction of the federal and state governments. These acts are pointed to as indicating the reason for the direction in the present act that the levees be located as they are; such location being a part of the general plan referred to. We do not find it necessary to refer in greater detail to these matters, for the reason that, as already stated, we think it entirely within the power of the Legislature, in creating a reclamation district by special act, to define the manner and plan by which the contemplated reclamation work shall be carried out. It becomes unnecessary, therefore, to consider the question whether the other acts referred to, i. e., the one creating the reclamation board (Stats. 1911, Special Session, p. 117) and the one approving the plan of the California débris commission (Stats. 1913, p. 252), are open to attack as containing an unconstitutional delegation of power by the Legislature.

[9, 10] But the respondents argue that the action is one to restrain the commission of acts which will constitute a taking of the property of Sutter county, the plaintiff in the injunction suit, and that any statute which purports to authorize such taking without compensation is a violation of familiar constitutional restrictions. Const. art. 1 § 14. Payne v. English, 79 Cal. 540, 21 Pac. 952, was an action to enjoin the harbor commissioners of San Francisco from entering upon certain land claimed by the plaintiff and erecting a wharf thereon. The defendants objected to the issuance of an injunction upon the ground that they were authorized by statute to construct wharves, and that subdivision 4 of section 3423 of the Civil Code prevented the issuance of an injunction against the execution of a public statute. To this contention the court responded briefly:

"There is no public statute, or other law, which authorized defendants to take plaintiffs' land, at least without proceedings under the power of eminent domain."

See, also, Pierce v. City of Los Angeles, 120 Cal. 516, 114 Pac. 818.

The constitutional provision above referred to declares that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to * * * the owner." The public building, roads, and bridges of a county are not the private property of the county in such sense as to authorize the county to object to the taking or damaging thereof by the state for public purposes. The counties are governmental agencies of the state (County of San Mateo v. Coburn, 130 Cal. 631, 63 Pac. 78, 621), and the property intrusted to their governmental management is public property. The proprietary interest in all such property belongs to the public, and, if there be a legal title in the county, it is a title held in trust for the whole public. Board of Education v. Martin, 92 Cal. 209, 28 Pac. 799; People v. Holladay, 93 Cal. 241, 29 Pac. 54, 27 Am. St. Rep. 186; Heffner v. Cass and Morgan Counties, 193 Ill. 439, 62 N. E. 201, 58 L. R. A. 353. In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the Legislature has full control of the property held by the counties as agencies of the state, and may dispose of that property without the consent of the county or without compensating it. City of Edwardsville v. County of Madison, 251 Ill. 265, 96 N. E. 238, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101. Upon analogous principles it has been established by a long line of decisions, in this state as well as elsewhere, that, except as restrained by constitutional limitations, the Legislature may alter the boundaries and extent of counties at will, may consolidate two or more into one, or divide and create new counties out of the territory of counties already existent.

"Upon the creation of a new county out of the territory of another, the Legislature, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, may make such provision with reference to the public property and debts, or their division, as to it may seem just. * * *" Los Angeles County v.

Orange County, 97 Cal. 329, 32 Pac. 316; Orange County v. Los Angeles County, 114 Cal. 390, 46 Pac. 173; Tulare County v. Kings County, 117 Cal. 195, 49 Pac. 8; Colusa County v. Glenn County, 124 Cal. 498, 57 Pac. 477; Riverside County v. San Bernardino County, 134 Cal. 517, 66 Pac. 788; Laramie County v. Albany County, 92 U. S. 307, 23 L. Ed. 552.

So, too, this court has held that the Legislature may transfer the property of one reclamation district (Rec. Dist. v. Birks, 159 Cal. 233, 113 Pac. 170) or one school district (Pass School Dist. v. Hollywood City School Dist., 156 Cal. 416, 105 Pac. 122, 26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 485, 20 Ann. Cas. 87) to another without compensation. All of these rulings are founded upon the proposition that the county (or reclamation or school district) is a mere political agency of the state, that it holds its property on behalf of the state for governmental purposes, and that it has no private proprietary interest in such property as against the state. Applying the doctrine to the present case, it is clear that, if the building of the levees contemplated by the act creating the petitioner will or may injure or destroy buildings, roads, and bridges of the county of Sutter, the results will merely be an injury to or destruction of public property in the making of a public improvement authorized by the state itself. The state, damaging or taking its own property, is not required to provide compensation under the constitutional provision relative to eminent domain.

These views are in no wise inconsistent with the recognition of a sufficient title in the counties to justify their maintaining actions against private persons or corporations injuring roads or other public property. That such actions may be maintained is the full extent of the holding in cases like Sierra County v. Butler, 136 Cal. 547, 69 Pac. 418, and Yuba County v. Min. Co., 141 Cal. 360, 74 Pac. 1049, cited by respondents. Nor is there any conflict between our present holding and the decision in Grogan v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 615, where the court was considering the status of land held by the municipality in its proprietary right. We are here dealing only with property held by a county in its governmental capacity for public purposes.

[11] The act being constitutional, and the injunction sought being one which contravenes the prohibition of section 3423 of the Civil Code, there still remains the question whether the superior court, in entertaining the application for such injunction, is exceeding its jurisdiction, and thus laying the foundation for a writ of prohibition. Such writ will not go to restrain mere errors by the court below. It is only an excess of jurisdiction which may be reached in this manner. This court has held, in Wright v. Superior Court, 139 Cal. 469, 73 Pac. 145, that a writ of prohibition would issue to arrest the action of a superior court which was undertaking to enjoin an action pending in another court in violation of the first subdivision of section 3423 of the Civil Code. In Glide v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 21, 81 Pac. 225, a similar writ was based on the seventh subdivision of section 3423, which provides that an injunction cannot be granted "to prevent a legislative act by a municipal corporation."

[12] Section 3423 of the Civil Code does not in all of its provisions establish new rules for the granting or denying of preventive relief in equity. Some of the subdivisions are merely declaratory of principles which, in the absence of statute, were and are generally held to govern courts of chancery in determining what causes are proper subjects of equitable cognizance. Subdivision 1 is more than declaratory. It establishes a rule; it limits the right to issue injunctions as that right was understood in the English and American court before the adoption of our Codes. The Constitution of this state gives to the superior courts original jurisdiction "in all cases in equity." To the argument that this jurisdiction could not be limited by statute this court said in Spreckels v. Hawaiian, etc., Co., 117 Cal. 377, 49 Pac. 353, and in Wright v. Superior Court, 139 Cal. 469, 73 Pac. 145, that subdivision 1 of section 3423 was an exercise of the legislative power to define the rights of persons. It did not limit the power of courts of equity to issue an injunction wherever the complainant was entitled thereto, but so operated on the complainant as to take away his right in certain cases to this form of relief. In the Wright Case, where, as we have said, a writ of prohibition was issued, the court held that the superior court was without jurisdiction to issue an injunction in a case in which such relief is forbidden by subdivision 1 of section 3423. The dissenting opinion of Shaw, J., took the ground that if, as the court held, the subdivision merely regulates the rights of persons, the issuance of a writ of injunction contrary to the statutory declaration is an erroneous determination that a cause of action exists, rather than an excess of jurisdiction. Whatever force this criticism may have, it is not applicable to the provision of subdivision 4 of section 3423. For here, in the subdivision declaring that injunction does not lie to restrain the execution of a legislative act by public officials, we have the enunciation of an old and generally recognized rule of equity jurisdiction.

This rule, like that of subdivision 7, which was involved in Glide v. Superior Court, supra, has its underlying basis in the division of the activities of government into three separate and independent departments, each of which is, in the exercise of its own peculiar functions, free from the control of either of the others. 5 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 327. The power to enjoin officers from enforcing a statute, even where the statute was claimed to be unconstitutional, has been denied in some cases. Kneedler v. Lane, 45 Pa. 238; Thompson v. Com'rs, 2 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 248. This court has not carried the doctrine so far. The prohibition against enjoining the execution of statutes has been held to apply only to valid statutes. Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 92 Pac. 353. But, at least as so limited, the rule is generally recognized. In So. Or. Co. v. Quine, 70 Or. 63, 139 Pac. 332, the court said:

"We think the law is fixed beyond cavil that courts of equity have no power by injunction to restrain a public officer from performing an official act that he is required by valid law to perform. It is not sufficient to clothe the court with jurisdiction to say simply that, unless the court extends its restraining hand, hardships will follow, or irreparable damage will ensue, because the officer delegated to execute such law may act unwisely or injuriously to the party seeking relief. The acts must be such as are without the sanction of a sound law."

See, also, So. Min. Co. v. Lowe, 105 Ga. 352, 31 S. E. 191; Mendenhall v. Denham, 35 Fla. 250, 17 South. 561; Sup. of Greenville v. Seymour, 22 N. J. Eq. 458.

[13, 14] Even though the lower tribunal is about to exceed its jurisdiction, the writ of prohibition will not lie where there is "a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." Code Civ. Proc. § 1103. It is true that in the case at bar the petitioner might by appeal review the correctness of any judgment or order enjoining it, but we do not think that such appeal would, under the circumstances here described, be an adequate remedy. Glide v. Sup. Ct., supra. To say nothing of the burden and expense of a trial of issues which, as we have seen, are not properly triable in the superior court, it may be observed that the preliminary injunction already issued ties the hands of the petitioner, and that an appeal from such injunction would not affect its operative force pending the appeal. If the petitioner is entitled to proceed with the work of building the levees which the statute commands it to build, an appeal would obviously not give adequate relief.

We have considered this proceeding as if it had been submitted upon an agreed statement of facts. The respondents have demurred to the petition, and have also filed an answer. For the reasons hereinbefore stated, the demurrer should be overruled. The answer does not raise any issue which we regard as material. There is therefore no occasion for the determination of any issue of fact, and the application should be finally disposed of at this time.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 689

CHINO LAND & WATER CO. v. HAMAKER et al. (L. A. 4343.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1916.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1127—MOTION TO AFFIRM—ADVANCING HEARING.

Where it would amount to an advancement of the hearing of the appeal without good reason therefor, motion to affirm, on the ground that inspection of the record discloses that, in view of a recent federal Supreme Court decision, there must be an affirmance, consideration of which would necessarily involve a full consideration of the record and briefs as to the merits, will be denied as unfair to other litigants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4432–4440; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 1127.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Four actions, all by the Chino Land & Water Company; two against C. R. Hamaker and others, one against H. L. Moss and others, and the other against John K. Chalmers and others. From adverse judgments, defendants appeal. Motion to affirm denied.

Kimball Fletcher and Wm. A. Gaines, both of Los Angeles, and D. J. Hinkley, for appellants. O'Melveny, Stevens & Milliken and Walter K. Tuller, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Plaintiff and respondent Chino Land & Water Company, a corporation, has made a motion that this court affirm the judgment in each of the above-entitled cases, which are presented upon a single transcript, upon the ground substantially that an inspection of the record discloses that, in view of a certain recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, the judgments of the lower court must be affirmed. This motion is made long before the appeals are reached in regular order for hearing in this court, the real purpose of the motion being, of course, to advance the hearing of the appeals in this court over many other appeals preceding them on our calendar, when there is in fact no good reason for such advancement. It is apparent that this is not a proper case for such action as is desired. Mere consideration of the motion necessarily involves a full examination of the record and briefs of counsel as to the merits of the appeal, precisely the same examination we would be compelled to make upon the hearing of the appeals on their merits when the cases are regularly reached for hearing. Such a course on our part in the matter of these appeals would be unfair to other litigants in this court whose appeals are entitled to priority in the matter of hearing, and would establish a precedent that would operate greatly to their disadvantage, for we would be confronted with many such motions, the mere consideration of which would occupy much time that should be devoted to the consideration of earlier cases.

As we have suggested, the effect of such a practice would simply be to advance causes for hearing in preference to other causes, where no good reason for advancement exists, simply on the ground that it is asserted that the appeal is clearly without merit.

The motion is denied.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 668

TEAGUE v. HALL. (L. A. 3482.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1916.)

1. FRAUD ⟸22—RELIANCE ON REPRESENTATIONS—DUTY TO INVESTIGATE.

The purchaser of citrus nurseries, induced to buy by the vendor's false representations that the nurseries contained 85,000 budded trees, could recover damages for the deceit practiced upon him, although he had an opportunity, and did not avail himself thereof, to make independent investigation of the truth of the representations, since one may act upon a positive representation of fact notwithstanding the means of knowledge are open to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 19–23; Dec. Dig. ⟸22.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1064—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—INSTRUCTION.

In an action for deceit by the purchaser of citrus nurseries, induced to buy by the misrepresentations of the vendor that the nurseries contained 85,000 budded trees, an instruction that it was necessary for plaintiff's recovery for him to show that he had no independent knowledge of his own as to the number of budded trees, nor the means at hand to acquire such knowledge, or, having the means, was prevented by defendant from availing himself of them, and that matters equally within the knowledge or means of knowledge of both parties furnished no ground for relief, was prejudicially erroneous, since, under plaintiff's testimony that it would have taken a week to count the trees, the jury might have concluded, if properly instructed that failure to avail of a means of knowledge is not necessarily a bar to recovery, that the purchaser was justified in relying on the vendor's positive representation of the number of trees without verifying it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4219, 4221–4224; Dec. Dig. ⟸1064.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by R. M. Teague against W. G. Hall. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying his motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

J. Vincent Hannon, of Los Angeles, for appellant. S. V. Landt, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action to recover damages for deceit. The defendant, Hall, had established citrus nurseries upon two tracts of land held by him under lease. One was known as the Keim nursery, and the other as the Yost nursery. On March 28, 1909, the parties entered into a contract whereby Hall sold to Teague all of his interest in these two nurseries in consideration of the sum of $37,000, $500 of this sum to be paid by the conveyance of a certain lot, and the balance to be paid in gold coin in certain installments running over a period of a year and a half or thereabouts. Under the contract Hall reserved the right to take 4,000 lemon trees from the Yost nursery. The contract contained this clause:

"It is understood that there is now in round numbers 60,000 number of budded trees upon the land described in the Keim lease and 25,000 of budded stock on the Yost lease."

It is not claimed that the clause last quoted constituted a warranty. The complaint alleged, however, that at the time of the execution of the contract the defendant, for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to enter into it, falsely represented that the respective nurseries contained the number of budded trees mentioned in the contract, to wit, 60,000 in the Keim nursery and 25,000 in the Yost nursery, and that plaintiff, who had no knowledge of the number of trees in the nurseries or either of them, entered into the contract relying on said representations. It was alleged further that plaintiff subsequently discovered that there were not over 65,346 budded trees in the two nurseries, and that he had been damaged in the sum of $12,000, for which he prayed judgment. At the time of his discovery of the facts plaintiff had paid the defendant $34,000 of the contract price.

The defendant, in his answer, admitted the making of the contract and the payment of the $34,000 thereunder. He denied all the material allegations regarding fraud. By counterclaim he sought to recover the balance of $3,000 due under the terms of the agreement.

The action was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of the defendant for $3,000. Judgment was entered thereon. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. On the material issues raised, viz., whether the defendant made the representations alleged, whether plaintiff relied upon them, whether they were, in fact, false, the evidence was conflicting. This court could not have said that a verdict either way was without substantial and adequate support.

[1] The main ground urged for reversal is founded on the instructions given by the court with relation to the plaintiff's duty to show that he was, in fact, deceived by the alleged misrepresentations. In this connection the court said to the jury:

"In order that the plaintiff may recover it is necessary that he show to the jury by a preponderance of the evidence: First, that Teague had no independent knowledge of his own as to the number of budded trees and did not have the means at hand to acquire such knowledge, or having the means at hand, was prevented by defendant from availing himself of them."

And further, on the same subject:

"Matters equally within the knowledge or means of knowledge of both parties furnish no ground for relief, unless in the latter case the one party is prevented by the act of another from using his means of knowledge. It is a general principle that, if the means of knowledge be at hand and equally available to both parties, and the subject-matter be open to inspection of both alike, and there be no fiduciary and no confidential relations, and no warranty of the facts, the injured party must show that he has availed himself of the means of information existing at the time of the transaction before he will be heard to say that he was deceived by the misrepresentation of the other party."

The rule thus laid down is not qualified by any other instruction.

We think it must be held that the court erred in directing the jury, as it did, in effect, that a party who has relied upon a misrepresentation made by another and has suffered injury thereby is precluded from recovering, if he had an opportunity, and did not avail himself thereof, to test the truth of the representations by independent investigation. Some of the earlier cases state the rule in this broad way, but, as Mr. Bigelow says in his work on Fraud (Volume 1, p. 523):

"The proposition has now become very widely accepted at law as well as in equity, at least as general doctrine, that a man may act upon a positive representation of fact, notwithstanding the fact that the means of knowledge were specially open to him. * * *"

Similarly, in Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence, § 896, it is said that:

"Whenever a positive representation of fact is made, the party receiving it is, in general, entitled to rely and act upon it, and is not bound to verify it by an independent investigation. Where a representation is made of facts which are or may be assumed to be within the knowledge of the party making it, the knowledge of the receiving party concerning the real facts, which shall prevent his relying on and being misled by it, must be clearly and conclusively established by the evidence. The mere existence of opportunities for examination or of sources of information is not sufficient, even though by means of these opportunities and sources, in the absence of any representation at all, a constructive notice to the party would be inferred; the doctrine of constructive notice does not apply where there has been such a representation of fact."

[2] This view of the law has been repeatedly declared in the decisions in this state. In Ruhl v. Mott, 120 Cal. 676, 53 Pac. 307, the court says:

"It is true that where one is justified in relying, and in fact does rely, upon false representations, his right of action is not destroyed because means of knowledge were open to him. In such a case no duty in law is devolved upon him to employ such means of knowledge."

The same doctrine is declared in Bank of Woodland v. Hiatt, 58 Cal. 234; Wenzel v. Shulz, 78 Cal. 221, 20 Pac. 404; Morris v. Courtney, 120 Cal. 63, 52 Pac. 129; Dow v. Swain, 125 Cal. 674, pp. 683, 684, 58 Pac. 271; Maxon-Nowlin Co. v. Norswing, 166 Cal. 509, 512, 137 Pac. 240; Eichelberger v. Mills L. & W. Co., 9 Cal. App. 628, 100 Pac. 117.

The nursery involved in the sale by defendant to plaintiff contained both budded and unbudded trees. The alleged misrepresentation referred only to the number of budded trees. The exact or even the approximate number of such trees could have been ascertained only by some form of computation or count. Under the instructions of the court the jury would naturally understand that, if the plaintiff had an opportunity to make such a count, and did not do so, he would be precluded from complaining of any misrepresentations, although he may, in fact, have relied upon them. The plaintiff testified, and the jury had the right to believe, that it would have taken a week to count the trees. The jury, accepting this evidence, might well have concluded, if instructed in accordance with the authorities above cited, that the plaintiff was justified in relying on defendant's positive representation (if he made one), without taking the time to verify its truth. But, under the instructions which were given, it is quite possible that the jury, while believing that the plaintiff had made the representation as alleged, that it was false, and that plaintiff had relied and acted upon it to his injury, nevertheless denied him recovery because they believed that he had had an opportunity to count the trees before making the contract, and had not availed himself of such opportunity. In this state of the case the error in the instructions cannot be treated as one which was not productive of prejudice.

The plaintiff also assigns as error certain rulings in the admission and rejection of evidence. No authoritites are cited in support of his contentions in this regard, and we do not find in such rulings any substantial ground for complaint.

The judgment and the order appealed from are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(171 Cal. 684)

PIERCE v. WORKS, Judge of Superior Court.

(L. A. 4369.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1916.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸660—PRESUMPTION —CORRECTION OF RECORD.

On an original petition for a writ of mandate directing a judge of the superior court to certify a transcript of proceedings alleged to have been prepared according to Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, for use on an appeal from an order granting a motion for a change of venue, where the opposing attorneys had objected solely on the ground that it was not a transcript contemplated by the statute and suggested corrections to which petitioner's counsel and the judge agreed, whereupon the transcript was amended accordingly, it would be presumed that the proposed transcript was correct and contained all matters essential to a proper determination of the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2829, 2844–2847; Dec. Dig. ⟸660.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸597—TRANSCRIPT—STATEMENT OF COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, authorizing an appellant, by notice to the clerk, to require a transcript of the testimony and proceedings at the trial to be prepared, and requiring the reporter's transcript of his stenographic report, including copies of all writings offered or received in evidence and all matters required by the notice, it was not necessary, on appeal from an order granting a change of venue where the only evidence was the files and records of the action and such indorsements of admission of service and filing as were found thereon, that the transcript contain the statements of the court at the hearing of the motion therefor or the objection of the counsel to the granting thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2627–2638; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 597.]

3. Appeal and Error ⟸395—Undertaking —Statute.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 953b, requiring the party appealing under section 953a on a transcript of the testimony in lieu of a bill of exceptions, to file an undertaking in an amount fixed by the clerk to pay the clerk the cost of preparing the transcript; and allowing the appellant to personally arrange with the stenographic reporter for his compensation, where it appeared that such undertaking was waived by the clerk, as it might be, the mere failure to give such undertaking was no objection to the certification of a transcript prepared and delivered by the clerk to the judge for settlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2058, 2064–2070, 2085, 2086, 3127; Dec. Dig. ⟸395.]

4. Appeal and Error ⟸553—Transcript of Testimony—Statute.

Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, authorizes an appellant, in lieu of a bill of exceptions, and on notice to the clerk, to require the preparation of a transcript of the testimony and proceedings at the trial, and requires the reporter to prepare a transcript of his stenographic report, including copies of all writings offered or received in evidence and all other matters required by the notice, and that, if the judgment or order appealed from is not included in a judgment roll, the appellant shall specify the papers to be included in the transcript. Section 953b requires an undertaking to pay the cost of the transcript, and section 953c requires the clerk to transmit the prepared record on appeal. Held, that the statute authorizes such a transcript on appeal from an order granting a change of venue when the proceedings at the hearing were not taken down by a stenographic reporter, and the evidence submitted consisted only of the files and records of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2461, 2462, 2465–2471; Dec. Dig. ⟸553.]

In Bank. Original petition by Christine Pierce against Hon. Lewis R. Works, Judge of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, for a writ of mandate directing respondent to certify a transcript of proceedings for use on appeal from an order granting a motion for a change of venue. Peremptory writ of mandate issued.

Riddle & Cheroske, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, and John J. Squier, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an original application to this court for a writ of mandate directing respondent to certify a transcript of proceedings claimed to have been prepared in accord with the provisions of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, for use on an appeal from an order granting a motion for change of place of trial from Los Angeles county to Santa Barbara county of an action brought by petitioner against A. M., Sallie Belle and Edith Pierce. Respondent judge declined to certify the same on the ground, expressed in writing, "that it is not such a statement or transcript as is contemplated by section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure." Although this was the only ground of refusal, and apparently, as indicated by the petition and answer, the only ground of objection to certification urged by opposing counsel before respondent, some other objections are urged by the answer of respondent filed herein. We think, however, that there is no force in any of the other objections, in view of the admitted facts.

[1] Although it is alleged in the answer that the proposed transcript was not certified by the clerk or any one else as containing true or correct copies of the original documents, papers, files, and records, it further appears that the opposing attorneys made no objection on any such ground, objecting simply that it was not such a transcript as was contemplated by section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, and it further appears from the petition and answer that such attorneys suggested various corrections, to all of which petitioner's counsel and the judge agreed, and that the transcript was amended accordingly. So that it is fairly to be presumed from the pleadings here that the proposed transcript is absolutely correct and contained all matters essential to a proper determination of the appeal, and no suggestion is made to the contrary.

[2] It is further alleged in the answer that the proposed transcript does not contain the statements of the court made at the hearing of the motion for change of place of trial or the objections of counsel for plaintiff to the granting of the same. We cannot see any necessity for the incorporation of these matters in such a case as this, an appeal from an order granting a change of place of trial to the county of the defendant's alleged residence, where the only evidence was the files and records of the action, and such indorsements of admission of service and filing as there were thereon. There is no suggestion that the incorporation of any of such matters is essential to the protection of any right of any party. If neither party desires the insertion of such a matter, and it is not essential to a proper determination of the appeal, the statute does not require it to be inserted.

[3] It is further alleged that the undertaking provided for by section 953b, Code of Civil Procedure, was not filed with the clerk. This is the undertaking in an amount to be fixed by the clerk to secure to that officer the cost of preparing the transcript. Obviously this was enacted solely for the protection of the clerk and stenographer, and, as amended in 1915, the party, instead of furnishing the undertaking, may arrange personally with the stenographic reporter for his compensation. According to the undenied allegations of the petition, it clearly appears that the giving of any undertaking was waived by the clerk, as it might be in such a case as this. Mere failure to give such an undertaking cannot be urged as a good ground of objection to the certification of a transcript in fact prepared and delivered by the clerk to the judge for settlement.

[4] The remaining question presented by this proceeding is whether the provisions of sections 953a, 953b, and 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, providing a record on appeal in lieu of the ordinary bill of exceptions, authorize such a record in a matter like the one here involved, when the proceedings at the hearing have not been taken down by a stenographic reporter, and the evidence submitted to the court consisted entirely of the files and records of the action.

The order appealed from is, of course, one not included in a judgment roll. It is an appealable order made before trial and judgment, to the review of which by an appellate court prior to the enactment of the sections referred to, it was essential that the evidence, upon which the motion therefor was heard, in whatever form it was received, should be incorporated in a bill of exceptions and properly authenticated by the trial judge. See Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Doran, 161 Cal. 118, 118 Pac. 526. This was true, although the evidence consisted only of the records and files of the action, including the papers presented and filed in support of the motion. Such papers could not be effectually certified to the appellate court by the clerk of the trial court. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Doran, supra. Section 953a purports to provide a method of preparation of record to which a party appealing "from any judgment, order or decree of the superior court" may resort "in lieu of preparing and settling a bill of exceptions," and under which, of course, he may bring to the appellate court anything he might properly include in a bill of exceptions. It is true, of course, that as to parol evidence, and as to writings merely offered or received in evidence at a trial, as distinguished from papers, records, and files in the cause, the section contemplates that there shall have been a phonographic report of the proceedings, and it may be that as to such matters there can be no record prepared under the section in the absence of such a phonographic report. Such was the situation in Allen v. Conrey, 22 Cal. App. 409, 134 Pac. 730, relied on by respondent, and we are not called upon here to dispute the correctness of the decision given therein. But, if there was no such evidence to report, and consequently no office for a stenographic reporter to perform, if the only matters considered on the hearing of the motion were the pleadings, papers, records, and files in the cause, as is always the case on a motion heard and determined solely on affidavits and the record and files of the action, we can see no reason why it should not be held that section 953a fully covers the matter. The section provides that:

"If the judgment, order or decree appealed from be not included in a judgment roll, the party desiring to appeal shall on the filing of said notice specify therein such of the pleadings, papers, records and files in said cause as he desires to have incorporated in said transcript in addition to the matters hereinbefore required (the stenographic reporter's report of the trial including therein copies of all writings offered or received in evidence and all other matters and things required by the notice) and the same shall be included."

In Going v. Guy, 166 Cal. 279, 135 Pac. 1128 (decided by this court in bank October 4, 1913), this provision was held applicable on an appeal from an order confirming a sale of real estate in a probate matter; the appellants having requested a transcript containing copies of the petition for sale, the order of sale, the return of sale, the notice of hearing of the return, the bid received, and the order confirming the sale. In that case there was a stenographic reporter, who furnished a transcript of the testimony and proceedings at the hearing, but such transcript contained none of these papers. Such copies, prepared by some one whose identity was not disclosed, were delivered bound together and certified by the county clerk to be correct, to the judge, with the reporter's transcript, and, while certifying the latter, he refused to certify the former. It was admitted that the papers were true copies of the originals. The provisions of section 953a were fully discussed, and it was held that thereunder, especially in view of the paragraph we have quoted, the appellant was entitled to have such papers inserted in the transcript, and that it was the duty of the judge to authenticate the same. It was held, as is well settled, that the clerk's duty of authentication is limited to papers which constitute a judgment roll, and that the judge is not required to authenticate such papers (Christensen Lumber Co. v. Seawell, 157 Cal. 405, 108 Pac. 276; Knoch v. Haizlip, 163 Cal. 20, 124 Pac. 997; Totten v. Barlow, 165 Cal. 378, 132 Pac. 749), but that as to all other papers and records in the action it is the duty of the judge to make the authentication. See, also, Totten v. Barlow, supra. It was further said substantially that it was of no moment who did the typewriting, and that, "if the papers were correctly set forth in the certified transcript presented to the judge, as is conceded, he should have certified thereto, regardless of the identity of the person who copied them." That such papers as make up the proposed transcript in this case may be included in such a transcript was declared in Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Doran, supra. If this be correct, as to which we have no doubt, in view of what is said in Going v. Guy, supra, we can conceive of no possible reason why such a transcript may not consist exclusively of such papers, authenticated by the judge, in a case where the same constitute all the matters material to a proper determination of the appeal. The mere fact that there was no office for a stenographer to perform at the hearing of the motion, and that consequently there was no stenographic reporter present, certainly should not be held to preclude the bringing to an appellate court in this way of all papers, records, and files essential to a proper determination of the appeal, where the statute authorizes, as we must hold it does, the inclusion of the same in such a transcript. We think it clear that petitioner is entitled to the relief sought.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue in accord with the prayer of the petition.

We concur: SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(171 Cal. 750)

In re WHITNEY'S ESTATE.
LANDERS et al. v. WHITNEY.
(S. F. 7240.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 20, 1916. Rehearing Denied Feb. 17, 1916.)

1. WILLS ⟸6—PROPERTY DISPOSED OF—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

A husband cannot, by his will, dispose of the wife's right to one-half of the community property should she survive him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 5–10; Dec. Dig. ⟸6.]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸176—FAMILY ALLOWANCE.

A widow's claim to a family allowance is strongly favored.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 661–666; Dec. Dig. ⟸176.]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸174—FAMILY ALLOWANCE.

The rights of testamentary disposition, and of beneficiaries to take under a will, being statutory, are subject to the power of the court to make provision for the support of the widow and children out of the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 653, 654; Dec. Dig. ⟸174.]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸181—FAMILY ALLOWANCE—WHEN ORDERED—SPECIFIC DEVISE.

A family allowance, being analogous to a probate homestead, may be ordered even out of property specifically devised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 681–685; Dec. Dig. ⟸181.]

5. WILLS ⟸781—ELECTION—FAMILY ALLOWANCE.

A will may be drawn so as to put the widow to her election between taking the benefits given her by the testator and claiming her right of family allowance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2013–2017; Dec. Dig. ⟸781.]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸185—FAMILY ALLOWANCE—WAIVER.

The wife may, by an agreement, surrender the privilege of applying for a family allowance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 695; Dec. Dig. ⟸185.]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸185—FAMILY ALLOWANCE—WAIVER—CONSTRUCTION.

The right of a widow to a family allowance will not be held to have been surrendered by an agreement between the spouses except by clear and explicit language.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 695; Dec. Dig. ⟸185.]

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸185—FAMILY ALLOWANCE—WAIVER—CONSTRUCTION.

Where the wife of the testator by an instrument concurrent with the will waived all her claims to her share of community property and "any and all other claims" upon the estate disposed of, the waiver, though in words broad enough to waive her right to the family allowance to which she was entitled by statute, must be construed with the will the purpose of which as declared by the testator was to dispose only of the community property, so that in fact the waiver did not waive her family allowance, and the general words being subject to the limitation of the specific words of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 695; Dec. Dig. ⟸185.]

9. COURTS ⟸89 — JUDGMENTS IN OTHER CAUSES—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Decisions on the interpretation of written instruments have limited value when applied to the construction of documents embodying different language.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 311, 312; Dec. Dig. ⟸89.]

10. WILLS ⟸782 — ELECTION — FAMILY ALLOWANCE—ESTATES CREATED.

To put the widow to an election between her legal estate and that granted by a will, it must clearly and unequivocally appear that the provision made by the will was intended to be in lieu of such rights as are given by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2018–2033; Dec. Dig. ⟸782.]

11. WILLS ⟸782 — ELECTION — FAMILY ALLOWANCE.

The mere fact that a legacy to the wife provides for payments at stated periods beginning from the testator's death does not deprive her of the right to a family allowance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2018–2033; Dec. Dig. ⟸782.]

12. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸186—FAMILY ALLOWANCE.

The fact that the will disposes specifically of the entire estate does not in and of itself destroy the widow's right to claim a family allowance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 669, 696; Dec. Dig. ⟸186.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceeding by Lucy A. Whitney, for a family allowance in her behalf, against John Landers and others, as executors of the will of Joel Parker Whitney, deceased. From an order making the allowance, the executors appeal. Affirmed.

Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for appellants. Cushing & Cushing, of San Francisco (Erwin E. Richter, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent. W. T. Plunkett, of San Francisco, for legatee Helen Beryl Wheeler. Jas. P. Sweeney, of San Francisco, for legatee Parker Whitney.

SLOSS, J. The executors of the will of Joel Parker Whitney, deceased, appeal from an order granting to the widow of the decedent a family allowance of $1,200 per month during the administration of the estate, the payments to date from the day of the decedent's death.

Joel Parker Whitney died on the 17th day of January, 1913. The will was admitted to probate and the appellants were appointed executors thereof on the 28th day of March, 1913. An inventory and appraisement, showing the value of the estate to be $847,821.15, were returned on the 13th day of June, 1913. The widow's petition for family allowance was filed on June 10, 1914. The surviving heirs of the decedent were his widow, the respondent herein, and three adult children, Parker Whitney, Vincent Whitney, and Helen Beryl Wheeler. The testator owned certain dwelling houses and fishing camps in the state of Maine. A large amount of property in this state, originally owned by him, he had conveyed to a corporation known as the Whitney Estate Company, and the bulk of his estate consists of the shares of stock in this corporation. Included in the property of the Whitney Estate Company was a ranch in Placer county.

By the will the decedent gave to his widow the property in Maine, together with his books, silverware, pictures, furniture, and other articles of personal use. Certain minor legacies were given to various persons named, and the residue of the estate, including all of the testator's shares of stock in the Whitney Estate Company, was given to the executors as trustees. The executors thus named were Vincent Whitney, the testator's son, William J. Downing, and Frank Miller. The trustees were directed to pay to the widow $1,200 per month during her life. These payments had been made to, and accepted by, her up to the time of the proceedings here under review. The widow was given the right to occupy the houses on the ranch in Placer county, and the personal articles in such houses were bequeathed to her. The corpus of the trust estate was to be kept intact until the testator's son Vincent should reach the age of 35 years (or until his death if he should die before reaching such age). During this period each of the three children was to be paid the sum of $3,600 per year. Upon the arrival of Vincent Whitney at the age of 35 years, the trust fund was to be divided or distributed into three equal parts, all of which were to be subject to the provision for the benefit of the wife. One of these parts was to be transferred to Vincent Whitney, the second to be held in trust for the benefit of Parker Whitney and his issue as provided in the will, and the third to be held in trust for the benefit of his daughter Helen Beryl and her issue as provided. The further details of these trusts and of the provisions made in the event of Vincent's death before reaching the age of 35 years need not here be stated.

The preamble of the will ran as follows:

"Be it remembered that I, Joel Parker Whitney, * * * do make this my last will and testament hereby intending to dispose of all of my property of whatever kind or description, whether now or hereafter acquired, and intending hereby, with the written consent and acceptance of my wife Lucy, to dispose of any community property we may have, in the state of California or elsewhere if any such there be, including her share thereof as well as my own, and hereby revoking all other wills and codicils by me at any time made."

At the time of the execution of the will the testator's wife, Lucy A. Whitney, signed an instrument which was annexed to the will. This instrument, which the court below finds to have been executed at the request of the decedent, was in the following words:

"I, Lucy A. Whitney, wife of the said Joel Parker Whitney, do hereby certify and declare, that I have read the whole of the foregoing will of my said husband, and fully understand the same, clearly understanding that my said husband by his said will, disposes not only of all his individual property, but also all of our community property, in case there is any such, including my half thereof as well as his own, and I hereby elect to accept and acquiesce in the provisions of the said will, and hereby waive all claims to my share of any community property, and any and all other claims that I may have upon any of the estate disposed of by the said will, being fully convinced in my own mind of the reasonable and proper character of the said will, and the wisdom of its provisions, and hereby accepting such of the said provisions as apply to or concern me.

"Witness my hand and seal at San Francisco, Calif. in the state of California this eighth day of May A. D. 1909.

"Lucy A. Whitney. [Seal.]"

Attached to this instrument was the following attestation clause, signed by the witnesses to the execution of the will:

"On this eighth day of May, 1909, at San Francisco in the state of California, Lucy A. Whitney, wife of Joel Parker Whitney, executed the foregoing writing in our presence, declaring that she did so freely and voluntarily in token of her assent to the will of her husband and her waiver of all rights inconsistent with said will."

The testator made two codicils modifying the provisions of his will. The first of these, executed on April 5, 1911, revoked the appointment of W. J. Downing as executor and trustee and substituted John Landers in his place. It also altered other provisions relative to said Downing. The second codicil, executed on May 15, 1912, designated Parker Whitney as executor and trustee in place of Frank Miller, and made other changes which have no bearing upon the questions here to be discussed. To the second of these codicils there was attached an instrument, executed by the testator's wife, Lucy A. Whitney, which was substantially in the same terms as the writing signed by her at the time of the making of the original will.

It is not questioned that the condition of the estate authorized the making of a family allowance; it is not suggested that the amount allowed to the widow was in any way unreasonable. The main contention of the appellants is that Mrs. Whitney was barred of the right to ask for a family allowance by reason of the writing executed by her at the time of the making of the will.

The soundness of this claim involves an inquiry into the true meaning and intent of the writing. It is of no great consequence whether the instrument be viewed from the standpoint of contract, of waiver, or of estoppel. In any aspect its operative effect, as against the right here claimed by the widow, must depend upon an interpretation of its terms. The important inquiry must be whether the words of waiver were intended to cover a possible claim for family allowance. In the paper Mrs. Whitney declared that she waived all claims to her share of the community property and any and all other claims that she might have upon any of the estate disposed of by the said will. It may readily be conceded that the general language "any and all other claims," etc., would be sufficient, standing by themselves, to cover a claim for family allowance. But the paper is to be read as a whole, in the light of surrounding circumstances and of the other elements of the transaction of which it formed a part. The paper signed by Mrs. Whitney was attached to the will, and it evidently was the paper referred to in the preamble of the will as "the written consent and acceptance of my wife Lucy." We have no doubt that, as is urged by the appellants themselves, the will and this waiver are to be read together. Such a reading clearly shows what the husband and wife had in mind and what they were undertaking to deal with in the drafting and execution of the two documents. The will itself begins with the declaration that the testator intends to dispose of all of his property, including any community property which he and his wife may have acquired.

[1] The husband could not, of course, without the consent of the wife, make a will which would effectively dispose of her right to succeed to one-half of the community property if she should survive him. He declares therefore that it is his intent, with her "written consent and acceptance," to dispose of her share of the community property as well as his own. The purpose of the writing which the wife was to sign and which she did in fact sign, is here clearly declared. That purpose was to enable the husband to exercise a right of disposition over the whole of the community property. The same view of the purpose and scope of the documents is disclosed by the recitals in the paper signed by Mrs. Whitney. After stating that she has read the will and fully understands it, she recites her clear understanding that her husband by his will "disposes not only of all his individual property, but also all of our community property, in case there is any such, including my half thereof as well as his own." After making these recitals, the wife goes on to state that she elects to accept and acquiesce in the provisions of the will and that she waives certain rights, as above set forth. As bearing on the intent of the parties, attention may also be directed to the attestation clause, in which the witnesses certify that Mrs. Whitney declared that she executed the writing "in token of her assent to the will of her husband and her waiver of all rights inconsistent with said will."

[2-7] The widow's claim to a family allowance is strongly favored in our law. In re Lux, 100 Cal. 603, 35 Pac. 341; Estate of Welsh, 106 Cal. 427, 432, 39 Pac. 805; Estate of Cowell, 164 Cal. 636, 642, 130 Pac. 209. The right of testamentary disposition, and the right of beneficiaries to take under the will, are alike statutory, and are both subject to the power of the court having jurisdiction of the estate to make a provision for the support of the widow (or minor children) out of the estate. Estate of Bump, 152 Cal. 274, 92 Pac. 643. A family allowance is, in this respect, analogous to a probate homestead, which, as has been held, may be ordered even out of property specifically devised. Estate of Huelsman, 127 Cal. 275, 59 Pac. 776; Estate of Gray, 159 Cal. 159, 112 Pac. 890. A will may, of course, be so drawn as to put the widow to her election between taking the benefits given her by the testator and claiming her right of family allowance. So, too, the wife may, by agreement, surrender the privilege of applying for an allowance. Whether the right to demand an allowance is inconsistent with the will, or has been surrendered, is a question of interpretation of the will or the contract. In the case of a contract, we think the right should not be held to have been surrendered by an agreement between the spouses "except by clear and explicit language." This was the rule of construction applied by this court to an antenuptial agreement which, as was claimed, barred the wife's right to select a homestead out of the separate property of the husband while both spouses were living. Warner v. Warner, 144 Cal. 615, 78 Pac. 24. In reason, the same principle should apply to the matter under consideration in this case.

[8] Here, then, we see that the parties executed writings in which they declared plainly that they were making arrangements and stipulations for the purpose of enabling the husband to dispose of the entire community property and of binding the wife to assent to such disposition. The husband was asserting his intention to devise and bequeath the half of the community property which would pass to his wife if she survived him. She was consenting to such disposition and waiving her right to object thereto, or, as was said by the attestation clause, she was waiving her rights "inconsistent with said will." The language used should be interpreted in view of this general purpose and intent, and should not be held to surrender other and different rights unless language clearly and expressly declaring such intent was used. Under all the circumstances, we think the general language "any and all other claims, etc.," should be construed in the light of the apparent purpose of the agreement and limited to the particular words which preceded. In Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63 Iowa, 55, 18 N. W. 685, an antenuptial contract had been made, the prospective husband agreeing that a certain sum should be paid to his wife in case she survived him, "the same to be her dower and portion in full of my said estate, and in lieu and stead of any dower or rights of inheritance therein, given or created by operation of law." The wife, in consideration of the payment, agreed and bound herself "to receive and accept the said sum in full payment, and in entire and complete satisfaction of all my rights of dower and inheritance as the widow and heir of the party of the first part in his said estate, both real and personal, and I hereby now renounce, and relinquish all claim, right, title and interest therein by reason of the said relation of wife or widow of the said Mahaffy." Upon the death of the husband, the right of the wife to continue in possession of the homestead was opposed by reason of the words of renunciation and relinquishment above quoted. The court, in denying the validity of this claim, said:

"The clause in question ought, we think, to be construed with reference to the clauses which precede it, and the sense in which the words are used is also to be determined very largely by these preceding clauses. The language used in that portion of the contract which contains the covenant of William Mahaffy shows unmistakably, we think, that the benefit or advantage for which he was contracting was the relinquishment by defendant of the right to take any interest in his estate by inheritance, and the sum of money which he agreed should be paid her out of his estate was to be paid solely as consideration for such relinquishment by her. There is nothing in the language of this covenant, nor in her agreement to accept the money in satisfaction of her right of dower or inheritance, which by any possible construction can be made to cover or include any other right or interests in the estate, except the one named in express terms by each of the parties. The parties, then, by unmistakable language, indicated the subject-matter of their contract. They have identified the particular right or interest in the estate, which was the subject of their agreement. And this is followed by the general terms of the clause in question. The general language of this clause must be held to relate to rights and interests of the same nature and description with those that have been already mentioned. The clause is in the nature of a 'sweeping clause,' and its use and object was to guard against accidental omissions; and the rule of construction in such cases is that the 'general words are restrained by the subject-matter.'"

The language just quoted may very fitly be applied to the question before us. The rule that general words are to be qualified by particular recitals has often been declared, particularly in cases of releases. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Dashiell, 198 U. S. 523, 25 Sup. Ct. 737, 49 L. Ed. 1150; U. P. R. Co. v. Artist, 60 Fed. 365, 9 C. C. A. 14, 23 L. R. A. 581; Bassett v. Laurence, 193 Ill. 494, 61 N. E. 1098; Van Slyke v. Van Slyke, 80 N. J. Law, 382, 78 Atl. 179, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 778, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 498. The same theory underlies the provision of our Civil Code (section 1648) that:

"However broad may be the terms of a contract, it extends only to those things concerning which it appears that the parties intended to contract."

There is nothing in the various decisions of this court cited by the appellants which is in conflict with the views we have expressed. In Re Noah, 73 Cal. 583, 15 Pac. 287, 2 Am. St. Rep. 829, the denial of the widow's right to a family allowance was really based upon the ground that she "did not constitute the immediate family of the deceased." This was also the basis of the decision in Wickersham v. Comerford, 96 Cal. 433, 31 Pac. 358, where the wife had obtained an order setting apart a homestead to her. The fact that the wife was not a member of the family of the husband at the time of his death was one of the grounds, though not, it is true, the only ground, of the decision in Estate of Yoell, 164 Cal. 540, 129 Pac. 999, a case strongly relied upon by the appellants. But if we go beyond this and look to the language of the agreement made by the wife in these various cases, we find that in each instance the words were such as to clearly import an intention to surrender the very right which was afterwards claimed. In the Noah Case the spouses had made a separation agreement by which the wife, in consideration of the payment of $10,500 by the husband, agreed not to demand any alimony or support from him, and that the $10,500 should be in full satisfaction of "all her marital claims." In Wickersham v. Comerford, supra, there was a separation agreement by which the wife agreed that she relinquished all right to the separate property of the husband "as his wife in law or equity or by descent." In the Yoell Case, supra, the agreement (also made in view of a contemplated separation) declared that the execution and consummation of the agreement was intended to be a full, complete, and final adjustment of all the property rights of the parties, who agreed that neither would at any time "assert any right, interest or title as heir at law of the other to any property devised or bequeathed by such will or as against the estate of the other, should the other die intestate and all claim as such heir or as surviving husband and wife respectively and all right to contest, or oppose the last will of the other is hereby expressly waived." In the case before us there was no such explicit language. There was no specific reference to "marital rights" or to "or right as wife in law or equity or by descent" or to "all claim as heir or as surviving husband or wife." Besides, in each of these cases the court was construing a separation agreement, the very purpose of which was to make a final and complete adjustment of the mutual relations and rights of the parties with reference to property. The language of the agreement might very properly be construed, in case of doubt, in a way which would tend to carry out this purpose. Here, however, we have a case of a man and woman living together as husband and wife until the death of the former. The scope and purpose of their contract (if the papers in question are to be viewed as a contract) was entirely different from that of a separation agreement.

A case of different character from those just discussed is Estate of Lufkin, 131 Cal. 291, 63 Pac. 469, relied on by the appellants. Here there was no agreement by the husband and wife, the sole question being whether a bequest to the wife was so made that its acceptance would preclude an application for a family allowance. By the provision in question the testator gave to his wife the sum of $1,000 "on the payment of which $1,000 she relinquish all further claim to my estate." It was held that the term "claim" was broad enough to include the right of the widow to an allowance from the estate of the testator, and that it, "where a different intention is not manifested by the context," must be so construed. The intention to use it as including such claim was held by the court to be manifest from the circumstances of the case, it appearing that there was nothing but the claim for family allowance to which the term could be made to apply. The decision supports the conclusion (conceded in the earlier part of this opinion) that the words "any and all other claims," etc., contained in the writing signed by Mrs. Whitney, would, standing alone, cover a claim for family allowance. But the inquiry must go further than this. We are to decide, not the independent meaning of these words, but their meaning in the connection in which they are found, and under the circumstances surrounding their use. In Estate of Lufkin it was held that the surrounding circumstances indicated that the word "claim" was used in such manner as to include a claim for family allowance. Here, for the reasons which we have already elaborated, we conclude that the word was not used in this sense.

The appellants refer to a number of decisions from other states which, as they claim, support their contention that the widow by her writing barred herself of the right of a family allowance. Appeal of Cowles, 74 Conn. 24, 49 Atl. 195; Paine et al. v. Hollister, 139 Mass. 144, 29 N. E. 541; Pavlicek v. Roessler, 222 Ill. 83, 78 N. E. 11; Rieger v. Schaible, 81 Neb. 33, 115 N. W. 560, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866, 16 Ann. Cas. 700; Kroell v. Kroell, 219 Ill. 105, 76 N. E. 63, 4 Ann. Cas. 801; Appeal of Staub, 66 Conn. 127, 33 Atl. 615. We shall not undertake to review these cases at length. One and all, they dealt with antenuptial agreements, and in each instance the language which was held to bar the right of the widow differed from that found in the paper signed by Mrs. Whitney.

[9] As this court has had occasion to say repeatedly, decisions on the interpretation of written instruments have but limited value when applied to the construction of documents embodying different language. To a great extent each writing must be viewed by itself, and the intent of the parties must be ascertained from a study of the particular terms employed, read in the light of the underlying purpose of the transaction and the circumstances under which it was made. So reading the paper before us, we do not find in the authorities cited any reason to adopt an interpretation other than the one given by the court below.

[10] There is no occasion to consider at length the claim that, by accepting the benefit given her by the will, the widow has made an election to claim no family allowance, or that she is thereby estopped to claim such allowance. These contentions rest upon the premise that the receipt of an allowance is inconsistent with the provisions made for the wife in the will. There is no such inconsistency. To put the widow to her election "it must clearly and unequivocally appear that the provision made by the will was intended to be in lieu of such rights as are given by the law." Estate of Cowell, 164 Cal. 636, 642, 130 Pac. 209. The will shows plainly that the testator intended to require the widow to elect between taking under the will and taking one-half of the community property, but there is nothing to indicate an intention to put her to an election so far as family allowance is concerned.

[11] The fact that the legacy to the wife takes the form of a provision for payments at stated periods, beginning from the testator's death, does not deprive her of the right to a family allowance. In this respect the case is precisely similar to Estate of Cowell, supra. We see no force in the claim that the granting of a family allowance would operate to defeat the will.

[12] Assuming, as claimed by the appellants, that the will disposes specifically of the entire estate, this does not, in and of itself, destroy the right to claim an allowance. Such right stands on the same footing as her right to a homestead which, as we have seen, may be set apart by the probate court out of property specifically devised. There is therefore no room for the application of the doctrine of election or that of estoppel.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 731

TILTON v. DECKER et al. (L. A. 3496.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1916.)

1. EVIDENCE ⟸32—JUDICIAL NOTICE—ORDINANCES.

Generally a court of record does not take judicial notice of municipal ordinances, and they must, where a necessary part of the case, be proven; but as judicial notice presupposes the absence of evidence, the rule does not apply where a deed by the board of public works is prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings on which it is based.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. ⟸32.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸582—VALIDITY.

Under Street Opening Act (St. 1903, p. 384) § 29, declaring that the deed is prima facie evidence of the truth of all matters recited therein, and of the regularity of all proceedings prior to the execution thereof, and of title in the grantee, the deed of the board of public works reciting the adoption of the requisite ordinances is sufficient evidence to warrant a finding that all of the preliminary steps in the street opening proceedings have been taken, hence independent proof of the adoption of several street opening ordinances is unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1299, 1300; Dec. Dig. ⟸582.]

3. QUIETING TITLE ⟸35—ACTIONS—PLEADINGS.

Where the validity of defendant's mortgage depended on title acquired by the mortgagor through a street opening proceeding by a city, which divested plaintiff's title, a general averment of the title in the mortgagor is sufficient without pleading the source.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 73, 74; Dec. Dig. ⟸35.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸582—STREETS—PROCEEDINGS FOR OPENING—AFFIDAVITS OF DILIGENCE.

Under Street Opening Act, § 28, requiring the purchaser before he may obtain a deed to serve upon the owner of the property and occupants, if it be occupied, a written notice setting forth various matters, and to file with the street superintendent an affidavit showing that notice has been given, or if not served that due diligence was used to find the owner, an affidavit that the purchaser had inquired of neighbors nearest the property as to the whereabouts of the person whose name was given on the assessment rolls as owner, the property being unoccupied, that he had searched the city and telephone directories seeking to ascertain the address and whereabouts of the named person and knew of no other place or person where he could learn the address of such owner, when taken together is sufficient to show due diligence, though not averring the years for which the directories searched were issued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1299, 1300; Dec. Dig. ⟸582.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸582—STREET OPENING—AFFIDAVITS.

In such case the street superintendent or those succeeding to the duties of his office are first called upon to determine the sufficiency of their affidavit, and to execute a deed upon such determination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1299, 1300; Dec. Dig. ⟸582.]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸486—STREET OPENING PROCEEDING—PUBLICATION—"TEN DAYS."

Street Opening Act, § 18, requires that after the assessment for the street opening is written and filed with the city council, the council shall give notice by publication for at least 10 days. An affidavit of publication stated that notice was published for 10 consecutive days, Sundays excepted, commencing on the 8th day of October and ending on the 18th day. October 9th and 16th were both Sundays, and therefore there had been only 9 publications. Held, that the expression "publication for 10 days" does not require any specific number of publications, but merely designates a period of time in which publication is to be made, so the intervening Sundays are properly counted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1084–1090, 1161; Dec. Dig. ⟸486.]

7. TRIAL ⟸105 — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE — FAILURE TO OBJECT—STREET OPENING ACT.

Where the certificate of sale required by the Street Opening Act to be executed by the street superintendent is admitted in evidence without objection, its insufficiency may be reached by an attack on the findings, notwithstanding the deed itself furnishes prima facie evidence of regularity of prior proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 260–266; Dec. Dig. ⟸105.]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸577—STREET OPENINGS—CERTIFICATE—SUFFICIENCY.

Street Opening Act, § 26, requires the street superintendent to execute a certificate of sale, setting forth the time when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed, while sections 27 and 28, respectively, declare that redemption may be made at any time prior to the delivery of the deed, and that the deed shall be executed at any time after the expiration of 12 months after the date of sale, if the purchaser is given 30 days' notice. A certificate of sale recited that the purchaser would on proper application be entitled to a deed at any time after the expiration of 12 months, unless the property be sooner redeemed. Held, that the certificate is sufficient, for the word "sooner" may be construed as referring to the date when the purchaser would be entitled to a deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1290, 1292; Dec. Dig. ⟸577.]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸582—OPENING OF STREETS—SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

Assessments for street improvements, like tax proceedings, are in invitum, and where the statute prescribes the form of the instrument which is to divest title, such form must be followed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1299, 1300; Dec. Dig. ⟸582.]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸582 — STREETS—OPENING—DEEDS.

Under Street Opening Act, § 28, declaring that there shall be recited in the deed substantially the matters contained in the certificate, the deed is valid, though it did not recite with the detail of the certificate, the time when the purchaser would be entitled to a deed, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1299, 1300; Dec. Dig. ⟸582.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Annie L. Tilton against Mrs. F. J. Decker and others. From a judgment for defendant Russek, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. G. Van Pelt, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Frederick A. Preston, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title to a lot in the city of Los Angeles. There were four defendants named in the complaint. Two defaulted. The third, Louis, answered, but did not appear at the trial nor introduce any evidence, and judgment was entered against him. The fourth, Russek, answered, denying the allegations of the complaint, and filed a cross-complaint alleging that Mrs. Decker (one of the defaulting defendants) was the owner of the property on September 20, 1911, on which date she had executed a mortgage upon the property, and that Russek had become the owner of said mortgage. The court found that the plaintiff was the owner of the property subject to the lien of Russek's mortgage. The plaintiff appeals from the part of the judgment in favor of Russek, and brings up the evidence by means of a bill of exceptions.

At the trial it was admitted that the plaintiff was the owner of the land, except so far as her title may have been divested by virtue of a deed executed by the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles to one Warden, pursuant to proceedings for the opening of an alley under the "Street Opening Act of 1903." Stats. 1903, p. 376. The respondent's mortgage was given by a successor in interest of Warden. The correctness of the judgment turns upon the validity of the sale and deed under the street opening proceedings.

The appellant attacks these proceedings in the following particulars:

[1, 2] 1. The deed from the board of public works recites the passage by the city council of Los Angeles of two ordinances, the one declaring the intention of the mayor and council to open the alley in question, the other ordering the improvement to be made. Plaintiff objected to the admission of the deed in the absence of pleading and independent proof of the adoption of these ordinances.

The defendant offered in evidence the ordinance first referred to in the deed, i. e., the one declaring the intention of the city council to order the work done, but there was no proof of the ordinance ordering the work done. We do not think the proof of this ordinance was essential to the admissibility of the deed or to the making of a prima facie case by the defendant. Under section 29 of the Street Opening Act the deed is prima facie evidence "of the truth of all matters recited therein, and of the regularity of all proceedings prior to the execution thereof, and of title in the grantee." The deed itself is therefore sufficient evidence to warrant a finding that all the preliminary steps in the proceedings have been taken. The power of the Legislature to make the deed prima facie evidence of such preliminary steps is well settled by our decisions. Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395, 29 Pac. 58; Clarke v. Mead, 102 Cal. 516, 36 Pac. 862. The appellant argues that courts of record do not take judicial notice of municipal ordinances, and that such ordinances must, where they are a necessary part of the case, be proven. This is no doubt the general rule. Ex parte Davis, 115 Cal. 447, 47 Pac. 258; City of Tulare v. Hevren, 126 Cal. 229, 58 Pac. 530. But we have here no question of taking judicial notice of the ordinances. The term "judicial notice" presupposes the absence of evidence. Under the act, the deed furnishes prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution. Those proceedings include the passage of the ordinance. Prima facie proof of the passage of such ordinance was therefore made by the introduction of the deed, and the court was not asked to take judicial notice of anything.

In Metteer v. Smith, 156 Cal. 574, 105 Pac. 735, relied on by appellant, it was held that a tax deed issued on a sale of property for delinquent city taxes was not admissible in evidence without proof of the passage of an ordinance recited in the deed. The precise nature of the ordinance referred to is not disclosed by the opinion. If the passage of the ordinance was a step in the process of assessment, of equalization or of the levy of taxes, it is not easy to see why such ordinance was not sufficiently proven, in view of the provision of section 3786 of the Political Code (made applicable to the proceedings in question by section 871 of the Municipal Incorporation Act [St. 1905, p. 89]), that the deed is prima facie evidence, that (1) the property was assessed as required by law; (2) the property was equalized as required by law; (3) the taxes were levied in accordance with law. Be this as it may, the provisions of section 3786 of the Political Code are not so broad as those of section 29 of the "Street Opening Act of 1903," which, as we have said, makes the deed prima facie evidence of the regularity of all proceedings prior to the execution thereof, and of title in the grantee. This language includes city ordinances as well as any other intervening steps.

[3] There is no force in the contention that the respondent was bound to set up the ordinances in his answer. If he had undertaken to plead a title derived under a delinquent sale, he would have been required to allege every proceeding essential to the validity of such sale. Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 449; Russell v. Mann, 22 Cal. 131. But here the respondent's answer and cross-complaint alleged merely that, at the time of the execution of the mortgage owned by him, the mortgagor Decker was the owner in fee and entitled to the possession of the property.

The source of Decker's title was not pleaded. A general allegation of ownership of real property is all that is required, and under such allegation any proof tending to establish the title alleged is admissible.

[4] 2. Under section 28 of the act, the purchaser must, at least 30 days before he applies for a deed, serve on the owner of the property, and the occupant thereof, if it be occupied, a written notice setting forth various matters. If the owner "cannot be found, after due diligence," the notice must be posted upon the property. "The person applying for a deed must file with the street superintendent an affidavit or affidavits showing that notice of such application has been given, * * *" and if the notice was not served on the owner of the property personally, that due diligence was used to find such owner. There was no personal service in this case. It is claimed that the affidavit filed by the purchaser was insufficient to show that due diligence had been used to ascertain the whereabouts of the owner.

The declarations of the affiant in this regard were:

That he had "inquired of Miss Nelson at 857 East Adams street and of the occupants of 848 East Adams street for the address or whereabouts of Annie L. Tilton, or Annie L. Tilden, or the owner of said property, and said persons were unable to give any information relative to the whereabouts of said person, said persons being the neighbors nearest said property.

"That the name of Annie L. Tilden is given on the assessment roll as the owner of said property.

"That he has searched the city directory and the telephone directories, seeking to ascertain the address and whereabouts of the said Annie L. Tilton, or Annie L. Tilden, and to find the same affiant has been wholly unable, and that he knows of no other place or person where he could learn the address or whereabouts of said persons.

"That the property is vacant and unoccupied."

In Hennessy v. Hall, 14 Cal. App. 759, 762, 113 Pac. 350, 352, the court said:

That "to warrant the execution of a deed to the purchaser and foreclose the owner's right of redemption upon such constructive service, an affidavit must be filed showing, not merely stating, that due diligence was used to find the owner."

In other words, the affidavit must set forth evidentiary facts which justify the conclusion that due diligence was used. In this respect the requirement of the statute is not unlike that of section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing service of summons by publication when the person to be served "cannot after due diligence be found within the state * * * and this fact appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court or a judge thereof." In order to justify publication of summons "the affidavit must show two facts, viz., the exercise of due diligence to find the defendant within the state, and a failure to find him after the exercise of such diligence." Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 651, 66 Pac. 216, 70 Pac. 732. An affidavit which merely states these "ultimate facts," or conclusions in the language of the statute, is not adequate. Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149. But if the evidentiary facts set forth in the affidavit have a "legal tendency" to show the ultimate facts, the order for publication is sufficiently supported. Rue v. Quinn, supra; People v. Wrin, 143 Cal. 11, 76 Pac. 646; People v. Norris, 144 Cal. 422, 77 Pac. 998; Sharp v. Salisbury, 144 Cal. 721, 78 Pac. 282; Shepard v. Mace, 148 Cal. 270, 82 Pac. 1046; Roberts v. Jacob, 154 Cal. 307, 97 Pac. 671. In all of these cases the court upheld orders based on affidavits which, in their statement of facts tending to show the exercise of due diligence, were not materially stronger than the one here involved. The property in question is an unoccupied city lot. The affidavit states that the affiant made inquiry of persons residing at two certain addresses. It is true, as claimed by the appellant, that it does not appear how near these places were to the property in question. But it is stated that the occupants of these places were "the neighbors nearest said property." The statement of the affidavit that search had been made of "the city directory and the telephone directories" is not very satisfactory, in view of the omission to specify the years for which such directories were issued. But taking the whole affidavit together, we think it cannot be said that it is lacking in the allegation of facts tending to prove due diligence in seeking to ascertain the whereabouts of the owner. It is not unreasonable to say that the persons living nearest an unoccupied city lot are likely to know who owns the lot and where he is to be found. The affidavit held insufficient in Hennessy v. Hall, supra, was decidedly weaker than the one now before us. It appeared that the person whom the affiant had sought to locate was not the owner of the property at the time of the search, but had parted with all interest therein nearly 4 years before.

It is sought to distinguish Rue v. Quinn, supra, and similar cases, on the ground that in ordering a publication of summons the court or judge passes upon the sufficiency of the affidavit. The requisite facts must "appear by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court or * * * judge." Code Civ. Proc. § 412. The finding (implied in the making of the order) that a sufficient showing has been made will be sustained if the facts alleged in the affidavit justify a finding either way. Bender v. Hutton, 160 Cal. 372, 117 Pac. 322.

[5] The Street Opening Act, however, does not in terms empower any one to find the existence of the facts which are to be "shown" by the affidavit. The street superintendent (or, in the city of Los Angeles, the board of public works, which has, by charter provision, succeeded to the duties of such superintendent), is to execute the deed after the filing with him of the prescribed affidavit. He is therefore called upon to determine, in the first instance, whether the affidavit shows the requisite facts. But, conceding that no particular weight is to be given to his action in accepting the affidavit and executing a deed, the sufficiency of the affidavit must necessarily be a subject for determination by any court in which the validity of the proceedings is put in issue. In the present case the lower court has, by finding in favor of the respondent, ruled that the affidavit was sufficient. We cannot overturn this conclusion. Whether we could sustain a holding to the contrary is a question that is not presented.

[6] 3. Section 18 of the act requires that after the assessment is completed and filed with the city council, the council shall give notice of such filing "by publication for at least ten days in a daily newspaper published and circulated in the city. * * *" The affidavit of publication states that the notice was published for "ten consecutive days (Sundays excepted), commencing on the 8th day of October, 1909, and ending on the 18th day of October, 1909, both days inclusive, and as often during said period as said newspaper was issued, to wit, daily." October 9 and 16, 1909, were Sundays, and there had, therefore, been only 9 publications. This is claimed to be insufficient under the statute.

The expression "publication for ten days," found in section 22 of the act, does not require any specific number of publications. It designates a period of time during which the publication is to be made. The intervening Sundays are properly counted as a part of this period. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240; Cal. Imp. Co. v. Reynolds, 123 Cal. 88, 55 Pac. 802. A paper published only 6 days of the week is a "daily newspaper" (Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30), and a publication for the required period in every issue of such a paper is a compliance with the statute (Cal. Imp. Co. v. Reynolds, supra).

[7] 4. Under section 26 the street superintendent must execute a certificate of sale setting forth "* * * the time when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed." Under section 27 redemption may be made at any time prior to the execution and delivery of a deed therefor. The deed is to be executed (section 28) at any time after the expiration of 12 months from the date of sale, if the purchaser has given 30 days' notice, as required by said section 28, of the time when he will apply for a deed. The certificate of sale in this case stated that:

"The purchaser or his assignee will be entitled to a deed of said property at any time after the expiration of 12 months from the said date of sale, upon giving notice of application therefor as provided by law, unless said property shall be sooner redeemed."

This, it is claimed, does not comply with the requirement of section 26.

It is questionable whether the alleged defect in the certificate may be complained of by the appellant. The certificate was admitted in evidence without objection. It was not necessary to the defendant's case, the deed itself furnishing prima facie evidence of the regularity of the prior proceedings. But since the certificate was in fact introduced, its insufficiency might have been reached by an attack on the findings. The specifications of insufficiency are, however, so limited as to exclude such attack.

[8] But, in any view, we think the certificate did recite correctly the time when the purchaser would be entitled to a deed. Under the act the deed is to issue at any time after the expiration of 12 months from the date of sale if the purchaser has complied with the provisions of the section and the property has not been redeemed. The purchaser is therefore entitled to a deed at any time after the expiration of 12 months upon giving the proper notice, unless said property is redeemed prior to the delivery of such deed. If we interpret the word "sooner" in the recital to refer to the date when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed—a perfectly permissible construction—the recital is in exact conformity with the provision of the law.

[9, 10] 5. The deed recites that the certificate set forth various matters, including "the time when the purchaser would be entitled to a deed." It did not repeat in detail the recital of the certificate setting forth the time when the purchaser would be entitled to a deed. It is claimed that such recital was necessary under the provision of section 28 that there shall be recited in the deed "substantially the matters contained in the certificate." Assessments for street improvements, like tax proceedings, are in invitum, and where the statute prescribes the form of the instrument which is to divest the title of the owner, such form must be followed. A want of the recitals required by law will make the deed void. Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522; Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 Pac. 761; Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 564, 89 Pac. 352. "It is not for the court to inquire whether the required recitals are of material facts. * * *" Baird v. Monroe, supra.

The statute does not specify, in terms, the precise recitals to be contained in the deed. It merely calls, by reference, for "substantially the matters recited in the certificate." The particular recital here involved relates to the happening, in terms of futurity, of an event which is to occur after the issuance of the certificate, but will have taken place when the deed is executed. Of a somewhat similar provision in section 3786 of the Political Code this court said (Hewes v. McLellan, 80 Cal. 393, 395, 22 Pac. 287, 288):

"The requirement of the Code that the deed shall recite when the purchaser will be entitled to it is absurd, and results from the general provision that it shall contain the recitals contained in the certificate, which was enacted no doubt without observing that one at least of the recitals proper in the certificate would be entirely improper and useless in the deed as the recital of a fact. We think, therefore, that it was sufficient that the deed recited the fact that this statement was contained in the certificate."

Under the case just cited it would clearly have been sufficient if the deed had repeated the recital of the certificate. It did not do this, merely reciting, as has already been stated, that the certificate set forth "the time when the purchaser would be entitled to a deed." We think, however, that the reasoning in Hewes v. McLellan justifies the conclusion that this was a substantial compliance with the statute, in view, especially, of the rather indefinite language ("substantially the matters contained in the certificate") in which section 28 defines the necessary recitals in the deed. For the purposes of the particular recital here in question, we hold that every demand of the law, reasonably construed, is fully satisfied by such a deed as the one before us.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 706

MARIN WATER & POWER CO. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 7451.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1916. Rehearing Denied Feb. 16, 1916.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸71—REGULATION AS TO PUBLIC UTILITIES—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 12, § 23, gives the Railroad Commission such jurisdiction to regulate public utilities, etc., as shall be conferred by the Legislature, and declares the legislative power to confer jurisdiction on the commission plenary. Section 22 declares the authority of the Legislature to give the commission such powers to be unlimited by any provision of the Constitution. Section 14, art. 1, provides that, when private property is taken for public use, the owner's compensation shall be fixed by a jury, unless a jury is waived. Article 12, § 23a (adopted November 3, 1914), declares the commission to have such power to fix the compensation to be paid for property of any public utility acquired by certain public corporations as the Legislature may confer upon it, and that the legislative power shall be plenary. Held, that Public Utilities Act (St. 1911, Ex. Sess. p. 18) § 47, as amended (St. 1913, p. 684), empowering the commission on petition of any water district intending to take by eminent domain the property of any existing public utility to fix the compensation, is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 180–187; Dec. Dig. ⟸71.]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸262—REGULATION OF PUBLIC UTILITIES — REVIEW OF PROCEEDINGS—WAIVER—EFFECT.

Public Utilities Act, § 47, as amended in 1913, valid after Const. art. 12, § 23a (adopted November 3, 1914), gave the Railroad Commission power to fix the compensation payable to the owner of any public utility property taken by a municipal water district, etc., in eminent domain proceedings, and section 70 provided that, if the owner whose property is sought to be taken does not file an acceptance of the compensation fixed by the commission, the corporation seeking to condemn must commence an eminent domain proceeding, in which the compensation so fixed shall be conclusive. On a proceeding in certiorari or review instituted under section 47 as amended it appeared that the evidence had been taken before the Constitution had confirmed the amendment to that section, and that the matter had been submitted and the commission's decision made after such confirmation, and that the petitioner had waived any objection which might have been urged before such amendment. Held, that the court would consider the case on the theory that the commission, from the beginning, was authorized to entertain the proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 681–686; Dec. Dig. ⟸262.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸62 — "JUDICIAL POWER" — DELEGATION — CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Public Utilities Act, § 47, as amended in 1913, authorizing the Railroad Commission to fix compensation to be paid owners of public utility property condemned by a municipal water district, etc., the commission is given judicial powers, as its determination in eminent domain proceedings establishes the right to the owners to receive and the obligation of the public corporation to pay some fixed compensation for the property taken; "judicial power" being the power to determine what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties and with whom is the right of the case; determination of the rights of the individual under the existing laws; the ascertainment of existing rights; the determination of controversies between parties; the power to investigate, declare, and enforce liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under the laws supposed already to exist.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 94–102; Dec. Dig. ⟸62.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judicial Power.]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸264 — REVIEW—CERTIORARI—WRIT—SCOPE—STATUTE.

Const. art. 6, § 4, gives the Supreme Court power to issue writs of certiorari. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, provides that the writ of review may be granted when an inferior board, etc., has exceeded its jurisdiction, and there is no appeal or any adequate remedy. Public Utilities Act, § 47, as amended in 1913, gives the Railroad Commission judicial powers in fixing compensation in eminent domain proceedings, and section 67 provides that the review shall extend only to the question whether the commission has legally pursued its authority, and excludes from review questions of fact. Held that, when a finding or conclusion of fact is based on uncontradicted evidence, its accuracy is usually a mere question of law reviewable if it goes to the jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 688, 689; Dec. Dig. ⟸264.]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸231—RAILROAD COMMISSION—POWER TO CALL WITNESSES—EXAMINATION—JUDICIAL TRIBUNALS.

In a proceeding under Public Utilities Act, § 47, as amended in 1913, to have the Railroad Commission fix the compensation of lands, rights, etc., of a public utility intended to be acquired by eminent domain by a public water district, the commission, as a judicial tribunal, had power to call and examine witnesses in furtherance of justice and against the will of either party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 585–589; Dec. Dig. ⟸231.]

6. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸231—RAILROAD COMMISSION — POWERS—RECEIVING TESTIMONY.

In such proceeding the Railroad Commission, after such witness was examined and cross-examined as to his knowledge on the subject, he having viewed and examined all the property carefully and made exhaustive inquiries regarding the previous sales of similar property in the vicinity, and of the different uses to which the properties in question were adapted, did not exceed its authority in considering his testimony, together with other evidence bearing on the question of use and value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 585–589; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 231.]

7. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸231—COMPENSATION —EVIDENCE—METHOD OF VALUATION.

In such proceeding, where it appeared that the land belonging to the public utility from which water might be obtained was so situated that the annual rainfall thereon might be conveniently collected, stored on the land, and thence distributed to consumers, and there was evidence as to the average rainfall upon such lands, the quantity which could be annually collected and stored, and the selling price, a witness' method of valuing the land without giving the advantage of water storage a separate value, but merely adding it to the land value and reporting it all as one item, where the commission gave additional value to the land on such ground, the refusal to require the witness to state its separate value or to give it a separate value, while erroneous, did not deprive the commission of jurisdiction or make its award invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 585–589; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 231.]

8. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸234—WATER RIGHTS —ELEMENTS OF DAMAGES.

In such proceeding the claim that by means of additional dams the amount of water stored on the land annually could be greatly increased, that such possibilities increased the value of the property, and that the commission allowed nothing therefor was not sustained by a record showing that, while the commission refused to make a separate statement of the value of such possibilities, it did allow a value for the potential storage of storm water on the land by giving the land a present additional value because of such fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 592–600, 603; Dec. Dig. ⟸234.]

9. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸231—COMPENSATION —VALUE—METHOD.

In such proceeding the valuation of the property by the commission, corresponding with the values fixed by a certain witness called by the commission, who had been examined and cross-examined by the parties, was proper, as the commission was not bound to limit itself to the testimony of witnesses offered by the parties, but might take the other evidence produced at the hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 585–589; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 231.]

10. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸231—PROPERTY OF WATER AND POWER COMPANY—METHOD OF COMPENSATION — IRREGULARITY — PUBLIC UTILITY ACT.

Under Public Utility Act, § 47, as amended in 1913, requiring the Railroad Commission to fix the compensation to be paid for property of a public utility in accordance with section 70, which provides that it shall file its findings of fact upon all matters as to which evidence was introduced which in its judgment had any bearing on the value of the property, the commission's failure to find separately the value of each separate parcel of the property, while an irregularity, did not cause a loss of jurisdiction or make the proceeding void, as, when a court of limited jurisdiction has acquired jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, the same presumptions as to subsequent proceedings apply as with respect to courts of general jurisdiction, and subsequent irregularities do not make its judgments void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 585–589; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 231.]

In Bank. Proceeding in certiorari or review by the Marin Water & Power Company, instituted under the provisions of the Public Utilities Act as amended in 1913, against the Railroad Commission of the State of California. Proceedings and determination of the Commission affirmed.

Lilienthal, McKinstry & Raymond, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Douglas Brookman, of San Francisco (Max Thelen, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari or review, instituted under the provisions of section 47 of the Public Utilities Act as amended in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 684), and of section 67 of said act.

Section 47 originally gave the Railroad Commission power to ascertain the value of the property of public utilities and to make revaluations thereof from time to time, but for purposes of regulation only. The amendment of 1913 empowers the commission, on petition of any county, municipal corporation, or municipal water district which intends to acquire, under eminent domain proceedings, or otherwise, the property of any existing public utility, or any part or portion thereof, to fix and determine the just compensation to be paid for such property in such condemnation proceedings. The commission is also empowered to fix and determine such value upon the filing of a petition stating that such county, municipal corporation, or district intends to submit to the voters thereof a proposition to acquire the property of any existing public utility or any part thereof.

On May 20, 1914, the Marin municipal water district, a public corporation created under the act of May 1, 1911, and the amendment of December 24, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1290; Spec. Sess. 1911, p. 92), filed with the commission a petition under the provisions of section 47, asking the commission to fix and determine the compensation to be paid by said district for all the lands, property, and rights of the petitioner, Marin Water & Power Company, connected with its business of selling water for domestic and other uses in Marin county. Such proceedings were had thereon that the commission heard the evidence of the respective parties and made a final determination as to the value of the property in question, which decision became final on May 10, 1915. This proceeding was begun within the time allowed by the Public Utilities Act for the review of said decision.

[1] At the time of the enactment of the amendment of section 47 aforesaid, and at the time of the filing of the petition to the Railroad Commission and the hearing of the evidence thereon, the Constitution, by section 23, art. 12, provided that:

"The Railroad Commission shall have and exercise such power and jurisdiction to supervise and regulate public utilities, in the state of California, and to fix the rates to be charged for commodities furnished, or services rendered by the public utilities as shall be conferred upon it by the Legislature, and the right of the Legislature to confer powers upon the Railroad Commission respecting public utilities is hereby declared to be plenary and to be unlimited by any provision of this Constitution."

Section 22 of the article also provided that the authority of the Legislature to give the commission powers of the same kind or different from those conferred upon it therein "is expressly declared to be plenary and unlimited by any provision of this Constitution." Section 14 of article 1 provides that, when private property is taken for public use, the compensation to the owner shall be fixed by a jury, unless a jury is waived. So far as private property belonging to public utilities is concerned, this statute purports to abrogate the guaranty of section 14. The proposition that the above clauses of sections 22 and 23 were intended to authorize the Legislature, by the simple device of giving additional powers to the Railroad Commission to nullify all the other constitutional guaranties for the protection of persons and property is certainly startling. It may well be doubted if the people understood that they were thus investing the Legislature with all the powers of state. If this proposition arose, the question whether the rule of ejusdem generis would require a different construction would be presented. But after the enactment of said amendment to section 47 the Constitution itself was amended by the adoption on November 3, 1914, of section 23a of article 12, declaring that the Railroad Commission should have such power to fix the just compensation to be paid for the property of any public utility, when it is sought to be acquired by any of the public corporations above named, as the Legislature should confer upon it, that "the right of the Legislature to confer such powers upon the Railroad Commission is hereby declared to be plenary and to be unlimited by any provision of this Constitution," and that "all acts of the Legislature heretofore adopted, which are in accordance herewith, are hereby confirmed and declared valid." This, of course, removes all doubt of the present validity of the said amendment of section 47.

[2] The proceedings here under review were begun, it must be noted, and substantially all the evidence was taken therein, before the Constitution had confirmed said amendment to section 47. But the matter was submitted to the commission, and the decision was made thereon after said confirmation. In this condition of the case the petitioner now expressly waives any objection that might be urged because of the enactment of said amendment of section 47 before the amendment of the Constitution. This, of course, includes all objections on the ground that the proceeding was begun and the evidence taken therein before the commission was authorized to act in such matters, if such objection would otherwise lie. We have no doubt that the petitioner may effectually waive a matter of that character. As this would make the adjudication of the commission valid, so far as such objections are concerned, it is unnecessary for us here to express any opinion as to the soundness of the objections, or as to the effect, in this particular, of the several amendments to the Constitution above mentioned. We proceed, therefore, to consider the case upon the theory that the commission, from the beginning, had lawful authority to entertain the proceeding.

Section 47 of the Public Utilities Act, as amended, after giving to the Railroad Commission power to "fix and determine the just compensation that should be paid to the owner" of the public utility property, the procedure to be as provided in section 70 of the act, also provides that, if the owner whose property is thus sought does not, within 20 days after the commission has certified its findings as to such compensation, file with the commission an agreement to accept for the property the amount so fixed, the public corporation at whose instance such compensation was fixed must, within 60 days after the filing of such findings, commence a proceeding in eminent domain for the condemnation of such property for its use. Similar provisions are made for the case where the public corporation in its petition states its intention to submit such proposition to the voters. It further provides that the compensation so fixed by the commission shall be conclusive as to the amount to be allowed for the property in the proceeding in eminent domain begun pursuant thereto, leaving the court therein to decide only the remaining material issues.

[3] The first proposition to which the petitioner here directs our attention is that, in making this determination as to compensation, the commission exercises judicial power. To this counsel for the other parties and for the commission make no answer. They apparently concede it. We have no doubt that this is correct. The judicial function is to "declare the law and define the rights of the parties under it." Frasher v. Rader, 124 Cal. 133, 56 Pac. 797. To determine "what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties, and with whom is the right of the case, is judicial action." Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U. S. (12 Pet.) 718, 9 L. Ed. 1233. "A determination of the rights of an individual under the existing laws" is an exercise of judicial power. Quinchard v. Board, 113 Cal. 669, 45 Pac. 856. An essential element of judicial power, distinguishing it from legislative power, is that it requires "the ascertainment of existing rights." People ex rel. Dean v. Board of Supr's of Contra Costa County, 122 Cal. 424, 55 Pac. 131. "It is not to be disputed that, as a general proposition, the judicial function is the determination of controversies between parties." Title, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 319, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199, 11 Ann. Cas. 465. See, also, Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 47, 90 Pac. 129, 121 Am. St. Rep. 90, 12 Ann. Cas. 829; Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 761, 25 L. Ed. 504; 23 Cyc. 1620. "A judicial inquiry investigates, declares, and enforces liabilities as they stand on present or past facts and under laws supposed already to exist. That is its purpose and end." Prentis v. Atlantic, etc., Co., 211 U. S. 226, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150. "The Legislature may determine what private property is needed for public purposes; that is a question of a political and legislative character; but, when the taking has been ordered, then the question of compensation is judicial. It does not rest with the public, taking the property, through Congress or the Legislature, its representative, to say what compensation shall be paid, or even what shall be the rule of compensation. The Constitution has declared that just compensation shall be paid, and the ascertainment of that is a judicial inquiry." Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 327, 13 Sup. Ct. 622, 37 L. Ed. 463. In the present case a controversy exists between the public corporation desiring the property and the private owners thereof conducting the public utility concerning the compensation to be paid to such owners for the property when it is taken by the public corporation. The initiation of the proceeding before the commission necessarily raises that controversy, if it did not exist before, and presents it for decision. Its determination establishes the right and obligation of the parties, respectively, in the expected action in eminent domain, the right of the owners to receive and the obligation of the public corporation to pay the sum fixed as compensation for the property if it is taken. It comprises an essential part of the action; it conclusively determines one of the facts to be determined therein for the purposes of that action. It is, to that extent, as much an exercise of judicial power, as above defined, as is the judgment of the court in the action to condemn the property.

[4] The functions of the commission being judicial, the Supreme Court would have had jurisdiction in certiorari to review its final decision in the proceedings without the express grant of such jurisdiction in the act itself. Const. art. 6, § 4; Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. The jurisdiction derived from the Constitution and from the Code of Civil Procedure, under the well-established rules, could extend only to the inquiry whether the commission had exceeded its authority. Section 47, however, refers to section 67 of the Public Utilities Act.

Section 67 provides that the review thereby authorized shall not extend further than to determine whether the commission "has regularly pursued its authority," but adds that the review may include the question whether the decision of the commission "violates any right of the petitioner under the Constitutions" of California and the United States, respectively. In view of our conclusions on the merits presently to be considered, we find it unnecessary to determine or discuss the question whether this additional clause enlarges our powers in certiorari, upon which the court has hitherto been equally divided. See Pacific T. & T. Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 651 and 692, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822, for the opposing views on this point. There is also a provision excluding questions of fact from review. Notwithstanding this, however, the law remains that, when a finding or conclusion of fact is based on uncontradicted evidence, its accuracy usually becomes a mere question of law, and in that event the question may be reviewed if it goes to the jurisdiction. With this preliminary statement we proceed to consider the objections to the proceedings.

[5] At the hearing objection was made to the action of the commission in calling W. N. Wells to testify as a witness on the subject of the values of the several properties. He was sworn and testified at the instance and request of the commission and against the will of the Marin Water & Power Company. It is now conceded that judicial tribunals have power to call and examine witnesses in furtherance of justice and against the will of either party. No authorities are cited in the briefs, but we find that the following sanction the practice: 1 Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 139 (8th Ed.) 210; Selph v. State, 22 Fla. 543; Clark v. Commonwealth, 90 Va. 368, 18 S. E. 440; Hill v. Commonwealth, 88 Va. 639, 14 S. E. 330, 29 Am. St. Rep. 744; O'Connor v. National Ice Co., 4 N. Y. Supp. 537; Hurd v. Lill, 26 Ill. 497. From these it is clear that the calling of Wells and his examination as a witness was within the discretion of the commission.

[6] It is also contended that Wells was an incompetent witness on the subject, and hence that the commission went beyond its powers in considering his testimony. We think he was shown to be competent. He was regularly examined and cross-examined at great length as to his knowledge of the subject. His testimony showed that for the purpose of forming an opinion as to its value he had viewed and examined all the property with care and had made exhaustive inquiries regarding the previous sales of property of similar character in the vicinity and of the different uses to which the properties in question were adapted. He appears to have followed substantially the same course in arriving at his opinions that was adopted for that purpose by the expert value witnesses called by the petitioner. See Spring V. W. W. v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 535, 28 Pac. 681; Vallejo, etc., Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 574, 147 Pac. 252. In our opinion, the commission did not exceed its authority in considering the testimony of such a witness together with the other evidence produced before it bearing on the question of use and value. In view of these conclusions, we find it unnecessary to consider how far the commission is bound by the rules of evidence and procedure in courts of law. It did not, in these particulars, transgress those rules.

[7] The principal objection to the testimony of Wells relates to his method of valuing the lands belonging to the petitioner from which water could be obtained. These lands are mountainous, and so situated that the annual rainfall thereon may be conveniently collected, stored on the land, and thence distributed and sold to consumers. There was evidence tending to show the average annual rainfall upon these lands, the quantity thereof that could be annually collected and stored, and the selling price paid by the consumers. Wells did not give this advantage of water storage a separate value, but merely added it to the land value and reported it all as one item. The commission appears to have believed that separate values could not be given to the land and water respectively, basing its opinion upon the proposition that water which falls upon the ground as rain and runs off into the reservoir as surface water does not constitute a legal water right. We think this is no reason for saying that the two elements of value could not be separately estimated, or that there is any distinction in this respect between the added value to the land by reason of the water privilege from this cause and the added value which land may have by reason of a riparian right or a right appurtenant in a stream. Whether it is properly a water right or not is immaterial. The fact that water can annually be obtained therefrom for sale is the material element for consideration. Both the commission and the witness, however, did consider this element and gave the land additional value on that account. There can be no doubt that this element of the value of land is as much the property of the landowner as any other element which gives it value. So far as the commission appears to have held that it was not a property right, it was in error, but, inasmuch as it did give the additional value to the land, it is immaterial whether the commission, in allowing this element of value, styled it a technical water right, or a mere advantage of water storage giving additional value to the land. The refusal to give it a separate value would not deprive the commission of jurisdiction or make its award invalid.

[8] The company claims that by means of additional dams the amount of water stored on its land annually could be greatly increased, that these possibilities of future advantage largely increased the value of the property, and that the commission did not allow anything therefor. We do not think this claim is sustained by the record. The commission refused to make a separate statement of the value of these future possibilities, but it appears that it did allow a value for the potential storage of storm water on the land by giving it a present additional value because of that fact. Although the expert witnesses for the petitioner adopted a different method, they practically arrived at the same result. They estimated the run-off and storage and probable expense of storage, distribution, and sale, the probable selling price, capitalized the net profit, and added the present value of the result to the value of the land as estimated apart from its value for water. While the values were larger than those given by the commission, the principle is the same in either case if the valuation is honestly made.

[9] It appears from the record that the witnesses for the municipal water district fixed certain values for the property in controversy, that the witnesses for the power company also fixed certain somewhat different values therefor, and that the value as fixed by the commission falls below that fixed by the witnesses on either side, and corresponds more nearly to the values fixed by the witness Wells. This, they say, is a decision outside of the issues, upon evidence which neither party offered, and is upon a controversy which neither party submitted to the commission for its consideration. We do not so understand the law. Wells testified in the presence of the parties, and was duly examined and cross-examined by them. As heretofore stated, this constituted legal evidence upon the issue as to the value of the property in controversy. The commission was not bound to limit itself to the testimony of the witnesses offered by the respective parties, but had the power to take the other evidence produced at the hearing. We need not inquire concerning the additional point that the commission claimed that, under section 70 aforesaid, it was "empowered to resort to any other source of information available," including evidence not introduced at the hearing. Some remarks in its opinion indicate that the commission may believe that it has that power. But it did not exercise it in this proceeding. It considered only the evidence actually produced.

It is not to be supposed, from what has been said, that the objections we have considered would, if well taken, operate to avoid the award of compensation. It may be that they are matters not going to the jurisdiction, and hence not reviewable in certiorari. We have preferred to consider them on their merits. As we find them not well taken, the question whether or not they would invalidate the proceeding becomes immaterial.

[10] Further objection is made on the ground that the commission did not find separately the value of each separate parcel of the property of the water company. Section 47 requires the commission to "proceed to fix and determine the just compensation * * * in the manner and in accordance with the provisions of section 70." Section 70 provides that it "shall make and file its findings of fact in writing upon all matters concerning which evidence shall have been introduced before it which in its judgment have any bearing on the value of the property." Evidence was given showing separately the value of the respective parcels. Section 47 also provides that after the filing of the petition, and before payment of the compensation fixed, the commission may be required to find the amount of an alleged unreasonable depreciation in value, to be deducted from the compensation allowed; also that it may be called on to fix the amount the owner may have had to expend to preserve the property after the final judgment of condemnation and before payment, to the end that the owner may be reimbursed such amount. In fixing these amounts it might be found convenient to have the parcels separately valued. But, however, this may be, we do not think the failure to make such detailed findings causes a loss of jurisdiction or makes the proceeding void. It is admitted that the commission acquired full jurisdiction. When once it is made to appear that a court of limited jurisdiction has acquired jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, the same presumptions as to subsequent proceedings apply as with respect to courts of general jurisdiction, and subsequent irregularities do not make its judgments void. Van Fleet on Collateral Attack, § 806; Long v. Burnett, 13 Iowa, 28, 81 Am. Dec. 420. In such a case "jurisdiction cannot be lost by the erroneous exercise of the power conferred." Brown on Jur. § 25. Section 70 leaves it to the discretion of the commission to determine whether or not it will make detailed findings. It is not declared to be mandatory. At most, the making of a general finding is but an irregularity. If the parties have any remedy when injured by such failure, it is by mandamus, not certiorari. It does not go to the jurisdiction.

If the undisputed evidence had shown that the property had a special additional value, as, for example, that by reason of the situation and topography of a parcel of the land a quantity of water could be annually caught, stored thereon, and sold at a profit, and that the commission had refused to allow such value, as a part of the compensation fixed, it may be conceded that this would have been a deprivation of property without due process of law, a disregard of the petitioner's right to just compensation, and therefore a violation of both the federal and state Constitutions. Appleby v. Buffalo, 221 U. S. 524, 31 Sup. Ct. 699, 55 L. Ed. 838; Chicago, etc., Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 102, 24 L. Ed. 616; Backus v. Fort St., etc., Co., 169 U. S. 557, 18 Sup. Ct. 445, 42 L. Ed. 853; McGovern v. New York, 229 U. S. 363, 33 Sup. Ct. 876, 57 L. Ed. 1228, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391. We do not find that the commission did thus refuse to allow an undisputed value, and therefore the argument founded on the above-stated proposition must fall.

With respect to the contention that the commission did not allow the value of the water in storage at the time of the award, it is sufficient to say that our attention has not been directed to any evidence of such value, nor of the quantity in storage. It is difficult to see how it could be valued, under the circumstances. It was the store for daily use, and the quantity would change from day to day. The time when the water district would take possession of the plant could not be foretold. It seems difficult to fix such compensation except by finding the value per gallon and directing a measurement at the time of the transfer of possession. But this question is not now before us, and we express no opinion regarding it.

The proceedings and determination of the Railroad Commission are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

The CHIEF JUSTICE took no part in the consideration of this cause, and does not participate in the decision.

29 Cal. App. 153

BANK OF BAKERSFIELD v. CONNER et al. (Civ. 1769.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 13, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 10, 1916.)

1. PAYMENT ⇐22—CHECK—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT—"CERTIFICATE OF STOCK."

A contract for the purchase of shares of stock in a bank which acted as the seller's agent in the transaction provided that upon payment to such agent payment would be deemed sufficiently made, and when payment was due the buyer delivered to the bank, payable to it or bearer, a certified check for the price, which on the same day was delivered by the bank without indorsement to the seller. Held, in an action on the check, that it was given in payment, and not in tender of payment, and that the maker was liable thereon because he became the owner of the shares upon their identification and payment, and was entitled to compel delivery of a certificate therefor; a "certificate of stock" not being the stock itself, but merely evidence of its title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 87, 88; Dec. Dig. ⟸22.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Certificate of Stock.]

2. Evidence ⟸459 — Parties to Check — Parol Evidence.

Where, under a contract of sale of stock, a bank is agent for the seller to receive payment, and a certified check for the price, payable to it or bearer, is delivered to it by the buyer and received by it as such payment, parol evidence is inadmissible in an action on the check to show that the word "bearer" was left therein by mistake and that the check was intended for the bank itself and not for the seller.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1722, 1906–1910, 2109-2114; Dec. Dig. ⟸459.]

3. Corporations ⟸121 — Transfer of Shares—Actions—Evidence.

In such a case, evidence of the bank's delivery of the check to the seller is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 504, 505; Dec. Dig. ⟸121.]

4. Appeal and Error ⟸1050—Prejudicial Error.

The admission of such evidence, if erroneous for immateriality, is harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068, 1069, 4153–4157, 4166; Dec. Dig. ⟸1050.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Bakersfield against Sarah L. Conner, as executrix of the last will of C. L. Conner, deceased, and G. J. Planz, to determine their rights to a sum of money deposited with it, and for which the executrix held Planz's certified check. Defendants were required to interplead, and, from a judgment for the executrix and an order denying Planz's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Foster, of Bakersfield, for appellant. C. C. Cowgill, of Sonoma, and Peter A. Breen, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. On July 21, 1910, the defendant G. J. Planz drew his check upon the Bank of Bakersfield for the sum of $3,799.66 and caused it to be certified by that bank. The check was payable to the Kern Valley Bank or bearer. Immediately thereafter defendant Planz delivered the check to the Kern Valley Bank, and on the same day the cashier of that bank delivered the check, without indorsement, to C. L. Conner. Conner died at some time between September, 1910, and March, 1911, and the check in question came into the possession of the defendant Sarah L. Conner as executrix of his last will and testament. The plaintiff, the Bank of Bakersfield, filed its complaint herein showing that it holds and has in its possession money deposited with it by defendant Planz sufficient to pay said check; but also that the defendant Planz gave notice and instruction to the plaintiff to refuse payment of the check, and that the defendant Conner as executrix has demanded payment thereof. The defendants were required to interplead herein for the determination of their adverse claims in the premises. A judgment having been entered in favor of the executrix, the defendant Planz has appealed therefrom and also from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On July 21, 1908, an agreement in writing was entered into between C. L. Conner and one H. A. Blodget, whereby, in consideration of the sum of $5 in hand paid, Conner agreed to sell and deliver to Blodget, his nominee or assigns, 50 shares of the capital stock of the Kern Valley Bank, a corporation, upon the payment of the sum of $3,799.66 on or before July 21, 1909. It was agreed that upon payment to Conner on or before July 21, 1909, of the sum of $281.45, the time for payment of said larger sum should thereby be extended to, and the delivery of said stock extended to, July 21, 1910. It was agreed:

"That payment shall be deemed to be sufficiently made to said C. L. Conner by payment to the Kern Valley Bank for account of C. L. Conner of either of the sums above specified. And the said fifty (50) shares of said stock of the said Kern Valley Bank shall, upon payment made as hereinbefore provided, be delivered, on demand, to the said H. A. Blodget, his nominee or assignee, together with all dividends that may be declared and paid on said shares of stock during the life of this agreement."

On July 21, 1909, Blodget paid the sum required for extending the time of final payment to July 21, 1910, and on July 19, 1910, sold, assigned, and transferred to G. J. Planz "all my right, title and interest in and to the within and foregoing contract and the capital stock of the Kern Valley Bank, viz., fifty (50) shares thereof, therein described." Thereafter Planz delivered his certified check as hereinabove stated.

[1] The court found that said check was paid to the Kern Valley Bank for the account of C. L. Conner and was accepted by that bank for the account of C. L. Conner as and in full payment of the purchase price of said 50 shares of stock. Under his specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings, appellant claims that the evidence does not show his delivery of the check for the account of Conner or as payment on the contract, but claims that it was merely a tender of payment conditioned upon delivery of the shares of stock. In our opinion, the evidence fully justifies the finding as made. In his testimony defendant Planz himself said:

"On July 21, 1910, under the contract, * * * I gave the Kern Valley Bank $3,799.66. I paid it with my certified check on the Bank of Bakersfield."

He further testified that on July 23, 1910, he demanded of Conner a transfer of the 50 shares of stock, and that Conner refused this demand and said that, if Planz would deliver back to the Kern Valley Bank the receipt which that bank gave him, they would give him the money back or the check. On August 6, 1910, Planz filed a complaint in the superior court of Kern county against Conner and the Kern Valley Bank to enforce his demand for delivery to Planz of the 50 shares of stock to which he claimed to be entitled under the agreement with Blodget which had been assigned to him. In that complaint, verified under his oath, the plaintiff therein said that he had made the before-mentioned payment of $3,799.66 to the Kern Valley Bank for the account of C. L. Conner, and that "the said Kern Valley Bank, a corporation, received the sum of money for the account of C. L. Conner and now has the said sum of money in its possession and under its control for the account of C. L. Conner." The same statement was repeated in an amended complaint. To that complaint a demurrer was filed, and it appears that the action was pending without any other proceedings having been had therein at the time of the trial of the case now before us.

[2] Defendant Planz in his answer states that the certified check was by mistake made out to bearer. At the trial he was asked to state why the word "bearer" was left on the check, or whether he intended that it should be left on the check at the time when he made it. The court sustained an objection that the question was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial and an attempt to vary the terms of the written instrument by parol in the absence of any appropriate pleadings for reforming the instrument. It is now urged on this appeal that this ruling was erroneous, because it prevented appellant from showing that he was paying the money to the Kern Valley Bank and to no other person, and from showing that he had intended to strike out by drawing a line through the word "bearer." We think that the ruling was correct. Under the contract the Kern Valley Bank was agent of Conner for the purpose of receiving payment of the sum specified in the check. It is not claimed that the bank was aware of any mistake in the check or informed that it did not fully express the intention of the maker. Whether made payable to the order of the Kern Valley Bank or made payable to that bank or bearer, it was equally capable of being received and used for the purposes of the transaction.

The specifications of insufficiency of the evidence, although not in the usual form and in some instances perhaps not legally sufficient, will be considered as sufficient to raise the only other important question in the case, which is whether the evidence justified the court in finding that Conner was the owner of the check, and that it is now the property of the defendant Sarah L. Conner as executrix, etc. On this phase of the case, it seems to us that appellant is relying upon propositions which are not applicable to the case as made by the record. He refers us to authorities holding that refusal to perform a contract constitutes a rescission. Assuming that in some instances this principle would be applicable, we have here a case in which the purchaser, even though he had a right to claim a rescission, elected to continue his demand for performance of the contract and bring an action for that purpose. Therefore appellant is unable to recall the payment made by him, even if, as he contends, under the terms of the contract the obligation of the seller to deliver the goods and of the buyer to pay the price were concurrent conditions. The shares of stock were identified the price agreed upon was paid, and thereby Planz became the real owner of the shares. He was in a position which entitled him to compel the delivery to him of a certificate of stock. Certificates of corporation stock, it should be remembered, are not the shares, but are merely evidence of title.

[3, 4] Exception is taken to the court's ruling in allowing the cashier of the Kern Valley Bank to testify that on the same day when the certified check was received at that bank he delivered it to C. L. Conner. If this evidence was immaterial, the only reason would be that payment had been completed when the check came into the hands of the bank as Conner's agent. We see no error in the ruling, and at all events it would be without prejudice to any right of appellant.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

(29 Cal. A. 131)

KEITH v. HAMMEL, Sheriff. (Civ. 1578.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 7, 1915.)

1. MANDAMUS ⇐154—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION—FEES OF COUNTY OFFICER.

A taxpayer's petition against the sheriff of a county for a writ of mandamus to compel the sheriff's payment into the county treasury of all fees collected by him as sheriff during three or four months, notwithstanding its insufficiency as to mileage, etc., claimed by the sheriff under the county charter and Pol. Code, § 4290, yet in view of other fees which the sheriff must collect and pay into the county treasury under sections 4300b and 4300c and its allegation that the sheriff had collected and appropriated to his own use $3,000 in fees belonging to the county, was good as against a general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 296–316; Dec. Dig. ⇐154.]

2. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES ⇐71 — ACTION AGAINST—PARTY PLAINTIFF—TAXPAYER—STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 526a, permits a taxpayer's action against public officers to restrain certain described illegal expenditures of county funds, not to affect any right of action in favor of a county or any public officer; Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 16, gives boards of supervisors jurisdiction to direct the prosecution of all suits in which the county is a party; Los Angeles County Charter (St. 1913, p. 1490), § 21, declares that the county council shall have exclusive charge of all civil actions in which the county or its officers are concerned as parties, and section 10 gives the board of supervisors the jurisdiction granted by the laws of the state. Held, that any right of action against the sheriff to compel him to pay into the county treasury fees collected by him during a certain time was a right of action in the county to be prosecuted by it as a party plaintiff, and that a taxpayer could not maintain an action or proceeding without showing that the county officers controlling matters of county litigation had refused to commence or prosecute such action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 98; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃71.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Mandamus by D. E. Keith against W. A. Hammel, Sheriff of Los Angeles County. Judgment for defendant, and petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

William H. Fuller, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Leon F. Moss, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Mandamus. The petitioner, a resident property owner and taxpayer in the county of Los Angeles, filed his petition in the superior court against the sheriff of Los Angeles county for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to pay into the county treasury all fees collected by him as such sheriff between the 2d day of June, 1913, and the 31st day of October, 1913, for the performance of official duties pertaining to that office. A demurrer to the petition for want of facts sufficient to constitute any ground for the relief demanded was sustained, and judgment was entered in favor of respondent. From that judgment the petitioner appeals.

Two principal objections among those relied upon by the respondent will be considered. These are: First, upon the merits, that the facts alleged do not show that the sheriff has received and retained any fees which he is under obligation to pay over to the county. Second, respondent claims that petitioner has not stated facts sufficient to establish his right to maintain the action, even though the demanded right exists in favor of the county.

[1] The petition is so framed as to indicate that the pleader was intending to enforce the payment to the county of mileage and other compensation claimed by the sheriff under the charter of Los Angeles county and section 4290 of the Political Code. The claim of the sheriff that he was entitled to retain such moneys for his own use was determined in his favor on appeal to this court in Los Angeles County v. Hammel, 26 Cal. App. 580, 147 Pac. 983. Appellant now concedes the points which were involved in that appeal, but he contends that since there are other fees provided by law which the sheriff of Los Angeles county must collect and pay into the county treasury (Pol. Code, §§ 4300b, 4300c), the petition herein is nevertheless broad enough to include those fees. Treating many of his allegations as surplusage irrelevant to his real case, he now says that the case includes and was intended to include all moneys collected by the sheriff in his official capacity. The petition states that the respondent as sheriff, between the dates specified, "collected and received and appropriated to his own use, the sum of $3,000 as fees belonging to Los Angeles county for the performance of his services as sheriff of Los Angeles county during said time." This appears to be sufficient, and the allegation is good as against a general demurrer.

[2] The law concerning the right of a taxpayer to maintain actions and proceedings to enforce public rights and protect public interests, has been a subject of discussion in many decisions, but is also to some extent affected by statutory declaration. Section 526a, Code of Civil Procedure, provides for the maintenance of a taxpayer's action against public officers to obtain a judgment restraining and preventing certain described illegal expenditures, etc., of county or municipal funds. It also says:

"This section does not affect any right of action in favor of a county, city, town, or city and county, or any public officer."

The charter of Los Angeles county, in section 21 thereof (Stats. 1913, p. 1490), declares that:

"The county counsel * * * shall have exclusive charge and control of all civil actions and proceedings in which the county, or any officer thereof, is concerned or is a party."

Section 10 of the charter states that the board of supervisors shall have all the jurisdiction and power "which are now or which may hereafter be granted by the Constitution and laws of the state of California, or by this charter." Under section 4041 of the Political Code, subdivision 16, boards of supervisors are given jurisdiction and power to direct and control the prosecution and defense of all suits to which the county is a party. The general effect of these provisions of charter and statute seems to be, not only that the conduct of actions in which the county is a party is committed to the charge and control of public officers, but it further appears to be the intention (in harmony with long-established principles) that the county shall be a party to actions and proceedings wherein the county "is concerned." From the many decisions of the courts of this and other states dealing with this subject, we derive the principle that in the conduct of the ordinary business of a county or city, where the care and protection of the rights of the corporation have been committed to public officers, the primary right goes with the duty belonging to those officers to control the ordinary business of the corporation without the interference of private citizens, even though they be taxpayers. The exceptions which have been permitted usually arise in those situations where an officer is threatening to act in excess of his authority, or refuses to perform an official duty, and there is no other officer or official body empowered to act on behalf of the public or of the corporation, to enforce their rights in the matter, or where it appears that the officers empowered to act refuse to perform their duty in that respect. Instances which illustrate the subject may be given, such as Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353, mandamus by a taxpayer within an assessment district to compel county assessor to assess property subject to assessment; Eby v. School Trustees, 87 Cal. 166, 25 Pac. 240, mandamus to compel board of school trustees to comply with instructions of electors as to location of schoolhouse site; Frederick v. City of San Luis Obispo, 118 Cal. 391, 50 Pac. 661, mandamus to require board of trustees to call an election on question of disincorporation of the city. All of these cases had to do with extraordinary situations, and not with the conduct of the ordinary business of the corporation. In Maxwell v. Board of Supervisors, 53 Cal. 389, petitioner was permitted to maintain a proceeding for writ of review to the board of supervisors to review its action in entering into a contract for printing. This related to a matter within the ordinary scope of the business of the corporation, but the recalcitrant body was the controlling board of officers of the county, and the taxpayer's right in such a case is one arising out of the necessity of the situation and is recognized for that reason. The principle which should control is very fully stated in Dunn v. Long Beach Land & Water Co., 114 Cal. 605, 46 Pac. 607, wherein a resident of and property owner and taxpayer in the city of Long Beach sought to have canceled a certain judgment affecting the title to a street and to quiet the title of the city to the street. It was held, not only that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, but also that the facts were not sufficient to justify the plaintiff in bringing the action. The court said:

"The rule is that the municipality, through its governing body, has control of the property and general supervision over the ordinary business of the corporation; and there would be utter confusion in such matters if every citizen and taxpayer had the general right to control the judgment of such body or usurp the office. Where the thing in question is within the discretion of such body to do or not to do, the general rule is that then neither by mandamus, quo warranto, or other judicial proceeding, can either the state or a private citizen question the action or nonaction of such body; nor in such cases can a private citizen rightfully undertake to do that which he thinks such body ought to do. It is only where performance of the thing requested is enjoined as a duty upon said governing body that such performance can be compelled, or that a private citizen can step into the place of such body and himself perform it. If, therefore, in the case at bar it was not a duty enjoined upon the board of trustees of the city of Long Beach to bring an action similar to this present action brought by appellant, then we need not discuss the general subject of the right of private citizens to maintain actions concerning municipal affairs—which right is founded to a great extent upon necessity, and the want of any other proper party plaintiff. And the proposition that it was a duty enjoined upon said trustees to bring such an action cannot be maintained."

Then, after further discussion and decision that there was no cause of action stated, the opinion closes as follows:

"It cannot be rightfully said, * * * that the trustees now in office are not exercising a wise discretion by refusing, at the present time, to commence unnecessary and hazardous litigation."

In the case at bar we are not called upon to consider whether the officers of Los Angeles county are exercising a wise discretion by refusing to commence an action against the sheriff to recover fees unlawfully retained by him, since there is no intimation that they have refused or neglected anything in that respect. The case to which we have referred (County of Los Angeles v. Hammel) shows that the officers of the county were diligent in seeking to recover from this same sheriff another class of funds to which they claimed that the county was legally entitled. If there is any further right of action against the sheriff, it is a right of action of the county which should be prosecuted by the county as a party plaintiff. In order to justify the petitioner in maintaining an action or proceeding, we think that it would be necessary for him to show that the officers who control those matters of litigation in which the county of Los Angeles is concerned have refused to commence or prosecute proceedings for the protection of the county's interests in this matter. In Burr v. Board of Supervisors of Sacramento County, 96 Cal. 210, 31 Pac. 38, it was held that where by statute it is made the duty of the district attorney to institute suit in the name of the county for the recovery of money paid out without authority of law, the statute affords a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy available to taxpayers by complaint to the district attorney, and that "to say the least," the interest of a taxpayer does not entitle him to bring suit in his own name until the district attorney has refused to perform the duty so enjoined on him.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 126

NOLTE v. NOLTE. (Civ. 1539.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 7, 1915.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=718—CONSIDERATION OF AFFIDAVIT—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 951, providing that on appeal from an order the appellant must furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal and of the papers used on the hearing below, where an affidavit came into the transcript under certificate describing it as part of the judgment roll, which it was not, nor a paper used in connection with the order from which the appeal was taken, the court could not take cognizance of its contents.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2379, 2463, 2645, 2956, 2957; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃713.]

2. Appeal and Error ⊂⊃935 — Presumptions Favoring Court Below.

On appeal from an order vacating a final decree from which no appeal was taken, it will be assumed that the trial court had before it facts sufficient to authorize the vacating order to the full extent that the order could legally be made under any circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3783–3786; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃935.]

3. Judgment ⊂⊃273 — Entry Nunc Pro Tunc.

Where a judgment has been rendered, and its entry omitted, it may be subsequently entered, and, if justice requires, may be made to take effect nunc pro tunc as of the date when it was actually made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 525–541; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃273.]

4. Divorce ⊂⊃170—Entry of Final Decree —Statutes.

Civ. Code, § 131, provides that in divorce actions, if the court determines that divorce should be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered declaring that the party for whom the court decides is entitled to divorce, and from such interlocutory judgment an appeal may be taken within six months after its entry as if it were final. Section 132 provides that, when one year has expired after the entry, the court may enter final judgment, but that, if any appeal is taken from the interlocutory judgment, or motion for new trial made, final judgment shall not be entered until such motion or appeal has been disposed of, and not then if the motion has been granted or judgment reversed. Held that, where a divorce case was submitted for decision June 28, 1909, and an interlocutory decree signed a year later, with an order "that the foregoing decree be entered nunc pro tunc as of June 28, 1909," which was done July 5, 1910, a final decree signed July 1, 1910, and entered July 6th, purporting to be based upon the interlocutory decree, was properly vacated, as entered within a week after actual entry of the interlocutory decree, while the statute prohibits entry until expiration of a year.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 552, 553; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃170.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by A. Nolte against Barbara Nolte. From an order vacating a final decree for plaintiff, he appeals. Order affirmed.

H. H. Appel and E. J. Dennison, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Charles W. Hoag, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Appeal by the plaintiff from an order vacating a final decree of divorce. On the 28th day of June, 1909, the case was tried and submitted to the court for decision. On June 28, 1910, an interlocutory decree was signed, together with an order "that the foregoing decree be entered nunc pro tunc as of June 28, 1909." This decree was entered July 5, 1910, as of June 28, 1909. On July 1, 1910, a final decree of divorce, purporting to be based upon such interlocutory decree entered nunc pro tunc as aforesaid, was signed by the judge. This decree was entered July 6, 1910. On the 12th day of November, 1912, the court, upon its own motion, entered an order setting aside and vacating said final decree "because it was entered within a week after the actual entry of interlocutory decree of divorce." It is from this last-mentioned order that the appeal is taken.

[1, 2] We find in the transcript an affidavit made by the plaintiff's attorney and sworn to on July 1, 1910, which the appellant claims contains a statement of the facts which led the court to make its order for nunc pro tunc entry of the interlocutory decree. This affidavit comes into the transcript under a certificate describing it as part of the judgment roll. As it is not part of the judgment roll, and does not appear to have been one of the papers used in connection with the order from which the appeal is taken, we find no legal ground for taking cognizance of the contents of such affidavit. Code Civ. Proc. § 951. But this defect is immaterial, since facts sufficient to satisfy the court may have existed and may have been shown to the court; and, since no appeal appears to have been taken from the judgment, it will be assumed that the court had before it facts sufficient to authorize such order to the full extent that the order could legally be made under any circumstances. Therefore if, as counsel claims, an interlocutory decree in like form as the one that was entered in 1910 had been signed on June 28, 1909, by the judge who tried the case, and had been delivered to the clerk for filing, and if without filing or entry of such decree the same was lost by the clerk, these would be circumstances strongly appealing to the court in the exercise of its judgment favorably to the request of the plaintiff that the decree be entered as of the date of trial.

[3] It is well established that, where a judgment has been rendered and its entry omitted, it may be subsequently entered, and, if justice requires, may be made to take effect nunc pro tunc as of the date when it was actually made. In re Skerrett, 80 Cal. 62, 22 Pac. 85; Fox v. Hale, 108 Cal. 480, 41 Pac. 328; Marshall v. Taylor, 97 Cal. 426, 32 Pac. 515; and many other cases.

[4] The order setting aside the final decree is not necessarily based upon lack of authority of the court to enter its interlocutory decree nunc pro tunc as of the date when it was rendered, but is based upon the ground that the court has no power to enter a final decree until the expiration of one year after the actual entry of the interlocutory decree.

"When one year has expired after the entry of such interlocutory judgment, the court on motion of either party, or upon its own motion, may enter the final judgment granting the divorce, * * * but if any appeal is taken from the interlocutory judgment or motion for a new trial made, final judgment shall not be entered until such motion or appeal has been finally disposed of, nor then, if the motion has been granted or judgment reversed. * * *" Civ. Code, § 132.

During the period of time covered by the proceedings under review herein it was provided in section 131 of the Civil Code that from an interlocutory judgment in a divorce action "an appeal may be taken within six months after its entry, in the same manner and with like effect as if the judgment were final." In Spencer v. Troutt, 133 Cal. 605, 65 Pac. 1083, it was held that the time allowed for an appeal commences to run from the time of the actual entry of the judgment. The court said:

"It hardly requires argument or authority to establish the proposition that a court cannot by antedating an order, or the entry of it, cut off the right of a party to move for a new trial, to move to set the judgment aside, or to appeal. These rights, given by the Code of Civil Procedure, cannot be lost to a party by such action, whether the effect was designed or not. The test as to whether the period in which the party must act in order to get relief from an order or judgment against him must be whether he could have obtained the desired relief (on a proper showing) before the nunc pro tunc order was made."

In Baum v. Roper, 1 Cal. App. 435, 82 Pac. 390, it was said that, while it is true that an appeal will not lie from a judgment until it has been entered, the judgment in ather respects gets its force and vitality from its rendition, and not from its entry; that the rendition of the judgment is the judicial act of the court, and its entry is the ministerial act of the clerk. So it was held in Los Angeles County Bank v. Raynor, 61 Cal. 145, that it was not necessary that the judgment should have been entered when the execution was issued.

"The enforcement of a judgment does not depend upon its entry or docketing. These are merely ministerial acts, the first of which is required to be done for putting in motion the right of appeal from the judgment itself, and of limiting the time within which the right may be exercised (Code Civ. Proc. § 681), or in which the judgment may be enforced (Code Civ. Proc. § 685), and the other for the purpose of creating a lien by the judgment upon the real property of the debtor (Code Civ. Proc. § 671)."

The effect of these decisions is that, while the power of a court over its records, in order to make them speak the truth, is fully recognized, and for that purpose errors or omissions in the entry of judgments may in some instances be corrected by entering them as of the date when rendered, the full effect of the nunc pro tunc order is limited so as to prevent results not contemplated by the law. There seems to be no reason why such limitation should not apply to the established time when the right to a final judgment of divorce will accrue, in the same manner that it applies to the time when an appeal may be taken, or to any other of the instances above noted. We do not doubt that these were the considerations which led the Supreme Court to hold, in Grannis v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 245, 79 Pac. 891, 106 Am. St. Rep. 23, that:

The provisions of sections 131 and 132 of the Civil Code, "interpreted in the light of the previous legislation and decisions and the purpose to be accomplished by the law, are clearly to be understood as a limitation on the power of the court in the matter, and as intended to forbid the entry of a final judgment until after the prescribed period. The law can only be made effectual for the accomplishment of its object by holding that any final judgment purporting to grant the divorce is absolutely void if thus prematurely entered."

While in that case the court was not considering the power to make a nunc pro tunc entry of a decree, or the limitations on the effect of such entry, we are satisfied that the interpretation there placed upon the Code provisions necessarily leads to the conclusion that a final decree of divorce cauld not be entered until one year after the actual entry of the interlocutory decree. The language of section 131 contemplates that a final decree shall not be entered until after expiration of the time in which an appeal may be taken from the interlocutory decree, nor during the pendency of such appeal if taken. As we have seen, the entry of the interlocutory decree nunc pro tunc as of an earlier date does not affect the time prescribed within which an appeal may be taken. The result is that in this case, as in the Grannis case:

"The judgment in question being wholly void as a final judgment granting an immediate divorce, it was within the power of the superior court at any time, on motion of either party, or of its own motion, to declare it null in so far as it purported to be of such effect."

That we have correctly understood the intended effect of the Supreme Court's decision in the Grannis Case, further appears from the fact that on the same date, in Claudius v. Melvin, 146 Cal. 257, 79 Pac. 897, the same court said:

"We think the defendant is correct in the position that the year which must elapse before final judgment can be given begins to run from the time of the actual entry of the interlocutory judgment, and not from any theoretical nunc pro tunc date of entry."

The order is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 169

PEOPLE v. DYE. (Cr. 318.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 14, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 10, 1916.)

1. EMBEZZLEMENT ⊂⊃4 — LARCENY ⊂⊃15 — WHAT CONSTITUTES.

"Embezzlement" occurs when the possession of property has been acquired lawfully and bona fide, and is afterwards fraudulently appropriated, the gist of the offense being the breach of trust; while, if a bailee acquires property with intent to steal it at the time of the acquisition, he is guilty of "larceny."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃4; Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 39–42; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃15.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Embezzlement; Larceny.]

2. LARCENY ⟸15—POSSESSION—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where one desiring to take a hot bath similar to a Turkish bath hung his clothing on a nail or hook in the room where he undressed, and the proprietor of the bath did not at that time take charge of the clothing or the money therein, no relation of bailor and bailee was created, so the proprietor's subsequent appropriation of the money constituted larceny.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 39–42; Dec. Dig. ⟸15.]

3. LARCENY ⟸15—POSSESSION—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

In such case the fact that the bather trusted the proprietor did not render him a bailee, and the proprietor's subsequent appropriation of the property was larceny.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 39–42; Dec. Dig. ⟸15.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸406—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS.

A statement by accused in the district attorney's office concerning the charge that he had robbed one who took a bath in his establishment, consisting of a denial of the charge, is admissible without showing that it was voluntarily made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 785, 894–917, 920–927; Dec. Dig. ⟸406.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸518—EVIDENCE—CONFESSIONS.

Where before accused made any statement he was informed that he did not have to make any statement, any statement that he made concerning the charge is admissible in evidence against him, notwithstanding a confession, to be admissible, must not have been extracted by any sort of threats or violence nor obtained by promises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1157–1162; Dec. Dig. ⟸518.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

G. B. Dye was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ralph W. Smith, of Sacramento, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was, jointly with one L. S. Purdy, charged with the crime of grand larceny, and upon his trial was convicted, and by the judgment of the court sentenced to six years' imprisonment in the state prison at Folsom. Defendant appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The charge was that defendant, on the ——— day of January, 1915, did "willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously steal, take, and carry away certain personal property, to wit, one $100 bill of currency, one $20 bill of currency, and three $10 bills of currency, * * * being then and there of the personal property of one S. V. Halstead, and not the property of said defendant, contrary," etc.

It is earnestly contended that, if any crime was committed, it was embezzlement, and not larceny; that defendant's motion that the court instruct the jury at the close of plaintiff's evidence to acquit defendant should have been granted because of a fatal variance between the evidence and the charge in the information. To pass upon the merit of this contention requires an examination of what occurred after Halstead went to defendant's place of business.

It appeared from the testimony of the prosecuting witness, Halstead, that he came to Sacramento from San Francisco on Sunday, January 3, 1915, and stopped at the Western Hotel on his way to Nevada City, where he resided and pursued the profession of mining engineer:

He "was suffering from a severe cold and a congestion of the breast." Monday morning, January 4th, he met a stranger at the hotel of whom he inquired whether "he knew if there was a system of Turkish baths, a good system of Turkish baths, in the city. He said, 'Yes.' He says, 'I know of something that is better than the ordinary Turkish bath.' He then spoke of the Hygenic Institute at 327½ K street, or 527½. And he said, 'I have a pamphlet in my pocket describing it,' and he handed it to me, and I was impressed with it, and I says, 'I believe I will go there now.' He says, 'It is very near here, on the same street,' and I immediately went over; I went to this place, called at the office, and Dr. Dye was in."

This was in the forenoon. Halstead described his condition and was examined by defendant. "He took some instruments and sounded me, and he says, 'Your chest is badly congested.'" Halstead told him he was anxious to get to his home in Nevada City and wanted to know if he could get away that night, but was told by defendant: "I wouldn't dare let you out before to-morrow night; I can get you away to-morrow night." Halstead asked what it would cost him and was told that the fee would be $10, and if he would put it up he would give him the treatment at once. Halstead testified:

"I had in my inside vest pocket $140 in bills. I had a $5 gold piece in my left outside vest pocket, and I had some $5 or $6 in silver in my pants pocket. One bill was a $100 bill, United States currency bill, and two $20 bills. I pulled out one $20 bill and handed it to him. He says: 'I will have to go down and get this changed. I will be right up.' A few minutes after he had gone, Mr. Purdy came into the room, and he says: 'You are Mr. Halstead?' I says, 'Yes.' 'Well, Mr. Halstead, we are going to give you a treatment in the bake oven.' Dr. Dye had spoken about what the process was before. He says, 'Just come in this room and undress,' and I did so, and, while undressing, Dr. Dye came in. I took off everything, and either Dr. Dye or Dr. Purdy took my clothes and hung them up. Mr. Jones: Hung them up where? A. On a peg or a nail or a hook in the room where I undressed. Q. They were both present at that time? A. They were both present at that time; yes, sir. Q. Now, to go back a minute. When you took out your money and gave the $20 bill to Dr. Dye, from where did you take that $20 bill? A. From my inside vest pocket. Q. Did you take any other money out—any other bills—at that time? A. No. Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether he saw the other bills in your pocket at that time? A. Not up to the time that I had taken off my clothes. I don't remember whether he looked into my clothes to see what was in there. I told him what I had—that I had— Q. (interrupting). You told Dr. Dye? A. Yes. Q.

What did you tell him you had? A. I told him that I had $150—that was including the $20 that he had taken down to get changed—and he says, 'That will be all right;' he says, 'It is here in your clothes;' he says, 'Everything will be all right, Mr. Halstead.' Q. Go ahead. A. After I took the bath, or while lying in this bath, he brought some kind of liquid—I don't know what it was—that I took through a glass tube. * * * I took it through a glass tube while lying on my back. And after I got out of the bath I was feeling very weak. He assisted me into a back room of his office and put me to bed. He went out of the room, after covering me up, and came in with some liquid in a glass, and I am not sure whether it was a tablet or a capsule that he had, and he said: 'Take this.' I asked him—I remember asking him—if that was an opiate. He said: 'No.' He says: 'It is a purgative.' He says: 'I want to bring you around just as quickly as I can.' Very soon after that I went off into a sleep or a stupor. I don't remember just when I awakened. When I did, I was suffering great pain. And he brought in something else in a glass and told me to take that. Q. When you gave him the $20 bill, did he give you any change? A. No. Q. What did he say about changing it, if anything? A. He never referred to having changed it at all. Q. Well, did he leave the room to go out to change it—anything of that kind? A. Yes; when I gave him the $20 bill, he went out of the room immediately. He said: 'I will go and get it changed and be right back.' Q. When he came back, was anything said about the change? A. No. Q. When you took your clothes off, they were hung up there in the closet? A. Yes, sir; not in a closet; in the room in which I undressed. Q. Did you authorize him, Purdy, or anybody else, to take the money out of your clothes and take care of it, or anything of that kind? A. No, sir. Q. Did you authorize anybody, Purdy or Dye, to take charge of your money in any way? A. Not at all. Q. You just took your clothes off with the money in and left it there? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, what else occurred that night? A. Well, I don't remember how often he came into the room, or how often he gave me something from a glass. Once or twice I know, having rapped or called, he came in and I asked him for water —some water; I was very thirsty; and I think once he brought me in some water; and I know that the second or third time he gave me some sort of medicine from a glass. Once it was a dark color, and another time it was apparently of a clear color. Q. Did he give you any liquor? A. I don't remember whether he gave me any liquor that night or not. I think it was the next day that I was suffering, and I asked him what that was, whether it was brandy or whisky, and he says: 'It is a stimulant.' I believe, as I remember, that he said that it was brandy and peppermint. Whether there was anything else in it or not, I don't know. He said: 'I want you to take what I give you.' He says, 'I want to bring you around as quickly as I can.' Q. Well, how were you the next day? A. Well, the next night I was feeling worse than I did the night before. Q. How long were you kept there? A. From Monday morning until Friday, the following Friday night, before I got out. * * * Q. Now, when you were put to bed, what clothes did you have? A. My undershirt. Q. Were you given your clothes afterwards? A. Not until the following Wednesday or Thursday. I had asked often if he wouldn't bring my clothes in. Mr. Smith: Your honor, do I understand that you ruled that all this testimony is admissible to prove larceny? The Court: I just ruled on one question that you objected to. Mr. Smith: I object to this character of examination. It is not any proof of larceny in any way; it is irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent so far as the issue in this case is concerned. I ask that it be stricken out, and that the prosecution be instructed not to proceed further along this line. The Court: The objection is overruled. Mr. Jones: The acts that I expect to prove will show larceny. The Court: I have overruled the objection. Mr. Jones: Go ahead, Mr. Halstead. State what you said to Mr. Dye about your clothes. A. I asked him to bring my clothes in, that I had occasion to get up out of the bed, and that every time I would do so I took a chill. I asked him the first night if he wouldn't bring my clothes into the room. I don't remember whether he said he would or not, but he did not do so; and almost every time he would come in I would ask him to bring in my clothes. I think it was either a Wednesday or a Thursday that he just brought my pants in—no other clothes. I asked him then for the rest of my clothes, and he said that I couldn't dress anyway, and he didn't want me to go out in the condition that I was in; that I must not leave my room. It was on a Friday —rather it was on a Thursday—that I began to get suspicious that something was wrong, because he had refused to bring my clothes in to me, and I told him on a Friday, I says: 'Doctor, I want you to bring my clothes in. I am going to dress. There is no use of my staying here. I will die in here. I am going to get out of here.' And he said something like this: 'Now, don't get excited; don't get excited.' He says: 'I am going to look after you; you are all right.' I had previously asked him if my money was all right. He says: 'Yes; your money and your clothes—everything is all right. Don't feel alarmed about anything.' 'Well,' I says, 'I want you to bring my clothes in to me.' He says, 'I will,' and he went out—he went out and came back in a few minutes, and he says: 'Purdy has gone out, and has the key of the room in which your clothes are located. I will have to wait until he returns. As soon as he gets back I will bring your clothes in to you.' He went out and probably a half an hour or longer had elapsed when I got up. I was feeling very bad and desperate. I put on my pants, and I went out into the hall and went toward his office door. I took hold of the knob of the door; I believe I rapped first; then I took hold of the knob of the door, and it opened. It was perhaps after 7 o'clock, because the lights I know in the streets were burning, and the light was shining in my room, and the second door from his office was open. That is where I had undressed, and I went in there, and I found my clothes hanging up, and my shoes and stockings were down on the floor. Q. The same room where you went to undress? A. In the same room, and the clothes were apparently just where he had hung them when I undressed. I put on my clothes—dressed—and was sitting in his office chair when he came in shortly afterwards. Q. Wait a minute. You put on your clothes and your vest. State as to whether or no you examined them to see whether your money was there. A. I did. Q. Was your money there? A. No. Q. Was any of it there? A. Nothing at all. Q. The last time you saw the currency that you spoke about, where was it? A. In my inside vest pocket. Q. Inside vest pocket; and the gold was where? A. The gold was in my outside vest pocket. Q. And where was your coin—silver? A. In my pants pocket. Q. Now, you looked through all those pockets, did you? A. Yes, sir. Q. And none of it was there? A. None of it was there. Q. You dressed and you went in your room? A. No; I don't remember whether I went into my room. I sat in his chair in the office. While sitting there, he came in and seemed very much surprised to see me there. Q. What was said? A. 'Well,' he says, 'here you are.' I says: 'Yes; and I have found my clothes; they were not locked up; they were right where they were left when I was taken out of the room.' I says: 'Doctor, where is my money?' And he never answered. I asked him two or three times; he stood there. I says: 'Where is my money?' 'Now,' he says, 'never mind anything about that.' He says: 'Don't get excited.' He had often used that expression: 'Don't get excited.' He says: 'Now that you have got your clothes on, perhaps it is better for you to come out and get some fresh air.' 'Well,' I says, 'I want my money.' 'Well,' he says, 'you will have your money.' He says: 'Don't feel alarmed; you will have your money. Come outside and get some fresh air, and perhaps you will be able to eat something.' I went out with him, and we crossed over to the Thomas Café and sat down, and he says: 'Now, order anything that you want.' * * * Q. Well, where did you sleep that night? A. Back in his place; not in the room that we slept in the night before or at the time that I went there. Q. When you came out of the Thomas Café—you said you had nothing in there but a glass of beer? A. That was all. Q. Now, when you came out of there, did he give you any money? A. Yes, sir. Q. How much? A. I think it was $3. Q. He gave you $3? A. Yes. Q. How came he to give you that? A. I asked him for the money, and he says: 'I haven't much money with me now.' He says: 'I will get your money.' 'Well,' I says, 'I haven't any money at all; I have got nothing.' And he pulled out some money in his hand and handed me $3, and he says: 'That will do you now.' And he says: 'I will have all your money back to you.' Q. Well, you slept in his room that night, did you? A. Yes; not in the same room that I had been sleeping in. * * * Q. What conversation, if any, did you have with him the next day in regard to your money? A. It was during the next day that he admitted that he had taken my money. Q. Well, don't say 'he admitted.' Tell just what the language was and how he came to say it, and the conversation that was had between you. A. Well, those were the words that he used. He says: 'I must admit that I have taken your money.' Those were the words he used. Q. What did he say he had done with it? A. He didn't say what he had done with it. Q. What explanation did he give, if any, for not giving it to you? A. Well, I don't remember that he gave any reason for it at all. He said that he would get it and return it to me."

It appeared that Halstead remained there until the following Monday, when both defendant and Purdy were arrested, and Halstead left the place; that defendant admitted that he had taken his money and used it; that a week or two later, and while he was under arrest, defendant paid back $100 to Halstead. On cross-examination Halstead testified that after giving defendant a $20 bill the latter said he would get it changed, and left Halstead for that avowed purpose, and while defendant was away Purdy took him into a room adjoining the "bake oven" and told him to disrobe, and that while doing so, or as he was about to do so, defendant returned, and both defendant and Purdy assisted him in disrobing.

"Q. While you were disrobing you said you had valuables in your clothes? A. Either when I was disrobing or after I had disrobed, and he had taken that, I told him, and he said that would be all right; 'everything will be secure and safe.' Q. Was it not while you were taking off your clothes and handed your vest to Dr. Dye? A. I don't remember at just what time during my undressing that I said that, or if it was after I had undressed. It was before I went into the bath. * * * I was impressed that the place was reputable and genuine, and Dr. Dye impressed me very much, and I hadn't the least doubt in the world but that everything was all right and safe, and no question occurred to me at all. Q. The question of a breach of trust had never occurred to you? A. No. Q. You went there, and you might say trusted your life and what you had to Dr. Dye? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you trusted what you had to him? A. Yes. Q. You did not see him put your clothes in a locker of any kind, did you, or trunk or anything? A. No. Q. They were just hung on a nail? A. Hung on a nail or hook; yes. I think in the corner between the doors of the two rooms. Q. Your vest with the valuables was hung with the other clothes? A. I believe they were at the time all hung together."

He testified that he expected to be in the room there until the next day, and that no room was designated for him to occupy after leaving the bath.

"Q. After you had taken your bath, you did not expect to return to this room? A. Well, I hadn't thought anything about it at all where I would be placed."

He testified that defendant did not give him the change, but kept the $20 bill.

"Q. Did you not say you had trusted everything to his hands? A. I may have. I naturally would do so, because I think I remember his asking me if I had any doubts about anything being not right. I told him I had no reason for any doubt at all. Q. You trusted everything to him? A. I had confidence in the place and in him, or I would not submit to the treatment or trust him with what I had. Q. And you did trust your clothing and your money and your person to Dr. Dye? A. Yes."

He testified that, "with the exception of his pants," he did not see his clothes from Monday until Friday.

"Q. You turned your clothing and your money over to the care and custody of the defendant? A. Why, certainly. Q. And trusted implicitly in him? A. That my money would be there when I would come out, of course. Q. You gave him possession of your money and your clothing? A. I gave him possession of my clothing with money in it, and told him that my money was in my clothing, and he said it would be all right: it would be there when I came out. Q. And you expected him to look after your money and your clothing, did you not, Mr. Halstead? A. Why, certainly. Q. And keep it safely for you? A. Why, I expected just the same as any clothes. I couldn't think of anything else."

On re-examination in chief he testified:

"Q. Now, you took your vest off, and you simply handed your vest to one of these gentlemen to hang up, or hung it up yourself? A. I didn't hang it up myself. Q. You handed it to one of them? A. Yes, sir. Q. You left it there as you would if you had taken off your clothes and was going to take a bath? A. Yes, sir. Q. There was nothing said at that time about them taking care of your money as distinct from your clothes? A. No; no. Q. You simply left your clothes there as you would anywhere when you disrobed? A. Yes, sir. Q. You are sure you did not take out the money and hand it to him, and put it specially in his charge, or anything of that kind? A. No; I did not. Q. You went and took your bath? A. Yes, sir. Q. You frequently asked him for your clothes? A. Yes. Q. And he put you off? A. Yes."

The district attorney dismissed the information as to Purdy and called him as a witness. He testified that he assisted Dye in disrobing Halstead and in giving him the bath. He testified:

That he hung up part of Halstead's clothes, and Dye "hung the rest of them," and that he (Purdy) put the patient in the bake oven. "Q.

Was anything said at the time in regard to any money? A. Not to my knowledge." That the first he heard of any money was the following Friday, when he met Dye in the office. "I asked him if he had this man's money, and, if he had it, he better pay it back; that he would only get us in trouble. * * * Q. What did he say? A. He said that he had that all fixed up. He said everything was all right."

He further testified that he saw Dye have a $100 bill on Tuesday and asked him where he got it, and that Dye pointed in the direction of the treatment room.

Gertrude Walker, who kept the rooming house where defendant had his institute, testified that defendant showed her a $100 bill on Tuesday or Wednesday following the day Halstead came to the place. It is not necessary to state the evidence further as to defendant's having Halstead's money. He admitted it to Attorney Crowley, who was Halstead's attorney, but claimed that Halstead loaned it to him, which the latter testified was untrue. The question urged is that the evidence failed to establish larceny.

[1] The court correctly instructed the jury as follows:

"Embezzlement is when the possession of the property has been acquired lawfully and bona fide, and afterwards fraudulently appropriated. The gist of the offense of embezzlement is the breach of trust reposed in the agent, employé, or bailee by his principal, employer, or bailor. The crime may be in general terms defined to be the fraudulent conversion of another's personal property by one to whom it has been intrusted. When a bailee of property obtains possession of it from the owner with the intention of stealing it, and carries out that intent, he is guilty of larceny; but, where the intent to steal did not exist at the time of taking possession of the property by the bailee, but was conceived afterwards, it is embezzlement."

"In the case of grand larceny the taking must be with a felonious intent, as heretofore stated, but in embezzlement the original taking is lawful, and the crime consists in the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted."

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that at the time Halstead disrobed for his bath and his clothing was "hung up on pegs or hooks" in the dressing room adjoining the so-called bake oven the possession was not taken by defendant, nor in the sense of being intrusted to him by Halstead did he become a bailee. In fact, the clothing seems not to have been removed, except that the trousers were late in the week brought to Halstead, and he found his coat and vest where they had been placed when he entered the room to take his bath. Defendant was told at the time Halstead was undressing that his money was in his clothing, and defendant's subsequent conduct justified the jury in inferring that he formed the intent to take that money and appropriate it to his own use—in short, to steal it—when he was helping to undress Halstead. But, if this intent was formed the next day (and there was evidence that he had the money on Tuesday), the felonious taking would constitute larceny, for the reason that Halstead's property had not been placed in his custody and keeping. Halstead testified that he did not authorize Purdy or Dye to take charge of his money; that "he just took off his clothes with the money in and left it there." He was not told how long he would have to remain in the bath or when he was to be taken from there. People v. Montarial, 120 Cal. 691, 53 Pac. 355. He testified that he had no reason to distrust defendant, and that he trusted everything to him. Naturally he so felt, or, as he testified, he "would not have been there." We do not think that these expressions of confidence in defendant must necessarily be construed as having clothed defendant with the authority of a bailee in the sense that he could not be held guilty of larceny for having feloniously taken and appropriated his patient's money.

It is urged that the court erred in admitting the statement of the defendant taken in the district attorney's office by the chief deputy, Mr. Jones, and his stenographer. On January 11th, one week after Halstead went to these baths, defendant was arrested and taken first to his own office, and then to the office of the chief of police, and thence to the district attorney's office. When arrested he was told that: "It is relative to a fellow from Nevada. Probably you know about it." This occurred on the street where he was arrested. Nothing further was said until he was taken to his office.

"When he got up to the office he stated: 'I haven't any of this man's money. What are they trying to rib up on me now? Some more ribbing?' He says: 'All I had of this man's money was $20.' He says: 'I don't know anything about his money.' It was along those lines. Q. He said that voluntarily before you had said anything to him? A. Yes, sir. Q. You did not tell him before that that any statement that he made would be used against him? A. He was pacing up and down in the room, and he seemed to be excited and very nervous, and he was talking at random, there in the room before us. Q. Well, you did not tell him or you did not advise him of any rights, did you, before that—before making that statement? A. I hadn't asked him anything relative to it. Q. Just volunteered this statement? A. Yes."

Defendant moved that this testimony be stricken out because he was not advised of his rights. The motion was denied. Defendant was then taken to the district attorney's office, where he made a statement which was taken down by the court stenographer and was offered and admitted in evidence. Defendant objected that "he was not advised of his rights prior to the making of the statement," or "that it would be used against him on the trial, he was not properly informed." The preliminary questions were as follows:

"By Mr. Jones: Mr. Dye, this is the district attorney's office. A. Yes, sir. Q. This is Mr. Carragher, the deputy district attorney. A. Yes, sir. Q. And my name is Jones. I am chief deputy district attorney. A. Yes, sir. Q. This is Mr. Warren Doan, the shorthand reporter, and you know the officer. A. Yes, sir; I have had a sad experience with the officer. Q. We brought you here to have a talk with you. A. Yes, sir. Q. I do not want you to feel that you are under any restraint or that there are any threats made against you or any promises made to you. A. Yes, sir. Q. There is a serious charge made against you, and we want to hear your statement if you have any to make. A. Well, what was the charge? Q. The charge is that you took $150 or thereabouts from a man by the name of Halstead."

Then follows the statement. Defendant stated the history of Halstead's coming to his place of business, his experiences while there, and his departure from the place. It is not necessary to set out this statement. In the main it disputes Halstead's story; is a justification for what was done in treating him; denies that Halstead had the money he claims he had; and states that all the money he (defendant) got was the $20 bill and a $1 bill. The statement was in no sense a confession of guilt, but was, in fact, an assertion of innocence.

Section 1324, Penal Code, has no application. People v. Panagoit, 25 Cal. App. 158, 143 Pac. 70. So far as the record shows, defendant made no objection to giving his connection with the transaction. There was, in our opinion, no violation of his constitutional rights in reading the statement to the jury. In People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 130 Pac. 1042, relied upon by defendant, O'Bryan was arrested on suspicion, and was held in custody in the county jail. "He was taken before the grand jury which was investigating the offense, and sworn to testify. He was not informed of his constitutional right to decline to be a witness against himself, nor was he warned that his statements might be used against him." In that case the court said:

"The Constitution protects a person from being compelled to be a witness against himself. If at the time he appears no accusation, formal or informal, has been made against him, he does not, in testifying, become a witness against himself. Or if, even though charged with crime, he voluntarily gives evidence against himself, his rights are not infringed by the use of such evidence thereafter. These distinctions are well illustrated by a series of New York cases"—citing the cases.

In the case here defendant did not testify; he made certain extrajudicial statements, and, under the circumstances disclosed, we think they were voluntarily made. But, if there was error in admitting the statement, we are satisfied from an examination of the entire record that the result was just, and would have been reached if the error had not been committed. Const. art. 6, § 4½; People v. O'Bryan, supra.

Error is assigned because of alleged misconduct of the deputy district attorney. In addressing the jury he said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, let me call your attention to one thing; the punishment for embezzlement is exactly the same as the punishment for grand larceny. Mr. Smith: We object to that statement, if your honor please, and ask that the jury be instructed not to consider it. The Court: Yes; the jury cannot consider that. Gentlemen of the jury, you will not consider that statement of the district attorney."

The district attorney overstepped the boundary of his privilege in addressing the jury, for the question of punishment was of no concern to them, and, as the principal defense was that there was a fatal variance between the proofs and the charge, the statement, unchallenged, might have had some influence to defendant's prejudice. We must assume, however, that the jury obeyed the direction of the court and did not consider the statement.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HART, J. I concur in the judgment and in all that is said by the Presiding Justice concerning the effect of the evidence and the justification of the verdict of conviction under the proofs. But I do not think it is necessary to invoke article 6, § 4½, of the Constitution to uphold the court's ruling in admitting in evidence the extrajudicial statement of the defendant when in the office of the district attorney. The application of said section of the Constitution in a case presupposes either error in the ruling as to which it is invoked or a doubt in the mind of the reviewing court as to the correctness of the ruling.

[4] In the first place, the statement of the defendant in the district attorney's office is not a confession. On the contrary, it involved an explicit and direct denial of guilt of the crime charged or of any crime in connection with the defendant's transaction with the prosecuting witness. It was therefore unnecessary to show, preliminary to the admission of the statement, that it was voluntarily made or not made under the inducement of hope or fear. Greenleaf on Evidence, § 213.

[5] In the second place, I am clearly of the opinion that, had the defendant confessed that he committed the crime of larceny against the prosecuting witness under the circumstances characterizing the making of the statement which was allowed to go to the jury over his objection, we would be required to hold that it was voluntarily made. Before being questioned as to his connection with the alleged crime, the defendant was informed by the deputy district attorney that he was then in the presence of the officers of the law, including an officer who would probably have something to do with the presentation of the case against him at the trial. He was further sufficiently given to understand that he was not compelled to make a statement or "under any restraint or that there are any threats made against you or any promises made to you." This warning, I think, was sufficient to apprise the defendant of his right not to make a statement if he so elected, and that he would be shown no favor if he did make one. Of course, a confession, to be admissible as proof of guilt, must not have been "extracted by any sort of threats or violence, nor obtained by any direct or implied promises, however slight, nor by the exercise of any improper influence." 3 Russell on Crimes (6th Ed.) 478. But, as our

Supreme Court declared in the case of the People v. Siemsen, 153 Cal. 387, 394, 95 Pac. 863:

"Whether a confession is free and voluntary is a preliminary question addressed to the trial court and to be determined by it, and a considerable measure of discretion must be allowed that court in determining it."

See, also, People v. Miller, 135 Cal. 69, 67 Pac. 12; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262; People v. Fox Burns, 149 Pac. 605.

Obviously there must be some showing that the confession was freely and voluntarily made and without any previous inducement or offer of leniency in punishment or by reason of any intimidation or threat. People v. Miller, supra. And that there was such a showing in this case I am, as before suggested, thoroughly persuaded.

As I understand the object of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, it is to be applied only where manifest error has been committed and a review of the whole record, including the evidence, does not justify the conclusion that a miscarriage of justice will be the inevitable result of such error, if the judgment should be affirmed.

I concur: BURNETT, J.

(29 Cal. A. 136)

LAPIQUE v. MORRISON. (Civ. 1543.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 8, 1915.)

1. EASEMENTS ⟸18—WAY BY NECESSITY—WHEN ALLOWED.

If a landowner has access to his property over a hill route, though it be rough and difficult for transportation, but not shown incapable of development to a practical grade and width by even a considerable expenditure of money and labor, he cannot support a claim to a right of way by necessity over the lands of another on the ground that it is necessary to the reasonable use and enjoyment of his lands, for such right can only be claimed where the way furnishes the only access to the claimant's property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 50–55; Dec. Dig. ⟸18.]

2. EASEMENTS ⟸7—WAY BY PRESCRIPTION—ADVERSE USER.

If a way to which a right is claimed by prescription is plowed by the owner of the land and obstructed by him for his farm purposes during the time of prescription the claim cannot be supported.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 16–19, 27, 33; Dec. Dig. ⟸7.]

3. EASEMENTS ⟸36—WAY BY PRESCRIPTION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The claimant of a right of way by prescription must prove a five years' continuous and uninterrupted use and enjoyment of the way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 77, 78, 88–93; Dec. Dig. ⟸36.]

4. EASEMENTS ⟸2—WAY BY PRESCRIPTION—PARTIES—UNITED STATES.

If land over which a right of way by prescription is claimed is owned by the United States during part of the time of enjoyment of the way, the time of prescription to support the claim cannot commence to run until after title of the United States to the land is divested, for an adverse possession cannot operate as against the United States or the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. ⟸2.]

5. EASEMENTS ⟸8—WAY BY PRESCRIPTION—ADVERSE USER—NOTICE.

A claim to a right of way by prescription cannot be supported where claimant's use of the way has been allowed by the landowner as a matter of accommodation only on account of the nature of the country and the practices of travel therein, and the claimant's conduct in the use of the way has not been such as to put the landowner upon notice of an adverse user.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 23, 24, 27–33; Dec. Dig. ⟸8.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by Pierre Agoure against Alonzo Morrison to enjoin an interference with plaintiff's use of an alleged right of way and to quiet his interest therein. After trial and judgment in favor of plaintiff, John Lapique was substituted as plaintiff because of an assignment to him of Agoure's interest in the action. From a judgment for the plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Kendrick & Ardis, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was commenced by Pierre Agoure, who claimed the right to the use of a right of way for road purposes across the land of defendant. By the allegations of the complaint facts are alleged which support both a cause of action to assert the right in the plaintiff as of necessity to the use of the road, as well as the right by adverse user; at least, such is the general complexion of the allegations contained in the complaint. In the prayer it is demanded that defendant be enjoined from interfering with the plaintiff's use of the alleged right of way, and also that the interest of plaintiff therein be quieted as against the defendant. After trial was had and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, an order was made substituting the respondent herein as party plaintiff, the order of the court in that behalf reciting that it appeared that the estate, right, title, and interest in the action had been assigned by the plaintiff to the respondent. No point is made as to the regularity of this order. We think the assignability of the cause of action in this particular case might well be questioned, but as the point is not raised we are not called upon to determine that matter. However, we think that the judgment and order denying the defendant a new trial, both of which were appealed from, must be reversed. The evidence is not sufficient to support either.

[1] In the first place, the findings of the court are not such as to establish facts in support of the claim that the right of way existed in Agoure's favor as of necessity. The only suggestion in that direction is the statement in the findings that the roadway "is necessary to the reasonable enjoyment and use of plaintiff's said lands." It is well established that a right of way by necessity can only be claimed and held where it furnishes the only way by which access may be had to the property of the claimant.

"The right of way from necessity must be in fact what the term naturally imports, and cannot exist except in cases of strict necessity. It will not exist where a man can get to his property through his own land. That the way over his own land is too steep or too narrow, or that other and like difficulties exist, does not alter the case, and it is only where there is no way through his own land that a grantee can claim a right over that of his grantor. It must also appear that the grantee has no other way." Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 62, 11 Pac. 879.

The relation of grantor and grantee did not exist as between Agoure and this defendant, but even though such had been their relation, the facts found by the court do not establish the most material thing, to wit, that the plaintiff could not obtain access to his property except by use of the right of way claimed. Turning to the evidence, we find that the facts shown do not establish any such condition. It appears that for many years prior to the year 1903, Agoure and other persons had driven across the land now owned by the defendant in order to reach a certain tract composed of 15,000 acres held by Agoure. All of this land was in a hilly region, and it was more convenient for Agoure to cross the land of defendant and the former occupants thereof than it was to travel in a different direction. There was direct testimony of a hill route leading out from Agoure's land to the county road, which, however, it was stated was so rough as to make it difficult to transport any load thereacross. But it was nowhere shown that by the expenditure of some money and labor—perhaps a considerable amount of both—this hill route could not have been converted into a roadway of practicable grade and width. So it is very clear that no ground existed upon which Agoure or the plaintiff could assert legal necessity for the right of way as claimed.

[2,3] It appears that the plaintiff relied further, and the trial judge evidently sustained his claim in that regard, upon the fact that he had made use of the road for a long period of years. The court found that the right of way had been used for a period of more than five years prior to the commencement of the action. Easement rights may be so acquired, but where they are asserted the party claiming them must prove an uninterrupted use of the right of way.

[4] Title to the land now owned by the defendant was held by the government of the United States up to the year 1903, when a patent was issued by which such title was divested. Since the year 1903, the evidence showed that this roadway had been plowed over and grain had grown up at times in the tracks. There was testimony for the defendant, which was uncontradicted, that haystacks had been placed across the roadway subsequent to the year 1903. The period included within that which will give title by adverse possession cannot commence to run at any time as against the ownership of the United States or of the state. O'Connor v. Fogle, 63 Cal. 11. So, under the facts disclosed by the record, no claim by adverse user could have been raised prior to the year 1903, nor until five years had elapsed after issuance of patent to the defendant's land. During this latter period, we think the evidence clearly shows that the use which Agoure made of the right of way was not continuous and uninterrupted; it was more in the nature of a user by permission.

[5] The country there was largely open and uncultivated. It was hilly land, as above stated, and persons generally having occasion to travel in that region adopted whatever route might appear to be the shortest, which they were allowed to do as a matter of accommodation by the landowners. The defendant could hardly have been placed upon notice, under the circumstances, that Agoure expected, because of the permission accorded him, to base a claim to easement rights in the roadway, for his general conduct was not such as to indicate his determination so to do. If he had intended to insist upon such a claim, his acts, as they are generally described by the testimony, and considering the practice adopted by travelers in that sparsely settled country, do not sufficiently so indicate. On this point, see Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 670, 66 Pac. 10.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

(29 Cal. A. 139)

COMMINS v. GUARANTY OIL CO.

(Civ. 1762.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 8, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 5, 1916.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜123—"FINAL JUDGMENT"—ESSENTIALS.

A judgment of nonsuit for plaintiff's failure to prove a sufficient case, when entered in the court's minutes, need not be followed by a judgment of dismissal to make it a "final judgment," within Code Civ. Proc. § 939, providing for appeals, for such a judgment of nonsuit in itself constitutes a dismissal of the action, under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 5, providing for dismissal of actions or entry of nonsuits, and directing that a dismissal when entered upon the court's minutes upon plaintiff's failure to prove a sufficient case is effective for all purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 875–881; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 123.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Final Judgment.]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇐130—COVENANT OF QUIET POSSESSION—BREACH.

Where a lessee relies upon an agreement in the lease that the lessor will protect him against any claims arising as to the ownership of the premises which the lessor holds under a contract of purchase, and no misrepresentations are shown to have been made by the lessor as to the nature of his title, the commencement of a suit by the owner of the paramount title to quiet its title as against the contract of purchase because of default in payment of installments does not constitute an eviction of the lessee, that operates as a breach of the covenant of quiet possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 470–481; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 130.]

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⇐56 — LEASE — FORM—DESIGNATION BY PARTIES.

An agreement between the holder of land under a contract of purchase and a second party, providing that the second party shall take possession of the land and develop oil thereon, rendering to the other a portion of the product in payment of its use, is a lease, irrespective of its form or the designation given it by the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 166; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 56.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Thomas Commins, trustee of the Canadian Crude Oil Company, Limited, bankrupt, against the Guaranty Oil Company, for damages for breach of contract. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Collier & Clark, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Weaver, McCracken & McKee, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The plaintiff in this action, at the conclusion of the testimony introduced in support of his main case, was nonsuited. An appeal was taken from the order granting the motion of nonsuit, the record of which order or judgment appeared only in the minutes of the court.

[1] It is first claimed by the respondent that the order granting the motion for a nonsuit, not being followed by a formal judgment of dismissal, was not a final judgment in the sense that that term is used in section 939, Code of Civil Procedure, providing for appeals. Section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that:

"An action may be dismissed, or a judgment of nonsuit entered, in the following cases: * * * 5. By the court, upon motion of the defendant, when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury. * * * The dismissals mentioned in subdivisions * * * and 5 of this section must be made by orders of the court entered upon the minutes thereof, and are effective for all purposes when so entered. * * *"

In the case of Kimple v. Conway, 69 Cal. 71, 10 Pac. 189, it was held that no appeal was allowed from an order granting a motion for a nonsuit, nor from a judgment of nonsuit. In that case, however, it was not finally affirmed that a judgment of nonsuit might not, by being entered in the judgment book, become a final judgment from which an appeal might be taken. However, at the time that decision was rendered section 581 did not contain the provision which was inserted in 1897 making an entry upon the minutes of the court of the orders or judgments sufficient for all purposes. It would seem under the present state of the law that none of the orders or judgments provided to be made by section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, need be entered in the judgment book at all or appear in any record except that containing the minutes of the court. This conclusion is sustained by the decisions of Matthai v. Kennedy, 148 Cal. 699, 84 Pac. 37, and Pacific Paving Co. v. Vizelich, 141 Cal. 4, 74 Pac. 352. We do not believe that a formal judgment of dismissal must follow the order or judgment of nonsuit, for the judgment of nonsuit in itself constitutes a dismissal of the action. It seems clearly to have been so considered in defining it in section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, which refers particularly to dismissals or the discontinuing of actions.

[2] The motion for a judgment of nonsuit was properly granted, in our opinion, because the plaintiff's evidence did not establish his right to the relief sought. Thomas Commins, the plaintiff, appears as the trustee of the Canadian Crude Oil Company, a bankrupt, and hereinafter, for brevity's sake, we will refer to that corporation as the plaintiff. The evidence introduced on behalf of the plaintiff showed that the defendant, in April, 1911, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff whereby the defendant let to the plaintiff, for a period of 20 years, 20 acres of land in Kern county, Cal. Conditions of the agreement of lease provided that the plaintiff should develop oil on the land and render unto the defendant a certain proportion of the gross amount of the product in payment for such use. The plaintiff took possession of the land, proceeded with the work of developing oil thereon, and continued in that possession until November 1, 1911, when it abandoned the property. The abandonment was made because of an alleged eviction suffered at the hands of the owner of paramount title. This suit was brought to recover as damages all of the money expended upon the property (amounting to more than $35,000), together with other sums claimed to have been laid out incidental to the making of the contract engagement. The evidence showed that about the middle of the year 1910 the defendant had contracted with the Lucky Boy Oil Company to purchase a large tract of land from the latter, of which the 20 acres so leased to plaintiff were a part; that the contract of purchase provided for installment payments to be made; that, prior to the making of the lease to plaintiff, defendant was in default under its contract of purchase; and that in June following the making of the plaintiff's lease, the Lucky Boy Oil Company brought a suit to quiet its title as against the contract of purchase held by the defendant. What became of this suit to quiet title cannot be told from the record.

It is suggested in respondent's brief that it was dismissed, but the testimony of the attorney for the Lucky Boy Oil Company was to the effect that at the time of this trial the action was still pending and untried. It is the contention of the plaintiff that the evidence was sufficient to show that it entered upon the property under a covenant of quiet possession, and that when the action to quiet title was commenced, and it was made to appear that the Lucky Boy Oil Company possessed the paramount title and right to possession, an eviction was worked which entitled plaintiff to its damages. Very important to a consideration of this question is a certain term of the lease made by the defendant to the plaintiff. It was therein provided as follows:

"The first party [the defendant] agrees to protect the second party against the claims of any party or parties, should any contests ever arise as to the ownership of the same."

By this term in the agreement it may be assumed that the parties considered the matter of possible claims or contests arising to disturb the possession of the lessee. Nowhere in the complaint is it stated or intimated that any fraud was practiced upon the plaintiff by the defendant, and the evidence does not show that any false representations were made as to the quality of defendant's title to the land. The situation was, as expressed by the evidence, that the plaintiff was willing to accept the lease made to it by the defendant, resting for its security upon that term of the agreement which made the lessor bound to protect the lessee in possession against the claims of other persons. Clearly it would seem to follow by every fair inference that the plaintiff was not relying upon any implied covenants, but rather upon the specific and express terms of the agreement held by it. Under such a condition of the contract and the evidence, was the plaintiff justified in vacating the property after suit was brought to quiet title and assert the claim that it was evicted thereby? We think not. It is not shown but that the defendant at the time of this trial still possessed at least an equitable interest in the land, and it was not shown that it would not or could not in some way protect the possession of its tenant. This possession had not been the subject of direct attack or interference, for it was shown that, notwithstanding the suit to quiet title of the Lucky Boy Oil Company was brought in June, 1911, the plaintiff remained in possession and continued to operate the property until November of the same year. One of its managing officers, when asked whether it was not a fact that work was stopped because of the lack of funds, responded in the affirmative. There are authorities holding that, even conceding an eviction of the tenant might have followed the bringing of the action to quiet title by the owner of the paramount title, the right to take advantage of such eviction might be waived by the tenant remaining in possession. However, our conclusions do not involve any application of the holding made by such decisions.

[3] Respondent has all along contended that the agreement, which we have called a lease, did not amount to such; but we think that it should properly be so termed. Any matter of mere form or designation which the parties may give to a document will not change its legal effect. In order that plaintiff might make a case sufficient against a motion for judgment of nonsuit, we think that it should have shown a breach of the express term of the contract which bound the defendant to protect it in possession. It voluntarily gave up possession, abandoned the property, and did that, too, without there being any judgment declaring the rights of the Lucky Boy Oil Company or foreclosing the interest of the defendant.

The view we have taken of the main question makes it unnecessary to consider or discuss the objections urged as to the admission and rejection of testimony.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

171 Cal. 761

GUYER v. STERLING LAUNDRY CO.
(L. A. 3498.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 27, 1916. Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1916.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸155, 219—INJURIES TO SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER—WARNING OF DANGER.

A master is not liable for failure to warn the servant of an obvious danger, since the employé ordinarily assumes the known risks and dangers of his occupation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 310, 610–624; Dec. Dig. ⟸155, 219.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸101, 102—INJURIES TO SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER—DUTIES.

An employer is not bound to furnish the safest machinery or the best methods and appliances for the conduct of his business, but this rule applies only to his duty as to employés who have arrived at majority or at maturity of judgment or discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 135, 171, 174, 178–184, 192; Dec. Dig. ⟸101, 102.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸101, 102—INJURIES TO SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER—DUTIES.

The duty of an employer is only to furnish reasonably safe machinery for his employés, but what is reasonably safe depends upon the maturity and discretion of the employé.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 135, 171, 174, 178–184, 192; Dec. Dig. ⟸101, 102.]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸121—INJURIES TO SERVANT — LIABILITY OF MASTER — NEGLIGENCE.

To place an immature boy or girl at work upon a laundry mangle unprotected by a guard is negligence, and shows failure of the employer to supply the employé with a reasonably safe appliance as demanded by the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 228–231; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 121.]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸121—INJURIES TO SERVANT — LIABILITY OF MASTER — NEGLIGENCE.

Where a particular type of laundry mangle is ordinarily equipped with a guard, and the employer's attention was called to the fact that one used by his operative was not so equipped, it was negligence on his part to fail to have it so equipped, for which he was liable to the operative who was injured because of the absence of the guard.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 228–231; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 121.]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸289—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether contributory negligence was shown in a servant's action for injuries is a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1089, 1090, 1092–1132; Dec. Dig. ⟸289.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Maud Guyer against The Sterling Laundry Company, a copartnership consisting of Charles H. Clay and William V. Clay. From a judgment for plaintiff and order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Morton, Hollzer & Morton, of Los Angeles, for appellants. R. A. Dunnigan and E. B. Drake, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff, a young woman 19 years of age, sustained severe injury to her hand while in the employ of defendant. She was engaged in operating a machine known as a "baby mangle," a rapidly revolving heated cylinder about six feet long, used for the purpose of drying and pressing thin, soft fabrics such as handkerchiefs, towels, etc. Plaintiff had been operating this machine for about two months before the accident happened. The machine itself appears to have been in perfect working order. At the time of the accident, plaintiff was holding an apron in her hands and was stretching the apron to its limit to take out a crease so that it would be pressed smoothly. While thus engaged her right hand was caught, drawn under the steam-heated roller, crushed, and burned. The injury further resulted in the contraction of the tendons of the fingers so as to incapacitate her from earning her livelihood at her chosen vocation, which was that of seamstress and dressmaker. The machine at which she was employed was not provided with any guard. The guard for such a machine is a rod of brass or other metal so placed in front of the revolving cylinder as to admit the clothes sought to be pressed, but preventing the catching and drawing in of the operator's hands. The complaint charged a failure upon the part of the defendant to provide plaintiff with a machine reasonably suitable and safe for her work, and specifically in failing to see that the machine was equipped with a guard such as has been described. Trial was had before a jury, whose verdict was for the plaintiff. From the judgment which followed and from the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial, it prosecutes this appeal.

[1-3] Many propositions which appellant here advances may promptly be resolved in its favor. Thus it is true that the master is not liable for failure to warn the servant of the danger where that danger is obvious, and that the employé ordinarily assumes the known risks and dangers of his occupation. Also, the evidence shows that plaintiff was sufficiently intelligent to have and did have a realization, indeed, a full appreciation, of the fact that injury to her would certainly result if her hand were caught and drawn under this rapidly revolving steam heated roller. So also it is true, speaking now generally, that so far as concerns an employer's duty to his employé the former is not bound to furnish the safest machinery or the best methods and appliances for the conduct of the particular operation in which the employé may be engaged. Sweeney v. Berlin, etc., Co., 101 N. Y. 520, 5 N. E. 358, 54 Am. Rep. 722; Wormell v. Maine, etc., R. Co., 79 Me. 397, 10 Atl. 49, 1 Am. St. Rep. 321. But there is a limitation to this doctrine dictated by humanity, demanded by experience and declared by this court. The cases pronouncing the general doctrine have had to do largely not only with employés who have attained their legal majority, but with employés who have arrived at the maturity of judgment and discretion. In our own books will be found many such cases, as Bresette v. E. B., etc., Stone Co., 162 Cal. 74, 121 Pac. 312. The time fixed by our law for attaining full legal majority—18 years for the girl, 21 years for the boy—embodies a useful and indeed a necessary declaration of the law, since some time must be named when the individual will become entitled to the full rights of the adult and be charged with his full duties and responsibilities. But the law itself cannot change the facts of existence, and no one will argue that merely because a girl of 18 or a boy of 21 has attained legal majority they have thus and thereby been endowed with the care and discretion and judgment of full maturity. Physically they may be fully mature. Mentally a tremendous growth must take place and usually does take place before knowledge has ripened into wisdom and wisdom coupled with experience has developed a sound and sane judgment. A girl of 19 is still in her youth. Youth is ever the time of heedlessness, of impulsiveness, and of forgetfulness. Lacking power of continuous application and concentration, it will, upon the other hand, center its thought for a brief time and to its peril upon one matter to the exclusion of all else. Those who employ young girls and young women in and about machinery which may inflict injury are properly chargeable by the law with knowledge of these self-evident truths, and it becomes therefore their duty to guard youth against its own inevitable shortcomings. The employer in such a case is still charged only with the duty of furnishing reasonably safe machinery for his employés, but an appliance or machine to be reasonably safe in the case of a girl 18 or 19 years of age may properly require more safeguards than would be demanded in the exercise of reasonable care where the employé is a man of mature years and judgment, trained and skilled to his finger tips in the matter of the occupation in which he is engaged.

[4] This court has declared, in the case of another young girl of the same age and injured in like manner in the operation of an imperfectly guarded mangle, that such a machine is inherently dangerous and that it was the duty of the employer, in view of the fact that it was operated by a young girl, to see that there were safety guards and that they were in good condition. Quinn v. Electric Laundry, 155 Cal. 500, 101 Pac. 794, 17 Ann. Cas. 1100. The same declaration is made in another case where a young girl was injured by a like machine. Larsen v. Bloemer, 156 Cal. 752, 106 Pac. 62. In the latter case also it happened to the young girl that:

"While attempting to smooth the cloth on the rollers thereof, and without fault on her part, 'her fingers were caught between the rollers.'"

And it is in this case laid down as a sound proposition, quoting from Sibbert v. Scotland Cotton Mills, 145 N. C. 308, 59 S. E. 79, that:

"Recognizing the danger of such accidents, employers use such safety appliances as are in general use, either to avert the danger or to stop the machine in the event that an injury is imminent."

The too frequent recurrence of accidents such as this, in the operation of mangles, has led to the declaration of law which we repeat and approve, that to set a young girl or young boy at work at such a machine unprotected by a guard is a failure of the employer to supply his operative with the reasonably safe appliance which the law demands.

[5] But to supplement the law the evidence in this case shows, by at least one witness with knowledge of laundry machinery, and experience in various laundries, that all such mangles have guards on them, that this particular mangle was made with a guard, that he put the machine in position for work and called the attention of defendant to the fact that the guard was not on the machine where it should have been, and was told not to mind and not to put it on. We hold therefore that negligence was shown upon the part of defendant.

[6] Whether contributory negligence upon the part of plaintiff was shown, that is to say, whether, as a young girl of 19 years of age, she did not comport herself with the care and prudence due from one of her years and experience, was strictly a question for the jury, and was resolved against defendant's contention.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

171 Cal. 765

PLANT v. PLANT et al. (L. A. 3604.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1916.)

1. TRUSTS ⊂=198—SALE OF TRUST PROPERTY —PURCHASE BY TRUSTEE.

The inhibition upon a trustee from purchasing at his own sale is removed by the determination of a court of equity that he may be such purchaser, and a sale under direction of and by officers of such court is not a sale by the trustee, so that there is nothing to prevent him from becoming a purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 258–265; Dec. Dig. ⊂=198.]

2. JUDGMENT ⟸822—FOREIGN JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS—DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE.

Where the estate of one dying in California was distributed to the heirs "in trust" to use the rent during their lives or until they should mutually agree to sell the property and divide the proceeds equally among the testator's children and the heirs of deceased children, and the testator's Illinois realty was distributed to the testamentary trustees, a judgment of the circuit court of Cook county, Ill., on a bill in equity by defendants herein against the other heirs, including plaintiff, resulting in a decree adjudging that the property be sold for cash to the highest bidder, permitting any of the parties to become purchasers, and in which defendant in good faith purchased the property, and plaintiff received his share of the proceeds, was res judicata and could not be disturbed by the courts of this state upon a collateral attack merely because the decree in this state distributed the property "in trust."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1454, 1488–1490, 1496–1500; Dec. Dig. ⟸822.]

3. TENANCY IN COMMON ⟸19—PURCHASE BY COTENANT—JUDICIAL SALES.

A cotenant, who may not purchase and assert an outstanding title against his cotenants, may purchase their own titles at a judicial sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. §§ 55–59; Dec. Dig. ⟸19.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Dooling, Judge.

Suit by George W. Plant, a minor, etc., against Charles Plant and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bernard Potter, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Anderson & Anderson, and Tanner, Taft & Odell, all of Los Angeles, for respondents. D. K. Trask and Trask, Norton & Brown, all of Los Angeles, for executrix.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff appeals from an adverse judgment. The suit was brought on behalf of the minor, George Washington Plant, by his guardian, for the purpose of having the court decide and declare that the defendants were trustees of certain funds received by them from the rentals and sale of certain property which they had purchased from the estate of their deceased father (plaintiff's grandfather), Roger Plant. The court made findings to the effect that Roger Plant died testate in California on February 19, 1894; that his will was probated in the following month; that Charles Plant, one of the defendants, was duly made executor; that the estate was duly settled and the executor was discharged. Other findings were in substance as follows:

In March, 1895, the superior court made and entered its decree by which the real property of the estate was distributed to William Plant, Susan Plant Tweedy, Roger Plant, Henry Plant, Phoebe Plant, David Walter Plant, George Washington Plant, Richmond Plant, and Charles Plant, children of deceased, all over the age of 21 years. This distribution was "share and share alike," but as the decree recited "in trust nevertheless they to use the net rents and profits during their lives, or until such time after 10 years from the date of the death of said Roger Plant as that all of his said children or in case any of them shall be dead, then all said children then surviving and the heirs of the body of said deceased children, shall mutually agree in writing to sell said real property and divide the proceeds, when the same shall be sold and the proceeds divided equally among said children." The findings recite proceedings in the probate court of Cook county, Ill., where the will had also been admitted to probate and letters had been duly issued to Henry Plant in 1894. As a result of these proceedings an order was there entered declaring the estate settled and discharging the executor. At the time of his death Roger Plant was seised in fee of certain valuable real property in Cook county, Ill. By the decree of distribution this property was distributed to the trustees named in the will of Roger Plant. In September, 1905, the same persons named as defendants in this action (except the administratrix of David Walter Plant's estate, for he was then living) filed their bill in equity against the other heirs of Roger Plant, including the minor, George Washington Plant, whereby they petitioned the said court to make a decree distributing the property of the estate in Cook county, giving to each heir his or her allotted proper share in accordance with the will of their common ancestor. Two of the defendants in that action were sued as surviving trustees under the will of Roger Plant, deceased, but in the present suit the court found that they were not in fact trustees at the time of the sale of the property in Illinois. The superior court in this action also made the following finding:

"That no express or formal appearance in said partition suit was made by the plaintiff in person, and that plaintiff never directly authorized any person or persons to appear for or on behalf of plaintiff in said proceeding; but that plaintiff did duly and regularly appear in said proceeding by and through his duly appointed, qualified and acting guardian ad litem, and was represented therein and throughout said proceeding by counsel duly authorized by said guardian ad litem to appear and act for him; and that said circuit court of Cook county, Ill., acquired jurisdiction of all parties to said proceeding, including plaintiff herein."

There was never any agreement in writing among the children of Roger Plant to sell any of the property in Cook county and to divide the proceeds.

According to the findings the suit in equity resulted in 1907 in a decree that the property could not be physically divided without prejudice to the persons interested, and it was adjudged that the premises be sold for cash to the highest bidder, provided the amount offered should equal at least two-thirds of the valuation of $135,000 put upon the property by the commissioners. By said decree it was also provided that after due notice the master in chancery should sell the property, and that any of the parties to the proceeding might become purchaser or purchasers. The sale was made in conformity with the decree. There was competitive bidding, and Charles Plant acted for himself and his brothers Henry, Richmond, William, and David Walter Plant. He and they acted in good faith and for the best interest of all persons concerned. Their bid, $99,500, was the highest and best one that could have been obtained for the property at the sale, and after due confirmation of said sale by the circuit court the master in chancery made a deed of the property to Charles Plant, in accordance with the court's directions. It was further found that Charles Plant raised $50,000 by a loan secured by a trust deed to the property; that a large part of this money was divided among those entitled to share in the estate, other than purchasers at the sale, George Washington Plant (the plaintiff here) receiving approximately $12,000. The purchasers receipted for their shares of the amount bid for the property, but received no money. The property was sold in June, 1908, by the defendants in this action for $127,700 after they had received by way of rents a net sum not in excess of $10,000. There were further findings that the defendants were not at the time of the sale acting as trustees or in any fiduciary relation towards the plaintiff, and that they have not since and do not now hold the property or the proceeds in trust for the said plaintiff. There were elaborate findings negativing the allegations of the complaint whereby defendants were charged with conspiracy to conceal their joint interest in the purchase of the property, to keep down the price by deterring others from bidding at the probate sale, and to do certain alleged dishonest acts. It was also found that while plaintiff had no direct notice of the date of the sale, he was nevertheless a party thereto represented throughout the proceedings by his guardian ad litem and attorney, and although not until April, 1909, did he receive notice of the fact that Charles Plant had made such purchase that fact and the circumstance of the subsequent sale were not concealed from him by the defendants. There is another finding that:

"It is true that the plaintiff, through his guardian, Julia L. Woods, and attorney for said guardian, Bernard Potter, received notice of the fact that said sale had been made shortly after the same had been consummated, and received and accepted his pro rata share of the proceeds of said sale."

No attack is made upon the foregoing findings, except in those particulars in which they relate to the absence of trust relations between the defendants and the minor and the propriety and legality of the acts of said defendants in the premises.

[1, 2] Respondents rely upon the rule as declared in Felton v. Le Breton, 92 Cal. 466, 28 Pac. 490, where it is held that the inhibition upon a trustee from purchasing at his own sale is removed by the determination of a court of equity that he may be such purchaser. When the sale is made under the direction of a court of equity by officers appointed by the court, it is not a sale by the trustee, and there is no rule or principle preventing him from becoming a purchaser. This is the doctrine of the Le Breton Case, and appellant has not succeeded in his effort to convince us that it does not apply here. Plaintiff admits in his pleading that the circuit court of Cook county, Ill., acquired jurisdiction of all parties to the partition proceedings, and that this plaintiff was one of them. The decree of that court therefore is res judicata and absolutely binding upon plaintiff. The court determined in advance of the sale that certain of the heirs might become purchasers, and confirmed the sale to them through Charles Plant. The defendants had ceased to be trustees, and by ordering the sale to them by the master in chancery the court so found. Such finding may not be collaterally attacked in this suit. The property was in Chicago. The court had jurisdiction of the parties to that proceeding and of the subject-matter. Under such circumstances the courts of this state may not disturb the judgment upon a collateral attack merely because the decree in the estate of Roger Plant in this state distributes the property "in trust." The judgment of the court of Illinois is absolutely binding upon the plaintiff herein. 23 Cyc. 1055; Reed v. Cross, 116 Cal. 484, 48 Pac. 491; Estate of Harrington, 147 Cal. 124, 81 Pac. 546, 109 Am. St. Rep. 118.

It is argued that the case of Felton v. Le Breton, supra, is authority only where the trusteeship is coupled with a power of sale. We do not think such limitation may be placed upon it. Indeed the opinion in that case (92 Cal. at page 467, 28 Pac. 490) discusses the reason for the rule announced which is that, where a trustee is also a beneficiary, the court should consider his rights under the latter capacity as well as his duties under the former office.

[3] Even a cotenant, who may not purchase and assert an outstanding title against his cotenants, may purchase their own titles at a judicial sale. McNutt v. Nuevo Land Co., 167 Cal. 466, 140 Pac. 6, in which, by the way, Felton v. Le Breton is incorrectly cited as Felten v. Le Breton.

It follows from the foregoing discussion that the judgment must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

29 Cal. App. 166

PEOPLE v. CARIDIS. (Cr. 578.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 14, 1915.)

1. LARCENY ⇐23 — ELEMENTS — VALUE OF STOLEN ARTICLE.

It is essential to the crime of grand larceny that the thing stolen be intrinsically worth in excess of $50, unless taken from the person of another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 50–52; Dec. Dig. ⇐23.]

2. LARCENY ⇐5—INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY—VALUE.

An information under Pen. Code, § 492, fixing the value of a stolen evidence of indebtedness as the amount recoverable thereon, which charged the larceny of a lottery ticket, charged no crime, since a lottery ticket cannot evidence a valid indebtedness for it exists in violation of law and is valueless, nor did the subsequent payment of a prize for the ticket make it legally of value so as to support the information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 11–17; Dec. Dig. ⇐5.]

3. LARCENY ⇐28—INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY—TIME.

In such case, the subsequent payment, even if valid, could not affect the sufficiency of the information, which depends on facts existing at the time of the offense and not on subsequent occurrences.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 58, 59, 62, 99, 101; Dec. Dig. ⇐28.]

4. LARCENY ⇐5 — ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE — VALUE OF STOLEN ARTICLE.

While a lottery ticket is of no value as an evidence of indebtedness, its value as a paper will support an information charging petty larceny, however small its actual worth.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 11–17; Dec. Dig. ⇐5.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Antonio Caridis was charged with the crime of grand larceny, and demurred to the information. The demurrer was allowed, and the action dismissed, and the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guerena and John H. Riordan, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People. M. L. Choynski and Jos. T. O'Connor, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. The defendant in this case was, by an information filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, charged with the crime of grand larceny, alleged to have been committed as follows:

"The said Antonio Caridis on the 29th day of July, A. D. 1914, at the said city and county of San Francisco, state of California, did then and there willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously steal, take, and carry away one lottery ticket of the Original Nacional Company, No. 16235; that theretofore, and on the 27th day of July, 1914, the said ticket was, after a drawing held by said Original Nacional Company, and its officers, representatives, and agents, declared by said Original Nacional Company and its officers, representatives, and agents, to be one of the winning tickets of the said Original Nacional Company, and its officers, representatives, and agents, after said drawing aforesaid, did become liable for and did promise to pay to the holder of said ticket the sum of $1,250 in gold coin of the United States of America, and did then and there promise to pay to the holder of said ticket the sum of $1,250 in gold coin of the United States of America; that thereafter, and on the 30th day of July, 1914, the said Antonio Caridis did present said ticket to said Original Nacional Company and to its officers, representatives, and agents, and did receive from said Original Nacional Company, and its officers, representatives, and agents, the sum of $1,250 in gold coin of the United States of America therefor; that at all of said times the said lottery ticket was the personal property of Jim Papas and was of the value of $1,250 in gold coin of the United States of America."

[1] A demurrer to the information was allowed upon the ground that the facts stated did not constitute a public offense in the particular that it affirmatively appeared that the subject-matter of the alleged larceny had no legitimate value. The action was thereupon dismissed, and the people have appealed from the order allowing the demurrer.

The ruling of the court below was correct. It is essential to the commission of the crime of larceny that the property alleged to have been stolen have some value—intrinsic or relative—which, where grand larceny is charged and the property was not taken from the person of another, must exceed the sum of $50. Penal Code, § 847. Payne v. People, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 103; Culp v. State, 1 Port. (Ala.) 33, 26 Am. Dec. 357; Wharton's Criminal Law, p. 1333.

[2, 3] Evidently the information in the present case was framed to fit the requirements of section 492 of the Penal Code, which fixes the value in cases of the larceny of written instruments by providing that:

"If the thing stolen consists of any evidence of debt, or other written instrument, the amount of money due thereupon, or secured to be paid thereby, and remaining unsatisfied, or which in any contingency might be collected thereon, or the value of the property the title to which is shown thereby, or the sum which might be recovered in the absence thereof, is the value of the thing stolen."

Clearly this section contemplates and controls the value to be placed only upon written instruments which create some legal right and constitute a subsisting and an enforceable evidence of a debt. People v. Dadmun, 23 Cal. App. 293, 137 Pac. 1071; State v. Campbell, 103 N. C. 344, 9 S. E. 410; McCarty v. State, 1 Wash. 377, 25 Pac. 299, 22 Am. St. Rep. 152; Wilson v. State, 1 Port. (Ala.) 118.

The lottery ticket which was the subject-matter of the larceny charged in the present case had no relative value save, as affirmatively alleged in the information, as the evidence of a debt due from an enterprise which was denounced by law and which apparently existed and was conducted by its promoters in defiance of the law. Pen. Code, § 319 et seq. It is a well-settled principle that an obligation which exists in defiance of a law which denounces it has, in the eyes of the law, neither validity nor value. An instance of the application of this principle is to be found in the analogous case of Culp v. State, supra, where the court held that an indictment charging the larceny of several "bills of credit of the United States Bank," which were alleged to be of the aggregate value of $310, could not be sustained because each of the bills was for a sum less than the bank was authorized by its charter to issue, and consequently could not, in contemplation of law, be the subject-matter of a larceny.

The fact, as alleged in the information, that the drawing had taken place prior to the alleged larceny of the ticket, and that the defendant ultimately collected thereon the sum of $1,250 from the lottery company, added nothing to the validity or value of the ticket. Being a void and valueless obligation in the eyes of the law from its very inception, it could not be transformed into a legitimate and valuable thing by a voluntary payment, which in itself was a contravention of the law. Crutchfield v. Rambo, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 579, 86 S. W. 950. Moreover, the sufficiency of the information must be determined by the facts as they existed at the time of the alleged taking, and not by anything that may have occurred subsequently. People v. Stevens, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 62.

[4] Considered as a mere piece of paper, the lottery ticket in question possessed perhaps some slight intrinsic value, which, however small, would have sufficed to make the wrongful taking of it petit larceny, and, if that had been the charge preferred against the defendant, it doubtless would have stood the test of demurrer. 1 McClain on Criminal Law, § 543.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

29 Cal. App. 200

CONGDON v. CALIFORNIA DRUG & CHEMICAL CO. (Civ. 1419.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 18, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1916.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸278, 281—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an action by the driver of a delivery wagon for injuries sustained when the cork came out of a demijohn, and the concentrated ammonia therein flew into his face, evidence held sufficient, in connection with the allegations or admissions of the answer as to the character of such ammonia, its liability to explode, and the necessity of securing the cork, to warrant jury findings that the employer was negligent in sending out the demijohn without securely fastening the cork, and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in driving the wagon or in handling the demijohn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 954, 956–958, 960–969, 971, 972, 977, 987–996; Dec. Dig. ⟸278, 281.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1064 — HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a delivery wagon driver's action for injuries sustained when the cork came out of a demijohn and the concentrated ammonia therein flew into his face and eyes, the evidence showed that he was 20 years old, had received a grammar school education and a business course in high school, and had been driving a delivery truck or wagon for four months. Held, that while, in view of the nature of plaintiff's employment, his intelligence, and his experience in the kind of work he was doing, the fact of his minority should not have been presented to the jury as an element affecting his responsibility, the jury could not have been influenced in any material degree by being reminded in the instructions that plaintiff was a minor, where they were also told that his conduct was to be judged by his knowledge, experience, and judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4219, 4221–4224; Dec. Dig. ⟸1064.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Leland Congdon, a minor, by H. W. Congdon, his guardian, against the California Drug & Chemical Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellant. H. P. Brown, of Fresno, and Earl Rogers, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brings the action, by his guardian ad litem, to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered while in the employ of defendant. He recovered judgment, from which, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

It is alleged in the complaint that in the month of February, 1912, plaintiff, who was then of the age of 19 years, was employed by defendant in the work of driving an automobile truck and the delivery of packages from defendant's place of business to its various customers in Los Angeles county, and that, after so working for about four months, defendant shifted plaintiff's employment to driving a delivery wagon drawn by a horse; that at no time during said employment did plaintiff have any knowledge of drugs and chemicals of any kind, nor did he understand the natural dangers of said employment or dangers of handling the drugs and chemicals placed in his possession for delivery. The circumstances attending the injury are stated as follows:

"That on the 28th day of June, 1912, and while so engaged as aforesaid with the said defendant, the said defendant caused to be placed in said wagon aforesaid for delivery a gallon demijohn filled with and labeled concentrated ammonia, to be by said Leland Congdon delivered to one of its customers in said city of Los Angeles; that the said Leland Congdon thereafter started on his way with said horse and wagon and said demijohn so labeled concentrated ammonia to deliver the same as directed by said defendant; that in the course of the trip from the said place of business of the said defendant, then located at Nos. 843 and 855 Stephenson avenue, said city of Los Angeles, the jolting of said wagon in passing over the rough places in the street caused the said demijohn to be turned over on its side, and it was shifting about in the bottom of said wagon, when the said Leland Congdon halted said horse and alighted from the said wagon, and took hold of the said demijohn, and was about to place the same in a box and place some excelsior around it to prevent it from again turning over or working about in said wagon, when the cork in said demijohn, which had not been secured in any way, or tied down, popped out of the said demijohn, and the contents of said demijohn, to wit, the ammonia therein, shot out of the demijohn and into the face and eyes of the said Leland Congdon."

Then follows a detailed statement of medical treatment given in an effort to preserve Leland Congdon's eyesight, despite which he suffered the total loss of his left eye and serious injury to his right eye. It is alleged:

That "none of the agents or representatives of said defendant ever at any time or at all in any way warned or advised the said Leland Congdon of the dangers incident to the handling of ammonia put up in the way that the same was put up in said demijohn, or the dangers of being employed in or about the drugs and chemicals, which he was required to handle and deliver as aforesaid," and that by reason of his youth and inexperience and lack of knowledge "he did not know, appreciate, or understand the difficulties and dangers of his said employment;" that in preparing said ammonia for delivery by plaintiff defendant "placed in the hole in the neck of said demijohn a common cork, and did not secure said cork by seal, wire, or other means, and by reason of the action of said ammonia in said demijohn by being jolted around in said wagon, and by reason of the action of the warm weather thereon, the said ammonia did expand, and the cork in said demijohn, not being secured as aforesaid, popped out of said demijohn, and the said ammonia flew therefrom into the face and eyes of the said Leland Congdon, with the result as hereinabove alleged;" that said cork "should have been secured in said demijohn by seal, wire, or other means, so as to have prevented its being so forced out as aforesaid, and that the failure of said defendant to so secure said cork was neglect and carelessness and want of ordinary care on its part," and "said injury was wholly caused by reason of said wrongful acts, carelessness, neglect, and want of ordinary care on the part of said defendant."

The answer admits the minority of plaintiff as alleged; admits his employment as alleged, but denies the averments of plaintiff's want of knowledge of drugs and chemicals and the danger attending the handling of the same; admits that on June 28, 1912, "defendant did cause to be placed in said delivery wagon a gallon demijohn filled with and labeled concentrated ammonia, to be delivered by plaintiff to one of defendant's customers;" alleges that plaintiff "did at said time know the character of said concentrated ammonia, and did know its liability to explode, and did know that the same was dangerous;" admits the facts set out in the complaint as to the jolting about of the demijohn, and alleges that said "shifting was caused by the careless manner in which the said Leland Congdon placed the same in said wagon;" admits that plaintiff "was about to place the same in a box and was about to place some excelsior around it to prevent it from again turning over or working about in said wagon," and alleges that he should have so secured it at the time he placed it in the wagon, and that he was careless and negligent in not doing so, and that he well knew at that time that he should have so secured the demijohn; "admits that the cork in said demijohn did come out," but on information denies that the cork was not tied down or secured in any manner; denies that the ammonia struck the face and eyes of plaintiff, and denies the alleged result of the escape of ammonia; alleges that defendant "did at all times inform plaintiff of the nature and character of the work required of him to be done and of the danger by him incurred, and did in particular inform said Leland Congdon of the danger of carrying ammonia in a demijohn in a delivery wagon, and did warn and instruct said Leland Congdon at all times to see that the same was securely packed in a box with excelsior surrounding it to prevent any jarring of the same"; denies that plaintiff by reason of inexperience or want of knowledge did not appreciate the danger of his said employment. It is further alleged that:

When plaintiff "picked up said demijohn and did place the same in said delivery wagon, the cork of the same had not yet been secured, and that he did know that the same should not be placed in said delivery wagon without having said cork secured. Defendant admits that by reason of the action of said ammonia in said demijohn by being jolted around in said wagon, and by reason of the action of the warm weather thereon, the said ammonia did expand, and the cork in said demijohn not being secured, did pop out of said demijohn, and the said ammonia flew therefrom, but as to whether or not said ammonia flew into the face or into the eyes or into either eye of said Leland Congdon this defendant is not informed. This defendant admits that said cork should have been secured in said demijohn by seal, wire, or other means so as to prevent its being forced out. This defendant denies that the failure of this defendant to so secure said cork was neglect or carelessness or want of ordinary care on its part. Defendant alleges that said demijohn had not at said time been prepared for transportation in the said delivery wagon, and that said Leland Congdon did take the same and did place the same in said wagon before the same was fully prepared for transportation therein by this defendant, and that he did know the same was dangerous, and did know that the cork in the same had not been secured, and that he did place the same in said delivery wagon without instructions from this defendant or any of its officers, and purely upon his own responsibility."

Summing up the defense, it is alleged that plaintiff's injury was caused solely by his carelessness and negligent act: First, in placing the demijohn in the wagon before it was ready for transportation; second, in failing to place it in a box surrounded with excelsior; third, in driving the wagon negligently so as to cause the demijohn to be jolted and moved about in the wagon; and, fourth, in attempting to lift the demijohn in such manner that its opening where the cork was situated was directed towards plaintiff.

[1] We have given the pleadings somewhat at length; for it will thus be seen that the issues are thereby considerably narrowed.

The answer alleges that plaintiff "did know the character of said concentrated ammonia, and did know its liability to explode, and did know that the same was dangerous." If plaintiff knew these facts, it must be assumed that defendant believed them to exist.

The answer admits that plaintiff took hold of said demijohn, "and was about to place the same in a box, and was about to place some excelsior around it to prevent it from again turning over or working about in said wagon." The answer also admitted that "by being jolted around in said wagon, and by reason of the action of the warm weather thereon, the said ammonia did expand, and the cork, not being secured, did pop out of said demijohn, and the said ammonia flew therefrom." The answer admits "that said cork should have been secured in said demijohn by seal, wire, or other means so as to prevent its being forced out."

The controverted issues of fact may be reduced to the following: Was it defendant's duty to see to it that the liquid in the demijohn, or concentrated ammonia, was secured by a cork sealed, wired or otherwise fastened before being placed in the wagon? Was the failure properly to secure the cork in the demijohn the proximate cause of the injury? Was plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence either by reckless driving or careless handling of the packages he was hauling, or in handling the demijohn at the time of the accident? Was plaintiff sufficiently instructed as to the dangerous character of the concentrated ammonia, or was he of such mature age and experience as not to require any instruction in his employment? Was the defendant guilty of culpable negligence?

The uncontroverted evidence was that plaintiff was 20 years old in June, 1912; had received a grammar school education and business course in high school; "just took bookkeeping, but knew nothing of chemistry." He entered defendant's employment as driver of a gasoline delivery truck in February, 1912, and later changed to driving a horse and wagon and continued in defendant's service until June 28, 1912, the day of the accident.

Plaintiff testified that he reported to Mr. Bryant, defendant's shipping clerk, for duty, and that nothing special was said about his work:

"He give me my orders to take goods to a certain place. He just give me a bill of goods to deliver. He give me some tissue with the numbers of boxes, and I carried the boxes out and put them in the truck and delivered the goods. The goods were put up in the boxes by him and turned over to me. I took the boxes and put them in the truck and delivered them pursuant to what instructions were on the tissues. These tissues were the same as bills, tissue paper, and there was a bill for each box. The address was on it. * * * This manner of employment continued right along during the time that I was in the employ of the defendant. Each day I would receive these orders and these boxes and go out and deliver them. * * * Q. Now, in the course of your employment there did any of these gentlemen ever say anything to you about any of these packages that you were delivering? A. They did not, nor did they call my attention to any particular manner in which any of them should be packed, particularly the demijohns. We did not have anything to do with the packing at all. My duties did not involve the preparation of any of these packages for delivery. Q. And what was the general custom there in setting these packages out for delivery; were they placed in a particular place for you to receive them? A. Yes; they had a place they put all the boxes and demijohns, and we would carry them out and put them on the platform on the back of our wagon. Sometimes they would put them on the back, and we would load them up on the front end when we were starting. On the 28th day of June, 1912, when I started from defendant's shipping department, I had a load of boxes in the back and I had a demijohn of ammonia under the seat. That's the only way. I had a big load. There was a cork in the demijohn. It was just pushed in the neck of the bottle. It was not secured by anything. I think I placed the demijohn in the wagon. It was set out to be delivered, and had a tag to deliver it to a certain place. That had been the custom that prevailed there ever since I had been there. I had not seen any different custom. They never placed in my charge a demijohn containing this concentrated ammonia, that had a cork secured in it, or that was packed in excelsior."

He was asked to explain how he "came to receive this shot of ammonia in the eye or eyes."

"A. I noticed that it had shifted, and when I made my first stop I had an empty box, and I went to take hold of it. I had delivered a box of goods, and was returning with the empty box, was putting the empty box in the wagon, and I took hold of the demijohn to put the concentrate of ammonia in. Just as I got hold of it the cork flew out and went in my face. That is all I remember. I could not see after that. I crawled in the drug store there, and the druggist helped me. I could not walk hardly. I could not see anything. I got down on my hands and knees and crawled for a ways. I got up, I think, before I got to the door. He helped me to the wash basin to wash it off, and washed my face and eyes out."

He then describes the treatment given him and the effort made to preserve his eyesight. His left eye was finally removed, and a glass eye substituted.

"Q. Now, then, this glass eye you have, is this a source of annoyance and trouble to you? A. Yes; I have to take it out every night, and it hurts during the day sometimes, and, if I go out in the evening, it hurts. In riding the pressure of the wind makes it hurt. It makes a mucous, and it dries on there. It has more or less matter or accumulation there each day. I wash it two or three times a day sometimes. When I am out in the field engaged in any kind of work or riding along the road, this eye dries and causes a sticky substance and a painful feeling. In the evening it is worse, and in a cold wind. I take it out and clean it two or three times a day if I am where I can. I always do it at night. The loss of this eye interferes with the performance of my usual duties on the farm. I cannot see so good on that side naturally. In working around anybody I have to be very careful. Q. Now, Mr. Congdon, have you ever had any education or instruction of any kind in regard to drugs or chemicals? A. No, sir; I have never had any instructions in any school in relation to such matters. Q. As I understand you, the defendant in this case never told you it was a dangerous matter to be handling these demijohns full of ammonia? A. No, sir. Q. And did the defendant or any of its officers ever tell you that you should securely fasten those corks in the ammonia bottles? A. No, sir. Q. Did they ever say anything at all about it? A. No, sir. Q. And you had had no previous experience— A. No, sir. Q. In handling ammonia, had you? A. No, sir. Q. You had never seen a bottle of ammonia from which the cork was blown out on account of the accumulated gases inside? A. No, sir; never heard of it. Q. Never heard of it before? A. No, sir. Q. And did not know at the time there was any danger in handling this demijohn of ammonia? A. No, sir. * * * Q. Just state to the jury what effect, if any, the ammonia had on your face. A. Well, on my eyelids it made the skin come off, and burn my hands, and give me an awful headache. It had an effect on the right eye. I could not see out of it for a long time; not to amount to anything; not as well as I could. I could hold it open for a little while at a time. That eye bothered me for a little while after I had the left one removed—that is, for about two months. Before the accident happened I could see out of the left eye as well as I could out of the right eye. The left eye had not been previously damaged. Q. And the only affection that you have had that has caused the loss of it has been the ammonia in your eye, as far as you know? A. Yes, sir. Q. Had you any knowledge or information about this occupation you had being a dangerous one? A. No, sir."

His cross-examination developed nothing to materially affect his testimony in chief. As to the method of loading the wagon he testified:

"Sometimes Mr. Bryant put them in the back and we would load them up at the front end. We would place them in the truck in the way we wanted to carry them out. A few articles were packed in boxes with excelsior around them, glass and such things. Sometimes the bottles were in boxes, and there was not any excelsior around them. Q. You mention in your complaint when you started to take out the demijohn you started to put it in a box? A. Yes, sir. Q. What occurred for you to want to pack that in a box with excelsior in it? A. Well, I did not want it shaking around in the bottom of the wagon. I had not seen other demijohns or bottles packed in boxes with excelsior around them. I did not want it to break, so I put it in there, and there happened to be some excelsior in there. The excelsior was around some articles I had already delivered."

He testified that Mr. Bryant assisted him in loading the wagon on the day of the accident.

"Q. Now, then, you had made one delivery from the wagon on that trip? A. Yes; to this drug store where the injury occurred. Q. And then, when you came out to the wagon, was that where you first saw the demijohn lying on its side? A. No, sir; I picked it up once before, but I did not have no box to put it in. When I got there I thought I would put it in the box. Q. When you started out and put the demijohn under the seat of the wagon, did you put any box or anything against it to keep it from falling? A. No, sir; I do not know as to that. Q. What was the custom in the way of packing your articles in the wagon in that regard? A. Well, if we could fix them in that way, we did. I do not think we could do it in this case. I had such a big load that day. I do not think I could get the boxes under the seat. The load was mostly boxes with open tops and articles in them. The demijohn was about a foot tall. I could slip it under the seat. The demijohn was in the corner of the wagon when I started. I could not shove a box up against it. It was too big. I had some big boxes. I had some small boxes, but we loaded them in so they would come out in order. Q. Well, you could have, with a change in the method of putting in the boxes, have packed the boxes up against it? A. I do not think that I could or I would have. I don't think there was room in there. It was only about that wide (indicating) under the seat. Right in front where I had the demijohn the seat came over around. The seat was the full length of the wagon. I had boxes under half of the seat, and there was a vacant space left for the demijohn. I don't think I could have shoved those boxes up against the demijohn because there was not room enough."

He was asked further to explain what occurred when the cork blew out of the demijohn, and he answered:

"I just picked the demijohn up, and I had not got it anywhere nears out when the cork blew out. I had the box on the ground with excelsior in it. I was intending to put the demijohn in the box. I reached over into the wagon and took the demijohn and started to pull it towards me. As I started to pull it towards me the cork came out. * * * Q. Now, you are absolutely positive that nobody told you to be careful of these articles as they were taken out? A. Yes, sir; I never had any bottle or box break while I was delivering. I dropped a bottle in the store itself. I was not cautioned at that time by anybody. I do not know anything of other drivers having bottles blow out on them or spilled in any way. I never heard Mr. Bryant mention to the drivers to be careful with these articles. I never heard Mr. Clendenen tell them or Mr. Blumenberg or anybody during the entire four months say anything about any danger."

He testified that it was a very hot day, but did not think the sun shone on the demijohn.

"Q. Now, just before your eye was taken out had there been any change in the situation? Was it aggravating or hurting you more? A. Well, they thought it was getting better. Then the day before or two or three days before they took the eye out my eye began to get weak again. That is the right eye. They said they would have to remove the left eye to save the right eye. Then I was put under ether or something, and the eye was removed, and I remained there another week for treatment."

We do not deem it necessary to give the testimony of the different physicians who treated plaintiff. There was abundant evidence to show that he was given proper medical attention, and that the injury complained of was the direct result of the accident, and in no wise was attributable to improper treatment.

Some testimony was submitted by defendant tending to show that concentrated ammonia is not explosive; that, when the cork is removed from the container, fumes pass out, but no liquid; that it is not caustic, and will not burn the cuticle when in contract with it; that general instructions were given to drivers of delivery wagons to use care in handling chemicals, but no witness was able to say that plaintiff had been personally instructed. Whatever the character of ammonia may be as to explosiveness or as to whether it burns the skin when in contact with it, the undisputed fact is that in the present instance it burned the skin around plaintiff's eyes, and so burned his left eye that he lost the use of it, and that he was at the trial still suffering from the necessity of using a glass eye. We think, in view of the admissions of the answer and the testimony of plaintiff—and he alone was able to describe the accident and the circumstances surrounding it—the jury were warranted in the implied findings; that defendant was guilty of negligence in sending out the demijohn of concentrated ammonia without securely fastening the cork; that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in the way he loaded his wagon or in driving it or in handling the demijohn when he took hold of it to place it in a box.

It is urged that the law would impute to plaintiff the knowledge that "almost any drug or chemical is injurious when brought in direct contact with the eyeball" and that, "as matter of law, the defendant had a right to assume that plaintiff was possessed of common knowledge, and, as a matter of law, the defendant was not obliged to instruct the plaintiff as to any matter of which he had knowledge or presumed knowledge." It may be that plaintiff knew ammonia brought in contact with the eyeball would injure it, and that he needed no instruction on that fact; still there remained to be considered by the jury the question whether in sending out the demijohn of ammonia without properly securing the cork defendant was not negligent, and whether or not such negligence contributed to the injury.

[2] In this connection it is claimed that the court erred in giving instructions to the jury which held the plaintiff—

"to a different degree of care for his own preservation than he would have been if he were a year older, whereas there is nothing in the proof or the circumstances which would justify the inference that the plaintiff was under any disability by reason of his age."

One of the instructions was as follows:

"You are further instructed that the conduct of a minor and the question as to whether he acted negligently or not must in the nature of the case be a question of fact for the jury, rather than of law, as it is the province of the jury to determine whether or not the minor duly exercised such judgment as he possessed, taking into consideration his years, experience, and ability. The ordinary care which a minor of limited judgment and experience is called upon to exercise in a given act is not the same quantum of care which an adult would be called upon to use under the same circumstances."

Other instructions followed in which this difference of responsibility is pointed out, the court saying:

"His [plaintiff's] conduct is to be judged in accordance with the knowledge, experience, and judgment he may possess when called upon to act. And it is a question for you, gentlemen of the jury, to say whether in the performance of his task Leland Congdon duly exercised such judgment as he should possess, taking into consideration his years, his experience, and his ability in connection with his employment, and the risks and dangers thereof."

Defendant cites Lemasters v. Southern Pacific Co., 131 Cal. 105, 63 Pac. 128.

When we consider the nature of plaintiff's employment, his intelligence, and his experience in the kind of work he was doing, we do not think the fact of his minority (he was 20 years old) should have been presented to the jury as an element affecting his responsibility. Coupled, however, with the qualification that he "exercised such judgment as he possessed, taking into consideration his years, experience, and ability," and further stating that "his conduct is to be judged in accordance with the knowledge, experience, and judgment he may possess when called upon to act, * * * taking into consideration his years, his experience, and his ability in connection with his employment, and the risks and dangers thereof," we feel assured that the jury were not influenced in any material degree by being reminded by the court of the fact that plaintiff was a minor; for, notwithstanding that fact, the jury were told that his conduct was to be judged by "the knowledge, experience, and judgment he possessed."

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 184

WILEY B. ALLEN CO. v. EDWARDS.

(Civ. 1584.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 15, 1915.)

1. GIFTS ⟸49—INTENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action of claim and delivery for the possession of a piano, evidence held to show defendant's intent to make a gift of it to his stepdaughter, plaintiff's assignor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 95–100; Dec. Dig. ⟸49.]

2. GIFTS ⟸19—"DELIVERY"—SUFFICIENCY.

In such case, where there was never any formal delivery of the piano to defendant's stepdaughter, but it was in exclusive use in their home under a claim of ownership by her, there was a sufficient actual "delivery" to constitute a valid gift.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 34, 38; Dec. Dig. ⟸19.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Delivery.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Marcel E. Cerf, Judge.

Action of claim and delivery by the Wiley B. Allen Company against R. L. Edwards. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals upon a statement of the case. Affirmed.

John Ralph Wilson, of San Francisco, for appellant. Fred J. Goble, of Oakland, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action in claim and delivery for the possession of a Mason

& Hamlin piano, or its value, conceded to be $1,200. The appeal is taken by the defendant from the judgment, and is before this court upon a statement of the case.

[1, 2] From the evidence it appears that at a time perhaps as far back as 20 years ago the defendant married the mother of Eloise Edwards, a widow, and in the year 1894, when Eloise was about 5 years old, Mrs. Edwards bought in her name a Knabe piano, which was paid for by the defendant. The piano was purchased to be used by Eloise, who, even at that early age, had shown considerable musical talent, and who later, and at the time this case was tried, was generally recognized as a talented musician. In the year 1911 Eloise and her mother entered into negotiations with the plaintiff for the purchase of a new piano, which negotiations culminated in a written contract between Eloise and the plaintiff, whereby the former agreed to purchase the piano in dispute in this action. The old piano was to be taken in part payment of the new one, the sum of $450 being credited therefor upon the price of the latter, and the balance of the purchase price was to be paid in monthly installments. In January, 1912, Mrs. Edwards died, and the following year defendant and Eloise quarreled and became estranged. Prior to that time and since she was a little child Miss Edwards had lived with the defendant as his own daughter, being entirely dependent upon him for her support, and occupying as to him in every respect the position of daughter. All the monthly payments on account of the new piano were made either by Eloise or her mother or by the defendant, but in every instance with money earned by the defendant. There is still due on account of the purchase price thereof a small amount. No default in payment, however, has been made and none is claimed. Prior to the commencement of the action Eloise assigned her interest in the piano to the plaintiff, and plaintiff's right to recover herein is based entirely upon Miss Edwards' right to the possession of the instrument as its owner. While too much stress must not be attached to the fact that this piano was purchased for the exclusive use of Miss Edwards, and was constantly referred to by the members of the family as her piano, it is of considerable significance when correlated with the other facts in the case that the contract for the purchase of the instrument was made in her name, and that it was delivered to her personally at the residence of her mother and stepfather. All that was done with reference to the purchase of the first piano and with reference to its exchange and the purchase of the second one was with the knowledge and acquiescence of the defendant.

We think from the evidence in the case that it is clear that the defendant intended to make a gift of the new piano to his stepdaughter; and we think, too, that, while there was never any formal delivery to her of the piano, there was nevertheless under the circumstances of the case a sufficient actual delivery thereof to constitute a valid and subsisting gift. 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 1020, 1033. The piano being bulky forbade manual delivery; and the only possession its nature admitted of, so far as defendant's stepdaughter was concerned, consisted in its exclusive use in her home under a claim of ownership. Ross v. Draper, 55 Vt. 404, 45 Am. Rep. 624. Miss Edwards was regarded in every respect by the defendant as his child; and, while in the case of one's child the necessity of a delivery is not dispensed with in order to constitute a gift, the formal ceremony of a delivery is not absolutely necessary, but it is sufficient if it appears that the donor intended an actual gift at the time, and evidenced his intention by some act which may be fairly construed into a delivery. 29 Cyc. 1659; Colby v. Portman, 115 Mich. 95, 72 N. W. 1098; Bennett v. Cook, 28 S. C. 353, 6 S. E. 28.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

(29 Cal. A. 187)

ELSEA v. FASSLER. (Civ. 1433.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 16, 1915.)

1. BROKERS ⇐50—REAL ESTATE BROKERS—OPTION TO SELL—CONSTRUCTION.

An option on lands to real estate brokers, providing that it should remain in full force for 90 days from date, and that, if the owner sold to any one, within 90 days after the expiration of the option, to whom the property had been recommended by the agents or their assigns, the owner would pay a commission of 5 per cent., limited to 90 days the time during which the agents' authority to sell or negotiate a sale should exist.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 68; Dec. Dig. ⇐50.]

2. BROKERS ⇐50—REAL ESTATE BROKERS—OPTION TO SELL—CONSTRUCTION.

An option given by the owner of lands to real estate brokers, providing that it should remain in force for 90 days from date, and that, if the owner sold within 90 days from expiration of the option to one to whom the property was recommended by the agents, he would pay a commission of 5 per cent., was an agreement to pay the brokers a commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount for which the owner, within 90 days from expiration of the option, might sell the property to one to whom the brokers had recommended it during the 90-day life of the option.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 68; Dec. Dig. ⇐50.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by J. B. Elsea against Joseph Fassler. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying his motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Albert H. Elliott, Guy C. Calden, and Clarence E. Todd, all of San Francisco, for appellant. John T. Carey, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action to recover the sum of $3,100 alleged to be due the plaintiff as for a broker's commission on the exchange of real estate. Judgment passed in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal therefrom and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The basis of this action is the following "option to sell" the property therein described:

"Option to Sell.

"San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 5th, 1910.

"For and in consideration of the sum of one dollar, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I hereby give to Chandler & Bourn, of this city, the exclusive right to sell for me at the net price of one hundred and eighteen and $^{75}/_{100}$ dollars ($118.75) the following described property, to wit: [Describing it.]

"This option to remain in full force for a period of ninety (90) days from date hereof. I agree to grant all necessary time in which to examine the title to said property, and to give a good and sufficient deed free and clear of all incumbrance. I authorize said agents, or their assigns, to accept for me and in my name, a deposit on account of the sale of said property, and in the event of the title proving defective I agree that they are to return the said deposit, providing that the said defects cannot be cleared within sixty days after notice thereof to me in writing. If I sell to any one within ninety days after the expiration of this option to whom said property has been recommended by said agents or their assigns, I agree to pay them a commission of five (5) per cent. of the amount of said sale.

"Said agents are hereby authorized to contract for me and in my name accordingly.

"Witness my hand this 5th day of January, 1910. Jos. Fassler.

"Witness: F. E. Ware."

On the day upon which the foregoing instrument was executed Chandler & Bourn, to whom said option was given by the defendant, assigned a two-thirds interest in the said agreement to J. B. Elsea and F. E. Ware, who were copartners doing business under the firm name of the "Golden Gate Land Company." Neither Chandler & Bourn nor Elsea and Ware succeeded in selling or procuring a purchaser of the land described in said agreement during the life thereof. It appears, however, that after the expiration of the 90 days during which the option was to retain vitality and force Ware succeeded in interesting one Dr. Maxson in the property to which the said agreement related, with the final result that Fassler exchanged said property with said Maxson for an apartment house in the city of San Francisco.

It is not claimed that the evidence does not support the findings, but the contention of the plaintiff is that he is entitled to judgment upon the findings as made by the court. This contention is founded upon the theory that the trial court's conception of the meaning and scope of the option agreement, as indicated by its findings and the conclusion of law therefrom, is erroneous.

The court found that the agreement as pleaded was made and entered into between Fassler, owner of the property, and Chandler & Bourn; that the latter assigned the same or an interest therein to Elsea and Ware, and that finally the entire interest in the agreement was assigned to Ware; that on the 29th day of May, 1910, a contract was entered into between Fassler and Maxson whereby they agreed to exchange the properties above mentioned, and that they did subsequently make said exchange; that the said Chandler, Bourn, Elsea, and Ware "did not recommend the property of the defendant described in said contract to the said W. H. Maxson prior to the expiration of 90 days from and after the 5th day of January, 1910, but did recommend said property to said W. H. Maxson prior to May 27, 1910, and urged said property upon said W. H. Maxson, and procured the said W. H. Maxson to enter into the said contract or agreement of exchange between said W. H. Maxson and said defendant, and recommended the property of said defendant to said W. H. Maxson, and urged said property of defendant upon said W. H. Maxson, and rendered services to said defendant in and about the procuring of the exchange of said properties."

The court further found that the value of the apartment house for which Fassler exchanged the land described in the option agreement was at the time of said exchange the sum of $62,000 over and above a certain mortgage existing on said property in the sum of $45,000.

As suggested, the controversy between the plaintiff and the defendant arises out of a difference of opinion as to the true meaning and scope of the option agreement.

It is the position of the plaintiff that he is entitled, under the terms of the concluding covenant of said agreement, to a commission of 5 per cent. on the value, as found by the court, of the property for which Fassler exchanged the land referred to and described in said agreement.

On the other hand, the defendant contends: (1) That the exchange of the properties did not constitute a sale within the meaning of the concluding covenant of the agreement; (2) that said part of the agreement contemplated and meant that the property should have been sold by Fassler to a party recommended by the plaintiff and his associates or some of them during the life of the option agreement.

The court made no special finding upon the question whether the transaction involved a sale of the property, but adopted the construction put upon the contract by the defendant as to the time within which the plaintiff and copartners in the agreement should have negotiated the transfer of the property to have justified them in claiming compensation for such service.

[1] The plaintiff construes the instrument as one involving two separate and distinct contracts or agreements, viz.: The one giving to the plaintiff and his assignors the exclusive right or option to sell, within 90 days from the date of the agreement the 465 acres of land described in the instrument for the net sum of approximately $55,000, they to receive as their compensation therefor all money obtained for the land in excess of that amount; (2) the other, by the terms of which the plaintiff and those interested with him in the agreement were to receive a broker's commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount for which the land might be sold by them or through their negotiations within 90 days from and after the time of the expiration of the so-called option agreement. This construction is predicated mainly upon the consideration that the agreement provides for two different bases of compensation to the plaintiff and his co-obligees for effectuating a sale, and particularly upon this language of the contract:

"If I sell to any one within ninety days after the expiration of this option to whom said property has been recommended by said agents or their assigns, I agree to pay them a commission of 5 per cent. of the amount of said sale."

But the construction so given the agreement is, in our opinion, contrary to its general tenor. It will be noted that the right conferred upon the plaintiff and his associates by the agreement to sell the property is expressly limited by the instrument to exist for the period of 90 days from the date thereof, while the construction to which the plaintiff subjects the writing would obviously have the effect of extending or prolonging its life 90 days beyond the period of time to which it was so limited. In other words, if the plaintiff's construction be correct, then certainly it was intended by the parties that the agreement should possess vitality and force for the term of 180 days in the place of the period of time specifically fixed therein as the term during which it should exist. Indeed, if the plaintiff's notion of the meaning of the language of the writing be well conceived and sound, the provision expressly designating the period of time during which the agreement should remain in force would be wholly meaningless and entirely supererogatory. But no such meaning can reasonably be extracted from the language of the agreement. It must be assumed that the provision expressly fixing a time to which the existence of the right under the option is restricted was intended to express the idea which its language naturally implies, and the only reasonably permissible construction of that language is that thus the parties intended to limit the time during which the authority of the plaintiff and his associates to sell or negotiate the sale of the land should exist. This construction is only in consonance with the prudent methods which ordinarily characterize business transactions of importance to all the parties connected therewith.

It results from the views thus ventured as to the meaning and scope of the agreement that upon the expiration of the 90 days during which the option was to exist the said agreement became functus officio, so to speak, and by necessary consequence all authority of the plaintiff and his associates in the agreement to sell or negotiate the sale of the property of Fassler under the terms of the said instrument ceased to exist or was terminated. It follows, therefore, that any act or step done or taken by the plaintiff and his partner and assignors or by any one of them looking to a sale or transfer of said property was wholly without authority from Fassler, so far as the agreement involved here is concerned.

[2] What, then, was evidently intended by the language of the agreement, "If I sell to any one within ninety days after the expiration of this option to whom said property has been recommended by said agents," etc., was that, if Fassler himself sold the property within the time so specified to any party to whom it had been recommended by the plaintiff and his associates during the life of the option agreement—that is, if the property had been so recommended while the plaintiff and his associates still had the authority to sell or negotiate the sale of the property under the provision expressly limiting their right so to do to the term of 90 days—then, in that case only, he would pay the brokers a commission of 5 per cent. on the gross amount for which he might so sell the property.

Upon undisputed evidence the court found, as seen, that the negotiations for the exchange of Fassler's property for that of Maxson was initiated by the plaintiff within 90 days after the expiration of the 90 days within which the plaintiff and his associates in the agreement were authorized to sell the property, and thus it is to be observed that the plaintiff performed no service in the transaction eventuating in the exchange of the properties for which the plaintiff would be entitled to be compensated by the defendant under the terms of the written agreement involved here, even if it be conceded that the transaction amounted to a sale of the property or to be of a character which, had it taken place within the 90 days within which the authority of the plaintiff and associates to sell was expressly circumscribed, would entitle them to compensation on the basis of 5 per cent. on the ascertained value of the property received by Fassler in the exchange.

Upon the foregoing considerations, an affirmance of the judgment and the order may rest, and therefore, and in further consideration of the fact that the court made no specific finding upon that issue, it is not necessary to consider the point urged here by the defendant that the terms of the agreement were in no event performed by the plaintiff and his associates, for the reason that they did not sell the property or procure a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the same.

No other points are raised on this appeal. The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

STATE v. SECURITY SAV. BANK.

(Civ. 1518.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 26, 1915. Petition for Rehearing Dismissed by Stipulation Sept. 13, 1915.)

1. ESCHEAT ⟸3—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ESCHEAT—"UNCLAIMED PROPERTY."

The state possesses the right and power to assume control of such property as shall have lain unclaimed for such a period of time as to raise the reasonable inference that it has been abandoned by its owner, and is either in danger of being lost to such owner, or is the proper subject of escheat, and such "unclaimed property" includes savings bank deposits for which no claimant is known, or the depositor cannot be found, where no withdrawals or deposits have been made for 20 years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Escheat, Cent. Dig. §§ 3–5; Dec. Dig. ⟸3.]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸296 — ESCHEAT ⟸2—UNCLAIMED DEPOSITS — REQUIRING PAYMENT INTO STATE TREASURY.

Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87) § 15, as amended in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 145, § 16), requiring the president or managing officer of every bank to make and return to the superintendent of banks annually a sworn statement showing the names of depositors known to be dead or who have not made any further deposits or withdrawn any moneys for over 20 years, and providing that such deposits for which no claimant is known or the depositor cannot be found shall be deposited with the state treasurer, does not deny due process of law, so far as the bank's rights as a depositary are concerned, because of the lack of any provision for notice by the state prior to the exercise of its right to the delivery of the unclaimed deposits, as a bank is not entitled to any previous notice of the exercise by the state of its right to lay hold of the funds of depositors whenever in the interests of public policy the state assumes to exercise control over such funds, and moreover as the state's right to enforce payment into its treasury is predicated upon the bank's report, it is difficult to see what useful purpose would be served by any further notification to the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 825–838, 840–846; Dec. Dig. ⟸296; Escheat, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. ⟸2.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸296 — ESCHEAT ⟸2—UNCLAIMED DEPOSITS — REQUIRING PAYMENT INTO STATE TREASURY.

Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87) § 15, as amended in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 145, § 16), provides for the payment into the state treasury of bank deposits where no claimant is known or the depositor cannot be found and no deposits or withdrawals have been made for 20 years, and provides that such deposit shall be subject to the same distribution as is provided for in section 1234 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the bank shall not be liable to any person for such deposits, and that any action brought by any person against the bank shall be defended by the Attorney General without cost to the bank. Code Civ. Proc. § 1234, provides, relative to the voluntary dissolution of corporations, that if the applicant is a savings and loan association and there is any unclaimed deposit or dividend in its hands belonging to unknown persons, the application must state the facts, and such facts must be stated in the notice of the application to be published by the clerk, and that if before the expiration of the time of publication any person files a claim to such deposit or dividend, the court must determine the claim, and, if it is established, order such money to be paid to him, and that deposits or dividends not so claimed, or as to which no claim shall be established, must be paid into the state treasury and be received, invested, accounted for, and paid out as is provided by law in the case of escheat estates. Held, that the lack of any provision in the Bank Act for notice to the depositors before requiring payment of unclaimed deposits to the state treasurer, does not result in a denial of due process of law to the depositor and leave the bank liable to the depositor and entitled to retain the deposit, as the Bank Act contemplates no change of ownership of the deposits, but deals with possession only, and leaves the matter of ownership to be determined by proceedings embracing such notice to depositors as satisfies the constitutional requirements as to due process of law, and when the state, from motives of public policy, seizes and temporarily sequestrates private property to await the inception or determination of a more formal proceeding affecting its title and ownership, neither the actual owner nor the immediate possessor can object that such seizure is acomplished without such notice as would constitute due process of law, and hence the fact that the property is in the custody of the law would be a perfect defense to the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 825–838, 840–846; Dec. Dig. ⟸296; Escheat, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. ⟸2.]

4. ESCHEAT ⟸8—UNCLAIMED DEPOSITS—REQUIRING PAYMENT INTO STATE TREASURY.

The bank cannot rely upon the possible detriment to the depositor resulting from any loss of interest as a defense to a proceeding to compel it to pay the deposit into the state treasury, as it is relieved from liability and placed in a position to defend against any suit by the depositor for the interest as well as the amount of the deposit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Escheat, Cent. Dig. §§ 20–22; Dec. Dig. ⟸8.]

Original application by the State for a writ of mandate against the Security Savings Bank. Peremptory writ issued.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John T. Nourse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State. McCutchen, Olney & Willard, of San Francisco, for respondent. Francis J. Sullivan, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate, requiring the respondent, a savings bank corporation organized and doing business as such under the Constitution and laws of the state of California, and having its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, to deposit with the state treasurer the sum of $7,425.16, the same being the aggregate of a number of deposits in various sums which have remained unclaimed in said bank for more than 20 years, according to the verified statement of its officials made to the superintendent of banks during the month of January, 1914, in accordance with section 15 of the Bank Act of the state of California, as amended in 1913. The respondent opposes the issuance of the writ upon the ground of the asserted unconstitutionality of this section of the Bank Act.

Section 15 of the act as amended in 1913 in substance provides that, within 15 days after the 1st of January of each year, the president or managing officer of every bank must make and return to the superintendent of banks a sworn statement, showing the names of depositors known to be dead, or who have not made any further deposits or withdrawn any moneys during the preceding 20 years, together with the last-known place of residence of such depositors, and the amount of their deposits with the accrued interest, if any, thereon; and further provides that such deposits for which no claimant is known, or the depositor cannot be found, shall, together with the increment thereof, be deposited with the state treasurer in the same manner and subject to the same distribution as is provided for in section 1234 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The section also provides for the release from further liability to such depositors of all such banks as shall have paid the said deposits into the state treasury pursuant to the requirements of the section.

The chief contention of the respondent is that, since by the provisions of said section of the Bank Act the state may require banking institutions of the quality of respondent to pay into the state treasury the money of depositors which has been unclaimed by them for more than 20 years, without notice of any kind having been first given to the bank or to such depositors, it by so doing deprives such banks of a property right which they have in such deposits, by divesting them of the opportunity to earn such profits from such deposits as their possession would imply, and also by taking from them that which the depositor might demand of them at any time, and to which demand they could interpose no defense for the reason that the deposit had been removed from their custody without any such notice to the depositor as would constitute due process of law; and in this regard the respondent contends that the provision of the section which assumes to declare that the bank shall be no longer liable to its depositors for such deposits after their transfer to the state treasury, does not accomplish its avowed object, because the depositor, not having been given any such notice of the change of possession of such funds as would amount to due process of law, cannot be bound by this provision of the act.

[1] It may not be seriously disputed that the deposits which are the subjects of this proceeding, and to which the section of the act in question is intended to apply, are such as come within the designation of "unclaimed property," as that term is generally understood in law; neither can it be seriously contended, but on the contrary in this case it is freely conceded, that the state possesses the right and power to assume control of such property as shall have lain unclaimed for such a period of time as to raise the reasonable inference that it has been abandoned by its owner, and is either in danger of being entirely lost to such owner, or is the proper subject of escheat. In the exercise of this admitted and long-established right the Legislatures of most of our states have enacted laws embracing the procedure by which the state may assert its right of control over such property, and in so doing may not only terminate the right of its immediate possessor to the continued custody of such property, but may also put an end to its former ownership, and may even terminate the right of such absentee owner if perchance he should appear, before an escheat had been accomplished, to demand his property from the depositary to whom he had intrusted its possession. In construing and upholding enactments of this character courts have held with much uniformity that the depositary of such unclaimed property as is in question here is only entitled to insist that in the course of the procedure on the part of the estate for the escheat or other transfer of the ownership of unclaimed property, such notice shall be given to the depositary and the absentee or unknown owner as shall constitute due process of law. A fair example of such legislation and judicial construction will be found in the cases of Nelson v. Blinn, 197 Mass. 279, 83 N. E. 889, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 651, 125 Am. St. Rep. 364, 14 Ann. Cas. 147; Cunnius v. Reading School Dist., 198 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 721, 49 L. Ed. 1125, 3 Ann. Cas. 1121; Malone v. Provident, etc., 201 Mass. 23, 86 N. E. 912; Provident, etc., v. Malone, 221 U. S. 660, 31 Sup. Ct. 661, 55 L. Ed. 899, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1129.

[2] It is the contention of the respondent in the light of the foregoing course of legislation and of judicial construction in other states, that in each instance where the state has undertaken to lay hold upon the unclaimed property of absentees, and either administer upon it or work an escheat, the law has provided and the courts have required some sufficient form of notice to the depositary and the absentee owner as shall satisfy the constitutional requirement as to due process of law; and the respondent insists that in the section of the Bank Act under review in this proceeding no such notice, and in fact no notice whatever, is required to be given by the state prior to the exercise of its asserted right to the delivery of these unclaimed deposits into the possession of the state treasury, and hence that the section of the Bank Act is obnoxious to the constitutional requirement as to due process of law.

With respect to the rights of the respondent arising solely out of its interest as a depositary of these unclaimed deposits, we do not think that this contention can be sustained. By the terms of the section under review the right of the state to enforce payment into its treasury of the moneys which make up the sum of the present demand is predicated upon the verified statement and report of the respondent already made to the proper state official, that it is possessed of these several sums of money, and that they have taken on the quality of unclaimed deposits defined in the act. This being so, it is difficult to see what useful purpose any further notification on the part of the state to turn over these deposits to its treasurer would subserve than that which has already been given by the terms of the statute, and acted upon by the respondent in making its verified statement in accordance therewith. But in addition to this, it has been definitely determined that a bank as a mere depositary is not entitled to previous notice of the exercise on the part of the state of its right to lay hold of the funds of depositors in its hands whenever, in the interests of public policy, the state assumes to exercise control over such funds. The state of California has for years exercised that right; and in the recently decided case of State Savings & Commercial Bank v. Anderson, 165 Cal. 437, 132 Pac. 755, L. R. A. 1915E, 675, the right and power of the state so to do in proper cases has been fully vindicated. In that case, involving the summary seizure by the superintendent of banks of the property and funds of a bank which had been found by such official to be in an unsafe or unsound condition, the same objection to the constitutionality of the section of the Bank Act in question there was presented as is now urged against the section of the same act in question here. In deciding that question Mr. Justice Lorrigan very clearly and convincingly showed that under our modern methods of business banks have ceased to be merely private agencies for the accommodation of their customers, but that by virtue of their charters as well as of the public nature of the patronage which they invite and receive, the banks of the present have become in a just sense trustees of the fiscal affairs of the people and of the state; and this being so, the business and property of such banks may be subjected to such reasonable regulation and control as the state, in the exercise of its police power, may see fit to impose; and that in the course of such control the state may, without any such notice as might under other circumstances be held to constitute due process of law, lay hold of the funds of depositors in the possession of banking institutions, and take the same into its own possession whenever a reasonable consideration of the public interest requires such action. In the foregoing case the superintendent of banks had taken possession of the funds of a bank in failing circumstances under the express terms of section 136 of the Bank Act; in so doing he was assuming to act in the interest of the depositors of such bank who might be unable adequately to protect themselves in private actions against losses which might follow upon the failure of the bank. In the case at bar the state is essaying to exercise the same right in relation to the unclaimed deposits of those who, through misfortune or unexplained absence extending over a long period of years, or who, by reason of death, have been rendered unable to exert a personal control over their deposits. We can perceive no difference as to the rights of the state in either case where the right of ownership of the deposit is in any likelihood of being lost either through the threatened failure of the bank on the one hand, or through the prolonged absence or possible death of the depositor upon the other. We think, therefore, that the contention of the respondent, in so far as the same is predicated solely upon its property right as a depositary, cannot be sustained.

[3] It is, however, further and more seriously contended on behalf of the respondent that the chief defect in this section of the Bank Act lies in the fact that it does not require such notice to be given to the depositors of the fund in question as would constitute as to each of them due process of law. The respondent does not go to the extent of seriously insisting that it is entitled to raise this objection on behalf of its absentee depositors; but its contention is that, since the depositors are, under this section of the act, required to be given no sort of notice prior to the change in the custodian of their deposit, they cannot be bound by the action of the state in that regard, and hence may at any time appear and demand their deposit from the bank and may sue it to recover the same; and that against such demands and suit the bank would have no defense, and might therefore be required to pay to the depositor the amount of his deposit which it had already been compelled to turn over to the state; and that in order to be placed in a position to defend against such demand or suit the respondent has a right to insist that the depositor shall have been given such notice of the contemplated transfer of his property as would constitute due process of law before the bank can be required to pay over the amount of such deposit to the state.

In the consideration of this question it is to be noted at the outset that the section of the Bank Act under review does not contemplate any change in the ownership of the funds in question. It purports to deal with possession only, and to leave the matter of their ultimate ownership to be determined by such subsequent proceedings as are provided through the reference in the section to the provisions of section 1234 of the Code of Civil Procedure. When that section of the Code is examined it will be found to provide a procedure for the disposition of deposits in savings banks in process of liquidation, which embraces such notice to the owners of such deposits as would clearly satisfy the constitutional requirements as to due process of law, and that the procedure therein provided is adjustable to the conditions created by section 15 of the Bank Act. Reading section 15 of the Bank Act as a whole it must be evident that its only purpose and effect in providing for the summary taking over of unclaimed deposits by the state treasurer is to merely work a temporary change in their possession until such time as they may be claimed by their owners, or as the more ample procedure for their ultimate disposition outlined in section 1234, Code of Civil Procedure, can be set in motion; or, in other words, to place such unclaimed deposits in custodia legis until their ownership can be adjudicated by a proceeding taken upon such notice to all concerned as would amount to due process of law, and thus render the adjudication as to the ultimate control and ownership of the property in question binding upon all persons interested.

This view of the purpose and effect of section 15 of the Bank Act brings this case clearly within the principles laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of State Savings Bank v. Anderson, supra. When the state, from motives of public policy, enacts a law providing that private property may be summarily seized and temporarily sequestered to await the inception or determination of a more formal proceeding affecting the title and ownership of the property so taken, neither the immediate possessor nor the actual owner can be heard to urge the objection that the summary seizure of the property by properly constituted public authorities has been accomplished without such notice as would constitute due process of law. It follows that as to any action instituted by the owner of such property against his depositary during the temporary period that such funds are in the custody of the state treasurer pending the formal proceeding to determine their ultimate disposition provided for in section 1234, Code of Civil Procedure, the depositor could not maintain such suit against the depositary for such property, for the reason that against such action the latter would have the right to interpose the defense that the property was in custodia legis. It is apparently this very defense which is contemplated by the terms of the section in question, which state:

"That any bank which shall make any deposit with the state treasurer in conformity with the provisions of this section shall not thereafter be liable to any person for the same; and any action which may be brought by any person against any bank for money so deposited with the state treasurer shall be defended by the Attorney General without cost to such bank."

If these views are to be taken as a correct interpretation of the scope and effect of this section of the Bank Act, it necessarily follows that neither the bank nor the depositor can assert that the summary transfer of unclaimed deposits to the possession of the state treasurer, in contemplation of proceedings to be presently taken for the purpose of determining their ultimate disposition, has been accomplished without due process of law.

[4] The foregoing considerations also supply the answer to the suggestion of the respondent, that by the removal of these deposits from the possession of the bank the contractual right of the depositor to receive interest on his deposit has been impaired without due process of law. It does not appear that the depositors affected by this proceeding are entitled to receive any stated interest on their deposits; but, assuming that they are, the situation would not be changed, for if the bank is placed by the terms of this section relieving it from liability in a position to defend against the suit of the depositor for the amount of the deposit after the same has been paid over to the state, the defense would, of course, also extend to the incident of interest, and therefore the bank cannot, for the same reason, rely upon this possible detriment to the depositor as a defense to this proceeding. Malone v. Provident, etc., 201 Mass. 23, 86 N. E. 913.

Let a peremptory writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

29 Cal. App. 197

TAFT et al. v. WASHINGTON. (Civ. 1384.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 18, 1915.)

1. INJUNCTION ⊂⊃128—INJURY TO PROPERTY — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE — PARTITION WALL.

In an action by the owners of the south half of an improved lot against the life tenant of the north half of the lot, in which plaintiffs had the remainder, to enjoin the completion and maintenance of a partition wall, evidence held to sustain a finding that a part of the wall was located upon plaintiffs' side of the dividing line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 278; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃128.]

2. INJUNCTION ⊂⊃21—INCOMPLETE INJURY—POWER OF EQUITY.

In such action, the fact that the partition wall was complete before the service of any restraining order was no ground why its removal could not be compelled, as where an act sought to be enjoined is only partially completed, an injunction lies to restrain the threatened injury, and where suit is begun before the doing of the wrongful act and pending the suit the act is done, the court is not thereby deprived of its jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 19; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃21.]

3. INJUNCTION ⊂⊃49 — INJURY OR TRESPASS TO PROPERTY.

A court of equity has power to compel a cessation of an irreparable trespass of a continuing nature, so that obstructions placed by defendant upon the plaintiff's property, such as a partition wall, interference with stairways, etc., might be enjoined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 102; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃49.]

4. LIFE ESTATES ⊂⊃11—INJURY TO INHERITANCE.

Under Civ. Code, § 818, declaring that the owner of a life estate may use the land in the same manner as the owner of the fee simple, except that he must not injure the inheritance, the acts of a life tenant in tearing up or disconnecting drain pipes, etc., justified an injunction, as the threatened act if accomplished would constitute an injury to the inheritance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Life Estates, Cent. Dig. §§ 29, 30, 42; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃11.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Ellen Huddleston Taft and another against Harriet Washington. Judgment for plaintiffs, motion for new trial denied, and defendant appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

John C. Stick, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Willis O. Tyler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiffs are the owners of the south half of a lot which has a frontage of 60 feet and 6 inches on the west side of Spring street in the city of Los Angeles. The defendant is the owner of the north half of the lot for the term of her natural life, with remainder over to the plaintiffs. The entire frontage is covered by a two-story building, which was erected in the year 1885 by Biddy Mason, predecessor in title of the parties to this action. The lower story of the building is divided into three storerooms. The upper story contains a number of rooms to which access is obtained by a stairway located on the north side of the building. Plaintiffs alleged and the court has found that at the commencement of this action the defendant had under construction a wooden partition extending from front to rear of the middle storeroom through and near the center thereof and located partly on the south side of the true center line of the lot; also that the defendant threatened to tear up and disconnect certain sewer pipes and drain pipes which are located upon the north half of the premises and to destroy plaintiffs' access to the upper portion of the south half of the building by closing up the stairway; all of which was without the consent and was against the will of the plaintiffs. The judgment ordered the defendant to remove the said partition wall from plaintiffs' premises; that is to say, from the south half of the lot, and enjoined the defendant from tearing down or removing said pipes and drains or interfering with said stairway or committing any waste to the inheritance of the plaintiffs. From this judgment, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial, the defendant appeals.

[1] Appellant now insists that in sundry specified particulars the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings of fact. None of these objections can be sustained. Defendant's answer did not deny that the partition was completed after the filing of the complaint herein. She merely alleged that it was already completed before any injunction issued herein was served upon her. The evidence is sufficient to establish the fact that a portion of the partition was, as found by the court, located upon the plaintiffs' side of the dividing line. The testimony of the surveyor, Le Roy I. Weeks, shows that the distance from the exterior line of the north wall of the building to the center of the south wall thereof is coincident with the width of the lot as claimed by both parties. The record shows that before erecting her building Mrs. Mason made a party wall agreement with the owner of the lot adjoining her lot on the south which permitted her to erect a 16-inch wall, of which one-half would be on said adjoining lot. The fact that she did erect the building in accordance with that party wall agreement is sufficiently shown. For the defendant did not claim that the north wall of the building varies from the true north line of the lot, nor that the total width of the lot is other than the width alleged in the complaint. Therefore, the court was authorized to find in accordance with the testimony of Weeks with respect to the true location of the line of division between the south half of the property and the north half thereof. This line being established, appellant does not contend that a portion of the partition erected by her was not placed south of the line as thus located by the court.

[2] There is no merit in the contention that, because the partition wall was completed before the service of any restraining order, removal of the wall cannot be compelled.

"Where the act sought to be enjoined is only partially completed, an injunction will lie to restrain the completion of the threatened injury. And where suit is begun before the doing of the wrongful act and during the pendency of the suit the act is done by the defendant, the court will not thereby be deprived of its jurisdiction." High on Injunctions (4th Ed.) § 23.

The cases cited by appellant's counsel to support his proposition that wrongs already perpetrated cannot be corrected by injunction, all refer to restraining orders or injunctions pendente lite, the usual purpose of which is to preserve conditions as they are until after trial and judgment.

[3] There is no doubt that a court of equity has power to compel cessation of a trespass irreparable in its character and of a continuing nature and that, in the exercise of such power, removal of obstructions placed by the defendant upon the plaintiffs' property may be enforced. Western, etc., Co. v. Knickerbocker, 103 Cal. 111, 37 Pac. 192; Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 167, 73 Pac. 828; High on Injunctions (4th Ed.) § 708.

[4] The injunction granted by the judgment herein with respect to the tearing up and disconnecting of drain pipes, etc., does not necessarily depend upon any easement right which the plaintiffs may have to the use of those appurtenances. It is sufficiently justified by the fact that the threatened acts, if accomplished, would constitute an injury to the inheritance of the plaintiffs in the north half of the property. The defendant has only a life interest in that property and is not authorized to do any act to the injury of the inheritance. Civ. Code, § 818; Crescent City Wharf, etc., Co. v. Simpson, 77 Cal. 286, 19 Pac. 426.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 144

BORGES v. HILLMAN et al. (Civ. 1405.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 11, 1915.)

1. JUDGMENT ⇐642 — CONCLUSIVENESS—ORDER OF APPELLATE COURT RESTING ON PRESUMPTION.

A decision on appeal affirming the appointment of a receiver, which decision, the record being such as to preclude a review of the merits, rested on the legal presumption of the regularity of the proceeding culminating in the order of appointment, involved a conclusive determination of the question of the propriety of the appointment, and was res adjudicata in the original plaintiff's action against the sureties on the bond of the original defendant given to secure a stay of execution of the order of appointment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1156; Dec. Dig. ⇐642.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1243—LIABILITIES ON BONDS—PARTY PLAINTIFF.

The plaintiff, in an action in which a receiver was appointed, the defendant therein having given a bond running to plaintiff to enable her to collect the rents of the realty in suit pending her appeal from the order appointing the receiver, could maintain an action against the sureties on such bond to recover for any damage resulting from the possession of the property and the collection of rents by the defendant, though the judgment in the main action had not become final when the action on the bond was brought so that the court had not discharged the receiver, who was not the proper party to sue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4796; Dec. Dig. ⇐1243.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1243—LIABILITIES ON BOND—TIME FOR BRINGING ACTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, providing that an appeal may be taken from a final judgment within six months, and section 1049, providing that an action is pending from its commencement until the time for appeal has passed, an action against the sureties on a bond given to secure a stay of execution of an order appointing a receiver, and to enable defendant to collect the rents of the real property in suit pending appeal from the order, which bond bound the sureties to hold the plaintiff free from loss, if he obtained judgment in the main suit against the defendant therein, by reason of the collection of moneys by her as rents pending the appeal from the order, was prematurely brought within 6 months of judgment in the action in which the receiver was appointed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4796; Dec. Dig. ⇐1243.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1239—LIABILITIES ON BONDS—RIGHT OF ACTION.

Plaintiff, in an action in which a receiver was appointed and in which defendant therein gave bond to pay costs on appeal from such order, could maintain an action against the sureties on such bond before final judgment in the action in which the receiver was appointed, where the order appointing the receiver was affirmed on the appeal from it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4785, 4786; Dec. Dig. ⇐1239.]

5. EVIDENCE ⇐82 — PRESUMPTIONS — APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER.

In the absence of a showing of an abuse of authority by the court in making an order appointing a receiver, the presumption, on appeal in another suit where the point is material, is that the appointment was proper in all respects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 104; Dec. Dig. ⇐82.]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1234 — APPEAL BOND—CONSTRUCTION.

A bond, given in a suit to declare a trust in realty, to secure defendant a stay of execution of an order appointing a receiver and to enable her to collect the rents of the property pending her appeal from such order, which bond provided that if defendant did not pay over rents received within 30 days after filing of the remittitur from the Supreme Court, judgment might be entered against the sureties on the bond for "said amount of said judgment," was intended, if final judgment on the merits was eventually obtained by plaintiff, to indemnify him against any damage which might result because the defendant was permitted to collect the rents pending determination of her appeal appointing the receiver.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4761–4777; Dec. Dig. ⇐1234.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Joseph F. Borges against E. C. Hillman and another. From a judgment for defendants on their demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for appellant. E. L. Webber, of Napa, for respondents.

HART, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff against the defendants as sureties upon a bond given to effectuate a stay pending an appeal from an order appointing a receiver made in a certain action wherein the plaintiff here was plaintiff and one Ida J. Dunham was the defendant. The court sustained the demurrer of the defendants and allowed the plaintiff 10 days within which to amend the complaint. The plaintiff declined to amend and accordingly judgment passed for the defendants. The plaintiff brings this appeal here from said judgment.

The facts as stated in the complaint are substantially as follows: The plaintiff here instituted an action in the superior court of Napa county against said Ida J. Dunham for the purpose of obtaining a judgment adjudging and decreeing that he (said plaintiff) was the owner of a certain tract of land, embracing approximately 170 acres, said land being specifically described in the complaint, and that said Dunham "was holding the same, and had been holding said property ever since the 2d day of May, 1908, in trust, for the sole use and benefit of said plaintiff, and for an accounting of the rents and profits derived by her from said land since said date, and for judgment against her for any amount of money found by the court to be due plaintiff on account of said rents and profits derived by her from said lands."

After the filing of the complaint in said action of Borges v. Dunham, viz., on the 18th day of June, 1914, and at the trial of said action, but before the completion thereof, an order was made by the court before which it was pending appointing one Malcolm Brown as receiver in said action to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the real property described in the complaint in said action, and to hold the same during the pendency of said action, subject to the order of the court, and requiring said receiver to execute an undertaking, with two or more sureties, in the sum of $500, "to the effect that he would faithfully discharge the duties of receiver in said action, and obey the orders of the court therein."

On the 22d day of June, 1914, said Malcolm Brown qualified as such receiver by taking and subscribing the required oath and executing the required undertaking, and said oath and bond were filed in the office of the county clerk on the succeeding day. Brown thereupon entered upon the discharge of his duties as said receiver, "and," so the complaint alleges, "continued therein until the giving of the bond on appeal hereinafter set out, and during the time that he was acting as said receiver, and prior to the giving of said last-named bond, said Malcolm Brown collected the sum of $300, rents of the real property above described."

On the 23d day of July, 1914, said Ida J. Dunham took an appeal from the order appointing said receiver, and for the purpose of securing a stay of the execution of said order, and enabling her to collect the rents and income of and from said real property pending said appeal, and also for the purpose of obtaining an order from said court requiring said receiver to pay and turn over to her (Dunham) all moneys then in his possession and collected by him as such receiver as for rents and income of and from said property during his incumbency in that office, the defendants in this action, E. C. and H. F. Hillman, executed a bond or undertaking, which is in the following language:

"Whereas, the defendant in the above-entitled action has appealed to the Supreme Court of the state of California, from that certain order made and entered into against said defendant in said action, in the said superior court above mentioned, in favor of plaintiff in which said order one Malcolm Brown was appointed a receiver of the property involved in said action, with full power to collect all of the rents and income from said property, which said order was made and entered into by said court on or about the 18th day of June, 1914:

"Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of such appeal, we, the undersigned, E. C. Hillman and H. F. Hillman, of the said county of Napa, state of California, do hereby jointly and severally undertake and promise, on the part of the said appellant, that the said appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against her on appeal or on a dismissal thereof, not exceeding $300 to which amount we acknowledge ourselves jointly and severally bound; and,

"Whereas, the appellant herein is desirous of collecting the rents, profits, and income from the property involved in the above-entitled action, and also of retaining that which has heretofore been collected by the receiver in the above-entitled cause, we, the undersigned, residents of the county of Napa, state of California, do in consideration thereof, and of the premises, jointly and severally promise and acknowledge ourselves jointly and severally bound in the sum of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars, gold coin of the United States, that if the said order appealed from, or any part thereof be affirmed, or the appeal dismissed, or if the said appellant commit or suffer to be committed any waste thereon or in said real property involved in the above cause, that the appellant will pay in United States gold coin a reasonable amount for the value of the use and occupation of the property, together with all rents collected by said appellant during the occupancy of said premises by said appellant, and all damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant herein upon this appeal. That if the said appellant does not make such payment within 30 days after the filing of the remittitur from the Supreme Court of the state of California, to which said appeal is taken, judgment may be entered upon the motion of the respondents, and in their favor, against the undersigned sureties, for the said amount of said judgment, together with the interest which may be due thereon, and the damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant on appeal."

Upon the filing of said bond, the court made an order directing and requiring the receiver to turn over to said Dunham (the appellant in said action) all moneys in his possession as such receiver and so collected by him as rent growing out of said real property since his appointment as receiver, and further "instructing said receiver to refrain from collecting any further rents from said real property pending said appeal from said order, and the said appellant thereafter, and in consideration of the giving of said bond, collected the rents of said real property pending the final determination of said appeal, and prior to the making and entry of the judgment in said action as hereinafter alleged, and in consequence and consideration of the giving of said bond by these defendants, the said receiver paid to said appellant the sum of $239 collected by him as rent of said real property since his appointment as said receiver, and the said appellant collected additional rents of said real property in the total sum, as plaintiff is informed and therefore alleges, of $600 making $839 in all."

On the 11th day of November, 1914, the action of the plaintiff here against Ida J. Dunham having been tried, judgment was rendered and entered adjudging that, since the 2d day of May, 1908, said Dunham held "and is holding" the land in dispute in trust, for the sole use and benefit of the said plaintiff, and awarding to the said plaintiff against said Dunham the sum of $2,379.62, on account of rents, issues, and profits coming into her possession from said real property, said sum including "the $239 so paid to Ida J. Dunham by said receiver and $300 of the $600 collected by her pending said appeal from said order appointing a receiver as above alleged. Thereafter, and on the 29th day of December, 1914, a judgment was duly made and entered in the Supreme Court of the state of California in the matter of said appeal from said order appointing said receiver, whereby said order was affirmed, and that the remittitur thereon was thereafter issued by the clerk of said Supreme Court, and was filed in the above-entitled superior court on the 1st day of February, 1915."

The demurrer objected to the complaint upon the grounds of misjoinder of parties defendant, the alleged incapacity of the plaintiff to maintain this action, that the court has no jurisdiction of the persons of the defendants, nor the subject of this action, for certain specified reasons, that the complaint is uncertain in specified particulars, and that there is a nonjoinder of parties defendant in that Malcolm Brown, as receiver, "is not made a party plaintiff to this action."

[1] Among the specific points made by the respondents in support of the judgment is that the court was without authority to appoint a receiver in the action of Borges v. Dunham, and that, therefore, the appellant cannot maintain the present action, because, as counsel states the proposition, "the order appointing a receiver was void, and being void the bond must fail." But a review of this question by this court in this action is foreclosed by the decision of the Supreme Court affirming the order appointing the receiver concerned here. Borges v. Dunham, etc., 169 Cal. 83, 145 Pac. 1011. While it is true that the record on appeal from said order was such as to preclude a review of the merits of the action of the court in making it, and the decision was therefore made to rest on the legal presumption of the due regularity of the proceeding culminating in the making of the order, yet the affirmance of the order involves a conclusive determination of the question and is consequently res adjudicata.

[2] The defendants further contend, however, that the plaintiff has no capacity to maintain this action, and that the same was prematurely brought. The first of these objections to the action is founded upon the proposition that, the judgment in the main action not having become final at the time the present action was instituted, and the court not having discharged the receiver, the latter is the proper and necessary party to bring and maintain this action, inasmuch as he is entitled, under the order appointing him the receiver, to the exclusive possession and custody of all the rents, issues, and profits accruing from the property in dispute in said action from the time he was so appointed.

But we are unable to perceive how the receiver may be held to be authorized to maintain an action on the undertaking here declared upon. The undertaking does not run to the receiver, but to the plaintiff. The action on the undertaking is not one to recover moneys from Mrs. Dunham, the defendant in the main action and the appellant from the order appointing a receiver, but its purpose is to recover for any damage resulting from the possession of the property and the collection of its rents, issues, and profits by Mrs. Dunham and against which damage the defendants here undertook by their bond to indemnify the plaintiff. We cannot perceive wherein the receiver could claim any damage against the defendants here by reason of their undertaking.

[3] We are of the opinion, however, that the point made by the defendants that this action was prematurely commenced is well taken.

This action was commenced on the 25th day of March, 1915, but at that time the judgment in the main action had not become final, said judgment having been entered on the 11th day of November, and, while it has not been made to appear whether or not an appeal has been taken therefrom, the right to appeal therefrom nevertheless existed for the period of 6 months from the time of the entry thereof, or, to be more specific, the time within which the defendant in said action was legally authorized to appeal from the judgment therein entered against her did not expire until the 12th day of May, 1915. Section 939, Code Civ. Proc. It follows that said action, within the contemplation of section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was still pending, after the entry of judgment therein, for at least the period of 6 months. The section just referred to provides:

"An action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied."

It is obvious that a judgment rendered and entered in an action cannot become final so long as the action is pending within the meaning of the foregoing section. See Naftzger v. Gregg, 99 Cal. 83, 33 Pac. 757, 37 Am.

St. Rep. 23; In re Blythe's Estate, 99 Cal. 472, 34 Pac. 108; Story v. Story I. C. Co., 100 Cal. 41, 34 Pac. 675; Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 635, 646, 35 Pac. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 314.

Now, the bond upon which the present action is founded, it will be noted, imposes upon the defendants two several and distinct obligations, viz.: The one whereby they have bound themselves in the sum of $300 to indemnify the plaintiff in this action for the costs on appeal, and the other, whereby they have bound themselves in the sum of $1,000 to hold the plaintiff free from loss, in the event that he should obtain judgment in the main action against the defendant therein, by reason of the moneys collected by the latter pending the appeal from the order as rents, issues, and profits growing out of the land. Whether this view of the undertaking be correct or not must depend, of course, upon the intention of the sureties, and this proposition must in turn be determined by a construction of the instrument.

[4, 5] While the relief asked by the plaintiff in this action is confined or limited by the complaint to the damage alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff by reason of the rents, etc., coming into the hands of Mrs. Dunham pending the appeal from the order appointing a receiver, we may, nevertheless, express the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action in the proper forum upon the undertaking in so far as it obligates the defendants (sureties) to reimburse him for the costs on the appeal from said order. The receiver was appointed upon the application of the plaintiff, and, in the absence of a showing of an abuse of authority by the court in making the order of appointment, the presumption is that the appointment of a receiver was in all respects proper. The plaintiff was required, of course, to defend on the appeal from the order appointing the receiver the action of the trial court in that regard. He was necessarily the respondent in that appeal and, said order having been affirmed on appeal, he is entitled to be reimbursed by the appealing party—the party vanquished on the appeal—for the necessary or legal costs incurred by him in so defending the order.

[6] But, as stated, our conclusion is that this action upon that part of the undertaking referred to is premature, or, in other words, that the plaintiff was not, at the time of the commencement of the present action, legally authorized to maintain it. The conclusion thus declared is inspired by the conviction, based upon a construction of the undertaking by the light of all the circumstances surrounding its execution, that it was not the intention that the obligation of the undertaking upon which the plaintiff wholly relies for a recovery was to be discharged until there had been a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff and the same had become final.

At the time of the execution of the undertaking the trial on the merits had not been completed, and consequently no judgment entered for the plaintiff. The issue submitted by the plaintiff by his complaint was whether the legal title to the land in dispute had been and was held by the defendant in trust for his benefit. The defendant answered the complaint denying specifically its allegations, and with her answer filed a cross-complaint in which she prayed for a decree quieting her title to the property described in the complaint. After issue joined, the plaintiff, upon notice duly given, applied to the trial court for an order for the appointment of a receiver to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the real property in controversy. The time for hearing the application was fixed for the day on which the action had been set down for trial, and, after taking some testimony, the court made the order appointing a receiver. Borges v. Dunham, 169 Cal. 83, 145 Pac. 1011. The question, then, at issue at the time the order for the appointment of a receiver was made, was whether the plaintiff was entitled to a cancellation of his deed to the property to the defendant and the property declared to be held in trust by the latter for the benefit of the former, or whether both the legal and equitable title to the property was in the defendant and she entitled to a decree quieting said title. It hence follows that the plaintiff, at the time of the appointment of the receiver and at the time of the execution of the undertaking, was not entitled to the possession of the property, nor to the rents, issues, and profits thereof.

Now, it will be noted that the undertaking, so far as it relates to the possession of the land and the collection of the rents, issues, and profits thereof by Mrs. Dunham, pending the decision on the appeal from the order appointing the receiver, provided, among other things, as follows:

"That if the said appellant does not make such payment within 30 days after the filing of the remittitur from the Supreme Court of the state of California, to which said appeal is taken, judgment may be entered upon the motion of the respondents, and in their favor, against the undersigned sureties for the said amount of said judgment, together with interest which may be due thereon, and the damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant on appeal."

The meaning of the foregoing language is, it must be conceded, very obscure; but, considering that, at the time of the execution of the undertaking, there was pending no appeal the disallowance of which by the Supreme or appellate court would result in a judgment for any amount of money or a money judgment of any sort, we take it that what the sureties meant by that language is this: That they would not only guarantee the payment of the costs on appeal from the order appointing a receiver, but that, if a final judgment on the merits was eventually obtained by the plaintiff, they would indemnify him against any damage which might result to him by reason of the fact that, pending the determination of the appeal from the order, the defendant Mrs. Dunham was permitted to remain in possession of the property and to collect and retain the rents, issues, and profits thereof. This, it appears to us, is the correct interpretation of the language of the undertaking, above quoted, and of the intention of the sureties; for the only appeal actually pending when the undertaking was made and delivered was the appeal from the order appointing a receiver, and obviously there could result from said appeal no judgment other than one affirming or reversing the order, except in so far as the awarding of costs on said appeal may be treated as a judgment for an amount of money, and this we do not think can be truly said to be the case. Besides, as to the costs on said appeal, the undertaking, as before suggested, makes a separate and distinct provision.

The demurrer was, in our opinion, properly sustained, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

155 PACIFIC REPORTER

(172 Cal. 25)

DON v. PFISTER. (S. F. 7713.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1916.)

1. ELECTIONS ⟸19 — PRIMARY ELECTIONS — POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

Under Const. art. 2, § 2½, declaring that the Legislature shall have power to enact laws relative to the election of delegates to conventions of political parties, the Legislature is authorized to make it a condition to voting in a primary election that the voter state in his affidavit of registration the name of the political party with which he intends to affiliate at the ensuing primary election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. ⟸19.]

2. ELECTIONS ⟸120 — PRIMARY LAW — CONSTRUCTION.

The primary act of June 16, 1913 (St. 1913, p. 1379), referred to and made the provisions of Pol. Code, § 1096, so far as consistent with the provisions of the act, applicable to primary elections. That section provided that electors should state in their affidavit of registration the name of the political party with which they intended to affiliate at the ensuing primary election. Held, that the fact that a subsequent Legislature struck out such provisions from section 1096 does not affect the primary law; the provisions having been incorporated in it by reference.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. ⟸120.]

In Bank. Original application by Eugene M. Don for a writ of mandate against Henry A. Pfister. Writ issued.

Thomas V. Cator, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Warren Olney, Jr., Cullinan & Hickey, Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. In this matter a peremptory writ of mandate in accord with the alternative writ heretofore granted was ordered issued at the close of the oral argument, the views of the court being very briefly expressed from the bench. That the ground of the decision may be understood, it is proper to very briefly state it in writing.

[1] The question presented was whether or not an elector is entitled to state in his affidavit of registration the name of the political party with which he intends to affiliate at the ensuing primary election, notwithstanding the amendment of section 1096, Political Code, at the regular legislative session of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 285, § 6), by striking from said section the provision that an elector may state this in such affidavit.

The question is one that must necessarily be decided in accord with the law as it now exists, entirely regardless of certain acts adopted at the recent extra session of the Legislature, which, by virtue of the referendum provisions of our Constitution, are not as yet effective, and which are still subject to be suspended until the next election by the filing of a petition for a referendum thereon.

It is conceded by all that the partisan portion of the primary act of June 16, 1913 (St. 1913, p. 1379), as it now exists, a valid subsisting law of the state, is practically rendered a nullity, if the amendment of section 1096 in 1915 deprived an elector of the right here sought to be exercised. No one could qualify for a party primary as required by the primary act, either to sign nominating petitions for candidates for party nominations, or to vote at a party primary. The primary act from beginning to end shows the absolute necessity for party registration in order to make it a workable system for party primaries at all, and learned counsel for respondent frankly admitted that the expressed design of its framers was that no one could participate in any of the party primary elections provided for thereby unless in his affidavit of registration he had stated the name of the political party or organization with which he intended to affiliate. This was the "test and condition" provided in the primary act upon which electors might participate in such a party primary, and that the Legislature had the right to prescribe such a test in the primary act itself cannot be doubted in view of the language of section 2½, article 2, of the Constitution.

[2] Under these circumstances, it is not surprising that the framers of such primary act should substantially provide therein, as they clearly had the right to do and as we think they have done, that electors should be allowed to register in such a way as to make them eligible to participate in the party primaries provided thereby. In our opinion they did this, in a way not novel at all in legislation, by referring to section 1096, Political Code, as it then stood, and practically making it a part of the primary act. The language is:

"And all the provisions of section 1096 of the Political Code, so far as they are consistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby made applicable to primary elections within the meaning of this act."

They had done the same thing in the primary act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 769), and in a still earlier primary act when section 1096 contained no provision for statement of party affiliation, they had so expressly referred to section 1366a, Political Code, which contained such a provision. We are satisfied that it must be held that it was the intent to make this section, as it then stood, in so far at least as this matter so vital to the maintenance of the act is concerned, an integral part of the primary law itself for so long as such primary law required the registration to show party affiliation.

Conceding the power of the Legislature to legislate in this manner—i. e., by incorporating the provisions of some other statute by reference, as must be conceded—we have remaining simply the question of intent, and as to that we have already indicated our views. The case then is simply that presented in People v. S. B. Whipple (No. 2) 47 Cal. 592, where an act provided that township assessors shall have all the powers and perform all the duties of county assessors prescribed by the provisions of the general revenue act of 1861 (St. 1863–64, p. 243), and wherein it was held that the subsequent repeal of the act so referred to did not operate to defeat or curtail the scope of the act in which the reference was contained, "for the legal effect of such reference, in the first instance, is the same as though the act so referred to had been inserted therein in extenso." This is a principle well sustained by the authorities, and is applicable whenever the intent is apparent to make by reference another provision of law an actual part of the law under consideration. Section 1096, so far as essential to the maintenance of the party primary provisions of the primary act, was thus made an actual part of such act, and the Legislature could not subsequently affect such primary act by simply amending said section 1096, so as to eliminate party registration.

As stated from the bench, the decision of the court was based on this ground, as to which all participating agreed, although other grounds were stated by some of the justices in addition.

It follows that petitioner is entitled to the relief sought, and accordingly a peremptory writ of mandate was ordered issued.

I concur: SLOSS, J.

SHAW, J. I concur. I want to add to the opinion of the Chief Justice another ground on which I think the decision may rest. Section 1097 as amended in 1915 contains in subdivision 3 the same phrase that was contained in the section before its amendment, that "the affidavit of the party must show all the facts required to be stated." This means that, if there is any fact required to be stated by any other law, the affidavit must state it, although such fact is not expressly mentioned in the form given in section 1097. And inasmuch as the primary law of 1913, in almost every section, implies that the registration shall show the party affiliation of the voter, making it necessary to the operation of the primary law, I think the above-quoted phrase of the present section 1097 necessarily means, under the law as it now stands, that the registration affidavit must show the party affiliation.

HENSHAW, J. I concur in the foregoing. Viewed in the broadest and most liberal aspect, it is imperative that the writ should issue. The Constitution of this state (Const. art. 2, § 2½) makes recognition of the existence of political parties, declares for a primary law and empowers the Legislature to prescribe tests controlling the right to vote at such primary. It is not necessary here to consider the full import of this constitutional provision, whether it is not in itself a guaranty of partisan primaries, through which alone under our system of laws political parties, the existence of which is certainly guaranteed by the Constitution, can alone live. It is truly said that the intent of the Legislature expressed in its acts is to be considered in interpreting those acts. No doubt can be entertained of the legislative intent in passing the primary law of 1913. It provided a complete plan for registration declaring party affiliations, though there was no compulsion upon the elector to declare such an affiliation. There was upon the statute books at that time a registration law authorizing the elector to declare his party affiliation and compelling county clerks and registrars of voters to enter such declarations of party affiliation when made, to the very legitimate end that those and those only who belonged to a political party should, at the primary designed for the selection of its candidates, have a voice in that selection. There can be no doubt but that it made this registration law as it then stood, by distinct reference, a part of itself.

Equally no doubt can be entertained of the purpose of the Legislature in passing the primary law of 1915. Compelled to recognize the existence of political parties, so far as national officers are concerned, it proposed to and did do away with all party nominations for state offices. It was designed, and avowedly designed, to destroy all political parties so far as they operated upon state officers and affairs. In the accomplishment of this purpose the act of 1915 repealed the partisan primary law of 1913, and to harmonize legislation under its new proposed scheme of politics it struck out from section 1096 the provision touching the registration of the political party with which the elector was affiliated. Turning again to the intent of the Legislature, there is no room for doubt but that the law of 1915 was intended primarily and fundamentally to destroy party primaries and party nominations to state and county offices.

Under the guaranty of the Constitution the people of the state under the initiative and the referendum become the highest legislative body in the state. Under the initiative they may pass laws beyond the power of the Legislature to modify or repeal. Under the referendum they may perform the high legislative function of vetoing an act of the Legislature. We are thus not only entitled, but it is our duty, to consider the legislative intent of the people at a referendum election quite as much as the legislative intent of the Legislature itself. They took under consideration the question as to whether or not the primary law of 1915 should be permitted to remain upon the statute books. If their vote at the polls favored it, it became the law of the state. If their vote at the polls repudiated it, their repudiation was a declaration that the primary law of 1915 should be repealed, and the primary law of 1913 should be restored to full life. Such was not only the intent, but such was the necessary effect, of the act of the sovereign people at the polls in striking from the statute books the primary law of 1915.

What, then, stands in the way of the officers of the state giving effect to this plainly expressed will of the people solemnly registered at the polls? Nothing saving the specious argument that, because the people in the same referendum election did not veto the law of 1915 amending section 1096, it must be concluded that they desired that law to stand as amended, and, standing as amended, it will operate to subvert the whole partisan primary law of 1913, and thus undo everything which the people of the state thought they were doing when in terms they destroyed the primary law of 1915.

But what is the broad and complete answer to this argument? It is that the people plainly designed to restore to full life the primary law of 1913; that to restore this act on the statute books required partisan registration; that the primary law of 1913 makes specific reference to and adopts as part of itself section 1096, but section 1096 as so adopted is the section as it originally stood, calling for the registration by party affiliation; even if section 1096 had been totally repealed it would, under familiar principles and under all of the authorities, be the subject of reference to determine what was meant by the primary law of 1913 and to give that meaning due effect; that, therefore, section 1096 for the purposes of the primary law of 1913, and for registration thereunder, would remain in force, even though the section had been wholly eliminated from our statute books, and that such has always been the rule of construction. People v. Whipple, 47 Cal. 591; Potter, Dwar. on Stats. pp. 190, 192; Reg. v. Merionethshirs, 6 Adol. & Ellis, 343; Rex v. Laxdale, 1 Burrows, 445; 2 Lewis, Sutherland, Stat. Construction (2d Ed.) §§ 405, 453, 489.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LENNON, Judge pro tem.

172 Cal. 47

Ex parte DART. (Cr. 1913.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 3, 1916.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟹611—REGULATION OF CHARITIES—POLICE POWER.

The occupation of soliciting contributions for charitable purposes may be regulated by laws or ordinances providing for reasonable supervision of the persons engaged, and for the application or use of the contributions received to the purposes intended, to prevent unscrupulous persons from obtaining money or other things under the pretense that they are to be applied to charity, to prevent the wrongful diversion of such funds to other uses, and to secure them against waste.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1344–1349; Dec. Dig. ⟹611.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟹594—REGULATION OF CHARITIES — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

City ordinances creating a Municipal Charities Commission and prohibiting begging in the public streets, while regulating the soliciting of contributions for charitable purposes, the last of which gave the commission arbitrary power to forbid any person from soliciting for charity regardless of his personal worth or fitness, not establishing any standard of character by which the commission should be guided in giving permits, merely requiring that it should find that the "object of said solicitation is worthy and meritorious," were unconstitutional so far as giving such arbitrary power, and in portions imposing a penalty upon any one soliciting contributions for charitable purposes without a permit and prohibiting the sale of any goods donated to charity without the solicitor first having obtained a similar permit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1316–1320, 1327, 1328; Dec. Dig. ⟹594.]

In Bank. Application for writ of habeas corpus by William J. Dart against Charles E. Sebastian, Chief of Police, and Ray L. Chesebro, Police Judge, of the City of Los Angeles. Applicant discharged from custody.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Edward E. Bacon, all of Los Angeles (Wm. A. Barnhill, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner. Warren L. Williams, City Prosecutor, and Samuel Barnes Smith, Deputy City Prosecutor, both of Los Angeles, opposed.

HENSHAW, J. The authorities of the city of Los Angeles adopted two ordinances. By one was created a Municipal Charities Commission, whose powers and duties were defined. Amongst those powers and duties are:

"(1) To investigate all charities dependent upon public appeal or general solicitation for support and to indorse such of them as meet actual needs of the community, attain a reasonable standard of efficiency and are so conducted as to insure the public of the wise use of the funds."

The second of these ordinances prohibits begging in the public streets or places in the city and regulates the soliciting of alms and contributions for charitable purposes. It provides as follows:

"Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to solicit alms, food, clothing, money or contributions within the city of Los Angeles, without first securing a permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission of said city. Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to properly accredited solicitors of established churches of said city soliciting for purely religious purposes, but it shall apply to the various institutional works carried on by said churches in like manner as other persons, firms, corporations and associations. The permit from the charities commission above referred to shall consist of a written certificate issued by the said commission certifying that the object of said solicitation is worthy and meritorious and authorizing the soliciting of gifts and donations therefor; said permits may be revoked by said commission at any time.

"Sec. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or collect for any charitable or philanthropic organization, without first obtaining a written permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission; said permit shall be revocable at any time in the discretion of said commission, which may adopt such regulations regarding the soliciting and collecting of funds as its judgment may dictate, and it shall be obligatory upon the holders of such permits to abide by such rules and regulations.

"Sec. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to give or promote any entertainment, fair, bazaar or benefit in the name of charity or philanthropy, without first obtaining a written permit so to do, from the Municipal Charities Commission, said permit to be revocable at any time at the discretion of said commission.

"Sec. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to solicit funds within the city of Los Angeles for any ethical, evangelistic, religious, missionary or charitable purposes without having first obtained an indorsement certificate from the Municipal Charities Commission. Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to established and recognized churches or other religious organizations in the city of Los Angeles.

"Sec. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to sell, or offer for sale, any clothing, household goods, or other goods, wares or merchandise which have been solicited or donated for charity or philanthropy without first obtaining a written permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission, said permit to be revocable at any time at the discretion of said commission."

Petitioner was arrested under two criminal complaints charging violations of these ordinances. By the first of these complaints he was accused of soliciting "alms, food, clothing, money and contributions * * * without first securing or having a permit or written certificate so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission." By the second of these complaints his crime was in "selling and offering for sale clothing, household goods and other goods, wares and merchandise which had been solicited and donated for charity and philanthropy, without first obtaining or having a written permit so to do from the Municipal Charities Commission."

The following facts appear without controversy: The Salvation Army is a religious organization founded on and believing in the teachings of Christ. It has been established for 50 years. It has its churches and charitable organizations throughout the United States and other countries. Profoundly impressed with the Founder's sympathy for the poor and afflicted and with His teachings that, "Now abideth faith, hope and charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity," and, "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart," it has made its special field of religious work the relief of the destitute and the rescue of society's outcasts. It has found that it cannot lead the spirit of the weary and heavy burdened without first ministering to his physical necessities. While "man does not live by bread only," he cannot live at all without bread. Therefore the charitable organizations of the Salvation Army are vital, integral parts of its religious life and work. For 25 years it has prosecuted its religious and charitable work in the city of Los Angeles. It there maintains an "Industrial Home," where men out of employment are given food and lodging without charge, but are required, for their own self-respect and to the end that mere professional beggary be not fostered, to perform such labor as is within their power, being paid the value thereof. It maintains a "Rescue Home and Maternity Hospital," in which, without charge, food, lodgings, and hospital service are afforded needy married women and unfortunate girls. It maintains a "Young Woman's Boarding House," giving for an extremely low price to homeless girls and women clean, wholesome food and lodging and helpful moral influences. It maintains four other hotels and lodging houses where the destitute are housed and homed free of charge and where but a small charge is exacted from those able to pay. An average of 27 persons per night are given shelter in these hotels free of all charge. It also maintains nine stores where secondhand clothing, furniture, rags, paper, and junk of various kinds, contributed by the charitable, are sold at low prices. In these stores and in the renovatory work necessary to make many contributed articles salable, employment is given to the needy, who thus become self-sustaining and self-respecting. In the years of its labors the Salvation Army has acquired properties of much value in Los Angeles, all of which are used for one or another of the described purposes. It has alleviated suffering, and given relief and employment in thousands of cases. Its books of financial account are and always have been open to the inspection and examination of its contributors, and no one of those contributors has ever voiced any complaint touching the honesty and efficiency of the Army's administrative work.

After its creation, the charities commission, claiming the power so to do under the aforesaid ordinances, on or about the 6th day of October, 1913, demanded, in writing, of the Salvation Army, that it should, as a condition precedent to obtaining the indorsement or permit of the commission for carrying on or soliciting contributions for any of its above described charitable work in said city, be governed by a local board of managers, or trustees, all of whom should be residents of the city of Los Angeles, and representative Los Angeles citizens, and that all the property of the Salvation Army in the city should be conveyed to and held by such local board, and that the financial work of the Salvation Army in the city should be conducted by such local board; that no budgets for funds should be prepared and enforced on the Los Angeles workers for any purpose other than Los Angeles work; and that no funds should be sent out of Los Angeles for the use of the Salvation Army elsewhere, except by the direction of such local board, or of the Municipal Charities Commission; and that Christmas offerings, self-denial, harvest festival, and like accustomed contributions of the Salvation Army should not be used except for local purposes; and that all proceeds derived by the Salvation Army from the conduct of its aforesaid institutions in Los Angeles (whether self-sustaining or not) should be used exclusively for the extension of its work in the city, and not be subject to assessment by territorial (i. e., national) officers of the Salvation Army. Next, the charities commission exacted that title to all property of the Salvation Army in Los Angeles should be vested in a corporation, and this was done. Thereafter the Salvation Army and its corporation petitioned the charities commission for a permit allowing it to continue its charities, and its petition was denied. Always desirous of yielding obedience to the law, and of "rendering to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's," the Salvation Army endeavored to comply with the exactions of the charities commission, but was unable to comply with some of them without impairing its efficiency and integrity as an organized society for religio-charitable work. Failing to secure the permit, the Salvation Army continued this work. The petitioner is one of its officers. In the performance of his duties as such officer, and not otherwise, he has been subjected to these arrests and charged with these crimes.

In setting forth the foregoing facts we are not unmindful of the limitations put on our inquiry under this writ. The validity of these ordinances is to be determined from their provisions, and the question of their validity or invalidity is all that concerns us here. Nevertheless, and assuming for the moment the validity of the ordinances, these facts are highly instructive as illustrating the extent of the power conferred and the manner of its exercise. Here is a great and living charity doing good to thousands of the needy and heavy-laden of Los Angeles, struck dead because it does not make over the management of its affairs to a local board of "representative citizens" and cannot agree that it will dispense the bounty which it receives exclusively for local purposes. Charity is not only to begin at home, but to end at home saving as under "permit" it may be suffered to go abroad. The quality of Mercy (and so necessarily of Charity), we are told > —"is not strained;

> It droppeth as the gentle rain from Heaven
> Upon the place beneath."

But in Los Angeles it is to be strained and drop as from a sprinkling pot in the guiding hand of the charities commission. But this exemplification of the use of the power is not, of course, an argument against the existence of the power itself. Conceding the existence of the power, if in any instance an illegal exercise of it has been made, that fact will constitute a defense to a prosecution, but will not be effective to destroy the validity of the grant of power itself. The basic question still remains: May a private charitable association, order, or organization be denied the right to fulfill the purposes of its existence saving under a "permit" from the authorities? We here use the term "private charity" as meaning one not supported in whole or in part by state or municipal funds. Over the latter class manifestly the power of regulation and control is great, if not plenary.

Certain features of these ordinances at once strike the reader. Money may be freely sent abroad by any "established church" for the uplift of the soul of the Senegambian, and this is very well; but no penny can be sent to Belgium, to Poland, to Serbia to still the wailing of the children or allay the anguish of the women except under a "permit" from the charities commission. Nay, more, in the city of Los Angeles itself its needy childhood goes unfed and unclothed, its dependent womanhood unprotected and uncared for by organized charities except they have a "permit." Surely here, if anywhere, is

> "The organized charity, scrimped and iced
> In the name of a cautious, statistical Christ."

Respondent argues that charitable institutions soliciting contributions from the general public thus secure public trust funds, and that it is quite within governmental powers for the state or its municipal agencies to regulate the collection and disposition of such trust funds. It is freely conceded, indeed it is proclaimed, that reasonable regulations may be adopted touching and to a limited extent controlling the operation of charitable institutions dependent in whole or in part on public beneficence. But respondent fails to perceive or at least to discuss the distinction, as broad as the temperate zone, between a law imposing reasonable regulations to effectuate these ends on all such charitable institutions, and a law which makes the right to solicit at all, and thus the right of a given charity to exist dependent on the arbitrary will of a charities commission. Again, let us illustrate. Respondent in its brief thus defines the power of the charities commission:

> "The Municipal Charities Commission is delegated power to indorse (which means grant permits to charitable institutions under which alone they are entitled to live) such charitable institutions as meet the actual needs of the community, attain a reasonable standard of efficiency and are so conducted as to insure the public in the wise use of funds."

This language taken from the first of the ordinances above quoted sounds reasonable. But as interpreted by the Municipal Charities Commission, what does it mean? In their own language it is this: Such a charity is "one that will execute every trust for charity with the least possible delay, with the greatest possible efficiency and with the least possible deduction for expense." Here is a mark set, and that mark is the absolute perfection of human endeavor. No tolerance, no charity is shown by this commission of charities, for any human effort, however self-sacrificing and efficient, that does not attain human perfection. Charities in Los Angeles must reach a pitch of perfection unattained by any other human institution, or in the view of the Municipal Charities Commission they are unfit to live.

But let us eliminate from consideration these constructions put by the Municipal Charities Commission on their own powers, which are but delegated powers, and meet the question of the existence of this power at its source. Can the municipal authorities of a city arbitrarily say what person or what institution may or may not engage in charitable work dependent wholly or in part upon voluntary contributions from the public? Unhesitatingly we answer that this cannot be done, that it constitutes an attempt to use the police power in an arbitrary, unreasonable, and oppressive manner. It necessarily contains an assertion of the power to prohibit and suppress vocations and occupations which, entirely aside from their religious character, are from a worldly point of view in and of themselves not only harmless but positively beneficial to humanity. The power to pass reasonable regulations in such a case bears no relationship to the power to prohibit or suppress. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Los Angeles v. Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n, 124 Cal. 344, 57 Pac. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75; In re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973; Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674.

Such charitable work is not to be confounded with beggary, which imports personal gain. Most often those who devote themselves to such charities live lives of self-denial and self-abnegation for the sake of others. And the utmost limit of reasonable regulation in the matter is reached by acts protecting the public from charlatans and imposters, insuring knowledge on the part of the donors of the purposes to which their contributions may be put, coupled with adequate safeguards against malversation as to the funds received. But this falls far short of the law here under review, which permits such charitable work to be carried on only by (again to quote respondent) "trustees satisfactory to the Municipal Charities Commission."

But in further support of the argument that the charities commission or the municipal council may thus forbid a man from devoting his life to this form of self-denial and good works, it is said that neither the Constitution of the United States nor the Constitution of this state guarantees him the right so to do as they guarantee him the free exercise of his religion. They do not. Neither do they guarantee to a man the right to love, to show mercy, to forgive his enemies, or to walk in the path of rectitude. The existence of some human rights is taken for granted in both of those august instruments. We have heard one Chief Executive of this nation declare that he construed the Constitution as conferring on his department all powers not expressly withheld. The construction has not as yet met with favor from the jurisconsults. As little accord can be given to a construction which denies to the individual any right not expressly reserved and preserved to him. But if driven to authority to support this declaration, we can at least point out that the Declaration of Independence recognizes the right of all mankind to pursue happiness. When that pursuit takes the innocent and admirable form of effort to better the lot of the poor and oppressed, whether happiness be found solely in the consciousness of the doing of kindly deeds, or whether it be found in the conviction that one is thereby following the precepts of a Divine Teacher, in either case it lies not within the ordained powers of our government, national, state, or municipal, to say that such a vocation shall not be followed, such a life shall not be led.

So far we have dealt with the question in what, for lack of a better word, we may term its secular aspect only. From this point of view our remarks and conclusion apply equally to all charities, whether temporal or religious.

But there is another aspect of the question clearly presented and as clearly demanding consideration. This is the religious aspect. The petition shows that the charities of the Salvation Army are a vital part of its religious life work. One need not write as a theologian in expressing as we do the most profound veneration for religion as embodying the highest ethical concepts of a people and as satisfying their spiritual yearning for a life finer than this earthly one. The two religions exercising the most potent influence in shaping the material and spiritual destinies of the white-skinned races are the Jewish and the Christian. To these, as to all others, perfect freedom of exercise is constitutionally guaranteed. In both of these religions charity is the central word. It is enjoined, not as a good thing, or a wise thing, or as a kindly thing only, but as a fundamental part of the religion itself. Says the Jewish faith:

"On three things the world is stayed; on the Thorah (the law) and on worship and on the bestowal of kindness."

"Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart," says Paul to Timothy.

"Charity is the scope of all God's commands," preaches Chrysostom.

"All perfection of the Christian life is to be attained according to charity," declares Thomas Aquinas.

Does it need more, does it need so much, to show that in these religions the bestowal of charity, the devotion of life to charity, are a part of the religion itself? And does it demand discussion to establish so plain a truth as that touching religion there is a doubtful zone which legislation should be most reluctant to enter? The founders of the nation recognized it when they placed the great guaranty of religious liberty in the Constitution of a free people, and it is for every court to see that that liberty is not encroached upon and that freedom gnawed and impaired by any experimental legislation however well meant. So when legislation does enter that uncertain domain, the fact that it is there must bring to it condemnation. In accordance with the dictate of the Constitution itself, the doubt will be resolved in favor of religious liberty. And it will be found better in the long run that the free exercise of religion be preserved in its integrity, better for the nation, better for charity itself which owes so much to religion, even if the efficiency of religious charities be not up to the standard of perfection set by the Municipal Charities Commission. If under that standard 75 cents of every dollar would go to the objects of charity, while under the less efficient methods in vogue but 50 cents of each dollar actually reaches the beneficiaries, it is not to be forgotten that there will be many millions fewer of these dollars to be distributed in charity if the activities of the religious are hampered, thwarted, and stayed.

Wherefore the prisoner is discharged from custody.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

SHAW, J. (concurring). [1] The occupation of soliciting contributions to charitable purposes is clearly so far subject to the police power that it may be regulated by laws or ordinances providing for a reasonable supervision over the persons engaged therein and for the application and use of the contributions received to the purposes intended, in order to prevent unscrupulous persons from obtaining money or other things under the pretense that they were to be applied to charity, and to prevent the wrongful diversion of such funds to other uses, or to secure them against waste. Measures reasonably tending to secure these ends are unquestionably valid.

[2] If the ordinances in question here were reasonably appropriate for the attainment of these objects, there could be no valid objection to them based on the ground that they deprived persons of liberty or unduly restricted them in the pursuit of happiness. But they do not merely empower the Municipal Charities Commission to inquire or examine into the character of persons soliciting for charity and withhold permits from all who do not come within fixed standards of character and fitness. They give the commission absolute and arbitrary power to forbid any person from soliciting for charity, regardless of his personal character, worth, or fitness. No standard of character or fitness is set by which the commission is to be guided in giving or withholding permits. The only thing required is that the commission shall find that the "object of said solicitation is worthy and meritorious." Persons of the highest character desiring to solicit for a worthy cause might be refused a permit for no reason except the arbitrary will of the commission. Every person has the right, under our Constitution, and perhaps without its guaranty, to solicit contributions for a worthy charitable purpose, provided he acts in good faith and honestly applies them to that purpose. The ordinances give the commission power to deprive persons of that right without cause or reason. To the extent that they give this arbitrary power they are contrary to the Constitution and void. They come within the principles stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220, and by this court in Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 359, 31 Pac. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218; Los Angeles v. Hollywood Ass'n, 124 Cal. 349, 57 Pac. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75; Schaezlein v. Cabaniss, 135 Cal. 469, 67 Pac. 755, 56 L. R. A. 733, 87 Am. St. Rep. 122; and Hewitt v. Board, 148 Cal. 593, 84 Pac. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750.

In the Yick Wo Case, referring to ordinances prohibiting laundries in wooden buildings except by permission from the board of supervisors, the court said:

"They seem intended to confer, and actually do confer, not a discretion to be exercised upon a consideration of the circumstances of each case, but a naked and arbitrary power to give or withhold consent, not only as to places, but as to persons. So that, if an applicant for such consent, being in every way a competent and qualified person, and having complied with every reasonable condition demanded by any public interest, should, failing to obtain the requisite consent of the supervisors to the prosecution of his business, apply for redress by the judicial process of mandamus, to require the supervisors to consider and act upon his case, it would be a sufficient answer for them to say that the law had conferred upon them authority to withhold their assent, without reason and without responsibility. * * * It does not prescribe a rule and conditions for the regulation of the use of property for laundry purposes, to which all similarly situated may conform." 118 U. S. 366, 368, 6 Sup. Ct. 1069, 1070 (30 L. Ed. 220).

And in Los Angeles v. Hollywood, supra, the court said:

"There is a wide difference between regulation and prohibition—between regulatory provisions as a condition imposed for the exercise of a lawful occupation, and making the right itself to depend upon the unrestrained will of the municipality. * * * If the business be lawful, and having no injurious tendency, they cannot say who shall and who shall not exercise the right itself. Under the guise of regulating a business, the municipality cannot make prohibition possible by committing to the officers of the municipality the arbitrary power to deny permission to engage in that business."

The proper method of regulating a lawful business is indicated in Hewitt v. Board, supra, as follows:

"The right of the physician to be secure in his privilege of practicing his profession is thus made to depend, not upon any definition which the law furnishes him as to what shall constitute 'grossly improbable statements,' but upon the determination of the board after the statement is made and simply upon its opinion of its improbability. No definite standard is furnished by the law under this provision whereby a physician with any safety can advertise his medical business, nor is there any definite rule declared whereby after such advertisement is had the board of medical examiners shall be controlled in determining its probability or improbability. The physician is not advised what statements he may make which will not be deemed 'grossly improbable' by the board. No rule is provided whereby he can tell whether the publication he makes will bring him within the ban of the provision or not. * * * If a physician's license is to be revoked for 'grossly improbable statements,' if he is to be thereby deprived of his means of livelihood, of his right to practice a profession which it has taken him years of study and a large expenditure of money to qualify himself for, on the ground that he has made 'grossly improbable statements' in advertising his medical business, it is requisite that the statute authorizing such revocation define what shall constitute such statements so that the physician may know in advance the penalty he incurs in making them." 148 Cal. 595, 84 Pac. 41, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750.

Other methods of regulation may also be allowable; but a law or ordinance by or under which a lawful occupation, in itself, when properly conducted, in no wise injurious to persons, property, or the public interest, may be absolutely prohibited at the dictation of any official body without other cause than its own will or desire, is beyond the legislative power, and to that extent void.

There is a class of cases upon which the respondent relies as contravening the above-stated principles, such, for example, as Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 127, 13 Pac. 310, In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 38 Pac. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529, and Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923. It will be found, however, that these cases relate to things which in their nature are or may be injurious to public health, safety, comfort, or welfare, and that they do not infringe upon the principles above stated with regard to the regulation of occupations which are both lawful and innocuous. In the Flaherty Case the distinction is stated. After holding that an ordinance forbidding the beating of drums upon the streets without a permit from the president of the board of trustees was valid, the court, referring to other cases which seemed to conflict with the decision, and which are similar to the case at bar, said:

"But upon closer examination they will be found to go upon a distinction or principle, whether sound or not, that is not applicable to the case at bar. They are based upon the theory that the lawful inherent rights of men cannot be entirely suppressed or destroyed by statute or ordinance, but can only be regulated, and that all regulations of such rights must be uniform." 105 Cal. 565, 38 Pac. 983, 27 L. R. A. 529.

And again:

"At all events, the cases referred to deal with a right. But the proposition that a man has a natural, ingrained, inviolate, common-law, or constitutional right to beat a drum on the traveled streets of a city has no foundation in reason or authority. As therefore it is not a right that may not be entirely suppressed, it may be regulated as the lawmaking power may determine," and that, "as it could be suppressed, no one could be heard to complain of an ordinance regulating it because thereby special privileges accrued to particular persons." 105 Cal. 566, 38 Pac. 983, 27 L. R. A. 529.

The distinction between cases like Ex parte Fiske and the present case is that in this case the right which the commission has power absolutely to take away is a lawful and innocent occupation which the Legislature cannot entirely suppress and as to which its functions are merely to regulate its conduct and prevent abuses. There are other cases relating to ordinances which, after prohibiting certain things, delegate to some officer or board the power to decide whether or not a given person or subject comes within the terms of the prohibition. These are not in conflict with the principles above stated, nor are they applicable to this case. For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the portion of the ordinance in question imposing a penalty upon any one who solicits contributions for charitable purposes without a permit from the commission is void. The section of the ordinance prohibiting the sale of any goods donated to charity without first obtaining a similar permit is invalid for like reasons.

I concur in the judgment discharging the prisoner.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(172 Cal. 15)

WOOD v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORP.

(L. A. 3649.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1916.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⇐98 — NEGLIGENCE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — LEAVING PLACE OF SAFETY.

Plaintiff, while crossing a street at a crossing, passed in front of a team and wagon, and when beyond them saw a street car having the right of way coming towards her, rounding a curve, and stepped back. The front end of the car passed her in safety as it got beyond the curve, and she then walked between the car and the wagon, and was hit by the rear end of the car as it was rounding the curve. Held that, while persons suddenly placed in danger will not be held for lack of judgment under excitement and fear, nevertheless plaintiff's conduct in walking towards the danger instead of seeking safety in the opposite direction or standing still justified a finding of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 204–208; Dec. Dig. ⇐98.]

2. STREET RAILROADS ⇐103—NEGLIGENCE—MOTORMAN'S KNOWLEDGE OF DANGER.

Under such circumstances it was not the duty of the motorman to watch plaintiff after the front end of the car passed safely beyond her and the team, and therefore he could not be held to have knowledge of the danger assumed by her in walking between the team and the car toward the rear end.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 219; Dec. Dig. ⇐103.]

3. NEGLIGENCE ⇐138—INSTRUCTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for injuries against a corporation, an instruction that charges plaintiff with the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence defendant's negligence and its proximate cause of the injury is not open to objection that it admits of an inference that such negligence must be proven by acts other than those of defendant's servants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 354–370; Dec. Dig. ⇐138.]

4. TRIAL ⇐296—INSTRUCTIONS AS A WHOLE —PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Where an instruction does not sufficiently charge on the subject of the proximate cause of an injury, the deficiency is correct if included in subsequent instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 705–713, 715, 716, 718; Dec.Dig. ⇐296.]

5. TRIAL ⇐191—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMPTION OF FACTS—"TO THE REAR."

In an action for injuries against a street railroad company, it appearing that the front end of the car after it had rounded a curve passed safely beyond plaintiff, who was standing on the street crossing between the car and a team and wagon, an instruction charging that the motorman was not bound to assume that the wagon "to the rear" of the car would be carelessly driven to plaintiff's danger is not open to objection that it assumed that the wagon was behind the car; the instruction meaning merely that the wagon was towards the rear of the car.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 420–431, 435; Dec. Dig. ⇐191.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Rear.]

6. STREET RAILROADS ⇐118—NEGLIGENCE—APPREHENSION OF DANGER—INSTRUCTIONS.

In such action an instruction charging that, "If * * * you find * * * that the said motorman had no reason to apprehend any danger to said plaintiff," etc., is not open to the objection that the words quoted left to the decision of the motorman himself, and not to the jury, the question of his cause for apprehension of danger; for the instruction is directed to the belief of the jurors, and not to that of the motorman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 258–269; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 118.]

7. STREET RAILROADS ⟸118—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In such case an instruction charging that, if plaintiff was in a safe position when the front of the car passed her, and then changed her position and was struck by the rear end, by reason of the change, she could not recover, such instruction is not open to the objection that it told the jury that, if she was in a position of safety and remained in such position and was struck by the car, she could not recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 258–269; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 118.]

8. TRIAL ⟸253 — INSTRUCTIONS — IGNORING EVIDENCE.

In such case, where the instructions in general do not require the jury to find that defendant's negligence was the sole cause of plaintiff's dangerous position before they gave judgment in her favor, a single instruction charging that she must show not only that she occupied a dangerous position, but that such position was caused by defendant's negligence, is not open to the objection that it ignored her danger from the team and wagon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613–623; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 253.]

9. STREET RAILROADS ⟸113—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE—IMMATERIALITY.

In a pedestrian's action against a street railway company for injuries, where plaintiff was struck by the rear end of a car rounding a curve while she was walking between the car and a team and wagon, after she had left a place of safety on the street crossing, testimony of a traffic officer that the team and wagon had the right of way held immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 229–238; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 113.]

10. NEGLIGENCE ⟸100—GROSS NEGLIGENCE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE AS A DEFENSE.

Contributory negligence may be available as a defense to a claim founded upon gross negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 85; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 100.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Dooling, Judge.

Action by Carolyne Wood against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. From an order denying plaintiff a new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

Tanner, Taft & Odell, Tanner, Odell, Odell & Taft, and S. W. Odell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Action for personal injuries by Carolyne Wood, who, while attempting to cross West Ninth street, in the city of Los Angeles, was struck by an electric car belonging to the defendant corporation. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict for defendant was given. Plaintiff moved unsuccessfully for a new trial, and she has appealed from the order denying said motion.

Appellant insists that the verdict was not justified by the evidence, and she attacks numerous instructions as being so erroneous that the jurors were misled greatly to her prejudice. Error is also predicated upon the refusal of the court to give certain offered instructions.

The accident occurred at or near the corner of Spring and West Ninth streets. Defendant operates cars upon double tracks extending along Ninth street and curving into Spring street, extending thence north from Ninth along Spring street. The car in question, which is about 40 feet long, had traveled south on Spring street and was turning into Ninth. It was on the right-hand track, that is the westerly track on Spring street and the northerly track on Ninth street. According to plaintiff's own testimony, she was going north on Spring street and she attempted to cross Ninth street. Just before crossing she saw a team coming from the east, that is, from Spring street into Ninth street. She started to cross in front of the team, which was attached to a heavy wagon. Then for the first time she saw a car coming around the curve at a rapid rate.

"I then turned," she testified, "and thought I would go back onto the sidewalk, and the team had gotten so it was directly back of me and was prancing. * * * It was advancing perhaps a little."

When she started across the street Mrs. Wood was west of the curve and opposite the straight part of the track on Ninth street. The front end of the car passed without striking her. When she was struck the back part of the car hit her, and she was opposite the curved portion of the track. When the car approached she went east. She said:

"The wagon was about stopped when I first saw the street car, with the horses just prancing, if not stopped, moving very slowly. The horses were nearly to me when I first saw the car. I was headed north. I hadn't turned at that time to walk towards the curve. The position of the wagon was back of me; south of me. I was going north. The horses were a little east and a little south of my position when I first saw the car. The team, I guess, was three or four feet away from me. When I first saw the car about two feet—I don't think over two feet—about two feet east and three or four feet south of me. * * * I was opposite the straight part of the track, west of the curve at that time. The car was coming rather fast around the curve. * * * I stepped back before the front end of the car got to me, towards the south. The car's front end passed me. Then I started again and turned and walked east towards the rear end. I don't know whether after I started, walking towards the rear end of the car, the team advanced. The rear end of the car swung around and hit me. I faced the wagon; I turned and faced the wagon. My back was towards the car. It struck me along the left side. * * * I don't know whether that wagon stopped or went right along. * * * The car didn't hit the wagon at all."

Officer Bach, the policeman in charge of the traffic at that place, testified:

"I blew one blast of the whistle for the traffic to go east and west. That gives the West Ninth street car the right of way through there, and there was a gravel team going there with a pair of mules, and the car came down, and the front end threw the mules over one side, and they started up that side, and I looked around just in time to see this woman step in between them. When the back end come around she got caught in there; she couldn't get out. The horses kept going, and the car was going, so she didn't have any chance to get out, and I saw her roll around and fall down on the ground."

He also said:

"When I saw the plaintiff, she was standing on track No. B, as marked on the diagram, the track that the cars going east on Ninth and north on Spring street run. The next minute I saw her step in between the wagon and the car facing me, and the moment she stepped in between them I started right there, because I saw that she was going to be hit."

The motorman testified that upon receiving the proper signal he started the car around the curve. A wagon coming from East Ninth street across Spring street and about to enter West Ninth street got within about eight feet of him as he was making the curve, and then turned out to the left. When the front end of the car rounded the curve the motorman saw Mrs. Wood on the crossing. She was on the south track, and the fender of the car passed about four feet from her. He was making the curve slowly (at the rate of about three or four miles an hour), but the car was moving faster than the wagon. Just as the car turned the curve he received a signal (three bells) and stopped the car immediately. He looked around to see what was the matter, and observed the injured woman.

[1] Appellant's counsel contend that the motorman was negligent, in that, seeing the plaintiff on the curve and the prancing mules near by, he did not foresee an accident and stop his car instantly. The trouble with this contention is that he did not see her on the curve. She and he both testified that when the front end of the car passed her she was at the crossing opposite the straight track. The motorman testified that the team turned off to the left after coming near to the front end of the car at the beginning of the turn into Ninth street, and it does not appear that he saw the team or the wagon afterwards. The plaintiff, the conductor, and indeed all of the witnesses agree that when plaintiff was struck she was between the car and either the mules or the wagon. As the car was 42 feet long, and the team and wagon together less than half that length, obviously the motorman could not, without leaving his post, observe the mules nor the peril of the plaintiff just before the accident, nor could he see that Mrs. Wood had moved from her position opposite the straight tracks and had gone to a place near the curve where the rear end of the car in rounding the curve would strike her. While it is true that courts will not hold persons suddenly placed in peril to a nice selection of a place of safety nor blame them for lack of judgment under the stress of excitement and fear, nevertheless we cannot say that the jurors were not justified in believing that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in running towards the prancing mules and the wagon, which was almost at rest, and placing herself between the swinging car on the curve and the team or the wagon, instead of seeking safety in the opposite direction or by standing still.

[2] It nowhere appears that the motorman ever was in a position to observe that Mrs. Wood was in peril from the prancing animals. It was not the duty of the motorman to keep watch of pedestrians after the forward end of the car had passed them safely. In a case similar to this the Supreme Court of Kentucky said:

"This court has in a long line of cases held that it is the duty of those in charge of a street car to keep a lookout so as to avoid injuring those who may be crossing or upon the street in front of the moving car. But this rule has never been so extended as to require the employés in charge of the car to keep a lookout at corners and curves so as to prevent others using the street from colliding with the rear end of the car." Louisville Ry. Co. v. Ray, 124 S. W. 314.

The same rule substantially is stated in Riddle v. Forty-Second St., etc., Ry. Co., 173 N. Y. 331, 66 N. E. 22; Waters v. United Traction Co., 114 App. Div. 275, 99 N. Y. Sup. 763; Widmer v. West End St. Ry. Co., 158 Mass. 53, 32 N. E. 899 (a case very similar in its facts to the one at bar); Garvey v. Rhode Island Co., 26 R. I. 80, 58 Atl. 456; Hayden v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 76 Conn. 357, 56 Atl. 613; and South Covington, etc., Ry. Co. v. Besse, 108 S. W. 848, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 890. In Hamlin v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 783, 89 Pac. 1109, this court approved an instruction involving hypothetically a state of facts somewhat analogous to those which existed in this case. The jurors were told that if, when about a block away from the point of the accident, the motorman saw the plaintiff riding his bicycle parallel with the track and far enough away for the car to pass him in safety, and if, after giving warning, the motorman caused the front end of the car to be propelled safely past plaintiff, then the motorman was not negligent if the plaintiff altered his position with reference to the track so that the back step struck him. These cases furnish ample authority, if authority were needed, to sanction the ruling of the superior court that the verdict was supported by the evidence. The rule which permits a plaintiff who has negligently assumed a place of danger to recover damages depends upon actual knowledge of the danger by the person who inflicts the injury. Bennichsen v. Market St. Ry. Co., 149 Cal. 20, 84 Pac. 420; Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 514, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85; Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 232, 53 Pac. 651; Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 754, 134 Pac. 709; Tucker v. United Railroads (S. F. No. 6279) 154 Pac. 835, opinion filed January 17, 1916.

[3] The criticisms of the instructions are without substantial merit. An attack is made upon an instruction by which the jury was told in plain and direct language that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove the alleged negligence by a preponderance of the evidence. It was almost a verbatim copy of an instruction approved in Patterson v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 147 Cal. 182, 81 Pac. 531. It is said that the instruction was misleading because the jury might infer from it that plaintiff was required to produce other proof of negligence than the acts of the defendant's servant himself. There is nothing in the language of the instruction to justify such fear. It merely states a well-known rule in well-chosen and well-approved language. The same unmerited criticism is directed to another instruction by which the jurors were told that the burden was upon plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of evidence both defendant's negligence and the fact that it contributed directly or proximately to the injury.

[4] Nor was the jury misled because this instruction failed to consider the possible negligence of the driver of the mule team as one of the proximate causes. The jury was elsewhere fully charged on the subject of the concurring negligence of joint tort-feasors in an instruction offered by plaintiff.

[5] The jury was told that, where a street railway car is being operated with ordinary care, and the front end of it passes a pedestrian on the street, the motorman is not bound to assume that another vehicle to the rear of said car will be so carelessly driven as to crowd the pedestrian into the rear or any portion of said car. This instruction does not improperly assume that the wagon was behind the car if we interpret the expression "to the rear" as "toward the rear." The language is susceptible of such interpretation, and, as all of the evidence showed that the wagon was towards the rear of the street car at the time of the accident, the jury doubtless so understood it.

It was not error to instruct the jurors that, if they found that the front end of the car passed plaintiff in safety, and that afterwards she moved, and "either walked so close to the car that it struck her, or else that a team to the rear both of the plaintiff and of the car was driven in such a manner as to compel the plaintiff to walk in close to the track and hem her in between the team and the rear of the car, and she was struck as a result thereof," then and in that event plaintiff could not recover. This was in consonance with the rule declared in the Hamlin Case.

[6] One of the instructions, the giving of which is specified as error by plaintiff, was as follows:

"If from the evidence in this case you find that the plaintiff started to cross Ninth street, and that the front end of defendant's said car passed the said plaintiff, and that at the time it passed the said plaintiff the mule team was to the east of said plaintiff and to the east of the motorman, and that the said motorman had no reason to apprehend any danger to said plaintiff, and you thereafter find that the said rear end of the said car struck plaintiff, either by her voluntarily walking so close as to be in danger of being struck by the same, or by the mule team being carelessly driven so as to compel her to walk towards the car, then I charge you that the plaintiff cannot recover herein, and your verdict must be for the defendant."

Counsel say that the words "that said motorman had no reason to apprehend any danger to plaintiff" left to the judgment of the motorman, and not to the jury, a decision whether he apprehended danger or not. The instruction may not be properly so interpreted. The whole instruction has reference to the belief of the jurors and not that of the motorman. It simply means that, if from what the motorman knew and saw under the circumstances assumed by the instruction he had no reason to apprehend danger to the plaintiff, he could not be held responsible for her injuries. Of course, the decision regarding what he actually knew and saw was for the jurors upon full consideration of the evidence, and this prerogative was not taken from them by the instruction.

[7] Defendant's proposed instruction No. 11 given by the court was as follows:

"If from the evidence in this case you find that, as the front end of the defendant's car reached a point opposite where plaintiff was standing in the street, the said plaintiff was in a position of safety, and that she either remained in said position or stepped to the south and allowed the front end of the said car to pass her, and if you further find that at that time a mule team was behind the said plaintiff and behind the said motorman in charge of said car, and that plaintiff then turned and walked between the wagon and the end of the car towards the curve of the track, and was struck as a result thereof, then the court charges you that the plaintiff cannot recover herein, and your verdict must be for the defendant."

Appellant's counsel say that it was absurd to tell the jury that, if plaintiff "was in a position of safety and remained in said position," and was struck by the car, she could not recover. But the instruction has no such meaning or effect. The words "she either remained in said position or stepped to the south" clearly refer to the moment when she "allowed the front end of the car to pass her."

[8] Defendant's instruction No. 13 told the jury that it was not enough for plaintiff to show that she was in a dangerous position when crossing Ninth street, but "she must show that the dangerous position was caused by the negligence of the defendant." This instruction is attacked because it ignores her peril from the other vehicle and the prane-ing mules. But the instructions did not require the jury to find that the negligence of the defendant was the sole cause of Mrs. Wood's dangerous position before they could give judgment in her favor. It simply charged that, if she was not placed in any danger by reason of defendant's negligence, she could not recover. That is to say, defendant's act or omission must have had some causal connection with plaintiff's danger before said corporation could become liable. The correctness of this rule can scarcely be questioned.

But there would be little profit in following further in detail appellant's many criticisms regarding the instructions. We have examined the court's charge as a whole, and find that the jury was fairly and correctly instructed regarding the law applicable to the evidence.

[9] The police officer, Bach, who described the approach of the wagon drawn by mules and the attempt to drive the animals into Ninth street just as the car was turning into that thoroughfare, said: "I thought they [meaning the mules and wagon] should have had the right of way." The court struck out this testimony, and properly. It was not shown that the failure to give the team the right of way had anything to do with the accident. Therefore the testimony was entirely immaterial.

[10] It is argued that:

"So gross was the neglect of the motorman in failing to stop his car when he saw the plaintiff in a position of extreme danger * * * contributory negligence cannot be imputed to the plaintiff, even though she walked toward the rear end of the car in an effort to escape and thereby came in contact with the car when it swung around the corner."

Waniorek v. United Railroads, 17 Cal. App. 121, 118 Pac. 947, is cited in support of the argument.

In the first place, it was not shown, as we have seen, that the motorman saw Mrs. Wood in a position of great peril; in the second place, contributory negligence may be available as a defense to a claim founded upon gross negligence (Sego v. Southern Pacific Co., 137 Cal. 407, 70 Pac. 279; Tucker v. United Railroads, supra); and, finally, the citation does not justify the argument. The case of Waniorek v. United Railroads was one in which the evidence showed that plaintiff, who was a passenger on an electric car, was frightened by the blowing up and burning of a "controller," caused by the negligence of the corporation. He jumped from the car and was injured. The court refused to give an instruction to the effect that, if an ordinarily prudent person, under like circumstances, would have done as plaintiff did then, he was not guilty of contributory negligence in leaping from the car. This refusal was held error, but the District Court of Appeal quoted with approval from Thompson on Negligence the declaration that the rule is based upon estoppel and "proceeds upon the theory that the misconduct of the carrier has produced the erroneous action of the passenger, and that it does not therefore lie in the mouth of the carrier to defend an action for damages on the ground of such erroneous action thereby taking advantage of his own wrong." The facts of the two cases are so strikingly dissimilar that the Waniorek Case is of no value as an authority in deciding this appeal.

The order denying appellant's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

171 Cal. 795

STEIL v. SUN INS. OFFICE OF LONDON. SAME v. LONDON ASSUR. CORP. SAME v. NORTHERN ASSUR. CO. (S. F. 6752.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1916.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐867—REVIEW—MATTERS REVIEWABLE.

Where the trial court, in granting a new trial, stated in its order that it was denied so far as the sufficiency of the evidence was concerned, that ground is excluded from consideration on appeal, but the appellate court may review any other ground, though new trial was denied on such ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3476–3486; Dec. Dig. ⇐867.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐854—REVIEW—ORDERS.

Though the trial court granted a new trial on an erroneous ground, yet if the new trial was properly granted, its action will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3403, 3404, 3408–3424, 3427–3430; Dec. Dig. ⇐854.]

3. INSURANCE ⇐329 — FIRE POLICIES — ACTIONS.

Where a fire policy provided that it should become void if the hazard should be increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured, or if any change other than by death of the insured takes place in the interest, title, or possession, the reference to possession refers to the person having possession, rather than the location of the property, and a change in location does not avoid the policy under that provision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 823, 824; Dec. Dig. ⇐329.]

4. INSURANCE ⇐327—FIRE POLICIES—CONSTRUCTION.

Where a fire policy declared that the goods were insured while located and contained in a described building and not elsewhere, it does not cover a loss of the goods by fire while they were out of the building; but, as the insured is not prohibited from removing the goods, a removal merely suspends the policy, which may be revived upon return of the goods to the building.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 792, 793; Dec. Dig. ⇐327.]

5. INSURANCE ⇐388—FIRE POLICIES—ESTOPPEL.

A fire policy insured goods while in a described building and not elsewhere. The insured removed them, notifying the insurer's agents of that fact, and they made no objection. Held that while ordinarily an insurer's failure to act on obtaining knowledge of facts which avoid or forfeit a policy operates as a waiver, the mere failure of insured's agents to object to the removal does not operate as a waiver and extend the insurance to the new location, there being no prohibition against removal and a removal temporarily suspending a policy; hence to render the insurer liable there must have been some acts creating an estoppel or waiver.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1026, 1027, 1030, 1035, 1040, 1057; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃388.]

6. INSURANCE ⊂⊃654 — FIRE POLICIES — ACTIONS.

Where the insured claimed that the insurer did not object to his removal of the goods covered to another building and consented that the policy apply to such premises, though there was no indorsement on the policy, evidence that the hazard was less at the new premises is admissible on the question whether the insurer had consented to a continuation of the risk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1677, 1680, 1681, 1683–1685; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃654.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Actions by Henry Steil against the Sun Insurance Office of London, the London Assurance Corporation, and the Northern Assurance Company, which were consolidated. There were verdicts for plaintiff, and, defendants being granted a new trial, plaintiff appeals, the causes being consolidated. Order affirmed.

Peter F. Dunne, C. W. Durbrow, and C. H. Wilson, all of San Francisco, for appellant. T. C. Van Ness, T. C. Van Ness, Jr., Chickering & Gregory, and Winfield Dorn, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Henry Steil had three policies of insurance covering goods situated in the Chronicle building in San Francisco, one issued by Sun Insurance Office of London, one by London Assurance Corporation, and the third by Northern Assurance Company. In January, 1906, he removed the goods to the Shreve building. He claims that this was done with the knowledge and consent of each of said companies, and that they agreed that the removal should not terminate the insurance provided by the policies. On April 19, 1906, the goods were destroyed by the great fire of that date. The companies refused to pay the loss, and thereupon he began three actions, entitled as above, against the respective companies, to recover the amounts due by the respective policies. These actions were consolidated for the purposes of the trial, the issues being practically identical in character. There was a trial by jury, and a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff in each case. Thereupon the defendants, respectively, moved for a new trial. The motion was granted. The plaintiff appealed from the order in each case. By agreement of the parties and with the consent of this court the appeals have also been consolidated, and are presented by a single transcript embracing the record in all the cases.

The order granting a new trial states that the court finds that the evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict, that the new trial was granted because the court was of the opinion that it had erred in giving two instructions to the jury set out in full in the order, and that it was denied with respect to all other grounds presented in support of the motion. The instructions referred to are as follows:

"(1) If you find from the evidence in this case that the assured notified, or caused to be notified, the defendants, or any of them, of the change of location of his goods, wares, and merchandise from the Chronicle building to the Shreve building, and that said defendant or defendants so notified remained silent and failed to object and cancel or rescind the contract of insurance and return the unearned premium, then I charge you that said defendant or defendants so notified, failing in this regard, is estopped from denying that its policy of insurance was in force and covered the goods, wares, and merchandise of the plaintiff in the Shreve building at the time of the destruction of the same by fire on the 18th day of April, 1906.

"(2) I charge you that an insurance company waives or is estopped from asserting a violation of the terms of an insurance contract such as is involved in a change of location of the assured property, if the company, on being notified of such violation or change of location, remains silent and fails to object or fails to declare a forfeiture or cancel or rescind the contract within a reasonable time, returning the unearned premium."

[1] Where the trial court, in granting a new trial, states in the order that it is denied so far as the sufficiency of the evidence is concerned, that particular ground is excluded from our consideration upon appeal from such order. With respect to any other ground advanced in support of the motion, however, the decision of the court below that the new trial was refused with respect to any one of them is not binding upon this court and, upon appeal, we may consider such question.

[2] If we find that the court below erred in granting the new trial, so far as the grounds upon which that court based the order are concerned, but conclude that the new trial should have been granted because of some other ruling on a question of law, which the trial court believed was not erroneous, we will affirm the order. Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124; Shanklin v. Hall, 100 Cal. 28, 34 Pac. 636; Thompson v. California, etc., Co., 148 Cal. 38, 82 Pac. 367; Weisser v. S. P. Co., 148 Cal. 428, 83 Pac. 439, 7 Ann. Cas. 636; Bresee v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 149 Cal. 134, 85 Pac. 152, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1059; Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 508, 123 Pac. 288. The respondents claim that there were such other rulings. The main questions, however, are those involved in the instructions aforesaid. A preliminary statement of the facts and of the law relating to them is necessary.

[3] The policies are all in the same form, and we will speak of them as if there were but one. In what may be termed the "insurance clause," the policy declares that the company insures the goods "while located and contained as described herein, and not elsewhere," the place described being the Chronicle building. The description of the goods was immediately followed by the qualifying phrase, "all while contained in the Chronicle building." The policy provided that it could be canceled at any time "at the request of the insured, or by the company by giving five days' notice of such cancellation," and that in case of such cancellation the unearned premium should be returned on the surrender of the policy. It further provided that the policy should become void "if the hazard be increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured, * * * or if any change, other than by the death of the insured, takes place in the interest, title or possession of the subject of insurance (except change of occupants without increase of hazard)," and the usual clause that no agent of the company had power to waive any provision of the policy, except by indorsement on the policy or by writing attached thereto. We think the above-quoted passage, relating to a change of "possession" of the goods, refers to the person having the possession, rather than to the location of the property, and it does not make the policy void where the only change relating to the possession is a mere change in the location of the goods by removal to another building.

About two months before the removal of Steil to the Shreve building a fire occurred in the Chronicle building which damaged his goods. This loss and the amount thereof due from each of the defendants was in process of adjustment at the time of the removal. The evidence on the question whether Steil notified the defendant companies of his removal to the Shreve building of the goods covered by the policy is in sharp conflict. That for the plaintiff tended to show that he had presented the policies to the defendants for the purpose of having the consent of the companies to the removal indorsed thereon, that owing to the pending settlement of the previous loss, he declined to leave the policies with the companies to have such indorsement made, and that he was thereupon informed by the agents of each of the defendants that it would be all right and that the goods were covered in the Shreve building, as before the removal. The facts that none of the companies have objected to the removal, or have given notice that the goods were not covered in the new place, are not disputed. It was to this condition of the evidence that the above instructions were addressed.

[4] As above stated, there is no provision in the policy that the removal of the goods should operate to annul it. The provision in the insurance clause that the goods were insured while contained in the Chronicle building, and not elsewhere, coupled with the qualified description, operated to relieve the company of further obligation, upon the removal of the goods from said building, with respect to the goods so removed. The qualification was a part of the description of the things insured. They were not merely the goods, but were the goods while contained in the Chronicle building. A loss of the goods by fire while they were out of the building would not be a loss covered by the policy, and the insured would not be liable therefor. Mawhinney v. Southern I. Co., 98 Cal. 184, 32 Pac. 945, 20 L. R. A. 87; Benicia A. Works v. Germania I. Co., 97 Cal. 468, 32 Pac. 512; Slinkard v. Manchester, etc., Co., 122 Cal. 595, 55 Pac. 417. This language of the insurance clause did not constitute a warranty, either express or implied, by Steil, that he would not remove the goods. The company had no occasion to demand of Steil a warranty against removal. Such removal would not increase its obligation, but would relieve it therefrom. The insurance clause completely protected it against a loss occurring to the goods in any other place. The language does not imply a warranty. Its effect is merely that the goods were insured only while kept in the building designated. There being no condition or covenant against removal, the result would be that while such removal would, for the time being, terminate the risk incurred by the company, it would not avoid the policy. If the goods were subsequently returned, the company would be liable, as before, for a loss occurring to them while in the building.

[5] In order to continue the insurance upon the goods, or, in other words, to carry it to the goods in the new location, something more was required than a mere notification by the insured to the insurer of the fact that the goods were, or were about to be, removed. That fact alone would only suspend the insurance risk. The insurer must be informed, or be given good cause to believe, that the party insured desired to have the insurance on the goods continued in the new place, that he wished a modification of the policy to make it cover the goods in the new location, and must then, by positive act, or by failure to act, cause the insured to believe that the insurer consented to such transfer or modification, and that the goods were covered by the policy. Something in the nature of a new agreement, either express, or implied from conduct or words, or created by estoppel, was necessary. The instructions informed the jury that a notification of removal, followed by silence and failure to cancel the policy and return the unearned premium, would operate to estop the insurer from denying that it had consented to the removal and had agreed that the policy should cover the goods notwithstanding such removal. They should have contained the additional premise that the assured, upon such notification, requested that the policy be transferred to the new location, or that the insurance be continued notwithstanding the removal, or something to indicate that the notification was given under circumstances which would have given the insurer reasonable cause to believe that the assured desired or expected the matter to be so adjusted. The evidence concerning the notification referred to all indicated that such desire and expectation existed and was made known to the assured, but the instructions omitted all reference thereto. In this respect they were defective, incomplete, and possibly misleading.

It is stated in the briefs that the instructions were based on a passage from Cooley's Briefs on Insurance (vol. 3, p. 2665) regarding "the effect of an insurer's failure to act on obtaining knowledge of facts which either avoid or forfeit a policy," and saying:

"The weight of authority supports the proposition that an insurance company waives or is estopped to assert a violation of the terms of an insurance contract if the company, on being notified of the violation, remains silent and fails to object or to declare a forfeiture, or cancel or rescind the contract, within a reasonable time. This rule is, no doubt, in most cases based on the theory that it is a breach of good faith on the part of an insurance company to remain silent and inactive on notice of a breach, and to retain the unearned premiums, and so lead the insured to believe that his insurance contract is regarded as valid notwithstanding the breach."

This rule is doubtless applicable in all cases where the facts brought to the insurer's knowledge show some violation of the terms of the policy which, either by law or because of some provision of the policy itself, operates to avoid or forfeit the policy. As we have shown, the removal of the goods neither forfeited nor avoided the policy, and was not a violation of any of its express provisions. Some cases are cited which it is claimed support the position that a mere knowledge of removal, under such a policy, requires prompt action by the insurer by way of rescission or cancellation and return of the unearned premium, if it does not consent to the removal and to a continuation of the insurance in the new location. These are Pollock v. German Co., 127 Mich. 460, 86 N. W. 1017; Williamsburg v. Cary, 83 Ill. 453; Ohio, etc., Co. v. Burget, 65 Ohio St. 119, 61 N. E. 712, 55 L. R. A. 825, 87 Am. St. Rep. 596; McIntyre v. Liverpool, etc., Co., 131 Mo. App. 88, 110 S. W. 604; Shutts v. Milwaukee, etc., Co., 159 Mo. App. 436, 141 S. W. 15; Henschel v. Oregon, etc., Co., 4 Wash. 476, 30 Pac. 735, 31 Pac. 332, 765; and Maryland, etc., Co. v. Gusdorf, 43 Md. 506. An examination of the opinions in these cases shows that they did not involve instructions so bare of detail as those here given. In each of them the law was predicated upon a statement of facts which included a request, express or implied, by the assured to continue the insurance described in the policy, notwithstanding the removal of the goods insured to a place not covered by the terms of the policy. In the Ohio case, the policy provided that a removal of the goods without the consent of the insurer would forfeit the insurance. They are therefore not authority for the proposition that bare knowledge, or a mere notice of the fact of removal, followed by silence and inaction, will estop the company and carry the insurance to the new place. We are of the opinion that the court below was correct in its conclusion that these instructions do not fully state the law. We cannot say that its order was an abuse of discretion.

[6] It was not error to admit evidence that the Shreve building was a less hazardous location than the Chronicle building. It was material upon the disputed question whether or not the companies' agents had consented to continue the risk in the new place, showing that it was not against their interest, and, consequently, that it was more probable that they would consent than if the risk had been thereby increased. It tended to corroborate the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses as to such consent. There are no other points that require notice.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLER, J.

172 Cal. 1

RECTOR v. LEWIS et al. (L. A. 3642.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1916.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃89 — CONTRACTS—RESCISSION—DELAY.

Where no time was fixed for performance by plaintiff of certain agreements with reference to the exchange of lands, unexplained delay from April 10th to June 11th warranted defendants in rescinding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 148, 149, 151, 156; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃89.]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⊂⊃130—JURISDICTION—RELIEF TO DEFENDANTS.

Where plaintiff filed suit for specific performance of a contract for the exchange of lands, he could not complain that a court of equity, having taken jurisdiction, granted relief to defendants, who cross-complained, asserting rescission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 424, 425; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃130.]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃89 — CONTRACTS—RESCISSION.

Where defendants rescinded a contract for the exchange of lands and personalty on the ground of plaintiff's delay in performance, their right to rescind is not affected because it was agreed that defendants should pay plaintiff a small sum of money in respect to some of the personal property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 148, 149, 151, 156; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃89.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1073 — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

In such case the rendition of a judgment in favor of defendants, where an accounting was provided for, was harmless, though defendants were bound to make a payment to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4240–4247; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃1073.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by J. L. Rector against Wellington J. Lewis and another, who cross-complained. From a judgmet for defendants and an order denying new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Smith, Miller & Phelps and M. M. Meyers, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Geo. L. Sanders, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued for specific performance of an alleged contract for the exchange of real property. Defendants answered, pleading a rescission of the contract after breach thereof by the plaintiff, and by cross-complaint averred that plaintiff was wrongfully withholding their property from them. They prayed for restitution of the premises, for an award by way of damages, and for rent. The defendants were successful both in their defense and in their action upon the cross-complaint. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The important findings requiring discussion on this appeal were to the effect that plaintiff had not surrendered to defendants or to either of them the property which was to be exchanged for the realty which is the subject of this suit; that by means of misrepresentation plaintiff had obtained entrance upon the property of defendants in Los Angeles county on February 15, 1912, and that, on the 17th day of the same month, by threats and intimidation, he had compelled them to yield possession of the premises to him, a possession still retained by him at the time of the action; that after frequent vain demands upon plaintiff for performance of the contract defendants rescinded it on the 11th day of June, 1912; that plaintiff during his occupancy had made certain improvements on the land which were equal to the value of the use thereof exclusive of the crops grown thereon; and that up to the time of the receipt by him of the notice of recission of the contract plaintiff had not attempted in good faith to carry out the terms of the agreement with defendants. An interlocutory decree was given following these findings and ordering an accounting between the parties with reference to the personal property.

The contract was evidenced by two certain writings. By the first of these W. J. Lewis agreed to transfer the land in question, located in Los Angeles county, together with all the personal property thereon (except certain named chattels) for $15,000, the consideration being certain lands in Nebraska, subject to an existing lease continuing from March 1, 1912. The land in Nebraska was to be subject to two mortgages of $1,000 each, and the property in California to a mortgage of $3,000. The closing paragraph of this written instrument was as follows:

"Time being the essence of this agreement, it is hereby agreed by both parties hereto that said Lewis is to look at the Nebraska land within 30 days, and upon his approval within that period of time all papers appertaining to both parties' lands are to be placed in escrow with Los Angeles Abstract & Trust Company, 325 So. Hill St., Los Angeles, Cal., which company will deliver to each party the certificates of title and complete the deal for all concerned.

"W. J. Lewis.
"Beulah V. Lewis.
"J. L. Rector."

This agreement was dated January 11, 1912. The court found that on January 23, 1912, the defendants placed in escrow all of the documents so required to be deposited by them according to the agreement.

On April 10, 1912, the plaintiff and defendant, W. J. Lewis, signed the following writing:

"It is agreed that the adjustment of all matters pertaining to personal property which should have been left on place sold by Mr. W. J. Lewis to Mr. J. L. Rector leaves a balance due of $10.00 from Mr. Lewis to Mr. Rector. Mr. Rector agrees to procure for Mr. Lewis a written lease of a certain 240 acres in Nebraska and turn same over to Mr. Lewis, said lease to be duly executed by M. S. Johnson, G. I. Johnson, and Charles Johnson, lease running from March 1, 1912, to March 1, 1913, Mr. Lewis to be entitled to interests of Mr. Rector in and to all crops on any of the Nebraska land included in the transaction as of the date of Jan. 23/12."

On June 5, 1912, by a formal letter the defendants offered to complete the transaction by delivering to Rector a proper grant deed to the property belonging to them, together with a certificate of title and all other papers to be by them delivered. The closing paragraph of this letter was as follows:

"And we hereby demand that you carry out your part of said escrow agreement immediately and without any further delay upon your part."

The letter of rescission signed by both defendants and dated June 11, 1912, was based upon the failure of plaintiff to carry out the terms and conditions of the escrow agreement.

Appellant's first contention is that, as no time was specified in the second writing within which he was to secure a tenant and execute the transfer of the property in Nebraska, he was entitled to a reasonable time for doing those things, and that the time allowed was, under the circumstances, most unreasonable. He calls attention to the fact that on July 8, 1912, he tendered to defendants warranty deeds to the Nebraska property from himself and wife, abstracts of title, insurance policies, and two leases, one between himself and one Sheffield, dated February 15, 1912, and another signed by himself and G. I., M. S., and C. C. Johnson, dated June 1, 1912, for a portion of the land in Nebraska. It appears that one of the leases—that signed by Sheffield—was not contemplated in the agreement of April 10, 1912. Therefore, under appellant's own theory, the belated offer does not fill the exact measure of the two agreements.

[1] But upon broader principles we cannot say that the chancellor erred in determining that the delay from April 10, 1912 (the date of the supplemental agreement), to June 11th of the same year (the date of the rescission) was unreasonable and that such delay, coupled with the other facts and circumstances, supported a finding that Mr. Rector had not, prior to June 11, 1912, attempted in good faith to carry out the terms of the contract. It was in evidence that appellant, without giving anything in return had, on February 17, 1912, by threats and intimidation, compelled defendants to yield possession of their property to him. The court found that the testimony on this point was true. It was also in evidence that respondents wrote numerous letters to Mr. Rector requesting compliance on his part with the contract, but that no results were obtained. These circumstances might well have justified the court in the finding of lack of good faith.

[2-4] The judgment of restitution was fully in accord with the pleading and proof of the cross-complaint. Having invoked the jurisdiction of a court of equity, and that court having determined that he is not entitled to specific performance of the contract of exchange, the appellant may not well complain that his dispossession of the land was unwarranted. He reminds us that there were other things to be done besides the passing of deeds between him and Mr. and Mrs. Lewis and instances the circumstance that the agreement of modification recites the obligation on the part of the respondents to pay $10 due on "the adjustment of all matters pertaining to personal property." Respondents were not obligated to pay the $10 as a prerequisite to rescission of the contract or to the maintaining of their suit by cross-complaint. This money was to be paid as part of the consummation of the transfer of the property. It was not an independent debt or a partial payment on the contract which Mr. and Mrs. Lewis were bound to restore before they could seek equity. It was in evidence that Mr. Rector had given the respondents absolutely nothing in return for the use of the land prior to the rescission of the contract. Therefore the item of $10 must have been merely an estimated charge which would accrue upon the final consummation of the agreement to exchange the two parcels of land. In any view of the matter appellant will not be harmed because there is to be an accounting between the parties to this suit.

Appellant attacks the cross-complaint as insufficient because in itself it did not present facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the plaintiff. It is conceded by respondents that such facts must be pleaded in a cross-complaint, but appellant's counsel do not point out the particulars in which the pleading is vulnerable. They content themselves with the general statement that sufficient facts are not alleged. They do not give their reasons for their belief that the cross-complaint should be ignored. We have examined it, and agree with the learned judge of the superior court who overruled plaintiff's demurrer to the cross-complaint. Under the circumstances we do not feel called upon to give in detail our reasons for such agreement.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

172 Cal. 31

GINTY et al. v. OCEAN SHORE R. CO. et al.

(S. F. 7080.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 3, 1916. Rehearing Denied March 2, 1916.)

1. RAILROADS ⟸195 — FORECLOSURE OF TRUST DEED—PURCHASE BY BONDHOLDERS—REORGANIZATION COMMITTEE — CHANGE OF PLAN.

Defendant, a railroad company, had issued bonds secured by deed of trust. Default having been made in the payment of interest on the bonds, the trustee declared both principal and interest due, as was provided for in the deed of trust, and instituted foreclosure proceedings. Under a provision in the trust deed that the bonds might be used to buy in the property on foreclosure, the bondholders appointed a committee with whom the bonds were deposited under an agreement whereby the committee, in its discretion, could purchase the property at the sale and reorganize the railway on any plan deemed practicable "and to do anything they may deem to be for the best interests of the bondholders." The property having been so purchased, the committee announced a definite plan for the organization of a new corporation with a capital stock of $9,000,000, with provisions for bond issues to meet all outstanding obligations and to be issued to the previous bondholders in discharge of the original bonds. The scheme having proved impracticable, and the property being in immediate danger of resale by new lienholders, the committee adopted and put in execution a new plan whereby a new corporation was organized, with a capital stock equaling the amount of the original bond issue; the committee conveying all the property of the old company to the new corporation for the latter's agreement to issue its stock to those whom the committee might name, and causing the issuance of the stock to the old bondholders in amounts identical with the face value of their holdings. This action was brought by several original bondholders to enforce the committee's first plan as a trust and to have the second reorganization declared void on the ground that the committee's first plan became a fixed and irrevocable trust upon its declaration. Held that, upon the failure of the first plan, the second reorganization was valid under the committee's authority to do anything it might deem to be for the best interests of the bondholders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 656–658, 660; Dec. Dig. ⟸195.]

2. RAILROADS ⟸195—BONDHOLDERS' SUIT—COMPLAINT—AMENDMENT.

Where a party plaintiff to such action had not deposited any bonds with the committee or signed the agreement, it appearing that she had bought her bonds at a pledgee's sale, the bonds having been pledged by the committee under a special agreement with a bank, from which she bought, her motion for leave to amend, so as to set up her purchase of the bonds, was properly denied, where such amendment did not allege that the bonds had ever been deposited by the pledgee bank or by her with the committee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 650–658, 660; Dec. Dig. ⟸195.]

3. RAILROADS ⟸195—REORGANIZING RAILROAD—BONDHOLDERS' SUIT—PARTIES PLAINTIFF—"PARTY SIMILARLY SITUATED."

In a bondholders' suit to enforce a railway reorganization agreement and to prevent the reorganization committee from changing the plan of reorganization, a bondholder, who had not signed the agreement or deposited her bonds with the committee in conformity therewith, but who had purchased her bonds at a pledgee's sale of bonds which the committee had pledged to a bank, was not a proper party plaintiff to such action, since she was not "a party similarly situated" with the other plaintiffs within Code Civ. Proc. § 382, providing for joinder of parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 650–658, 660; Dec. Dig. ⟸195.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by John Ginty and others against the Ocean Shore Railroad Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, Edward Lynch, and Stratton, Kaufman & Torchiana, all of San Francisco, for appellants. W. W. Kaufman, of San Francisco, specially appearing for appellant Folger. J. Howard Smith, in pro per. Edward J. McCutchen and A. Crawford Greene, both of San Francisco (McCutchen, Olney & Willard, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to enforce a trust, and in enforcing it to have declared void the reorganization of the Ocean Shore Railway Company into the Ocean Shore Railroad Company, defendant. Added as defendants to the corporation are the members of the reorganization committee, the trustees who effectuated that reorganization. John Ginty, plaintiff, is or was a bondholder of the Ocean Shore Railway Company. After the commencement of this action he was joined by other bondholders in seeking the relief indicated. The court in equity found against all of the contentions of the plaintiffs and gave its decree for defendants. From that decree this appeal has been taken and all of the evidence is presented for consideration. This brief indication of the nature and result of the action it is necessary to follow with a detailed statement of fact.

The Ocean Shore Railway Company was organized as a railroad corporation under the laws of the state of California. It purposed to construct, build, and operate a railroad extending along the Ocean Shore from San Francisco to Santa Cruz. It was capitalized for $5,000,000, and all of its capital stock was subscribed; the stock owners having paid on their holdings approximately $2,250,000. It had also issued its bonds in the sum of $5,000,000 under a deed of trust executed to the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco. These bonds had been sold to and were owned by many persons. In November, 1909, the company defaulted in the payment of interest upon its bond coupons, and again defaulted on May 1, 1910. The Mercantile Trust Company, pursuant to the provisions of the deed of trust, then declared the principal and interest of the bonds to be due, and on June 7, 1910, gave notice of sale in accordance with the provisions of the trust deed empowering it so to do. Prior to this date (in December, 1909), a creditors' bill was filed by the Baldwin Locomotive Works in the federal Circuit Court against the railway company. Answer thereto was filed and a receiver was appointed by the court. He took charge of the railroad property on that date. Following the notice of sale so given by the Mercantile Trust Company, the stockholders and creditors of the company (other than the bondholders) caused the Mercantile Trust Company to be made a party to the action in the federal court. It obtained from that court authority to proceed with its sale under terms and conditions expressed in the court's order. At this time the financial and physical condition of the railway company and of those interested in it was, roughly stated, as follows: At the time when the sale was effectuated there was chargeable against the property the comparatively small sum of $135,000, representing the expenditures of the receiver. The stockholders had paid in about $2,250,000 upon their subscriptions of $5,000,000 capital stock. There was owing to the bondholders $5,000,000, and there was owing to other creditors about $2,250,000, approximately $500,000 of which was unsecured. The distance between San Francisco and Santa Cruz by way of the railroad is 83 miles. Part of the road outward from the two termini had been constructed, but there was an uncompleted gap of 26 miles. The road was unprofitable, in the sense that its earnings could not make a fair, or indeed any, return upon the money invested in it.

Under the terms of the trust deed, the bondholders were empowered to use their bonds on the sale of the properties in payment of the purchase price. The usual procedure in such cases followed. The bondholders were called together to enable them in combination to use the purchasing power of their bonds effectively and to take steps looking to the reorganization of the road, in the event that the organized bondholders should become the purchasers. On July 22, 1910, at a meeting of the bondholders a committee of five was selected to represent the body. The members of that committee are the defendants in this case, saving that upon the original committee was A. C. Kains, whose place was later taken by Walter S. Martin.

On July 29, 1910, the committee approved the form of an agreement under which the bondholders of the railway company should be called upon to deposit their bonds with the committee. On August 1st following, this agreement was sent by the committee to every bondholder of the Ocean Shore Railway Company, with an explanatory letter. This agreement of July 29th, as it was called and may for convenience be called, is one of the important documents in the controversy, and therefore requires further exposition. Its importance arises from the facts that it was the first and only document signed by the depositing bondholders and (standing alone) defines in full the powers and trusts upon which the committee acted for the bondholders. It declares its purpose to be the purchase of the properties of the railway company by and on behalf of the bondholders. Under it the depositing bondholders were to place their bonds with the Union Trust Company, "there to remain for a period of nine months from this date unless sooner withdrawn and used in accordance with the terms of this agreement." When bonds to the face value of $2,500,000 or upwards had been deposited, then such deposited bonds could be used by the committee in its discretion "for the purpose of applying the same upon the purchase price of the property of said Ocean Shore Railway Company so to be sold." Furthermore, it expressly authorized the committee "to proceed with a reorganization of the said Ocean Shore Railway on any plan deemed practicable and to do anything they may deem to be for the best interests of" the bondholders. Expenses incurred or disbursements made by the committee "shall be repaid to them ratably," the committee, however, serving without compensation. And finally it was provided that:

"There shall be no personal liability or responsibility attached to the signers of this instrument,—that is to say there shall be nothing hereby implied or obligated by signature other than the power of the disposition of the bonds alone, said bonds only being held for any expenditures and not the owners thereof."

The sale sanctioned and ordered by the federal court fixed the minimum selling price at $1,035,000, but required the payment upon the fall of the hammer of $166,000 cash in payment of preferred liens under the receiver's certificates. It was incumbent upon the committee, therefore, to be prepared to pay on the sale that amount of cash. Moreover, under the terms of the deed of trust, the bondholders who did not deposit would be entitled to be paid in cash on their bonds an amount equal to the amount credited upon the deposited bonds which were used in the purchase of the properties, and it was distinctly declared in the agreement of July 29th that only the bonds of the depositing bondholders should be liable for all necessary expenditures. It was important to the committee then to secure the deposit of as many bonds as possible, as every bond deposited decreased proportionately the amount which would have to be paid in money to the non-depositing bondholders. (This narrative must here be interrupted to direct attention to the fact that November 3, 1910, becomes a date of consequence in this consideration because upon that date the committee adopted a plan of reorganization, which appellants contend absolutely concluded and bound them in all their future proceedings, and which plan of organization admittedly is not the plan which the committee finally put into effect.) The problems confronting the committee were: First, to secure money sufficient for the cash payment to be made on the sale; and, second, to secure the deposit of as many bonds as possible. Without the money they could do nothing, and to the securing of this the committee first bent its efforts. They estimated that, besides the $166,000 payable under the court's order, about $50,000 more would be immediately required for the care and preservation of the railway properties. No bank or other financial institution would advance any money upon the security of the deposited bonds, and as a last expedient the members of the committee secured an agreement, called the "Underwriter's Agreement," whereby their friends pledged their personal credit in stated amounts aggregating $500,000, agreeing to pay the committee their respective proportions of this amount to enable it to meet the expenses necessarily incurred in the purchase and reorganization of the road. The five members of the committee personally pledged themselves in this agreement to the sum of $130,000. This Underwriter's Agreement was assigned by the committee to the Union Trust Company of San Francisco, and upon its security that institution advanced to the committee amounts aggregating $250,000, agreeing that if necessary it would make further advancements up to $400,000. Additionally the committee was called upon to pledge and did pledge as security for this loan all of the bonds which had been deposited, and finally a deed of trust to all the properties which it purchased at the sale. Thus by these efforts the committee overcame its immediate financial difficulties. Touching its second problem, that of securing the bonds, prior to November 3d bonds to the amount of $2,695,000 had been deposited. By January 17, 1911, the date of the sale, a total of $4,785,000 worth of bonds out of the entire $5,000,000 issue had been deposited, all of the depositors signing, and signing only the agreement of July 29th.

Besides the exigency of these matters to which we have adverted and which were vital to the accomplishment of the committee's design of purchasing and reorganizing, the equities of others were from time to time pressed upon the attention of the committee. Thus in September, 1910, the principal stockholders of the railway company appeared before the committee and suggested that "some recognition be given to stockholders and unsecured creditors." Again, on September 14th, the stockholders appearing before the committee expressed the hope that "some agreement could be made by which the claims of stockholders and unsecured creditors as well as those of the bondholders might be recognized." At a meeting of September 21st the firm of Lilly & Heins, claiming to be preferred creditors, appeared and requested that the committee agree to put in a protective bid for the property of at least $3,000,000. The minutes show that the creditors "were told that, while there was a moral equity in their claims, no plan of reorganization had yet been adopted and the committee was not in a position to make any promises." Plans of reorganization were proposed and considered. On September 3d such a proposed plan was prepared by Mr. Bradley of the committee. On September 23d another such plan was tendered by Mr. Martin, who subsequently succeeded Mr. Kains on the committee. On September 30th a plan similar to that proposed by Mr. Martin was adopted by the committee. On this date Mr. Bradley of the committee stated:

"That in view of the approaching date of sale he considered it proper to formally present a plan that had been informally discussed by the committee, and that he would recommend to the approval of the committee the following plan of reorganization, in the event of the bondholders purchasing the road."

After discussion the committee "resolved the foregoing proposed plan for reorganization of the Ocean Shore Railway Company be adopted as the plan of this committee." Finally, on November 3d, the committee in like manner adopted another plan, which the appellants in the court below and here contend defined and circumscribed the committee's powers and limited its activities to the effectuation of the adopted plan, with such modifications and with such modifications only as might be necessary to accomplish the main purposes, but not permitting any radical departure from those expressed purposes. The minutes show that this plan, like the plan of September 30th, was adopted. It in terms provided for the organization of a corporation with a capital stock of $9,000,000 and a bonded indebtedness of $9,000,000. Of this bonded indebtedness of $9,000,000, there was to be $3,500,000 of first mortgage bonds; $3,300,000 of these bonds were to be used to complete and equip the road. The remaining $200,000 of these bonds were to be deposited in the United States Circuit Court to secure and pay the preferred claims of creditors. A second mortgage bond issue of $5,500,000 was to be made, $5,000,000 of this being used to take up by way of exchange the outstanding $5,000,000 of first mortgage bonds, and the remaining $500,000 of these bonds were to be used to pay delinquent interest on the first mortgage bonds, and should this sum of $500,000 not be sufficient for the purpose the old bondholders were to accept common stock at par in payment of the deficiency. Still further, $500,000 preferred stock was to be issued and used to pay the claims of unsecured creditors, estimated at that time to be $425,000. Finally, the $8,500,000 worth of common stock was to be issued and was to be disposed of as follows: $425,000 of it was to be given as a bonus to those persons providing the money enabling the committee to finance the cash bid secured by the Underwriter's Agreement; $2,875,000 was to go as a bonus to aid in selling the first mortgage bonds; $1,375,000 was to pay coupons upon the second mortgage bonds; and the final $3,825,000 of this common stock was to be prorated amongst the stockholders of the old company. Finally the plan provided:

"It is understood that the committee reserves to itself and shall have the right to change any of the provisions of this proposed plan to meet conditions as they arise, and the committee shall be the sole judge of the necessity and propriety thereof within the meaning of this clause."

A sale was so had upon January 17, 1911. The properties were purchased by the committee for the amount fixed in the court's order, the committee being the only bidder at the sale. On February 1, 1911, the sale was confirmed. On February 9, 1911, the committee executed a declaration of trust which set forth in full the agreement of July 29th, and declared that the committee held the properties purchased under that agreement.

From this time forth the committee busied itself actively in the matter of reorganization. But the undisputed testimony is that all the overtures of the members of the committee looking to reorganization upon or along the lines of the plan of November 3d were utterly rejected by the financiers to whom they were submitted. They said: "Ridiculous! We cannot consider it at all." No outside capital could be allured into the enterprise. And if confirmation be needed to the abundance of direct testimony establishing this, it is found in the fact that, when the reorganization was effected by creating a corporation capitalized for $5,000,000, the bondholders receiving stock in proportion to their bond holdings, an effort was made by this committee to place $700,000 bonds of this corporation—a corporation owning all of the property of the road, free from debt—and the committee with its best efforts was able to secure subscriptions for only about one-quarter of the proposed issue. Having earnestly and unsuccessfully attempted to effect the reorganization in accordance with the plan of November 3d, the committee then endeavored to sell the property. But all efforts to this end were equally unsuccessful. These efforts continued through the spring and summer of 1911. By September, 1911, the committee had become convinced that no inducements which they could offer would secure the investment of capital in the reorganization and rehabilitation of the road, and thereupon the members were confronted with a new situation fraught with danger to the interests which they represented. The indebtedness to the Union Trust Company, to which reference has been made, which was secured by the Underwriter's Agreement, by the pledge of the bonds and by a deed of trust covering all the purchased properties, fell due on September 17th. The trust company had positively declined to grant further extensions of time. There was urgent need of work upon the road itself to prevent damage from the approaching winter storms and to keep it up even to its imperfect condition of service. Indebtedness for necessary equipment had been incurred by the committee. The underwriters had announced that if they should be compelled to pay the trust company under their agreement they would immediately foreclose the lien which they had upon the properties of the road. A sale under this lien foreclosure would have swept away all the bondholders' rights without equity of redemption. From the date of the purchase the road had been operated by the committee, and the members of the committee had incurred personal responsibility and liability therefor. The situation, as summed up by defendant Moore of the committee, was this:

"We simply were up against it; with the underwriters withdrawing; the bank not only not lending us more money, but notifying us to pay; we had no money, and our condition was desperate."

Something had to be done, and the committee then proceeded with the organization of the Ocean Shore Railroad Company, the defendant in this suit. It was capitalized for $5,000,000, divided into 50,000 shares of the par value of $100 each. The committee conveyed all the property of the old railway company to the new corporation, receiving in return the agreement of the new corporation to issue its stock to those whom the committee might name. The committee directed the issuance of this stock to the old bondholders in amounts identical with the face value of their bond holdings. This was in December, 1911. On December 29th the committee executed a power of attorney to J. W. Crosby, authorizing him on behalf of the depositing bondholders to accept the shares of stock in the new corporation which were apportioned to these bondholders. Before doing this, in November, the committee passed a resolution declaring that it had found the plan of November 3d to be impracticable and that it was the sense of the committee that it "should proceed to effect the most practicable and expeditious reorganization at the present time." The organization which we have last outlined is the organization which the members of the committee insist was not only the most practicable and expeditious reorganization, but absolutely the only reorganization which would preserve the bondholders' rights, and this by reason of the fact that the bondholders in purchasing the property through their committee had become the real owners of it, holding title (saving for the trusteeship in the committee) in the awkward and unmanageable condition of ownership in common. As such owners, the property being impressed with a public duty, it was incumbent on them to see that by its operation it performed the purpose of its existence. It was useless for the committee to attempt to convey in severalty to each bondholder his proportionate share of the title. The simple, direct, expeditious, and only practicable course open to them was that which they adopted—that of organizing a corporation, capitalized for the exact amount of the bondholders' securities, and conveying to each stockholder in the form of stock the proportionate interest which he had in the properties. Thus was effectuated a legal and convenient means by which the bondholders themselves could operate the properties, or dispose of them, as they saw fit. In this connection the court found:

"That if said committee had conveyed to each bondholder who had deposited his bonds with said committee, and which said bonds had been used in effecting the purchase of said properties, an undivided proportionate interest in the properties so acquired, the properties themselves would have been unmanageable, their value would have been destroyed, the franchises purchased by said committee could not have been availed of, and the interest of all said bondholders in said properties would have been entirely lost and destroyed; that it would have been impossible to have borrowed money for their operation or improvement; and that the Union Trust Company of San Francisco would have proceeded, as it at that time threatened to do to sell said properties, and to thus shut out and absolutely foreclose the rights of said bondholders in and to the said properties. That it was a fact that, unless money had been secured to pay said indebtedness to it, or assurances given to Union Trust Company of San Francisco that said indebtedness would be paid, said Union Trust Company would have sold, and that it then threatened to sell, unless said payment was made, all said properties, and the rights of those who had deposited their bonds with said committee, in and to the said properties, would have been destroyed and rendered valueless. That said sale would not have been made subject to any redemption."

There was pressing need for the payment of some of the indebtedness above mentioned. To meet this, a bond issue of the new corporation of $700,000 was authorized. It was hoped that the old bondholders themselves would take up this issue. The necessity of raising this money was explained to them, as was also the whole plan of reorganization. The old bondholders would not subscribe for the new bonds. The most earnest efforts of the committee succeeded in securing the wholly inadequate subscription of $280,000.

Again, the committee had failed and was still confronted with the danger of foreclosure by the Union Trust Company or by the underwriters, and on January 18, 1912, the new corporation levied an assessment of $10 per share upon its stock. The assessment became delinquent on February 26, 1912. The sale day was March 18, 1912. Meetings of the depositing bondholders were held from time to time, when all of these matters were fully discussed and all the difficulties laid before them. Such meetings were held on December 1, 1911; February 23, 1912; and March 12, 1912. At none of these meetings did any bondholder raise any objection to this reorganization. Discussion was had as to the practicability of raising the money by a new bond issue substituted for the assessment. Discussion was had as to whether the assessment might not be reduced to $5 per share. The minutes declare that "the sense of the meeting was practically unanimous that the assessment should stand."

On March 16, 1912, two days before the sale day of the delinquent stock of the new corporation, this action was brought; the principal contention of plaintiffs being, as heretofore outlined, that the agreement of July 29th is to be construed with the approved proposed plan of November 3d, and that the duties of the committee were therefore limited to an effort to put the plan of November 3d in operation, that the trust so declared became fixed and irrevocable, and if for any reason the trust could not be performed it became the duty of the trustees either to surrender their trust to the bondholders, or go into a court of equity and obtain their discharge.

We are now nearly, but not quite, in a position to discuss this main contention. Certain matters preliminary to the main consideration must first be treated and disposed of. At the outset, it is to be noted that the only rights involved in this case are the rights of the plaintiff bondholders, who alone are concerned in this litigation. Thus, assuming for the moment that appellants' construction of the written instrument is the true one, we are here in no way concerned with the rights of the stockholders or general or preferred creditors under the agreement of November 3d. If that agreement be a contract for their benefit (Civ. Code, § 1559), no one of them here appears to enforce his rights. The same is true of representations made by the committee to certain bondholders, which representations, it is asserted, confirm the agreement of November 3d and make it irrevocable. If this be true, it did so only so far as those particular bondholders are concerned, and no one of these bondholders is here complaining. As to these plaintiffs, not parties to, and, so far as the record is concerned, not even aware of, any of these stipulations, the representations or agreements were res inter alios acta. Still further it is to be pointed out that touching these plaintiffs and appellants themselves they are the owners of bonds aggregating $404,000 face value. Four of the appellants, whose bonds aggregate $117,400 face value, never deposited their bonds at all, and therefore can by no possibility have any rights in this litigation. Thus bondowners of but $272,900 face value of the bonds may be heard to complain. Of this amount $224,400 face value of the bonds were deposited under the signed agreement of July 29th before November 3, 1910, and therefore before the November 3d agreement came into existence. But $48,500 of these bonds were deposited after November 3d, and of these the owners of $27,500 worth accepted stock in the new railroad corporation defendant, and thus ratified the committee's acts and that reorganization. And there is no word of evidence disclosing that the bondholders to the small amount who deposited their bonds after November 3d, and who in doing so signed and signed only the agreement of July 29th, ever knew of the existence of the proposed plan of November 3d. And, finally, it is but proper to add that, while appellants contend that the result of the committee's abandonment of the plan of November 3d and of the reorganization actually effected by the committee was to work a fraud upon them, this fraud is in its nature a resultant rather than a designed fraud. The members of the committee were for the most part bondholders and stockholders. They were men of business prominence and financial standing. They gave their time without compensation and worked with unflagging zeal to bring about a happy solution of the business complications put under their charge. In the plan which they finally adopted and effectuated they entered and shared upon precisely the same terms as did all of the other bondholders. Their good faith is unquestionable, and indeed by the appellants is unquestioned. The dispute between the litigants thus arises wholly out of different constructions put upon the committee's powers.

[1] Thus we come again to the principal question in the case—the construction of those powers as between the complaining bondholders and their committee. No question arises, nor can arise, over the right of assenting bondholders to confer upon such reorganization committee substantially unlimited powers with unlimited discretion in the exercise of them. The bondholder "may go further and agree in advance that his bonds shall be subjected to any plan of reorganization which the committee may adopt." Colonial Trust Co. v. Wallace (C. C.) 183 Fed. 897. This is precisely what was done by the declaration of July 29th, which constituted the one and sole written authority to the committee signed by the bondholders themselves. Appellants contend that the agreement of July 29th must be construed with the approval of the proposed plan of November 3d, and to the doing of this there cannot be the slightest objection. But when appellants seek by their construction of the two agreements read together to have it said that the trust imposed in the committee became fixed, inelastic, and unchangeable, they do violence to the language as well as to the spirit expressed in the agreement of July 29th. That agreement was drawn, as appears from the face of it and from the evidence touching its execution, with the design to confer upon the committee plenary powers, the bondholders recognizing the magnitude of the difficulties, and being more than willing to trust to the business ability and good faith of the members of the committee. Taking the two instruments together, what do they not mean? They do not mean, as appellants contend, that all of the important provisions of the agreement of July 29th touching the committee's rights and powers have been stricken out and eliminated, and that the committee was thus limited to the single effort of endeavoring to carry out the agreement of November 3d. Reading the two agreements together and fairly construing them, they amounted, at least, so far as these bondholders plaintiffs are concerned, to nothing more than an agreement upon the part of the committee that it would first use its best endeavors to see whether an organization could be effected upon the plans and lines laid down in the November 3d agreement, with such departures therefrom as might be necessary to the accomplishment of this end; but that, failing of ability to do this thing, there was still in reserve their broad powers to effectuate any other organization which in their judgment seemed to be best and for the best interest of the bondholders.

So the learned judge of the lower court construed this agreement, and in so construing it we think he was wholly right. There ceases to be, therefore, the slightest occasion for the review of the authorities, which, nevertheless, have been duly considered by this court. This is not the case of an agreement between bondholders and stockholders to the attempted exclusion of the rights of creditors who must be recognized if the stockholders are to be recognized. The bondholders have the unquestioned right, without regard to any of the equities of the stockholders or creditors, to foreclose their lien and bid in the properties. Miller v. Dodge, 28 Misc. Rep. 640, 59 N. Y. Supp. 1074; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. G. B. & M. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 6 Fed. 110. Moreover, as we have said before, neither the stockholders nor the creditors are here complaining. Nor yet is a reorganization whereby the old bondholders become the stockholders of the new railroad at all unusual. Indeed, it is declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be the best way of effecting such reorganization, "that is to say, reorganize the enterprise on the basis of existing mortgages as stock, or something which is equivalent, and by a new mortgage, with a lien superior to the old, raise the money which is required." Shaw v. Railroad Co., 100 U. S. 612, 25 L. Ed. 757. See, also, White v. Wood, 13 N. Y. Supp. 631;[1] Gates v. Boston & N. Y. Airline Ry. Co., 53 Conn. 333, 5 Atl. 695; Somerset Ry. v. Pierce, 88 Me. 86, 33 Atl. 773. The cases cited and relied upon by appellants are quite unimpeachable in logic and law, but they are cases which deal with the rights of creditors when the bondholders and stockholders have combined upon a reorganization to the exclusion of the creditors, or where the bondholders have agreed upon a plan of reorganization which defines the powers of the bondholders' committee and under which alone that committee can act, or, finally, where the reorganization agreement is to be formulated thereafter, with a reserved right to the depositing bondholders to withdraw from the agreement and take back their bonds, if within a limited time after the submission of the plan they are dissatisfied with it. None of those cases touches the situation here presented, where the matter of the reorganization was wholly intrusted to the judgment of the committee.

[2] What has been said concludes our review of the principal case. One further matter, however, remains to be considered. Clara E. L. Folger was a party to the amended complaint, which alleged ownership by her of bonds of the face value of $76,000. Mrs. Folger had not deposited any bonds or signed any agreement. They were deposited by her husband, who is not a party to this proceeding, and the agreement of July 29th was signed by him. It was asserted that on August 28, 1912, Mrs. Folger purchased at the pledgee's sale 500 bonds which had been held in pledge by the Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank of San Francisco. These bonds had been deposited with the committee by that bank pursuant to the agreement of July 29th and to a special agreement entered into between the bank and the committee. During the trial Mrs. Folger asked leave to amend and set up the purchase of these bonds. At the conclusion of the trial the court denied the motion. Mrs. Folger's proposed amendment did not allege that the 500 bonds referred to had ever been deposited by the bank or by Mrs. Folger with the committee. This in itself justified the court's refusal in permitting the amendment.

[3] But, moreover, if it be contended that Mrs. Folger in purchasing at the pledgee's sale acquired the alleged rights growing out of a special agreement of the committee with the bank, then it is manifest that the cause of action upon which Mrs. Folger relies is not the cause of action set forth by the plaintiffs, and that Mrs. Folger's sole redress would be by her own independent action; that she is not "a party similarly situated" with the other plaintiffs, within the meaning of section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The leave to amend was therefore properly denied.

[1] Reported in full in the New York Supplement; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 59 Hun, 619.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(171 Cal. 790)

SALTER v. IVES et al. (L. A. 3620.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1916.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF ⟸116—AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 1624, 2309, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1971, 1973, which provide that the leasing of real property for a period of more than one year must be by a conveyance or instrument in writing subscribed by the owner or by his lawful agent authorized in writing, the written authorization from the owner, to be sufficient to permit the agent to enter into a binding contract of lease, must express within its terms the intention of the owner to confer upon the agent complete authority to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 251–260; Dec. Dig. ⟸116.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸103—POWER TO EXECUTE INSTRUMENTS.

The mere employment by the owner of an agent to sell or lease his property is usually insufficient as a grant of power to execute a binding conveyance or lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 278–293, 353–359, 367; Dec. Dig. ⟸103.]

3. CONTRACTS ⟸169 — CONSTRUCTION — EXTRINSIC CIRCUMSTANCES.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 1625, 1637–1639, which provide that when a contract has been reduced to writing the intention of the parties is to be ascertained from the writing alone, if possible, "surrounding circumstances" are to be considered only where the terms of a contract are such as to make the intention of the parties uncertain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 752; Dec. Dig. ⟸169.]

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸100—AUTHORITY TO MAKE LEASE—"NEGOTIATE."

The words "we hereby authorize you to negotiate a lease," do not authorize the agent to execute a lease in the name of the owner, but merely empowers him to procure a tenant for the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 262–273, 345, 364, 368–373; Dec. Dig. ⟸100.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Negotiate.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by Amanda M. Salter against Fred F. Ives (sued herein as Fred S. Ives) and others, in which the defendant named interposed a cross-complaint. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Tracy Chatfield Becker, of Los Angeles (Herbert J. Goudge, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. Karl E. Steinhauer, Willis I. Morrison, and Hunsaker & Britt, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title to certain property in the city of Los Angeles. Defendant Ives answered, asserting that he had obtained a lease of the property from one Toombs who, as he alleged, was duly authorized to make such contract by the plaintiff. Ives also by cross-complaint sought specific performance of this alleged lease. The court sustained a demurrer to the amended answer and cross-complaint of Ives, and upon his failure to amend further, judgment was entered by default. From that judgment defendant and cross-complainant appeals.

The only question involved in this appeal is whether or not Toombs was authorized to execute a lease for the property. The writing on which appellant depends was signed by Mrs. Salter. The opening paragraph was as follows:

"April 26th, 1912.

"Mr. F. L. Toombs, 620 S. Hill St., Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Sir: We hereby authorize you to negotiate a lease on the south fifty feet of lot eight, Ord's survey, block twenty-five, Los Angeles, state of California, on the following terms, to wit."

Then follow the terms including the construction of a building, the amount of rent, the duration of the lease, etc. The concluding portion of the contract is as follows:

"In consideration of your efforts in negotiating said lease, I hereby agree, that in case you or others associated with you, shall secure a tenant on the above-named terms, you or your assigns shall be entitled to a commission of $6,000 which I agree to pay out of the first year's rental. If the first year's rental be payable in advance, then the commission shall be payable immediately in cash. If, however, the rental, according to the terms of the lease shall be payable monthly, then I agree to pay the commission at the rate of $500 per month. It is strictly understood that this is not an exclusive contract. This contract is good for six months and only six months.

"[Signed] Mrs. A. M. Salter."

[1] The appellant cheerfully concedes at the outset (as indeed he must) that the written authorization from the owner, in order that it may be sufficient to permit the agent to enter into a binding contract of lease must express within its terms the intention of the owner to confer upon the agent complete authority so to do. Sections 1624 and 2309, Civ. Code; sections 1971 and 1973, Code Civ. Proc.

[2] It is also conceded that the mere employment by the owner of an agent to sell or lease his real property will usually be held insufficient as a grant of power to execute a binding conveyance or lease. That these concessions embody the law on the subject there can be no doubt. Speaking of the power of an agent to sell or lease realty, the District Court of Appeal used the following language in the opinion in Church v. Collins, 18 Cal. App. 748, 124 Pac. 552:

"If such authority is intended to be conferred, the language used in conferring it should be so clear, distinct, and certain in its meaning to that end as to leave no room for doubting that such is its purpose."

See, also, Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 244, 6 Am. Rep. 617; Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 617, 18 Pac. 758; Grant v. Ede, 85 Cal. 419, 24 Pac. 890, 20 Am. St. Rep. 237; Stemler v. Bass, 153 Cal. 791, 96 Pac. 809.

Appellant's contentions are, in brief, first, that the language of the contract, particularly the expression "we hereby authorize you to negotiate a lease," confers on the agent the power to enter into a contract of lease on behalf of his principal; and, second, that the pleading of surrounding circumstances such as Mrs. Salter's intention to leave the State and her absence from California during nearly all of the period of six months limited by the terms of the contract of agency, as well as the fact that she was anxious to lease the premises in question, compel the interpretation of that agreement which he wishes us to give to it.

[3] There is no force in his second point because "surrounding circumstances" are only considered when the terms of a contract are such as to make the intention of the parties to it uncertain. Civ. Code, §§ 1625, 1637, 1638, and 1639. If we adopt respondent's view that there is no uncertainty, then the surrounding circumstances are not pertinent (Hawley v. Brumagim, 33 Cal. 398; Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 472, 61 Pac. 64, 79 Am. St. Rep. 56); and if we concede the existence of ambiguity or uncertainty, the agreement must be ineffective because of the rule announced in such cases as Church v. Collins, supra, that the language itself must be free from doubt. Unless, therefore, the power to execute a lease was clearly conferred by plaintiff by the terms of the agreement itself upon Toombs, the judgment in this case must be affirmed.

That the power to lease was not conferred upon the agent we are certain. Appellant's counsel argue learnedly that there is a vast difference between the expressions "to negotiate a lease" and "to negotiate for a lease"; that if the contract had been one merely employing Toombs to procure a tenant for the premises, the latter expression would have been used; and that the verb "to negotiate" means "to bargain," "to arrange for a sale," "to transfer for a valuable consideration." Conceding that the word "negotiate" may in some connections be construed to involve the sale or transfer of some property right, we are furnished with no authority holding that in contracts for the sale or renting of real estate it has ever been so interpreted. In Oullahan v. Baldwin, 100 Cal. 651, at page 655, 35 Pac. 310, at page 312, the contract under consideration was one by which the brokers were authorized "to negotiate a sale" of certain property. This court used this language:

"The brokers were simply authorized to negotiate a sale. Their contract was completed and their commissions earned when they produced a purchaser within the five days, ready, willing, and able to purchase upon the terms stated in the contract of employment."

In Lindley v. Keim, 54 N. J. Eq. 423, 34 Atl. 1073, the court adopted this language of Mr. Vice Chancellor Pitney (now a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States):

"The mere employment of an ordinary real estate broker to effect a sale of a parcel of land, even though the price and terms be prescribed, does not amount to giving present authority to such broker to conclude a binding contract for the same. Moreover, such authority is not usually to be inferred from the use by the principal and broker in that connection of the terms 'for sale' or 'to sell' and the like. Those words in that connection usually mean no more than to negotiate a sale by finding a purchaser upon satisfactory terms."

The term "negotiate" in an agreement somewhat similar to this has been construed to mean "conversation in arranging the terms of a contract" (Northrop v. Diggs, 128 Mo. App. 223, 106 S. W. 1123), and in the state of Washington it has been held that one empowered by a writing "to make and negotiate a sale" of real property may neither give an effective deed nor execute a contract for a deed to one desiring to purchase the land (Carstens v. McReavy, 1 Wash. 361, 25 Pac. 471).

[4] The contract upon which defendant and cross-complainant seeks to build his case is clearly an ordinary agreement empowering an agent to procure a tenant and engaging to compensate him in the event of his success. It is absolutely lacking in authorization to consummate a lease in the name of the owner.

Neither Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213, nor Bacon v. Davis, 9 Cal. App. 83, 98 Pac. 71, is in conflict with anything contained in this opinion. In the former, as was said of it in Stemler v. Bass, supra:

"It clearly appeared that it was intended by the owner to clothe the agent with authority to do generally whatever was necessary to make the proposed sale binding upon the principal."

And in the latter, as the court said in Church v. Collins, supra:

"The agreement in that case expressly and specifically conferred upon the agent 'the exclusive right to sell for me, in my name and receipt for deposit thereon' the land described in said agreement."

In the contract here under review there was not even an exclusive agency and there was no authorization for the doing of anything in the name of the owner of the property.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

172 Cal. 6

McEWEN v. OCCIDENTAL LIFE INS. CO.
(L. A. 3611.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1916.)

1. JUDGES ⇐51—CHANGE OF JUDGE—AFFIDAVIT—DISCLAIMER OF BIAS AND PREJUDICE—CONCLUSIONS.

A motion to strike from the trial judge's affidavit, as conclusions, statements wherein he disclaimed the bias and prejudice on which plaintiff sought a change of judge, was properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 224–231; Dec. Dig. ⇐51.]

2. JUDGES ⇐51—CHANGE OF JUDGE—AFFIDAVITS—DISCLAIMER OF JUDGE.

An affidavit of the trial judge disclaiming the bias and prejudice for which plaintiff sought a change of judge to hear defendant's motion for new trial was sufficient to overcome plaintiff's slight showing of bias and prejudice, which consisted principally of a showing that the judge expressed dissatisfaction with the verdict, and during the trial had made various rulings adverse to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 224–231; Dec. Dig. ⇐51.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1051 — HARMLESS ERROR — BIAS AND PREJUDICE — ADMISSION OF AFFIDAVIT—CHANGE OF JUDGE.

Where the judge's affidavit disclaiming bias and prejudice was sufficient to overcome a showing made by plaintiff in proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, to secure a change of judge to hear defendant's motion for new trial, the admission of the affidavit of the official court reporter, from which it appeared that the judge stated that, instead of letting the case go to the jury, he should have directed a verdict for defendant, if error, was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4161–4170; Dec. Dig. ⇐1051.]

4. JUDGES ⇐49 — CHANGE OF JUDGE — GROUNDS—ERRONEOUS RULINGS.

Erroneous rulings against a litigant, even when numerous and continuous, furnish no ground for a change of judge on account of bias or prejudice to hear a motion for new trial, especially where they are subject to review.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 187, 188; Dec. Dig. ⇐49.]

5. JUDGES ⇐49—CHANGE OF JUDGE—BIAS—EXPRESSION OF OPINION.

The trial judge's statement on receiving the verdict that he did not see how the jury could have reached such verdict did not show bias or prejudice entitling plaintiff to a change of judge to hear defendant's motion for new trial, where it appeared that such statement was based on the judge's actual observation of the witnesses and his consideration of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 187, 188; Dec. Dig. ⇐49.]

6. JUDGES ⇐49—CHANGE OF JUDGE—BIAS—CHANGE OF OPINION.

That the statement of the trial judge on receiving a verdict for plaintiff that he did not see how the jury could have reached such a verdict was inconsistent with his previous action in refusing a directed verdict for defendant and submitting the case to the jury did not show bias or prejudice entitling plaintiff to a change of judge to hear the motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 187, 188; Dec. Dig. ⇐49.]

7. NEW TRIAL ⇐128 — SPECIFICATION OF GROUND—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on an accident policy, a specification of a ground of a motion for new trial complied with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 659, requiring such specifications, where it stated that there was no evidence tending to prove that insured's death was not due to the concurrence of nephritis and rheumatism with the effects of his fall, and then stated, "but, on the contrary, the evidence proves by an overwhelming preponderance that, if the said fall * * * contributed * * * to the death, * * * it served merely to accelerate * * * the diseases, * * * and, at most, concurred with said diseases in bringing about such death."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 257–262; Dec. Dig. ⇐128.]

8. NEW TRIAL ⇐128—SPECIFICATION OF GROUND—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on an accident insurance policy, a specification of a ground for new trial that there was no evidence tending to prove that insured and plaintiff had fulfilled the conditions of the policy, but that, on the contrary, insured had made a specified false warranty, and that plaintiff refused to permit an autopsy of his body, sufficiently showed defendant's theory and the evidence to which it was desired to call the court's attention, though it be conceded that the burden was on defendant to negative the warranties, and it failed to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 257–262; Dec. Dig. ⇐128.]

9. INSURANCE ⇐646—ACTION ON POLICY—DEFENSE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where, in an action on an accident insurance policy, the execution and delivery of the policy were admitted, the burden was on the defendant to sustain the contentions made by it in its answer that statements made by insured by way of warranty were false.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1555, 1645–1668; Dec. Dig. ⇐646.]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐302 — GROUNDS FOR NEW TRIAL — DEFECTS IN SPECIFICATIONS.

Defects in the specifications of ground for new trial will not preclude the Supreme Court from considering the case on appeal where the adverse party had not been injured by such defects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1744–1752; Dec. Dig. ⇐302.]

11. NEW TRIAL ⇐70—GROUNDS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on an accident insurance policy wherein defendant contended that insured died, not as a result of an accident, but from rheumatism and nephritis, held, that an order granting a new trial because the evidence was not sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff was warranted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 142, 143; Dec. Dig. ⇐70.]

12. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐843—REVIEW—IMMATERIAL MATTERS—EVIDENCE.

Where, on appeal from an order granting a new trial after verdict for plaintiff in an action on an accident insurance policy, the evidence furnished by plaintiff herself was such that the granting of the new trial was not an abuse of discretion, and it did not appear that the court was influenced by a physician's certificate assigning rheumatism and nephritis as the cause of insured's death, it was unnecessary for the Supreme Court to consider the admissibility of the certificate in evidence or the constitutionality of the statute making such a certificate prima facie evidence of the cause of death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3331–3341; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 843.]

13. Appeal and Error ⟸977—Documentary Ruling—Granting of New Trial.

The granting of a new trial cannot be disturbed on appeal in the absence of an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860–3865; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 977.]

14. Appeal and Error ⟸1015—Granting of New Trial—Review.

Where an order granting a new trial is in general terms, it will be affirmed on appeal if it can be sustained on any of the assigned grounds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860–3876; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 1015.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Rachel A. McEwen against the Occidental Life Insurance Company, a corporation. Verdict for plaintiff. From orders granting a new trial, refusing to transfer the motion for new trial to another judge, and denying motions to strike out affidavits, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 20 Cal. App. 477, 129 Pac. 598.

Murphey & Poplin, of Los Angeles, for appellant. J. W. McKinley, Benjamin E. Page, and A. W. Ashburn, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff, who is the widow of Charles R. McEwen, brought this action upon an accident insurance policy upon the theory that deceased met his death by reason of an accidental fall. The defense was that the insured died, not as the result of accident, but of rheumatism and nephritis. The verdict was in favor of the plaintiff. Defendant moved for a new trial upon the minutes of the court. The notice of intention to make the motion specifies insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, that the verdict was against law, and errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to. The motion was granted. Plaintiff appeals from the order granting the motion for a new trial, and also from an order denying her motion to transfer the motion for a new trial and the cause to another department or to call in another judge. There are also appeals from orders denying motions to strike out parts of the affidavit of the judge, and all of that of E. C. Thompson.

We will first consider the motion by which it was sought to disqualify the judge of the superior court to hear the motion for a new trial. The affidavits of the plaintiff and her daughter alleged, in substance, that the case was tried originally before the Hon. J. P. Wood in January, 1911, and that at the close of plaintiff's testimony defendant's motion for a nonsuit was granted; that thereafter plaintiff made a motion for a new trial and to set aside the judgment of nonsuit, which was granted; that upon defendant's appeal this ruling was upheld by the District Court of Appeal (20 Cal. App. 477, 129 Pac. 598); that after the first trial Mrs. McEwen believed Judge Wood to be prejudiced against her; that she so informed her attorneys, and told them that she was willing to make an affidavit to that effect; that they persuaded her not to do so and to allow the cause to remain in Judge Wood's department for trial without protest on her part; that when the verdict was returned and was read by the judge the following occurred:

"That affiant was looking at the judge when he was reading the paper, and saw the expression on his face; that she noticed that he changed color and appeared to be very angry, and before the verdict was read aloud he turned to one of the attorneys for the defendant and said: 'I will entertain a motion for new trial upon the minutes of the court at any convenient time. I do not see how the jury could possibly have reached this verdict.' And affiant further understood him to say, although he used a lower tone of voice, 'And I will grant a new trial,' but with relation to the last remark of the court, owing to the low voice which he used, she is not altogether certain that he made the remark, but she believes that he did."

The affidavit of Mrs. McEwen also contained the following language:

"To further show that said judge is prejudiced and biased against her, affiant says that on the trial she noticed that generally on any objections made by counsel for defendant that said judge decided against plaintiff in nearly every important particular, that on the trial, among other things, he allowed former physicians of the deceased to testify to certain matters over the objection of plaintiff's counsel that the same was privileged, but that after the case was closed and just before reading the instructions, without any motion on the part of plaintiff's attorney, he struck out the said evidence, as having been improperly allowed before the jury, but allowed the certificate of death which was made by one of the physicians who attended deceased before his death to remain, and which had been objected to by her counsel as privileged and hearsay."

Judge Wood made and filed an affidavit denying any bias or prejudice against the plaintiff or her cause of action, and denying also that he had said as alleged in Mrs. McEwen's affidavit that he would grant defendant's motion for a new trial. He did say upon receipt of the verdict:

"I do not see how the jury could possibly have reached this verdict."

Mr. Thompson, the official court reporter, made an affidavit regarding the proceedings on the motion for transfer of the cause under section 170, Code of Civil Procedure. It appeared from this affidavit, among other things, that the judge stated his belief that, instead of letting the case go to the jury, he should have directed a verdict in favor of the defendant.

[1-3] The affidavit of the judge was entirely pertinent, and the motion to strike out, as conclusions, those parts in which he disclaimed bias and prejudice, was properly denied, because his state of mind was the very matter in dispute, and he was in a better position to know his own feelings toward the plaintiff than any one else. Besides, it was his duty, if he could do so, to negative the allegations of prejudice under oath in the form of an affidavit, reciting his mental attitude. Keating v. Keating, 169 Cal. 759, 147 Pac. 974. This affidavit was in itself sufficient to overcome the very meager showing made by the plaintiff in her effort to establish prejudice on the part of the judge. It makes little difference therefore whether Mr. Thompson's affidavit was, strictly speaking, admissible or not.

[4, 5] Plaintiff's affidavit shows that after ruling against her in the first trial Judge Wood granted her motion for a new trial, that an appeal was taken by her opponent, and that she prevailed over that opponent in the Court of Appeal. We fail to see how these facts indicated any bias or prejudice on the part of the judge. On the contrary, they evidenced a desire to do justice which caused the judge frankly to admit that his ruling in granting the nonsuit was incorrect. Next we find that the plaintiff feared she would not be fairly treated on the second trial; but her state of mind is not evidence. She complains that the judge generally decided against her on objections made by her counsel, but she does not show, nor even assert, that such rulings were not generally justified. Three of the four rulings of which she makes specific complaint seem to have been reversed by the court of its own motion. We refer to those by which the privileged communications made by deceased to three physicians were first admitted, and then stricken out. Surely these things do not indicate prejudice. On the contrary, they exhibit a desire on the part of the court to be fair. Erroneous rulings against a litigant, even when numerous and continuous form no ground for a charge of bias or prejudice, especially when they are subject to review. Estudillo v. Security Loan, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 66, 109 Pac. 884; Burke v. Mayall, 10 Minn. 287 (Gil. 226); State v. Bohan, 19 Kan. 28; Stahl v. Schwartz, 67 Wash. 25, 120 Pac. 856; Bell v. Bell, 18 Idaho, 636, 111 Pac. 1074; State v. Barnett, 98 S. C. 422, 82 S. E. 795. Nor are a judge's expressions of opinion uttered in what he conceives to be the discharge of his judicial duty evidence of bias or prejudice. State v. Bohan, supra; State v. Crilly, 69 Kan. 802, 77 Pac. 701; Ex parte Fairbank Co. (D. C.) 194 Fed. 978; Epstein v. United States, 196 Fed. 354, 116 C. C. A. 174.

The vexation of the judge and his remark that he did not see how the jury could possibly have reached such a verdict does not show prejudice against Mrs. McEwen. These things indicated, perhaps, that he had formed an opinion regarding the legal questions which had been presented in the case and in reference to the sufficiency of plaintiff's proof. Such conviction in the mind of the judge, based upon his actual observation of the witnesses, the hearing of their testimony, and his knowledge of the law applicable to such cases does not amount to that prejudice against a litigant which the statute contemplates as a basis for change of venue. Western Bank of Scotland v. Tallman, 15 Wis. 92.

[6] Appellant argues that the demeanor of the judge at the time when the verdict was returned was inconsistent with the previous submission of the case to the jury after denying a motion for a directed verdict in favor of defendant. But such inconsistency (if inconsistency it be) does not prove prejudice. It merely indicates that upon maturer consideration of the case than the court had given at the time of the submission thereof to the jury the judge deemed it his duty, under his oath, to grant a new trial. The showing of prejudice was very slight, and, in our opinion, it was met so fully by the affidavit of Judge Wood that there can be no doubt of the justness and propriety of the court's action in denying the motion made by plaintiff under section 170, Code of Civil Procedure. The subject of alleged disqualification of a judge has recently received so full and careful consideration in the matter of the Estate of Friedman, 153 Pac. 918, that we need not review it anew with any degree of elaboration. Judge Wood's suggestion that a motion for a new trial should be made upon the minutes of the court was no more sinister in this case than was Judge Graham's remark to Mr. Woodworth in one of the proceedings in the Friedman estate that counsel "should not appeal" from a certain order. If Judge Wood displayed annoyance at what seemed to him the misconception by the jury of the effect or weight of the evidence, he merely showed what almost every judge of a trial court has felt at times; yet such feeling with reference to the insufficiency of the case presented by one of the litigants is not the prejudice which the statute makes the basis for its removal to another court. Frequently the possession of such a feeling is a proof of the legal learning and the sense of justice of the presiding jurist who harbors it.

[7] Counsel for appellant insists that specifications of insufficiency of evidence numbered VII, IX, X, XI, and XII are improper, because they relate to matters for proof of which the burden was upon defendant, and because the affirmative statements in the specifications as to what the evidence showed are mere conclusions. The seventh specification recites that there was no evidence proving or tending to prove that Mr. McEwen's death was not due to the concurrence of nephritis and rheumatism with the effects of his fall, if any. It then concludes as follows:

"But, on the contrary, the evidence proves by an overwhelming preponderance that, if the said fall suffered by the said McEwen contributed in any manner or degree to the death of said McEwen, it served merely to accelerate the progress of the diseases from which the said McEwen was then, suffering, and the last stages of which were then approaching, to wit, nephritis and rheumatism, and, at most, concurred with said diseases in bringing about said death."

This, we think, sufficiently directed the attention of the court and the adverse party to the particular point on which the evidence was claimed to be insufficient, and thus measured up to the requirements of section 659, Code of Civil Procedure.

[8-10] The ninth specification is to the effect that there is no evidence proving or tending to prove that Charles R. McEwen and plaintiff fulfilled the conditions of the policy, but that, on the contrary, he made a certain quoted warranty which was false, and she refused to permit an autopsy upon his body after death. It may be that, under the pleadings the burden was on the defendant to negative the warranties in the policy, and that it failed to do so, but this specification and the others which are attached sufficiently show defendant's theory and the evidence which it was desired to call to the court's attention. It is our opinion that, the execution and delivery of the policy being admitted, the burden was upon the defendant to show the falsity of statements of Mr. McEwen made by way of warranty; such statements having been attacked by the answer. If the defendant failed, as appellant asserts, and no such proof was made, we must assume that the court granted the motion for some other reason. There are other specifications the form of which appellant does not attack. For example, the eighth specification is, in substance, that there was no evidence overcoming the prima facie case established by the certificate of death attributing the decease of Mr. McEwen to rheumatism with nephritis as a contributory cause. We cannot see that the opposite party was injured by the alleged defects in some of the specifications, and for that reason we will not refuse to consider the case on appeal. American Type, etc., Co. v. Packer, 130 Cal. 461, 62 Pac. 744; In re Yoakam, 103 Cal. 503, 37 Pac. 485; Abbott v. Jack, 136 Cal. 513, 69 Pac. 257; Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 789, 106 Pac. 88, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154.

[11] Without reviewing the testimony very extensively, we may say that Mr. McEwen had been confined to the house with a serious illness for a number of days. Dr. Ferbert was in attendance. The condition of the patient was such that he required the constant nursing of his wife or his daughter. On the night of the fall his daughter had persuaded her mother to take some rest, and she, the daughter, was taking care of the patient. During the night Mr. McEwen wished to go to the bathroom. He arose from a recumbent position and sat on the edge of the bed with his feet upon the floor. He then sent his daughter to summon her mother from a room across the hall, and during the absence of the former from the apartment of the sick man he fell. When his wife and daughter arrived in his room they found Mr. McEwen with his head doubled under his shoulder in a limp manner. He was unconscious. They placed him on the bed, and he became conscious in a few minutes. He complained of a pain in his neck. He grew worse, and died about 24 hours afterward. All of these facts appear from the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses. Dr. Phillp, called by the plaintiff, testified that he examined the body of Mr. McEwen after death. He found an abrasion on the outer part of the left arm—"a scraping of the epidermis," as he described it. He also testified as follows:

"And I turned the body over, and saw what we call ecchymosis or discoloration of the skin over the neck and back of the left shoulder extending down the back a short distance. It was a deep purple discoloration, fading off. I didn't see any other marks or discolorations on the body. I looked over the body to see whether there were others or not. In my opinion, that bruise or discoloration was caused before death, because there was a faint bruise still about the scrape on the arm, and the ecchymosis or discoloration was apparently fresh and localized."

He further stated that it was possible for a healthy person to be struck a blow on the shoulder or neck which would not break any bones, but would cause death. On cross-examination he said that such a thing was possible, but not probable. He had been asked a hypothetical question on direct examination based upon a statement of some of the circumstances in evidence, but would not venture to say what the cause of death would be in view of such circumstances. On cross-examination he said:

"From the matters stated in the hypothetical question asked me I believe it is impossible to tell or determine the cause of death. The only possible way to determine it would be by an autopsy."

Other physicians testified that the post mortem conditions did not result from a blow or fall, and that there was a swelling of the leg which might be a symptom of nephritis, or a diseased condition of the heart or liver. Unquestionably there was no autopsy. Upon this evidence the court might well have concluded that there was no sufficient showing to support the burden of proof which was upon plaintiff.

[12-14] Appellant attacks the ruling whereby the certificate made by Dr. Ferbert and assigning rheumatism and nephritis as the causes of death was admitted in evidence. It is not necessary for us to go into this matter nor to discuss the constitutionality of the statute which makes such a certificate prima facie evidence of the cause of death. There is no showing that the court depended upon the certificate of Dr. Ferbert in reaching the conclusion that the motion for a new trial should be granted. Without the certificate and upon the evidence furnished by plaintiff herself there was ample scope for the exercise of that wide discretion which is committed to a trial court in granting or denying a motion for a new trial. Unless there has been an abuse of discretion, the action of that court is conclusive. The order was in general terms, and it must be affirmed if it can be sustained upon any of the assigned grounds. Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 508, 123 Pac. 288; Condee v. Gyger, 126 Cal. 547, 59 Pac. 26; Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. 736, 147 Pac. 960.

Clearly the court was guilty of no abuse of discretion in granting the motion for a new trial.

The orders from which plaintiff appeals are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

171 Cal. 777

MOSS et al. v. SMITH et al. (S. F. 6412.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1916.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸326—CREATION OF EXCESSIVE DEBT — LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS — PUNITIVE STATUTE.

Civ. Code, § 309, making participating directors jointly and severally liable to the corporation and to creditors thereof to the full amount of a debt created beyond the subscribed capital stock, though it be conceded to be remedial so far as the creditor is concerned, is highly punitive so far as concerns the directors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1443, 1460½, 1469, 1498; Dec. Dig. ⟸326.]

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸326 — CREATION OF EXCESSIVE DEBT—LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS—PUNITIVE STATUTE.

That an action brought by a creditor under such statute may be treated as in the nature of a creditor's bill brought on behalf of the plaintiff creditor and all others, and that it thus addresses itself to the equitable side of the court, does not prevent the statute from being punitive in nature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1443, 1460½, 1469, 1498; Dec. Dig. ⟸326.]

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸326—CREATION OF EXCESSIVE DEBT—LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS—REPEAL OF STATUTES.

Civ. Code, § 309, making the participating directors liable for debts contracted in excess of the amount of the capital stock, in so far as it affected an action brought thereunder by a creditor on behalf of himself and other creditors, judgment in such action being entered April 15, 1912, was repealed by the Public Utilities Act, effective March 23, 1912 (St. 1911, p. 18), which covers the same subject-matter and prescribes a monetary penalty against the corporation, rather than against the directors, and makes the directors guilty of a felony, instead of a misdemeanor, but contains no clause saving pending litigation or inchoate rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1443, 1460½, 1469, 1498; Dec. Dig. ⟸326.]

4. CORPORATIONS ⟸326 — DIRECTORS — ACTIONS—REPEAL OF STATUTE.

Under Pol. Code, § 327, providing that any statute may be repealed at any time except when otherwise provided therein, and that persons acting under any statute are deemed to have acted in contemplation of this power of repeal, the Legislature could, by repealing the statute, destroy that right of action against directors creating an excessive debt, which is conferred on creditors by Civ. Code, § 309.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1443, 1460½, 1469, 1498; Dec. Dig. ⟸326.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by H. A. Moss against C. C. Moore and others, wherein J. F. Bradford and J. Howard Smith intervened. From a judgment sustaining demurrers to the complaints, plaintiff and Bradford appeal. Affirmed.

Schlesinger & Shaw and Edwin H. Williams, all of San Francisco, for appellants. Garrett W. McEnerney, Alfred Sutro, and Corbet & Selby, and J. Howard Smith, all of San Francisco, for respondents. Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for respondent Moore. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for respondent Pillsbury. Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, for respondent Martin.

HENSHAW, J. The plaintiff, H. A. Moss, brought this action against the defendants, directors of the Ocean Shore Railway Company, based upon the provisions of section 309 of the Civil Code. He averred that the Ocean Shore Railway Company had a capital stock of $5,000,000 all of which had been subscribed for and issued, and all of which was held and owned by divers persons; that the Ocean Shore Railway Company had issued and sold $5,000,000 of its bonds, equal to the total amount of its capital stock and of its subscribed capital stock, and owed $5,000,000 indebtedness on account of this bond issue; that plaintiff is the owner of eight of these bonds of the par value of $1,000 each; that, while the Ocean Shore Railway Company thus had outstanding debts represented by its notes and bonds in the sum of $5,000,000, the defendants became directors of the company, and as such directors created debts of the corporation in the amount of upwards of $2,000,000 more; that all of this $7,000,000 indebtedness is due and unpaid; that the corporation became and is insolvent; that this action is brought by plaintiff as a creditor of the corporation on his own behalf and on behalf of all the creditors of the Ocean Shore Railway Company. The prayer is for a joint and several judgment against these defendants to the amount of $8,000, the indebtedness due plaintiff, with interest; further, that defendants be ordered to pay $2,000,000 into court for the purpose of satisfying the claims of the other creditors. J. F. Bradford and J. Howard Smith by leave of court filed their complaints in intervention, which complaints in intervention are in all particulars essential to this consideration identical with the complaint of the plaintiff, Moss. General and special demurrers were interposed to all of these complaints, and these demurrers were sustained. Plaintiff and intervener, declining to amend, take their appeal from the judgment which followed the sustaining of the demurrers.

Several legal propositions of consequence are argued by the litigants. It is proper to refer to them, but, for reasons which will hereinafter appear, it is unnecessary to decide all of them. The first of these legal disputes arises over the construction of the statute (Civ. Code, § 309) which makes the participating directors "jointly and severally liable to the corporation, and to the creditors thereof, to the full amount of * * * the debt contracted." By appellants it is contended that the language of the law itself and the decisions of the courts upon similar laws establish this right of action in any creditor of the corporation. Not only, it is urged, does the law make no distinction between the creditors, but, in giving the right of action to "the creditors," by force of its own language gives it to all of them, and this construction gains further assurance from the fact that the same right of action is given to the corporation; that the recovery therefore is in the nature of a recovery of a trust fund into the treasury of the corporation for the benefit, not of a selected class of creditors, but for the benefit of all the creditors. In support of this view are cited, with others, the cases of Low v. Buchanan, 94 Ill. 76; Woolverton v. Taylor, 132 Ill. 197, 23 N. E. 1007, 22 Am. St. Rep. 521; National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, 42 N. E. 338, 49 Am. St. Rep. 692; Thacher v. King, 156 Mass. 490, 31 N. E. 648; Green v. Whitehead, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 613; Hornor v. Henning, 93 U. S. 228, 23 L. Ed. 879; and finally our own cases of Winchester v. Mabury, 122 Cal. 525, 55 Pac. 393, and Winchester v. Howard, 136 Cal. 441, 64 Pac. 692, 69 Pac. 77, 89 Am. St. Rep. 153. Our own cases dealt with the provision of law found in section 3, art. 12, of our Constitution, making directors of corporations jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated. These decisions declared that the remedy in such an action for the enforcement of this constitutional provision is by a bill in equity in which all the creditors of the corporation are entitled to be represented, precisely as in the judgment recovered all are entitled to share, and appellants argue upon principle that the same construction should be given to the section of the Code upon which this action is based. By respondents it is contended that the very plain meaning of the section is that the directors shall be liable only to the persons in whose favor such debts were contracted, and reference is made to the first edition of Thompson Commentaries on Corporations, and that learned author's discussion in Cyc., where, for example, he says:

"Sec. 4265. Most of the statutes simply make the directors contracting such excessive debts liable therefor to the creditors of the company, meaning, of course, to the persons in whose favor such debts were contracted. In some cases it is not distinctly so expressed; but in such cases the implication, of course, is that they are liable to those creditors, because, when it is said that a man is liable for a debt, the meaning is that he is liable to the person to whom the debt is due." Thompson's Com. on Corp.

"Most of the statutes in terms make the directors liable to creditors, meaning, it must be assumed, to a creditor in favor of whom such excessive indebtedness was contracted." 10 Cyc. 879.

Further it is argued that Hornor v. Henning and other cases limit with scrupulous care the language of their opinions, and declare only "that this liability constitutes a fund for the benefit of all the creditors who are entitled to share in it," and that those only are entitled to share who have actually suffered or who may be thought actually to have suffered by reason of the incurring of the excess indebtedness; that is to say the creditors of such excessive indebtedness. This view it is said was the interpretation put upon Hornor v. Henning by Mr. Justice Lurton, but recently of the United States Supreme Court, in Allison v. Coal Creek, etc., Co., 87 Tenn. 60, 9 S. W. 226, and this construction has been adhered to in Moulton v. Connell, etc., Co., 93 Tenn. 377, 27 S. W. 672, and Trademan Publishing Co. v. Knoxville, etc., Co., 95 Tenn. 634, 32 S. W. 1097, 31 L. R. A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943. This is the first of the legal propositions, interesting in itself, whose decision is unnecessary to this adjudication. For the purposes of this discussion and decision only, the question will be resolved in favor of appellants' contention.

The next is the contention of respondents that section 456 of the Civil Code contains a specific grant of power, with the result that the limitation upon incurring indebtedness declared in section 309 does not apply to that kind of a railroad indebtedness authorized by section 456, so that a corporation which has incurred the bonded indebtedness authorized by section 456 for the purposes of construction, etc., may still incur the indebtedness contemplated by 309 up to the amount of the "subscribed capital stock." In opposition to this appellants insist that section 456 does not contain a grant of power to incur indebtedness independent of and in excess of that limited by section 309, but that the two sections are to be considered together and harmonized. So doing, it is plain, so appellants argue, that the primary purpose and object of section 456 was to confer power upon public corporations which, without statutory authority, they lacked, namely, the power to mortgage their property and franchises, a power which, because of the public duties imposed upon those corporations, they did not possess at common law, and do not now possess without statutory authority. 3 Thompson, Corp. (2d Ed.) § 2534; Eliott, Railroads, § 67; 3 Cook on Corp. (7th Ed.) § 780. In Market St. Ry. Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571, 42 Pac. 225, and Boyd v. Heron, 125 Cal. 453, 58 Pac. 64, the construction of these two sections, it is said, is distinctly laid down in harmony with appellants' contention. Here again we have but indicated the controversy, and pass it over without decision, saving that for the purposes of this case only further discussion will be had under the view most favorable to appellants, namely, that the law limits the total indebtedness of a corporation to the amount of its capital stock.

[1, 2] The next controverted proposition between these parties litigant is over the nature and character of section 309. Is it in its nature penal, or is it in its nature remedial? This question demands somewhat more detailed consideration than we have felt it necessary to give to the foregoing propositions, and yet again it should be said that, for reasons which will plainly appear, even the determination of this question is not vital to the decision of this case. Respondents' argument upon the nature of this statute may be summarized as follows: Of two permissible constructions of a statute, that which avoids a penalty will be preferred to the other which exacts it. Ukiah Guaranty Co. v. Curry, 148 Cal. 256, 82 Pac. 1048. This statute is susceptible of construction as a remedial statute, but, if so, under a remedial statute all that is permitted is compensation to make good a loss; that this, in truth, is the construction put upon the exact language of section 309, which was adopted in precise words as the law of South Dakota. The Supreme Court of Vermont, having occasion to discuss and construe the South Dakota statute, thus declares:

"That statute clearly is not penal either in its letter or intent, but it grants a right of action to private persons who have suffered pecuniary injury in consequence of certain officers of corporations violating the statute to recover damages of those officers, the extent of whose liability is the amount of the pecuniary loss sustained by such private persons—creditors of the corporation." Farr v. Briggs, 72 Vt. 225, 47 Atl. 793, 82 Am. St. Rep. 930.

If this construction is the sound one, and is to prevail, then the demurrers were properly sustained, and appellants' appeals are lost; for it is certain that their complaints do not charge, nor attempt to charge, upon any specific loss or damage sustained by plaintiff and intervener by reason of the corporate indebtedness in excess of the capital stock which these directors created. Needless to say, appellants therefore combat this construction of the statute, and, while insisting that it is remedial in character, also insist that proof of loss growing out of the contracts, or of damage to the creditors arising therefrom, is not at all essential to the maintenance of the action; that the action is in equity, and therefore could not be for the enforcement of a penalty or forfeiture, which equity abhors; consequently there can be no penalty or forfeiture within the meaning of the law; that the law is remedial, and is to be interpreted as creating a fund for the benefit of the corporation and its creditors growing out of the dereliction of duty of the directors who are thus made, as it were, sureties for these debts; that the penalty is prescribed by section 566 of the Penal Code. Once more, though for the purposes of this decision only, adopting the view of appellants, that this action will lie without a pleading of special loss and damage to plaintiff growing out of the violation of section 309, nevertheless it must be added that the moment the element of compensation for loss is eliminated the statute itself becomes highly penal in its nature, and the argument of appellants that it may still be considered purely as a remedial statute is without force. The fact that the action may be treated as in the nature of a creditors' bill brought on behalf of plaintiff creditor and all others, and that it thus addresses itself to the equitable side of the court, has not the slightest weight in determining the nature of the statute, and no more weight has the invocation of the familiar maxim that equity abhors penalties and forfeitures. The question might have been of consequence in the older administration of jurisprudence where the courts of law and equity were wholly separated, but it ceases to be of consequence under our system, and even under the English system since its Reformed Judicature Act has come into effect. All redress and relief is administered in one forum and by one judicial officer. If as chancellor he revolts at enforcing a legal penalty, he will doff his chancellor's robes and lay aside his great seal, and donning the judicial ermine will enforce the penalty (with or without his jury as the case may be), resuming the regalia of his chancellorship for the purpose of making equitable disposition of the fund. So that, if in truth this statute does exact a penalty, no embarrassment will be found in the court's enforcing it. And that this statute becomes highly penal in character the moment there is eliminated from it the consideration of compensation for loss is at once apparent. What is meant by a statutory penalty was defined in Los Angeles v. Ballerino, 99 Cal. 593, 32 Pac. 581, 34 Pac. 329, to be:

"One which an individual is allowed to recover against a wrongdoer, as a satisfaction for the wrong or injury suffered, and without reference to the actual damage sustained."

Section 14 of the general corporation law of 1850 (St. 1850, p. 348) is, for the purpose of this consideration, substantially the same as section 309 of the present Civil Code. It declared:

"The total amount of the debts which any incorporated company shall owe, shall not at any time exceed the amount of the capital stock actually paid in; and in case of any excess, the directors, under whose administration the same may have happened, except those who have caused their dissent therefrom to be entered at large on the minutes of the said directors at the time, and except those who were not present when the same did happen, shall, in their individual and private capacities, jointly and severally be liable for such excess to the said corporation, and in the event of its dissolution, to any of the creditors thereof to the full amount of such excess."

In Irvine v. McKeon, 23 Cal. 472, this court said:

"This statute provides for making one person individually liable for the debts of another. * * * Like other statutes which create a forfeiture or impose a penalty, it is to be strictly construed."

The fact that a statute may have a remedial phase is not at all inconsistent with its being of highly punitive character. The decisions holding that under statutes similar to ours the recovery is not strictly a penalty have to do with the technical definitions of penalty, and with the statutes of limitations governing actions to enforce penalties. Willcox v. Edwards, 162 Cal. 455, 461, 123 Pac. 276, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1392. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123, upon which appellants rely as supporting their contention that section 309 is a remedial, and not a penal, statute, is explained by Judge Gilbert in Patterson v. Thompson (C. C.) 86 Fed. 85, who shows that the question before the Supreme Court was solely whether such statutes are penal laws in the sense in which the word is used in international law. The same statute under consideration in Huntington v. Attrill was again before the Supreme Court of the United States in Park Bank v. Remsen, 158 U. S. 337, 15 Sup. Ct. 891, 39 L. Ed. 1008, and it was distinctly declared to be in its nature a penal statute, as had previously been held in Chase v. Curtis, 113 U. S. 452, 5 Sup. Ct. 554, 28 L. Ed. 1038. But that this statute is of a highly penal character the moment it is construed as making the directors liable for the full amount of the excess debts which they may have authorized, regardless of loss or damage which may have been occasioned by their acts, does not we think call for lengthy discussion. The directors of an oil company which has exhausted its capacity to incur debts enter into a contract on behalf of the corporation for the digging of an oil well for $50,000. Upon success or nonsuccess depends the future of the corporation. If the well "comes in," the corporation immediately becomes solvent and prosperous. If it is a "dry hole," the corporation is bankrupt. The venture saves the life of the corporation. Oil is discovered, and prosperity follows. Yet, under the terms of this act, as construed by appellants, the corporation itself may recover from these directors the contract price of $50,000, and even the well borer need not look to the corporation for the payment of the debt, but may enforce the directors' liability, and this in a case in which not only no loss has been incurred, but where the excessive contract has proved of incalculable value to the corporation itself. Examples need not be multiplied. We have pointed out that Irvine v. McKeon, supra, judicially declares the penal nature of this statute. Moore v. Lent, 81 Cal. 502, 22 Pac. 875, dealing with the same statute, quotes Irvine v. McKeon approvingly, and declares:

"While such laws are to be commended, as in the interest of creditors and fair dealing, they are penal in their nature, and should be strictly construed."

Many other courts have adopted the same view of their own similar enactments. Patterson v. Thompson (C. C.) 86 Fed. 85; Huntington v. Attrill, supra; Park Bank v. Remsen, supra; Chase v. Curtis, supra; Brown v. Clow, 158 Ind. 403, 62 N. E. 1006; Savage v. Shaw, 195 Mass. 574, 81 N. E. 303, 122 Am. St. Rep. 272, 12 Ann. Cas. 806. See same case, 12 Ann. Cas. 806, where it is noted that the majority of jurisdictions hold such statutes to be penal. While the soundness of this court's decision in Irvine v. McKeon has been declared in Steam Engine Co. v. Hubbard, 101 U. S. 188, 25 L. Ed. 786; Snell v. Bradbury, 139 Cal. 379, 73 Pac. 150; Sav. & Loan Soc. v. McKoon, 120 Cal. 177, 52 Pac. 305; Moore v. Lent, supra; Mitchell v. Hotchkiss, 48 Conn. 9, 40 Am. Rep. 146; State Sav. Bank v. Johnson, 18 Mont. 440, 45 Pac. 662, 33 L. R. A. 552, 56 Am. St. Rep. 591; and Savage v. Shaw, 195 Mass. 571, 81 N. E. 303, 122 Am. St. Rep. 272, 12 Ann. Cas. 806. Nothing in Winchester v. Howard, supra, is in conflict with this; in the first place, because the directors, under section 3, art. 12, of the Constitution, which section was the foundation of the action, are liable solely for loss sustained by embezzlement and misappropriation—a liability involving loss, and thus entirely different in character from that which appellants contend is imposed by section 309. Moreover, the court is at pains to point out that the constitutional enactment did not enlarge the liability imposed upon these trustees under the rules of common law, saying that no one contends that their liability "extends to damages resulting from mere negligence not resulting in some misappropriation nor a loss through bad management or incompetency or mistake," and saying further, "No officer, omitting for the nonce the suretyship, is made liable for any act or to any greater extent than he was liable before the constitutional amendment." And for a final word upon the equitable phase of the matter no court has found difficulty in reconciling the jurisdiction of equity over similar statutes, which the courts unhesitatingly hold to be penal in character. Merchants' Bank, etc., v. Stevenson, 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 232; Id., 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 489; Tradesman Publishing Co. v. Knoxville Car. Co., 95 Tenn. 634, 32 S. W. 1104, 31 L. R. A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943; National Bank v. Dillingham, 147

N. Y. 603, 42 N. E. 338, 49 Am. St. Rep. 692. In all of these jurisdictions it is held that a creditors' bill is the proper method to establish rights under like statutes, and in all of them the statutes themselves are declared to be penal in their nature. Indeed, the whole matter may be summed up in the statement that, even if section 309 be remedial so far as the creditor is concerned, it is highly punitive so far as the directors are concerned.

[3, 4] While we thus conclude that in this action we are dealing with section 309 in its penal aspect, that determination is, as we have before intimated, not vital to the final proposition pressed by respondents upon our attention, which proposition is that section 309, in so far as it affects this action and the right to maintain and prosecute it, has been repealed, and that with the repeal this action itself must fall. The Public Utilities Act went into force on March 23, 1912. Stats. and Amendments to the Codes, Extra Sess. 1911, p. 18. By the terms of that act (section 52b):

"The commission may authorize issues of bonds, notes or other evidences of indebtedness, less than, equivalent to or greater than the authorized or subscribed capital stock of a public utility corporation, and the provisions of sections 309 and 456 of the Civil Code of this state, in so far as they contain inhibitions against the creation by corporations of indebtedness, evidenced by bonds, notes or otherwise, in excess of their total authorized or subscribed capital stock shall have no application to public utility corporations."

In the event that the corporation issues any stock or stock certificate or bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness in nonconformity with the order of the commission, or contrary to the provisions of the act, it is subject to a penalty of not less than $500 nor more than $20,000 for each offense (section 52e), and every officer, agent, or employé knowingly authorizing, directing or aiding in any such issue "shall be guilty of a felony." Manifestly these provisions work radical changes in the pre-existing law declared in section 309. Now, no longer do the assenting directors suffer any momentary penalty. It is the corporation which is to suffer; but, upon the other hand, no longer are the aiding and assenting directors guilty of a misdemeanor. They are guilty of a felony. The judgment in this action was entered on the 15th of April, 1912. This later law was in force upon that date, and had been in force since the 23d of March, 1912. That this change in the law destroyed absolutely appellants' right further to prosecute their action, whether that action be in its nature penal or remedial, no possible doubt can be entertained. True it is that the new law does not repeal sections 309 and 456 of the Civil Code in toto, but it does repeal them absolutely so far as they apply to that class of public utility corporations to which the Ocean Shore Railway Company belongs, and it contains no clause saving pending litigation or imperfect and inchoate rights. The right of action against these directors conferred by section 309 was a statutory right pure and simple, having no foundation in contract, nor any existence at common law. National Bank v. Dillingham, 147 N. Y. 603, 42 N. E. 338, 49 Am. St. Rep. 692.

[4] There can be no question in this state of the power of the Legislature to destroy such inchoate and unvested rights; for section 327 of the Political Code expressly declares that:

"Any statute may be repealed at any time except when it is otherwise provided therein. Persons acting under any statute are deemed to have acted in contemplation of this power of repeal."

Says Thompson (2 Thompson, Corp. [2d Ed.] § 1331):

"Courts are not required to adopt the theory that these statutes are penal to justify the holdings that the repeal of such a statute without reservation destroys any unenforced rights of a creditor. Such holdings can be justified on the equally sound doctrine that the repeal of a statute which gives a cause of action destroys the right, and any pending action based on such statute is abated by such repeal."

Therefore it is that we say that it does not become of vital consequence in this consideration whether the statute be viewed as penal or remedial. The principle is that declared in Curran v. Owens, 15 W. Va. 208, in the following language:

"A right of action, which does not exist at common law, but depends solely upon statute, falls with the repeal of the statute without a saving clause * * * unless that right has been carried into judgment."

Such is the decision of this court in Napa State Hospital v. Flaherty, 134 Cal. 315, 66 Pac. 322, where an earlier law had made the father liable for the support of his insane adult son while confined in a state asylum. A later statute covering the whole field did not in terms repeal the earlier one, but was merely silent on the question of the father's liability. After the later statute had gone into operation the Napa State Hospital brought its action against Flaherty to compel him to support his insane adult son. Here was clearly the case of a remedial statute. This court, in holding the father not liable, declared as follows:

"If we were to concede, as claimed by appellant's counsel in their opening brief, that the entire act of 1889 was repealed by the act of 1897—and this court has very strongly so intimated in People v. King, 127 Cal. 574 [60 Pac. 35]—then the right to recover of defendant is lost. It is a rule of almost universal application, that, where a right is created solely by a statute, and is dependent upon the statute alone, and such right is still inchoate, and not reduced to possession, or perfected by final judgment, the repeal of the statute destroys the remedy, unless the repealing statute contains a saving clause. Sutherland on Statutory Construction, §§ 162, 163; Endlich on the Interpretation of Statutes, § 478, and cases in notes. It was said by Tindal, C. J., in Kay v. Goodwin, 6 Bing. 576, 4 Moore & P. 341, that the effect of repealing a statute is 'to obliterate it as completely from the records of the Parliament as if it had never passed, * * * except for the purpose of those actions which were commenced, prosecuted, and concluded whilst it was an existing law.'"

To like effect in People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, 112 Pac. 866, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1148, it is said:

"These cases have been cited as fairly typifying the extremes of judicial determination, and as expressing the reasons upon which their rules of decision are based. In the case of penalties and crimes the repeal operates to defeat all actions pending. In case of a statute conferring civil rights or powers the repeal operates to deprive the citizen of all such rights or powers which are at the time of the repeal inchoate, incomplete, and unperfected. In the case of statutes conferring jurisdiction the repeal operates by causing all pending proceedings to cease and terminate at the time and in the condition which existed when the repeal became operative. In cases of judgment pending upon appeal, the rule of decision is that the proceedings abate and the judgment falls."

In Flanigan v. Sierra County, 196 U. S. 553, 25 Sup. Ct. 314, 49 L. Ed. 597, discussing a California law, the Supreme Court of the United States says:

"The general rule is that powers derived wholly from a statute are extinguished by its repeal. * * * And it follows that no proceedings can be pursued under the repealed statute, though begun before the repeal, unless such proceedings be authorized under a special clause in the repealing act."

And to the same effect are all of the cases in this state. McMinn v. Bliss, 31 Cal. 122; Lamb v. Schottler, 54 Cal. 319; Spears v. County of Modoc, 101 Cal. 303, 35 Pac. 869; Anderson v. Byrnes, 122 Cal. 272, 54 Pac. 821; City of Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674; Wheeler v. County of Plumas, 149 Cal. 782, 87 Pac. 802. Says Mr. Justice Gray in New London Northern R. R. Co. v. Boston, etc., R. R. Co., 102 Mass. 386:

"The conclusive answer to this argument is that a statute which wholly repeals an earlier one, either expressly or by implication, without any saving clause, makes it ineffectual to support any proceedings, whether not yet begun or pending at the time of its passage, and not already prosecuted to final judgment vesting absolute rights. The books are so full of cases illustrating this principle that the only difficulty is in making a selection."

Without further multiplying quotations it may be said that the principle is of universal application, as is plainly established by Vance v. Rankin, 194 Ill. 625, 62 N. E. 807, 88 Am. St. Rep. 173; Van Inwagen v. City of Chicago, 61 Ill. 31; Taylor v. Strayer, 167 Ind. 23, 78 N. E. 236, 119 Am. St. Rep. 469; Louisiana v. Mayor of New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936; Cope v. Hampton County, 42 S. C. 17, 19 S. E. 1018; Bennett v. Hargus, 1 Neb. 419; Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 324; Wilson v. Head, 184 Mass. 515, 69 N. E. 317; Yeomans v. Heath, 185 Mass. 189, 70 N. E. 1114; Surtees v. Ellison, 9 B. & C. 750, 109 English Reprint, 278; Kay, Assignee, v. Goodwin, 6 Bing. 576, 130 English Reprint, 1403; Rex. v. Justice of the Peace for the City of London, 3 Burr. 1455, 97 English Reprint, 924.

It follows herefrom that the demurrers were properly sustained, and the judgments appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(171 Cal. 770)

WILCOX v. WILCOX. (L. A. 3521.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1916.)

1. MARRIAGE ⇐58—ANNULMENT—GROUNDS.
In an action to annul a marriage, findings that prior to the marriage, and as an inducement thereto, and to the conveyance of certain property by plaintiff to defendant before the marriage defendant had represented herself as an unmarried woman, when in fact there was a former husband living from whom she had not been divorced, and had fraudulently represented that she had always been of a moral character, was a nurse and would be a kind and dutiful wife, would not sustain a judgment annulling the marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 115–123; Dec. Dig. ⇐58.]

2. DEEDS ⇐70 — CONVEYANCE TO WIFE BY HUSBAND—CANCELLATION—GROUNDS.
Finding of such false representations, held not to sustain a judgment setting aside the plaintiff's conveyance of real property to the wife after the marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 165–182; Dec. Dig. ⇐70.]

3. DEEDS ⇐160—CONVEYANCE TO WIFE BY HUSBAND—CANCELLATION—GROUNDS.
Where a husband conveyed realty to defendant in the belief that she was his lawful wife and induced by her representation that the property would be kept as a home for them both, and that she would not incumber it without his consent, her act in subsequently increasing a mortgage lien from $2,000 to $3,000 without his consent, did not destroy its character as a home.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 505–517; Dec. Dig. ⇐160.]

4. TRIAL ⇐396 — FINDINGS — RESPONSIVENESS TO ISSUES.
In an action to annul a marriage, and to cancel a conveyance of realty by plaintiff to defendant, any findings of undue influence on the part of defendant in obtaining the conveyance entirely outside the issues made by the pleadings, will be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 935–938; Dec. Dig. ⇐396.]

5. DEEDS ⇐211 — HUSBAND TO WIFE — UNDUE INFLUENCE.
The mere relation of husband and wife does not constitute prima facie evidence of undue influence as against the wife to whom the husband has conveyed realty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 637–647; Dec. Dig. ⇐211.]

6. MARRIAGE ⇐40—PRESUMPTION OF LEGALITY.
When a marriage has been shown in evidence whether regular or irregular, and whatever the form of proof, the law raised a strong presumption of its legality.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 58–69, 79; Dec. Dig. ⇐40.]

7. MARRIAGE ⟸40—ANNULMENT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of proof is on the party assailing a marriage on the ground that a former husband or wife is still alive, to show not only the former marriage, but also that it has not been dissolved by death or judicial decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 58–69, 79; Dec. Dig. ⟸40.]

8. MARRIAGE ⟸40 — PRESUMPTION OF VALIDITY.

The prima facie presumption in favor of the validity of a marriage assailed, outweighs the presumption of the continuance of the life of the former husband or wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 58–69, 79; Dec. Dig. ⟸40.]

9. EVIDENCE ⟸597—SUFFICIENCY—PRESUMPTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1961, providing that a prima facie presumption may be controverted by other evidence, but that unless so controverted, the jury must find according to the presumption, the court, where there was nothing to offset the presumption in favor of the validity of a marriage assailed on the ground that defendant had a former husband living, was required to find according to the presumption; and that the evidence may have satisfied the court that the defendant was an unchaste woman, guilty of other wrongful acts, could not authorize it to disregard the presumption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2449; Dec. Dig. ⟸597.]

10. MARRIAGE ⟸40—ANNULMENT—PRESUMPTION OF LEGALITY—GOOD FAITH.

In an action to annul the marriage on the ground that defendant had a former husband living from whom she had not been divorced, where the plaintiff's evidence did not show that the former husband was alive at the time of defendant's subsequent marriage to plaintiff, defendant was not called upon to show her honest belief that such former husband was not living; Civ. Code, § 61, subd. 2, providing that a subsequent marriage contracted by one "during the life of a former husband," is valid until its nullity is adjudged by a competent tribunal, if the former husband is absent, and not known to such person to be living for 5 successive years preceding the subsequent marriage or is generally reputed or believed by such person to be dead at the time of such subsequent marriage not applying to such case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 58–69, 79; Dec. Dig. ⟸40.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Thomas Wilcox against Carrie Wilcox. Judgment for plaintiff annulling the marriage and canceling a certain conveyance of real property made by him to defendant. Motion for new trial denied, and defendant appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Parker & Moote, J. W. McKinley, and Frank Karr, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Trask, Norton & Brown and Edgar K. Brown, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal by defendant, Carrie Wilcox, from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial. The judgment was one annulling the marriage between the parties and canceling a certain conveyance of real property in Long Beach, Los Angeles county, made by plaintiff to defendant.

[1, 2] The ground of annulment was that, at the time of her marriage to plaintiff, defendant was the wife of another man. That she had falsely represented herself as being an unmarried woman, when, in fact, there was a former husband living from whom she had not been divorced, was the principal ground upon which the conveyance, made by plaintiff after the purported marriage and upon the belief that defendant was his wife, was set aside. Other fraudulent representations were alleged and found to have been made, such as that she had always been of chaste and moral character, was a nurse, would be a kind, dutiful, and affectionate wife, etc. As we understand the findings as to this, all such representations were made prior to the marriage, and really as an inducement thereto and to the conveyance of certain property in Pasadena, made before the marriage, and which the trial court refused to set aside, and the findings in this connection mean only that the plaintiff relied upon the same in making the subsequent Long Beach property conveyance. Upon the authority of Barnes v. Barnes, 110 Cal. 418, 42 Pac. 904, it must be held that these findings must be discarded from any consideration which will give to them the effect of sustaining the judgment either as to the annulment of the marriage or the setting aside of the Long Beach property conveyance.

[3] It was further alleged and found, it may be conceded, that this conveyance was made not only because of plaintiff's belief that defendant was his lawful wife, but that it was induced by a representation on defendant's part that the property would be kept as a home or support for them both, and that she would not convey it away or incumber it without his consent. It was then incumbered by a mortgage for $2,000, and subsequently defendant, without plaintiff's consent, increased the mortgage lien to $3,000. There is absolutely no evidence to sustain a conclusion that defendant ever promised that she would not incumber the property, and there is nothing in the evidence to show that, in so far as any act of defendant is concerned, the property has not been kept for the purposes of a home for the parties. The mere additional incumbrance of $1,000 did not destroy its character as such, and there is nothing to indicate that it would have that effect.

[4] If any finding of the court may reasonably be construed as showing undue influence on the part of defendant in obtaining this conveyance, it is entirely outside the issues made by the pleadings, the complaint containing no suggestion or intimation to that effect, and must be disregarded. Nor can we find in the evidence any support for such a finding.

[5] It appears to be settled that the mere relation of husband and wife does not constitute prima facie evidence of undue influence as against the wife. Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 170, 66 Pac. 231; McDougall v. McDougall, 135 Cal. 316, 67 Pac. 778.

We are satisfied that the judgment of the trial court can be sustained only on the theory that the evidence was sufficient to sustain its conclusion that the former husband was living at the time of defendant's marriage to plaintiff, and that if it was not sufficient for that purpose, the judgment must be reversed. The evidence as to this was substantially as follows: The marriage between plaintiff and defendant occurred on June 29, 1910. Some 17 or 18 years before that date defendant married a man named Albert Broberg, in St. Paul, Minn., and lived with him 3 days in Winnebago, a town near St. Paul. They then separated, he leaving her, she testified, and shortly thereafter she left the town and went to Philadelphia to her folks. She did not know where he went. She went by the name of Broberg for almost 2 years. She never obtained a divorce from Broberg, nor he from her. In 1898 or 1899 she married a Dr. Lehman in New York. Before marrying the latter she tried to find out where Broberg was. She went to where "he used to live" near St. Paul, and could not find him. A deputy sheriff told her that he was dead. She testified positively that "he is dead," acknowledging, however, in answer to a later question, that her statement to that effect was based solely upon what the deputy sheriff told her. She never saw him after they separated. He was a healthy, rugged man, about 33 to 35 years of age. Dr. Lehman, who was over 70 years of age, and she lived together only about 3 years, and he died June 8, 1910, a few days before defendant's marriage to plaintiff.

It will be seen from the foregoing that there was no affirmative evidence from which it might lawfully be inferred that Broberg was alive on June 29, 1910, other than that to the effect that he was alive 17 or 18 years before, and was then 33 to 35 years of age, and rugged and healthy. The most that can be said as to this evidence, however, is that it might possibly be held sufficient to create the prima facie presumption that he was still alive, nothing to the contrary appearing. But, as was said in Hunter v. Hunter, 111 Cal. 261, 267, 43 Pac. 756, 31 L. R. A. 411, 52 Am. St. Rep. 180:

"This presumption of the continuation of life is, however, overcome by another. It is presumed that a person is innocent of crime or wrong. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963. There is also a presumption, and a very strong one, in favor of the legality of a marriage regularly solemnized. Rather than hold a second marriage invalid and that the parties have committed a crime or been guilty of immorality, the courts have often indulged in the presumption of death in less than 7 years, or, where the absent party was shown to be alive, have allowed a presumption that the absent party has procured a divorce. A more correct statement perhaps would be that the burden is cast upon the party asserting guilt or immorality to prove the negative—that the first marriage had not ended before the second marriage."

This rule was held to apply in civil as well as in criminal cases, and People v. Stokes, 71 Cal. 263, 12 Pac. 71, claimed to establish a different rule, was disapproved. In McKibbin v. McKibbin, 139 Cal. 448, 73 Pac. 143, an action for divorce, it appeared from the plaintiff's testimony that prior to her marriage with the defendant, she had been lawfully married to one Lake, who was still alive. It was claimed that plaintiff was bound to show a dissolution of that marriage to make out a prima facie case, but it was held substantially by the trial court that, as a divorce may have been granted or the marriage annulled, she was entitled to rely on the presumption of innocence of crime, the court saying:

"I am inclined to take the view that proof of solemnization, aided by the presumption that the solemnization was regular, would overcome the presumption of bigamy, that would result if she had two husbands."

[6] This court said that it "quite" agreed, quoting from 1 Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, as follows:

"Every intendment of the law leans to matrimony. When a marriage has been shown in evidence, whether regular or irregular, and whatever the form of proof, the law raises a strong presumption of its legality—not only casting the burden of proof on the party objecting, but requiring him throughout, in every particular, to make plain, against the constant pressure of presumption, the truth of law and fact that it is illegal and void."

[7, 8] These cases must be taken as establishing it to be the law in this state that the burden of proof is on the party assailing a marriage on the ground that a former husband or wife is still alive, to show not only the former marriage, but also that it has not been dissolved by death or judicial decree, and that the prima facie presumption in favor of the validity of the marriage assailed outweighs the presumption of the continuance of life of the former husband or wife. There is nothing in any subsequent case to impair the effect of these decisions. It is true that in Hunter v. Hunter, supra, the trial court had found in accord with the presumption, in favor of the validity of the marriage, and that this court simply sustained a finding on the ground that it had sufficient support in the evidence. It is also true that in McKibbin v. McKibbin, supra, the court did no more than to hold that such presumption was sufficient to make out a prima facie case. In neither case, therefore, was this court called upon to declare that the trial court must find in accord with such presumption. And, of course, whether it must do so or not depends upon the evidence in the particular case.

[9] If there is nothing to offset the effect of such presumption, the court or jury must find in accord therewith. It is expressly provided in section 1961, Code of Civil Procedure, that a satisfactory or prima facie presumption may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect, "but unless so controverted the jury are bound to find according to the presumption." In the case at bar the last date on which the former husband was shown to be alive was some 17 years before defendant's marriage to plaintiff. There was absolutely nothing to indicate that he was alive at any later date, except the presumption of continuance of life. To conclude that he was alive on June 29, 1910, involved the conclusion that the marriage to plaintiff was illegal, and that defendant had twice committed the crime of bigamy, first in marrying Lehman, and then in marrying plaintiff, with no evidence whatever upon which to found such a conclusion other than the presumption of continuance of life. That the evidence generally may have satisfied the trial court that defendant was an unchaste woman and was guilty of other wrongful acts could not authorize the court to disregard the presumption of her innocence of these crimes, and the presumption of the legality of her marriage to plaintiff. As well might it be contended that the effect of the presumption of innocence existing in favor of a defendant charged with a crime can be overcome by proof that he has been guilty of other distinct and different crimes, or is altogether a wicked and depraved individual. If there was any circumstance tending to show that Broberg was alive at the date of defendant's marriage to plaintiff, a case might fairly be held to have been made upon which the court was authorized to find against the presumption. But here we have nothing opposed to the presumption other than the fact that he was alive at a remote date, some 17 years before. The case is one where the presumption is not controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect, and where, accordingly, the court is bound to find according to the presumption.

[10] The learned District Court of Appeal, in deciding this case, were of the opinion that the question of the good faith of the party invoking such a presumption in a case of this character was a material element to be considered, and, finding in the evidence no direct statement by her that she believed the statement made to her that Broberg was dead, or any direct statement that she had never heard from him, concluded that the showing of good faith was not such as to require the trial court to find in accord with the presumption. We are inclined to think that the analysis of defendant's evidence in this regard was somewhat critical and technical, but assuming it to be fairly warranted by the record, we are unable to see that the element of good faith or belief of defendant is at all involved in such a matter as the one before us. As is said in the petition for a hearing in this court:

"The belief of a party in the death is material only, as appears from the cases referred to by the court, when as a matter of fact the party is alive."

Under the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 61 of the Civil Code, a subsequent marriage contracted by a person during the life of a former husband or wife of such person, is valid until its nullity is adjudged by a competent tribunal, if the—

"former husband or wife is absent, and not known to such person to be living for the space of five successive years immediately preceding such subsequent marriage, or is generally reputed or believed by such person to be dead at the time such subsequent marriage was contracted."

In a case arising under this provision, a case involving the question whether the second marriage is valid notwithstanding the former husband or wife is alive and the former marriage has not been dissolved or annulled, of course the element of good faith and belief of the party that the former husband or wife is dead is an essential element, for the statute expressly so makes it. Such a case was Estate of Richards, 133 Cal. 524, 65 Pac. 1034, relied on by respondent and cited by the learned District Court of Appeal in support of its ruling that good faith and honest belief are elements in the case at bar. There is not a word in the opinion in that case which is opposed to the views enunciated in Hunter v. Hunter, supra. The same is true of Estate of Harrington, 140 Cal. 244,[1] also cited by the District Court of Appeal. Section 61, Civil Code, is not applicable here at all. Its provisions relate solely to a subsequent marriage "contracted by any person during the life of a former husband or wife of such person," etc. If the former husband or wife is not shown to have been living at the time of the subsequent marriage, which is the case here, no situation is presented which the party is called upon to combat by a showing of honest belief that such former husband or wife was then deceased.

From what we have said it is apparent that the judgment of the trial court cannot be sustained.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(28 Cal. App. 597)

NICHOLSON et al. v. LEATHAM et al.

(L. A. 3410.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1915.)

WILLS ⇐221—PROBATE—VACATION—FRAUD.

The existence of a fiduciary relation on the part of those securing probate of a will is not essential to the making of a sufficient case of extrinsic fraud to warrant a court of equity in charging the executors, etc., with a trust in favor of the defrauded parties and setting aside the judgment of probate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 539–541; Dec. Dig. ⇐221.]

[1] 72 Pac. 1000, 98 Am. St. Rep. 51.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Melissa Leatham Nicholson and others against Helen L. Leatham and others. A judgment for defendants was affirmed by the Court of Appeal of the Second District (153 Pac. 965), and plaintiffs apply for rehearing in the Supreme Court. Denied.

A. Lincoln Walker and Ansel Smith, both of Los Angeles, and Luce & Luce, of San Diego, for appellants. Sam Ferry Smith, of San Diego, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Second District is denied. In denying such application we deem it proper to say that, in so far as anything said in the opinion may be supposed to imply that a fiduciary relation on the part of those securing the probate of a will is essential to the making of a sufficient case of extrinsic fraud to sustain an action for a decree in equity charging the executor, legatee, or devisee with a trust in favor of the defrauded party (see Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 481, 89 Pac. 317; Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 67 Pac. 282, 87 Am. St. Rep. 98), it is not in accord with our view of the law. No such distinction is warranted by the authorities. Such a doctrine is not at all essential to the conclusion reached by the District Court of Appeal, and the opinion filed sufficiently disposes of the case without reference to any such doctrine, and on the theory that the parties must be deemed to have had notice of the proceedings in time to have enabled them to assail the will, and that they did not use due diligence in regard thereto. It may be that no such implication as suggested was intended by the learned author of the opinion, but we feel that some language used may be thought by some to be susceptible of that construction.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

29 Cal. App. 284

THORNBER v. HART. (Civ. 1830.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 29, 1915. Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1916. Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1916.)

ELECTIONS ⊂227—CONDUCT OF ELECTION—DELAY IN OPENING POLLS—VALIDITY OF VOTE.

In an election for the office of county supervisor, a delay from 6 a. m. to 7:15 a. m. in the opening of the polls in one large precinct, during which time a number of voters were unable to vote and left the polls, without a showing whether they voted on that day or not, in the absence of fraud, was not so great or considerable as to be inexcusable, or to justify the court on a contest in rejecting the entire vote of that precinct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 197–200; Dec. Dig. ⊂227.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Election contest by J. H. Thornber against J. O. Hart. Judgment for contestant, and the contestee appeals. Reversed.

Borton & Theile, of Bakersfield, for appellant. E. L. Foster and Chas. A. Barnhart, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appellant, at an election held in the county of Kern in 1914, was declared to have been elected to the office of supervisor. Thereafter respondent, who was the opposing candidate at that election, filed notice of contest, and a recount of the votes of the supervisorial district was had in the superior court. Respondent was successful in that proceeding. The contestee has appealed from the judgment.

The main contention is that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings and judgment. By the notice of contest first filed the contestant set out various irregularities or acts of malconduct on the part of the board of election, as are permitted under section 1111, Code of Civil Procedure, as grounds of contest, but did not specify in the original notice of contest particularly the ground afterwards relied upon, that there had been a delay in the opening of the polls in precinct No. 20 of the supervisorial district. At a later date, and after the time had expired within which the proceeding of contest might be instituted, the contestant was allowed to amend his statement of contest by adding thereto an allegation as follows:

"That in said precinct No. 20, the said polling place as established by the board of supervisors, as aforesaid, was not opened at the time required by law, and a large number of voters were unable to vote, who had presented themselves at said polling place for the purpose of voting, prior to the opening of said polling place."

The appellant objected to the making of this amendment, both on the ground that it was offered too late, and also on the ground that it in its substance did not sufficiently set out a ground of contest. Both objections were by the court overruled. The trial judge concluded, as shown by the record, that inasmuch as malconduct of the officers of election in some particulars had been set out and alleged in the original statement of contest, adding to such allegation of malconduct statements of other acts committed by such officers would not, in effect, be the making of a statement of a new cause or ground of contest. While section 1117, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that no statement of the grounds of contest will be rejected for want of form, if the grounds are alleged with such certainty as will advise the defendant of the particular proceeding or cause for which such election is contested, it does seem clear that the contestee in such cases is entitled to have stated the particulars in which it is charged that malconduct was committed on the part of the officers conducting the election. In the statement of contest first filed it was not alleged in any way that contestant would rely upon proof to show there had been a delay in the opening of the polls in any precinct; while he assigned malconduct, he particularized in allegations pointing to certain specific acts and things. It is to indulge great liberality indeed toward the contestant to concede his right to file the amendment that was made. It is also exceedingly questionable whether the statement in the amendment was sufficient to show such a delay in the opening of the polls as would make a good ground of contest, for the quantity of time embraced within that delay is not stated; it is only stated that the polls were not "opened at the time required by law." In the case of Packwood v. Brownell, 121 Cal. 478, 53 Pac. 1079, the specification of malconduct which our Supreme Court held to be insufficient was:

"That the said board of judges of election of Pitt river precinct did not open the polls at sunrise of said day of election nor keep the polls open for the length of time required by law."

In the case just cited the ruling of the trial court, on a motion to dismiss the contest because of insufficiency of the specification, was reviewed, and the judgment reversed. However, it will not be necessary for us to announce a final conclusion on these two propositions, as we think that the main contention of appellant made as to a proposition which involves the crucial finding of the trial judge, must be sustained. The court at the hearing of the contest canvassed the vote cast in all the precincts of the supervisorial district, and rejected the entire vote of precinct No. 20 because there had been a delay of 1 hour and 15 minutes in the opening of the polls. The result of the tally on the precincts, excluding precinct 20, gave to contestant a majority of 55 votes. Precinct No. 20 was a large precinct. There were residing in it at the time of the election 733 registered voters, and the election returns showed that 549 of these had voted at the election, and that 239 had voted in favor of appellant and 163 in favor of contestant. So that, had the vote of precinct No. 20 not been rejected, the contestee would have had a majority of 11 votes over respondent. The court finds that the polls in precinct 20 were not opened until 7:15 a. m., and that there was not sufficient cause or excuse for the failure to open the polls; that between the hour of 6 a. m. and 7:15 a. m. at least 50 voters came to the polling place of precinct 20 and demanded the right to cast their ballots, and offered to vote, and that:

"Because of the polls not being open for the reception of ballots, a large number, to wit, more than 21, left the polls and were unable to vote, and it is not shown whether such voters did vote on said 3d day of November, 1914, or not."

The court further expressly found that none of the acts or omissions of the election officers of precinct 20 were done or permitted with any fraudulent design on the part of said election officers, nor for the purpose of affecting the result of the election. The evidence taken showed that the board of election officers arrived at the precinct in time to open the polls as required by law, but that the key to the building was missing. A search was instituted for the key, and some outsider finally found it, and the polls were thereupon immediately opened and votes received. So it appears that the delay in the opening of the polls which the court found to be without any fraudulent intent or intent to affect the result of the election, but still found to be inexcusable, was occasioned through the failure of the officers to make an entrance into the building or polling place. That the confusion in this regard was inexcusable we think can hardly be concluded from the evidence. As is said in Packwood v. Brownell, hereinbefore cited:

"It must be from the nature and necessity of the case that the Legislature intended that some margin, even though narrow, should be allowed for honest effort to comply with the statute, and did not intend that the vote of any precinct should be invalidated because the polls were not open at the very instant of sunrise. Therefore, further, if any person seeks to take advantage of omission in this regard, he must allege some delay sufficient to show a transgression of the statute inconsistent with an honest and intelligent endeavor to obey its command, or that the violation of its letter on which he relies has operated to obstruct the full and fair expression of the suffrage of the precinct."

It will be remembered that, for aught that the findings of the court show, the 21 persons or more who left the polls of precinct 20 before 7:15 o'clock may have returned and voted during the many remaining hours of the election day. Therefore, if the burden was upon the contestant to show that he had been injured by reason of the alleged failure of the officers to have the polls open at 6 a. m., it is plain, according to the findings of the court, that he did not sustain this burden by proof. It is argued, however, that upon a showing being made of the delay in opening the polls, a presumption of damage arose which shifted the burden of proof to the contestee and required of him a showing that the irregularity did not result in damage to the contestant. This question and those incidental to the proposition were considered in the case of Kenworthy v. Mast, 141 Cal. 268, 74 Pac. 841. In that case it was shown that there was a delay of from 6 to 7:45 o'clock in the opening of the polls of a certain precinct, a delay of 30 minutes more than the evidence and findings disclose here occurred in the case of precinct 20. The court there said that it had never been held in this state that a literal compliance with the provisions of the law as to the hour of opening the polls was absolutely essential to the validity of the vote of a precinct, and that the disobedience of even a mandatory statute must be liberally construed. The conclusion to be deducted from that opinion is that the Supreme Court did not consider a delay in opening the polls of 1 hour and 45 minutes at the commencement of the day a great deviation from the requirement of the statute. The court there referred to the Packwood-Brownell Case, supra, and called attention to the concurring opinion of the Chief Justice as filed in that case, wherein it was said that, while the requirements as to time or place of holding an election are mandatory, the time in that connection meant the proper day for holding the election, and—

"that a slight delay in opening the polls, explained and excused by the absence of one of the officers, and by the necessity of setting up the booth, railings, etc., ought not to disfranchise the voters of a precinct, in the absence of any showing of actual injury."

In the case last above cited there was even a greater delay in the opening of the polls than was shown in Kenworthy v. Mast, supra, the delay being from 6:29 a. m. until 8:15 or 8:30, and we glean from the opinion that such a delay was not to be denominated great or considerable. In Kenworthy v. Mast, it is said:

"The general rule, as stated in McCrary on Elections (section 165), is that, in the absence of a provision in the statute expressly declaring that a failure in this respect shall render the election void, it will be regarded as so far directory only, and that, unless the deviation from the legal hours has affected the result, it will be disregarded; but that if such deviation is great, or even considerable, the presumption will be that it has affected the result, and the burden will be upon him who seeks to uphold the election to show affirmatively that it has not."

Considering the facts in evidence in this case and applying to them the law as we understand the Supreme Court to have declared it, we are not of the view that the delay shown in the opening of the polls in precinct 20 was either "great" or "considerable." Conceding correctness for that conclusion, it follows that the contestant failed to support his charges of malconduct with proof of damage resulting therefrom to him. It would be most unjust, we think, to declare that all of the voters who cast their ballots at precinct 20 on election day should be disfranchised in their attempt to express a choice for supervisor simply because the election officers deviated from the strict requirement of the statute as to the opening of the polls. We, therefore, conclude that it was error for the court to have rejected the vote cast in that precinct. Had the findings of fact contained a particular statement showing the reason for the nonopening of the polls, a judgment might be directed without the necessity of further proceedings being had in the trial court. However, as the finding that the officers failed without sufficient cause or excuse to open the polls may import a finding of fraud, the review of the evidence which we have made becomes necessary in order to arrive at the decision indicated.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

(29 Cal. App. 212)

CITY OF SACRAMENTO v. SWANSTON et al. (Civ. 1397.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 21, 1915.)

1. STATUTES ⟸72, 76—UNIFORM OPERATION—APPLICABILITY OF GENERAL LAW—CLASS LEGISLATION.

Notwithstanding Const. art. 1, § 11, declaring that all laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation, and article 4, § 25, prohibiting local or special laws in enumerated cases and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, the Legislature may pass laws designated to apply to or operate on a certain class of persons only, provided the class is founded on some natural or extrinsic or constitutional distinction, but there must be no arbitrary discrimination between parties standing in the same relation to the subject of the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 72, 77½–78½; Dec. Dig. ⟸72, 76.]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸1—NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS.

The taking of private property in the exercise of the power of eminent domain is justifiable only on the theory of common benefit, and though Const. art. 1, § 14, provides that no property shall be taken or damaged without just compensation having been made, private property may be taken though the owner does not desire to give it up.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2; Dec. Dig. ⟸1.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸248 — EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸265 — STATUTES ⟸72, 76 — EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS—SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1255a, authorizing the court, on the abandonment of condemnation proceedings by plaintiff, to enter judgment of dismissal and include in the costs assessed against plaintiff the fee of defendant's attorney in the proceeding, applies alike to all of the classes to which it applies, and does not discriminate as between persons belonging to that class, and denies to none the equal protection of the law, and the provision does not violate Const. U. S. Amend. 14, or Const. art. 1, § 11, providing that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation, or article 4, § 25, prohibiting special laws; eminent domain proceedings being capable of differentiation from ordinary actions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 703; Dec. Dig. ⟸248; Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 400, 690–693; Dec. Dig. ⟸265; Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 72, 77; Dec. Dig. ⟸72, 76.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; N. A. Hawkins, Judge.

Action by the City of Sacramento against George Swanston and another. From a judgment of dismissal with costs against plaintiff in favor of defendant named, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Archibald Yell, of Sacramento, for appellant. Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, and Driver & Driver, of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. The action is in eminent domain for the condemnation of certain lands belonging to the defendants. The jury assessed the damages accruing to the lands described in the complaint by reason of the taking thereof for the purposes of the plaintiff, and in due time after the verdict so rendered and entered, the court, upon its findings of fact and conclusions of law, entered judgment of condemnation in the amount of damages admeasured by the jury. The plaintiff having failed, within 30 days after the final judgment of condemnation, to pay the amount at which the damages as to the defendant Swanston's lands was appraised or fixed by the jury, as required by section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court, in accordance with the provisions of section 1255a of said Code, upon motion of said defendant, entered a judgment dismissing the action and taxing costs against the plaintiff. Included in the costs so allowed to the defendant is an attorney's fee of $3,000, such a fee constituting, under the terms of section 1255a, supra, an item of costs which, with other legal costs, may be allowed against a plaintiff in condemnation proceedings where there has been an express or implied abandonment of such proceedings by the plaintiff at any time after the filing of the complaint. This appeal is prosecuted by the plaintiff from said judgment of dismissal.

[1] The principal and, indeed, the sole complaint against the judgment arises from the allowance by the court of an attorney's fee to the defendant, the plaintiff claiming that so much of section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure as authorizes the court, upon the abandonment of the proceedings by the plaintiff and thereupon the entry of judgment of dismissal, to include in the costs assessed against the plaintiff the fee of the defendant's attorney in the proceeding is unconstitutional and void for these reasons: (1) That said section in the particular mentioned violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution; (2) that it contravenes certain provisions of our state Constitution, requiring that laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation, and prohibiting the passage of special laws.

For the support of their position as thus stated counsel for the plaintiff rely principally upon the case of Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193, 11 Ann. Cas. 712, and the cases therein cited. In the case just named, the Supreme Court held to be violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution and of the provisions of our state Constitution, requiring that every law of a general nature shall have a uniform operation and prohibiting the passage of special laws the provision of our mechanics' lien law which authorized the allowance by the trial court in actions to foreclose mechanics' and laborers' liens—

"as part of the costs, * * * reasonable attorney's fees * * * to be allowed to each lien claimant whose lien is established, whether he be plaintiff or defendant."

The reasoning of the court in that case is, substantially: That it is a provision which imposes a penalty upon the defendants in such an action for a failure to pay certain debts, and thus the law singles out a certain class of debtors and punishes them when, for like delinquencies, it punishes no others. They are therefore not treated as other debtors, or equally with other debtors.

"If the litigation terminates adversely to them," so proceeds the reasoning, "they are mulcted in the attorney's fees of the successful plaintiff; if it terminates in their favor, they recover no attorney's fees. It is no answer to say that they are punished only when adjudged to be in the wrong. They do not enter the courts upon equal terms. They must pay attorney's fees if wrong. They do not recover any if right; while their adversaries recover if right and pay nothing if wrong."

Thus, so goes the argument, in suits to which they are parties they are discriminated against, do not stand equal before the law, and are denied its equal protection, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution. Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666.

In support of the position that the provision of the law concerned here involves special legislation or the granting of special privileges, rights, and immunities, contrary to certain specific inhibitions of section 25, art. 4, of the Constitution, the court, in the Builders' Supply Co. Case, cites the following cases, which are also cited here: Davidson v. Jennings, 27 Colo. 187, 60 Pac. 354, 48 L. R. A. 340, 83 Am. St. Rep. 49; Atkinson v. Woodmansee, 68 Kan. 71, 74 Pac. 640, 64 L. R. A. 325; Perkins v. Boyd, 16 Colo. App. 266, 65 Pac. 350; Hocking Val. Coal Co. v. Rosser, 53 Ohio St. 12, 41 N. E. 263, 29 L. R. A. 386; Grand Rapids Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104, 43 N. W. 1006; Wilder v. Chicago Ry. Co., 70 Mich. 382, 38 N. W. 289; Openshaw v. Halfin, 24 Utah, 426, 68 Pac. 138, 91 Am. St. Rep. 796; Durkee v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 464, 9 Am. Rep. 500. In all these cases, with the exception of Wilder v. Chicago Ry. Co., 70 Mich. 382, 38 N. W. 289, and Durkee v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 464, 9 Am. Rep. 500, in which, however, the identical principle is discussed and the same rule applied, statutes providing for laborers' or mechanics' liens are involved. As seen, the reasoning by which the conclusions in those cases are arrived at is substantially the same as that upon which the United States Supreme Court, in Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, supra, declared the Texas statute authorizing the allowance of attorney's fees to persons having a bona fide claim for services, or for damages against a railroad company for stock killed, was unconstitutional and void as in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution.

There have been no other provisions of law, either organic or statutory, which have been the source of so wide a range of discussion, or which have been more difficult to apply in given cases than those inhibitions of the state and federal Constitutions whose purpose is to establish equality before the law, and therefore the uniform operation of all laws of a general nature and the prohibition of class and special legislation.

It is not true that any law which is designed to operate upon a particular class of persons or property involves special legislation, or is wanting in uniformity of operation, or denies to a person the equal protection of the law within the meaning of the constitutional guaranties relating to those subjects. Indeed, that even special laws are in certain cases permissible under our present state Constitution and the cases expounding the provision which, by implication at least, authorizes such legislation, is a well-settled proposition. Article 4, § 25, subd. 33; People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 498, 22 Pac. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66; People v. Mullender, 132 Cal. 221, 64 Pac. 299; Board of Directors v. Nye, 8 Cal. App. 527, 542, 543, 97 Pac. 208. It is true, however, that the design of the framers of our present Constitution, by inserting into that instrument provisions prohibiting class or special legislation, was to correct or prevent a repetition of the evils which grew up under the Constitution which the present superseded from the vast amount of special legislation, applying only to certain persons and things, which found its way to our statute books. The result is that now special legislation is not, as formerly, generally permissible, but only allowable where the exigency of the occasion imperatively calls for a special law.

It is obvious, however, that the case now before us is not of that class where a resort to special legislation is necessary or contemplated by subdivision 33, § 25, art. 4, of the Constitution. The sole question here, then, is whether the law in question as to the particular provision thereof under review, being a law of a general nature, is wanting in uniformity in its operation, or whether it is a special law within the constitutional inhibition in that regard or offends the mandate of the national Constitution against the passage of laws having the effect of denying to any person within the jurisdiction of this state the equal protection of the laws.

What is meant by the provision of our Constitution that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation" (article 1, § 11)—a provision which was contained in the state Constitution of 1849—was as clearly and logically explained as that language has ever been, judicially, in the very early case of Smith v. Judge Twelfth District Court, 17 Cal. 555, by the late Judge Baldwin, voicing the views and conclusion of the court. In that case, the question was as to the validity of a statute passed by the Legislature, not only authorizing, but making it the duty of the judge of the district court of this state to transfer a criminal case for trial from the city and county of San Francisco, where the crime was committed, to the district court of the Eleventh judicial district, in and for Placer county. The constitutionality of said act was upheld, it being permissible, under the Constitution of 1849, to pass special laws, with the result that there was had under that instrument special legislation upon an infinite variety of subjects. The court in that case said:

"* * * The construction given to the word 'uniform,' in this view [the view urged by counsel] is universal. * * * But this is absurd, for different classes of crimes may and do call for different modes of procedure. * * * But the error is in a misapprehension of this term 'uniform.' The language must be carefully noted. It is not that all laws shall be universal or general in their application to the same subjects, nor is it even that all 'laws of a general nature' shall be universal or general in their application to such subjects; but the expression is that these laws 'of a general nature' shall be 'uniform in their operation'—that is, that such laws shall bear equally, in their burdens and benefits, upon persons standing in the same category. But this category depends upon the facts which characterize the offense. Every defendant is not entitled to the same privileges, or subject to the same burdens, as every other; for instance, some are entitled to bail, others are not, and this depends upon the particular facts characterizing the imputed crime. When we speak of uniformity in the operation of a law, we speak of that operation which is equal under the same facts; for what justice or uniformity would there be in applying the same rigor of remedy or the same measure of punishment to all conditions of fact or degrees of criminality, merely because there existed a similarity or identity in the general charge? The effect of laws of a general nature shall be the same to and upon all; but who are 'the all' who are the subjects of this operation? Obviously, the answer is, all who stand in the same relations to the law; all, in other words, the facts of whose cases are * * * the same. To treat one man differently from another man—to deny to one man a privilege extended to another man—is not partiality; it may be a just discrimination; to constitute partiality and the invidious discrimination against which the Constitution aims, the denial to another of what is given to one must be made upon substantially the same facts; or, to express the idea differently, the denial must be of the same claim before accorded."

Although, as stated, the framers of our present Constitution took particular pains to guard against the indiscriminate enactment of laws the effect of which was to operate only upon particular persons or things, still, in the very nature of things, it was and is impossible, in a state, like ours, having a variety of interests calling for diverse kinds of legislation, sometimes antagonistic to each other and where, therefore, a single rule, universal in its application throughout the commonwealth, would operate as a distinct and positive detriment to the interests of certain localities or certain classes of people, to present a system of laws alike applicable to all of the great variety of conditions in the state. Hence the framers of the Constitution recognized the necessity of laws which, in a sense, would be special so far as their operation was concerned—special in the sense that they applied or were to apply to certain classes of persons or things only to the exclusion of all other classes. It is therefore competent for the Legislature to pass laws of this character; that is, laws which are designed to apply to or operate upon a certain class of persons only, but the rule is that the class to which the law is solely to apply must be founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction, or, in other words:

"The individuals to whom the legislation is applicable must constitute a class characterized by some substantial qualities or attributes of such a character as to indicate the necessity or propriety of certain legislation restricted to that class." City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 251, 27 Pac. 604, and numerous other cases cited in Board of Directors v. Nye, 8 Cal. App. on page 536, 97 Pac. 208.

And, furthermore, lest by such enactments, the constitutional inhibition against special legislation may be violated, it is the rule that, in the passage of laws designed to operate upon a particular class only, there must be no arbitrary discriminations between parties standing in the same relation to the subject of such law, and that if, by such laws, such discriminations are made, then the legislation will fall under the force of the constitutional mandates against special enactments. Ex parte King, 157 Cal. 161, 106 Pac. 578, and cases therein cited. And in that case it is further said:

"If it [the law] operates uniformly upon all the members of such class it necessarily has the 'uniform operation' required by section 11, art. 1, of the Constitution. The question whether the individuals affected by a law do constitute such a class is primarily one for the legislative department of the state, and it is hardly necessary to cite authorities for the proposition that when such a legislative classification is attacked in the courts, every presumption is in favor of the * * * legislative act. Where upon the facts legitimately before a court, it is reasonable to assume that there were reasons, good and sufficient in themselves, actuating the Legislature in creating the class, though such reasons may not clearly appear from a mere reading of the law, such assumption will be made, and the legislation upheld. To warrant a court in adjudging the act void on this ground, it must clearly appear that there was no reason sufficient to warrant the legislative department in finding a difference and making the discrimination."

See Grumbach v. Lelande, 154 Cal. 679, 685, 98 Pac. 1059.

Thus we are now brought face to face with the concrete proposition submitted for decision in this case, and by the light of the principles above stated the question must be considered and determined.

[2] Eminent domain is an attribute of sovereignty and the right or power of a sovereign state to appropriate private property to particular uses without the consent of the owner. The taking of private property by the state, in the exercise of this power, cannot be, abstractly viewing it, less justifiable on moral grounds than the enforced taking of private property by one individual from another for the latter's private uses. It is justifiable only because the power makes for the common benefit, and is upheld upon the theoretical conception that every owner of private property takes and holds such property subject to the condition that the state may take it from him, if occasion discloses that the common welfare will be the better subserved by its public use than by its private ownership. The people of the state, or that portion of the people who are vested with the right of franchise, in whom the power resides, have delegated the power to the Legislature, and the latter, in turn, has constituted certain specified persons as the agents of the state for the exercise of the power in particular instances. The Constitution of this state, as does that of nearly every other state, provides that, in the exercise of this power, no property shall be taken or damaged without just compensation having been made to, or paid into, court for the owner. Article 1, § 14. Notwithstanding the condition thus imposed as a prerequisite so to take one's property, the fact remains that when property is taken under the right of eminent domain, it is taken against the will or consent of the owner. And private property may thus be taken, even if the owner, for reasons peculiar to himself, would prefer to retain it rather than to receive for it a sum vastly in excess of its actual value for any practical purpose to which it might be put. In brief, when the state, through any of its duly constituted agencies, makes a call for the property for a public use, it must be surrendered in any event; and whether the "property" referred to in the Constitution be merely the rights in the thing so desired or the thing itself, it is nevertheless true that the enforced giving up of the rights therein amounts in practical and substantial effect to a like giving up of the title to the thing itself. The result is that when this power is sought to be visited upon particular privately owned property, the owner thereof is, if proceedings in condemnation be found necessary, forced into litigation as to the subject-matter of which he is in no way in default, or for which he is not responsible in the sense in which a defendant who has breached a contract or by affirmative acts on his part has deprived the plaintiff of a right or imposed upon him a wrong is responsible for litigation. He, in short, although not desiring to give up his property for the price offered for it or at all, and, although acquiring title to it subject to the burdens which follow from an inherent power or legal right in the people in their sovereign capacity, does not invite the litigation, nor is he the actor therein, as one who violates a contract or commits some private wrong invites the litigation necessary to enforce the obligations of the contract or to correct the wrong.

Thus it must at once become obvious that a proceeding for the condemnation of private property for a public use, under the power of which we have been speaking, is, in its origin, its purpose and its characteristics, essentially different from any other action or proceeding established by our law as an instrumentality for the enforcement of a private right or the redress or prevention of a private wrong. It is, indeed, not included by the Code within the category of ordinary actions at law or suits in equity, but is denominated, with others, as a "special proceeding," and even as to other proceedings so denominated in the Code, it is, by reason of the characteristics peculiar to it, strictly sui generis.

[3] It, therefore, cannot be doubted that the proceeding to condemn property under the right of eminent domain is so differentiated from the ordinary actions or proceedings in a court of justice "by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, or the redress of a private wrong," as to bring it within the settled test justifying the assignment of the proceeding to a particular class for the purposes of reasonable provisions not applicable to other classes of actions. The test in that regard is: If the classification is "based upon some difference bearing a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is attempted," any reasonable special provision as to the action so classified, and which is not applicable to other classes, will not be held to be void as involving special or discriminatory legislation within the constitutional provisions upon that subject. This rule is conceded in all the cases, and is elaborately considered by Chief Justice Angellotti in the case of Engebretsen v. Gay, 158 Cal. 30, 32, 109 Pac. 880, in which, after reviewing many cases, including Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193, 11 Ann. Cas. 712, mainly relied upon by the appellant here, it is held that a provision in the street improvement act of 1885 (St. 1885, c. 153), allowing, in addition to the taxable costs, an attorney's fee to the plaintiff in an action to foreclose a lien upon property improved under said act, is not discriminatory or violative of the state constitutional inhibition against special legislation or of any provision of the federal Constitution. The theory of the decision, as we understand it, is that, as may be done where there is default in the payment of the ordinary taxes assessed against property, the Legislature has the right to impose upon those defaulting in the payment of street assessments for the improvement of streets a penalty which may include a reasonable attorney's fee.

In the case at hand there exists no basis for the reasoning which led to the conclusion arrived at in Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, supra, and in Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, supra. In those cases it was held, as we have seen, that an allowance to the plaintiff of an attorney's fee if he was victorious in the trial was distinctly discriminatory, because no such allowance was provided for the defendant in case he prevailed at the trial. In this case, however, as in no other case of which we can presently think, the statute gives to the plaintiff the right to abandon the proceeding, even after a trial thereof and a verdict and judgment of condemnation rendered and entered, and, as a penalty for such abandonment, accords to the defendant the right to be reimbursed by the plaintiff for not only the ordinary costs but an attorney's fee. No right of abandonment is awarded by the statute to the defendant, and, in the very nature of the case, there could not be so that it would affect or impair the right of the plaintiff to condemn and take his property. The conditions as to the two parties in the proceeding are essentially and radically different.

But, in our judgment, the real rationale of the authority of the state, to which the sovereign power has delegated the jurisdiction over the right of eminent domain, to exact from the plaintiff the payment as costs of a reasonable attorney's fee to the defendant under the circumstances indicated in the statute and which, in our opinion, could be so exacted in any event or under any circumstances, lies in the control, hedged only by limited constitutional restraints, it has over that sovereign right.

As before explained, the persons, artificial or otherwise, upon whom the right to exercise or invoke on specified occasions the power of eminent domain is conferred by the state or the Legislature are mere agents of the state for that particular purpose. They are, in other words, by the state specially clothed with power to exercise a right of sovereignty which they could not exercise but for the action of the Legislature in clothing them with the authority of agents for that purpose. The act of conferring that power upon those persons is entirely and purely voluntary upon the part of the state. The state cannot be compelled to part with it by conferring it upon other persons desiring to exercise it, but may withhold it and itself exercise it, subject, of course, to the constitutional restraints referred to, to the exclusion of all other persons or instrumentalities. Therefore, no one will dispute the right in the Legislature, in conferring the right to exercise the power of eminent domain upon others, to impose any reasonable conditions upon its exercise by those others as it sees fit. In this state it has imposed upon those in whom it has invested that right, as one of the conditions upon which they may exercise it, the requirement that, in case they abandon the proceedings in condemnation after they have instituted them, they must pay the defendant, in addition to ordinary taxable costs incurred by him by reason of the proceeding, reasonable attorney's fees. The condition is not an unreasonable one to impose in such a case. The right of eminent domain involves an extraordinary power of sovereignty. While it is an eminently proper and necessary right of sovereignty, its exercise should be carefully guarded so as to prevent abuses arising under it. The Legislature can, as stated, and it should, impose upon its exercise such reasonable conditions as will discourage litigation not founded upon merit arising under it or as will penalize to a reasonable extent those who resort to it with the intention of securing property at the price they appraise it for and abandoning the proceeding if the value fixed by the jury and court are in excess thereof even only in a reasonable amount. Under the statute complained of here, if the plaintiff accepts the property at the price at which it is judicially appraised, the defendant only receives the compensation so fixed. If the property is not accepted by the plaintiff, then he must reimburse the defendant for the expenses which he has been compelled to bear in litigation for which he was not responsible.

Thus it is plainly to be seen that the section of the Code in question does not impinge upon any provision either of the state or federal Constitution. The provision animadverted upon here applies alike to all of the class to which the section applies. It does not discriminate as between persons belonging to that class and denies to none the equal protection of the law.

The views thus expressed are in accord with those advanced upon precisely the identical question by the adjudicated cases. Some of these cases we have already referred to. But there is another case to which we may well refer in connection with the observations last above made. The case is from the Supreme Court of Illinois. In that state, the legislative law upon eminent domain, among other provisions, contains one like ours, allowing the defendant, in proceedings to condemn property under the right of eminent domain, his costs and attorney's fees, to be taxed against the plaintiff, when the latter dismisses or abandons the proceeding. In Sanitary District of Chicago v. Bernstein et al., 175 Ill. 215, 51 N. E. 720, the validity of the provision of the statute of said state so allowing attorney's fees was challenged upon constitutional grounds similar to those urged here. The Illinois court disposed of the objections in a well-considered opinion, from which we here present an extended excerpt because of its cogent application to the present case:

"The ground upon which it is argued that the provision is unconstitutional is that it is special legislation, and imposes upon one class of litigants a charge from which all others instituting proceedings in court are free. Any other plaintiff or petitioner may dismiss his suit while pending, and suffer no penalty beyond the payment of statutory costs; while, if a petitioner under the eminent domain act shall, for any cause, dismiss the petition, the statute gives a right to the defendant to recover, in addition to the taxable costs, the amount paid or incurred by him for costs, expenses, and reasonable attorney's fees in his defense. Every citizen has an equal right with every other to resort to the courts of justice for the settlement and enforcement of his rights; and it is true that a discrimination between different classes of litigants, which is merely arbitrary in its nature, is a denial of that right and of the equal protection of the law. If, however, there be a reasonable ground of distinction, so that the discrimination does not appear to be purely arbitrary or evasive of constitutional rights, we think that the Legislature has a discretion to impose conditions or restrictions which they may deem in furtherance of justice. That discretion cannot be controlled by the courts, but its exercise must be left to the wisdom and sense of justice of the Legislature. We think that no one will fail to observe a difference, in principle and natural justice, between a litigation where plaintiff invokes the action of the court to recover money or property from another, and dismisses such action, and a proceeding to ascertain the compensation to be paid for property to be taken for public use. The Constitution protects the owner by a provision that his property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. The proceeding is not the enforcement of individual right, but to settle the condition upon which the sovereign power to take the property may be exercised. The judgment is not binding upon the petitioner, but it may decline to enter upon the property or to make payment of compensation. If the possession is taken, and the compensation paid, the owner gets nothing but the fair cash market value of his property; and if it is not paid, or the attempted taking is discontinued by the dismissal of the petition, he is a loser to the extent of the amount expended. The act seems to be in harmony with the spirit and intent of the Constitution, and we think it valid."

See, also, Gano v. Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. Co., 114 Iowa, 713, 87 N. W. 714, 55 L. R. A. 263, 89 Am. St. Rep. 393, and cases therein cited.

The city attorney, representing the plaintiff in this proceeding, has presented his side of the case here in a forceful and masterly and earnest manner; but the authorities are clearly against his position, and, as must be manifest from the discussion herein, we are, upon the authorities as well as upon principle, constrained to the conclusion that the law under attack on this appeal is not amenable to the objections on constitutional grounds urged against it.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

(29 Cal. App. 246)

SNOOK et al. v. PAGE. (Civ. 1435.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 21, 1915.)

1. BROKERS ⊂⊃46 — COMPENSATION — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT.

Where a firm is employed as exclusive agent, and is not given the exclusive right to sell property, the owner may sell by his own efforts without becoming liable for commission; the only effect of the contract being to prevent the owner from placing the property in the hands of another agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃46.]

2. BROKERS ⊂⊃46 — COMPENSATION — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—"SOLELY."

A contract whereby defendant empowered plaintiffs solely to sell his property within 120 days, and agreed to pay them 5 per cent. commission and one-half of price obtained above $20,000 commission on any sale made by them during the life of the agreement if sold to purchaser to whose attention the property was brought through them, does not entitle plaintiffs to commission where a sale is made by defendant by his own efforts; the word "solely," as used in the contract, importing only sole agency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃46.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Solely.]

3. BROKERS ⊂⊃46 — COMPENSATION — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—"RATIFY."

A contract employing plaintiffs to sell property and agreeing to pay them a commission on any sale ratified by defendant does not entitle plaintiffs to commission on a sale by the defendant; the term "ratify" meaning to give validity to the act of another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃46.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ratify.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by James A. Snook and another, doing business under the firm name of Snook & Nelson, against Mrs. Alice Page. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

H. B. M. Miller, of San Francisco, and Charles E. Snook, of Oakland, for appellants. Robinson & Robinson, of Oakland, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for the recovery of $3,630, claimed as commissions for the sale of real property. The contract of agency, as far as necessary to quote, was as follows:

"For value received, and in consideration of the agreement on the part of Snook & Nelson, hereinafter contained, to perform services for me, I appoint said Snook & Nelson my agents, and as such authorize them to sell for me within one hundred and twenty days from date hereof the following described property: * * * Said property may be sold as a whole or in such subdivisions as herein stated, provided that the entire selling price shall not be less than $20,000.

"I hereby empower said Snook & Nelson solely to contract in writing to sell said property with the same effect as if I were present and authorized the same. * * * I agree to pay to Snook & Nelson 5 per cent. commission and one-half of price obtained above $20,000 commission on any sale made by them or ratified by me during the life of this agreement, or thereafter if sold to purchaser to whose attention said property was brought through them."

It is not claimed that plaintiffs made a sale or obtained a purchaser, but it is conceded that defendant, without any aid from or consultation with them, made a contract for the sale of the property. It is contended, however, that, under the peculiar terms of their contract, plaintiffs were entitled to a commission if a sale were made by the owner of the property. The proper construction of said contract of agency is therefore the desideratum in the case.

The first question of importance, then, is whether the plaintiffs were constituted the exclusive agents, or were they given the exclusive right to sell said property?

[1] If the former only, the rule is well settled that:

"The owner has the right to sell the same by his own unaided efforts without becoming liable to the broker for commission, that the only effect of such contract is to prevent the owner from placing the property in the hands of another agent, and that the owner does not thereby relinquish his right to sell the property himself independently of the broker." Golden Gate Packing Co. v. Farmers' Union, 55 Cal. 606; Waterman v. Boltinghouse, 82 Cal. 659, 23 Pac. 195; Dreyfus v. Richardson, 20 Cal. App. 800, 130 Pac. 161.

The right on the part of the owner is an implied condition of the agency, subject to which the agent accepts it, and, as his commission is payable only in case of his success in finding a purchaser, the agent takes his chances of the owner himself making a sale. Dole v. Sherwood, 41 Minn. 535, 43 N. W. 569, 5 L. R. A. 720, 16 Am. St. Rep. 731.

[2] The contract herein certainly does not expressly confer upon plaintiffs the exclusive right to sell the property, nor does it in apt terms, if at all, provide for a commission in case the owner himself should dispose of it.

In considering the matter we are to keep in mind that the burden is upon plaintiffs to establish their claim, and that, since the contract was prepared by them, any uncertainty or ambiguity in the terms of the instrument must be resolved in favor of the owner.

With this in view, then, taking the contract "by the four corners," we reach the conclusion that plaintiffs were made the exclusive agents, but they were not clothed with the exclusive right to sell the property. The use of the word "solely" can furnish the only pretense of justification for the contention of plaintiffs, but, fairly interpreted, the clause imports the meaning of sole agency. If it had been the intention to deprive the owner of the right to sell, or in case of such sale to create a liability for commissions, it could, and, no doubt, would, have been easily and clearly expressed. With such contingency in view, the parties would have provided that

"Snook & Nelson should have the exclusive right to sell said property," or, "in case of a sale made by the owner, they should be entitled to the same commissions as though made by themselves."

The fact is that by the clause under consideration the parties were not treating of an actual sale, nor did they contemplate any personal participation of the owner in the transaction. The language shows that they were considering a contract or agreement for the sale, rather than the sale itself, and such contract made in the absence of the owner, which, of course, excludes by implication the consideration of what might be done by the owner herself in consummating a transfer of the property. In this respect the contract in Davis v. Van Tassel (Sup.) 107 N. Y. Supp. 910, was apparently more favorable to the broker than the one involved herein, but in that case the court said:

"No doubt, a contract could be made whereby, in consideration of the efforts made by an agent to sell property, the owner might obligate himself to pay a sum agreed upon if the premises were sold even without the aid of the broker; but it does not seem to me that this is such a contract. The plaintiff is constituted the recognized sole agent for the property; but there is nothing in the fact of sole agency which in itself gives the broker any right to commissions, unless he is the procuring cause of the sale."

It was further held that the words, "And at such times as a sale shall be effected for any of the above-mentioned property for the prices named * * * I agree to pay upon the sum of 2 per cent. * * * at such times as such sales are effected," referred to sales made by such agents, and did not include a sale made by the owner himself.

The cases cited by appellants involve an entirely different contract from the one before us.

In Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 176, 28 Pac. 222, by the terms of the contract the brokers were authorized to sell the property at any time within one year, and it was expressly agreed that the commissions should be paid if the owners withdrew the property from sale or effected a sale in any way during the year. The owners did make a sale during the year, and therefore one of the conditions happened that rendered them liable for the commission.

In Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61, 30 Pac. 962, the contract provided that, if the owner should, before the expiration of the contract, withdraw the sale of the property, the broker should be entitled to his commission, and it was properly and necessarily held that, since the owner did withdraw the property from sale within said time the broker was entitled to his commission.

In Kimmell v. Skelly, 130 Cal. 555, 62 Pac. 1067, the owner specifically agreed that a commission was to be paid "in the event of a sale of said real property by them or any one else, including myself."

In those cases and some others cited it may be said the principal controversy was as to whether there was sufficient consideration for the agreement. There was no such dispute, as herein, over the interpretation of the contract itself.

[3] The other point, that the owner is liable for the reason that she ratified the sale, is even less tenable. The contention is that she ratified the sale by making it. This would certainly be a strange and extraordinary use of the term "ratify." We must assume that the parties attached to the term its ordinary and usual signification.

In Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178, it was held:

"To ratify is to give validity to the act of another, and implies that the person or body ratifying has at the time power to do the act ratified."

In Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 150, 26 N. W. 861, it was said:

"To ratify is to give sanction and validity to something done without authority by one individual on behalf of another."

In legal phrase it usually means to approve or confirm by a principal what has been done by an agent or one assuming to act for another. City of Lexington v. Lafayette County Bank, 165 Mo. 671, 65 S. W. 943.

"The terms 'adopt' and 'ratify' are properly applicable only to contracts made by a party acting or assuming to act for another. The latter may then adopt or ratify the act of the former, however unauthorized. To adoption and ratification there must be some relation, actual or assumed, of principal and agent." Shepardson v. Gillette, 133 Ind. 125, 31 N. E. 788.

In 33 Cyc. p. 1528, "ratification" is defined as:

"The act of giving sanction and validity to something done by another; the adoption by a person as binding upon himself of an act done in such relations that he may claim it was done for his benefit, although done under such circumstances as would not bind him but for his subsequent assent; the approval by act, word, or conduct of that which was attempted (if accomplished), but which was improperly or unauthorizedly performed in the first instance; the confirmation of a previous act done either by the party himself or another; the confirmation of a voidable act; a definition of establish."

As used in the Code, the term undoubtedly refers to the act of another. See sections 2310 and 2312, Civ. Code.

The act of defendant in selling the property was, of course, the act of the principal, and, moreover, it was an entirely valid act. It was not voidable in any sense, even though it should be held that the brokers were given the exclusive right of sale. For this exclusive right of sale would only mean that they were entitled to their commission, no matter how or by whom the sale was effected.

We think the decision was right, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(29 Cal. App. 158)

LYNIP v. ALTURAS SCHOOL DIST. OF MODOC COUNTY et al.†

(Civ. 1420.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 13, 1915.)

1. JUDGES ⟸51—DISQUALIFICATION TO ACT —OBJECTIONS—WAIVER—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, providing that the disqualification of a judge for relationship within the third degree to a party may be waived in writing, where defendants, in an action by the cashier of a bank in its behalf, as soon as it appeared on plaintiff's cross-examination that the presiding judge was a brother of a director of the bank objected that the judge was disqualified and requested a change of venue, the objection did not come too late, and defendants did not waive their privilege to object.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 224–231; Dec. Dig. ⟸51.]

2. JUDGES ⟸45—DISQUALIFICATION—RELATIONSHIP—STATUTE.

In an action by the cashier of a bank as the trustee of an express trust on behalf of the bank, by virtue of Code Civ. Proc. § 369, the presiding judge, brother of a director of the bank, was disqualified under section 170, providing that no judge shall act as such in any action when he is related to either party, or to an officer of a corporation which is a party, within the third degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 208–212; Dec. Dig. ⟸45.]

3. JUDGES ⟸51—DISQUALIFICATION TO ACT —OBJECTION TO MOTION.

In an action by the cashier of a bank on its behalf, where it was objected, as soon as the fact appeared on plaintiff's cross-examination, that the presiding judge was disqualified because he was a brother of a director of the bank and so related to an officer of a corporation which was a party, the objection to the motion for disqualification that it did not show the bank was a corporation should have been made at the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 224–231; Dec. Dig. ⟸51.]

4. JUDGES ⟸45—DISQUALIFICATION—RELATIONSHIP TO "OFFICER" OF CORPORATION —"OFFICE"—STATUTE.

A director of a bank is its "officer" within Code Civ. Proc. § 170, providing that no judge shall sit or act as such in any action when he is related to an officer of a corporation which is a party, since an "office" in a corporation is a position of trust or authority in the regular and continued employment of the corporation, a position which a director occupies.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 208–212; Dec. Dig. ⟸45.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Office; Officer.]

5. ASSIGNMENTS ⟸73—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEE AS AGAINST THIRD PARTY.

Trustees of a school district were not liable, to the assignee of the contractor for a school building who defaulted before completion, for the assigned amount of the contract price of the building, although they indorsed the assignment, thereby recognizing it, reciting an agreement to pay the sum "out of the payment" to be made "at the time of completion and acceptance of said building."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 139–142; Dec. Dig. ⟸73.]

6. GUARANTY ⟸42—RIGHT OF ACTION.

Where the contractor for a school building defaulted in completion, the assignee of $4,000 of the retained percentage of the contract price could not recover against the school district trustees on their guaranty, attached to the assignment, providing that in consideration of the assignee's advancement to pay for labor and materials the trustees guaranteed that the amount advanced should be repaid, upon completion of the building, out of the percentage of the contract price held back until completion, since the instrument was not a guaranty of the original obligation that the debt would be paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guaranty, Cent. Dig. §§ 51, 52; Dec. Dig. ⟸42.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; C. A. Raker, Judge.

Action by B. F. Lynip against the Alturas School District of Modoc County and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment and order reversed.

Cornish & Robnett, of Alturas, for appellants Auble, Ballard, and Smith. C. S. Baldwin, of Alturas, for appellant Alturas School Dist. Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. There is little if any controversy as to the facts involved herein. In the year 1911, one A. E. Pearson, as original contractor, was engaged in the construction of a grammar school building in the town of Alturas, Modoc county, under a written contract for the total price of $20,350. Defendants Auble, Ballard, and Smith were the trustees of the school district. On or about November 18 of said year said Pearson made application to the plaintiff, as cashier of the First National Bank of Alturas, for a loan of $4,000 to enable said Pearson to pay for labor and materials for the construction of said building. Plaintiff, acting for said bank, loaned Pearson said sum and took an assignment to the extent thereof of the last or final payment which might become due said Pearson after the completion of said building.

On cross-examination plaintiff testified that this was not a personal transaction of his, that it was a "bank affair," and that he was prosecuting the action for the bank. The record then shows the following:

"Q. Who are the directors of your bank, that is, the First National Bank of Alturas? A. A. W. Toreson, D. C. Berry, A. B. Etes, H. R. Gaustad, John E. Raker, Ulty McCabe, E. Van Loan, C. A. Estes, and myself. Q. You say that John E. Raker is a director? A. Yes. Q. Is that a brother of his honor, Clarence A. Raker, who is presiding here? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Robnett: If your honor please, it just now develops in this case that your honor, under the Code, will be disqualified to proceed, owing to the fact that this action, although nominally brought in the name of B. F. Lynip, is in reality prosecuted by the First National Bank of Alturas, of which your brother, John E. Raker, is a director. I submit a motion at this time that your honor is disqualified, and there should be a change of venue in this case. It did not appear on the face of the record before. Mr. Jamison: If your honor please, I think it is out of the ordinary procedure. At this moment I am not prepared to take up and argue this matter. Usually, if any objection of this kind is made, it is made in the beginning, before the case has reached trial in any way, shape, or form. Mr. Robnett: The record did not show on its face any disqualification. The other side had all the facts in their office and in their knowledge, and we had none of them. That is why the motion comes now. I simply submit the motion, and we are willing to proceed with the evidence and have the motion considered later. We make the motion now under our understanding of the law, and object to your honor presiding at the trial. The Court.: The motion is denied."

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

† Opinion modified. See 160 Pac. 175.

[1, 2] Section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"No justice, judge, or justice of the peace shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding: * * * 2. When he is related to either party, or to an officer of a corporation which is a party, * * * within the third degree, computed according to the rules of law."

The section further provides that said disqualification may be waived in writing. That is the only method specified, and while, under certain circumstances, a party might be estopped to raise the question of disqualification, no such situation is presented here. Appellants made the objection as soon as they were apprised of the facts that seemed to bring the case within said inhibition of the statute. Upon no consideration of principle or authority do we think it should be held that the objection came too late or that appellants had waived the privilege. It will be noticed that the foregoing is the only objection made by respondent to the motion. Certain other considerations are suggested here, however, in attempted justification of the order denying said motion. One is that the bank is not a party to the suit. Nominally this is true, but said bank appears unquestionably to be the real party in interest. The statute should have, we think, no such narrow construction as is contended. Plaintiff could maintain the action only by virtue of section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure—that is, as the trustee of an express trust—but the judgment rendered would affect particularly the interest of the bank for whose benefit the action was prosecuted, and that is the determinative factor. Neither can there be any doubt as to what bank was interested in the suit. The quotation already made leaves nothing to be desired as to this point.

[3] The suggestion is made that it was not shown that the bank was a corporation. Such objection, if intended to be relied on, should have been made at the time. This would have been only fair to opposing counsel. Indeed, as we have seen, there was apparently no controversy as to the facts. It was assumed by all parties that the conditions existed that would make the rule applicable except that the application was made too late. But the point is made by appellants that it appears that it was a national bank, and since the law requires a national bank to be incorporated we must assume that it was such corporation. If strict proof were required, we would probably not be justified in acting upon such presumption, but, under the peculiar circumstances here, we must hold that there was acquiescence in the existence of the facts implied in the statement of counsel for appellants.

[4] The suggestion that a director is not an officer of the bank, urged strongly by respondent, is, we think, without any merit at all. An office in a corporation has been defined as "a position of trust or authority in the regular and continued employment of the corporation." The duties of a director are familiar and need not be detailed, and it may be said that his position is of the highest "trust and authority" in connection with the affairs of the corporation. His authority is not only paramount, but the other executive officers are subject to his will for their appointment and tenure. The question does not seem to have been considered many times by the courts, but there is authority for the position of appellants. In United States v. Means (C. C.) 42 Fed. 603, it was held that directors of a national bank are "officers" within the meaning of Revised Statutes of the United States, section 5209 (U. S. Comp. St. 1913, § 9772), which makes it a misdemeanor for bank officers to make false entries in any book, report, or statement of the bank, with intent to deceive any of its officers, the court saying:

"As to the directors there is not the shade of doubtful construction of this act. They are not only officers, but managers, of our national banks. They come within every sense and meaning of the word 'officer,' and are within the rule of the association of words in the act already referred to and of the decisions cited."

In Laws 1875, c. 611, § 21, providing that—

"if any certificate or report made, or public notice given, by an officer of a corporation shall be false in any material representation, all the officers who have signed the same shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the corporation contracted while they are officers thereof," —officers should be construed to include the directors of the corporation, for, in a strict sense, the directors of a corporation are its officers. Torbett v. Eaton, 49 Hun, 209, 1 N. Y. Supp. 614; Brand v. Godwin, 8 N. Y. Supp. 339; Com. v. Wyman, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 247. Our attention has not been called to any decision in this state directly in point, but in the Civil Code and in the case of Sherwood v. Wallin, 154 Cal. 735, 99 Pac. 191, it seems to be assumed that they are officers. It appears to us so plain that we are not surprised that there has been little or no controversy concerning it.

Moreover, upon the merits, we think the decision was erroneous, judgment having been rendered for plaintiff after trial. The basis of the claim lies in an assignment made on November 18, 1911, by said Pearson as contractor aforesaid. The said assignment, after reciting the contract with said district and the advancement to said Pearson by B. F. Lynip of the sum of $4,000 to enable the former to pay for the material and labor on said building concludes as follows:

"Therefore, I hereby assign, convey and set over unto the said B. F. Lynip the sum of four thousand dollars, out of the twenty-five per cent. of said contract price, to be paid to me under said contract after the completion and acceptance of said building as aforesaid, and hereby authorize the said board of trustees to pay said sum out of said twenty-five per cent. to said B. F. Lynip instead of to me, to to accept his receipt therefor in all respects as though said receipt was signed by me, hereby authorizing the said B. F. Lynip to receive and receipt for said sum of four thousand dollars out of said twenty-five per cent. of said contract price, in my place and stead."

[5] An assignment almost identical in form and between the same parties, involving the sum of $430, executed November 6, 1911, nearly two weeks prior to the one before us, was thoroughly considered by this court in the case of Lynip v. Alturas School District, 24 Cal. App. 426, 141 Pac. 835. We may refer to said decision for a declaration of the facts connected with, and of the principle that must control in the interpretation of, the assignment herein. Therein it was held that the assignment operated—

"solely upon the fund to become due and payable only upon the completion of the building, not upon moneys becoming due and payable as the work progresses; and, if the contractor abandons the contract before completion, the trustees are not liable to the assignee for the amount of the assignment, under their indorsement thereon recognizing the assignment and reciting an agreement to pay the sum named 'out of the payment' to be made 'at the time of completion and acceptance of said building.'"

[6] There was in this case a similar indorsement made by the trustees, but there is this additional feature not found in the Lynip Case, supra: Two days after said assignment was made it was again presented to the trustees of said district and it then had attached to it a second page, containing the following guaranty:

"We, the undersigned, in consideration of B. F. Lynip advancing to A. E. Pearson, the amount named in the assignment thereto attached, to wit, the sum of four thousand dollars, for the purpose of paying for the labor performed, and the material furnished and used in the school building now being constructed by the said A. E. Pearson for the Alturas school district of Modoc county, California, do hereby guarantee that the said sum of $4,000.00 so advanced by the said B. F. Lynip to the said A. E. Pearson, as aforesaid, shall be repaid to the said B. F. Lynip upon the completion of the said school building, out of the 25 per cent. of the contract price of said building, held back until the completion of said building."

On the same or the following day this was signed by two of the trustees, E. F. Auble and S. T. Ballard, and a day or two later by the other trustee, L. S. Smith.

It is by virtue of this guaranty that plaintiff sought to recover, contending that it was a guaranty of the original obligation—in other words, a guarantee that the debt would be paid. If such had been the intention of the parties, however, how easy to have so provided. If such was their intention, they were very unfortunate in the use of terms. The only reasonable construction of the instrument, it seems to us, embodies the conclusion that the trustees would recognize Lynip as being entitled to the last payment rather than Pearson. This necessarily implied that there would be a last payment due. They guaranteed, in the other words, that the money should be repaid to Lynip out of a certain fund, to wit, "the 25 per cent. of the contract price of said building, held back until the completion of the building." There never was any such fund, since Pearson abandoned the contract and the contract price was exhausted in the completion of the building by the trustees. It is to be observed that the trustees did not guarantee that Pearson would complete the building or that the 25 per cent. would be due him when the building was completed, but the guaranty was virtually that effect would be given to the assignment, to which, it may be repeated, it was attached, and to which it refers, and of which it was made an inseparable part. This assignment was not the original obligation of the trustees nor of Pearson, but was collateral, as a form of security. The original obligations was in the form of a promissory note signed by Pearson alone, and to secure its payment he made the assignment and the defendants guaranteed that they would recognize its operation in the distribution of said 25 per cent. fund. It is true that this construction probably deprives said guaranty of any legal value. The trustees had already indorsed on said assignment their acceptance, and they were thereby obligated to pay said fund to Lynip; but whatever may be the effect of said guaranty, the guarantors have a right to stand upon its terms. The fact is, apparently, that the trustees, as individuals, guaranteed that they, as trustees of the district, would recognize Pearson's assignment and pay the money to his assignee instead of to him. But there was no default on the part of the trustees. They were not called upon to pay the money, since the obligation never matured. As far as the guaranty is concerned, the trustees, as such, were the principals and they, as individuals, were guarantors. There having been no default on the part of the principals, it would follow that the guarantors were exonerated from liability.

Several cases are cited by respondent in support of his contention, but it will be observed that therein the liability of the guarantors was not limited as in the case before us. Bagley v. Cohen, 121 Cal. 604, 53 Pa. 1117, may be taken as an example. The contract was:

"On or before sixty days I, E. H. Gould, do hereby agree to pay to F. S. Bagley or order, out of the profits realized by me from my business of packing raisins at Malaga, during the present season, the sum of three hundred and ten dollars in gold coin of the United States of America."

Prior to the delivery of this contract and as a part of the same transaction, the defendant subscribed the following guaranty, which was written beneath the contract:

"I, E. A. Cohen, do hereby guarantee the payment of the foregoing note in accordance with the conditions thereof."

Within ten days after the execution of the foregoing instrument Gould sold and conveyed all his right, title, and interest in and to his business of packing raisins at Malaga, and thereby prevented himself from realizing any profits out of said business. It was properly said by the Supreme Court that:

"The contract of the defendants being a part of the same transaction with the contract of Gould, the two instruments make but a single contract on their part. Hazeltine v. Larco, 7 Cal. 32. Their guaranty that Gould would perform his contract was an original undertaking by them, and their liability as guarantors is commensurate with that of Gould. Civil Code, § 2808. Their promise that he would perform his contract 'in accordance with the conditions thereof' made them absolutely liable for his failure to perform it when he should be so liable. Otis v. Haseltine, 27 Cal. 80."

The defendants therein, as seen, guaranteed the performance of Gould's contract and hence they were of course liable when he defaulted. The defendants here made no such guaranty of Pearson's performance, but guaranteed a payment in accordance with the terms of their contract with Pearson. The latter having defaulted released them and also the guarantors.

We think the order and judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 260

PEOPLE v. DATES. (Cr. 602.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 27, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1916.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸564—VENUE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The contention that on the trial of an executor for embezzlement for failure to pay a legacy as ordered by a decree of partial distribution the venue was not proved, because accused was in another county between the date of the decree and the date of an attachment of accused, and because after the attachment and until the indictment accused was in the custody of the sheriff of the county in which the indictment was found, is not sustainable, because accused could have drawn an order while in custody for the funds and converted the same to his own use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 726, 1277–1284; Dec. Dig. ⟸564.]

2. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸8 — EMBEZZLEMENT BY EXECUTORS—OWNERSHIP OF LEGACY.

An executor may embezzle a legacy before decree directing payment to the legatee; for an order of payment is not the inception of the title of the legatee, but title vests, under Civ. Code, § 1341, in the legatee at testator's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. ⟸8.]

3. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸44—EMBEZZLEMENT BY EXECUTOR—EVIDENCE.

That an executor charged with embezzling a legacy reported in one or more of his reports that the money was on hand was not conclusive that the same was actually on hand at the time of such reports, but the jury could find that the legacy had been converted to his own use prior thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–70; Dec. Dig. ⟸44.]

4. EMBEZZLEMENT ⟸38—EMBEZZLEMENT BY EXECUTOR—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On the trial of an executor for embezzling a legacy based on his refusal to pay the same to the legatee as ordered by decree of partial distribution, the decree of partial distribution was admissible in evidence to show a demand of payment and a refusal, though the decree required payment within less time than that allowed for an appeal, where the executor did not appeal in his capacity as legatee individually affected by the decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 61, 65, 66; Dec. Dig. ⟸38.]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸315—DECREE OF PARTIAL DISTRIBUTION—VALIDITY.

A petition for partial distribution was signed by the local attorney of an infant legatee. Subsequently the legatee, on becoming of age, participated in the proceedings for partial distribution. The executor appeared in response to the notice given and filed his formal resistance to the petition, and on the day set for hearing appeared and consented in open court to the decree. Held, that the executor waived any informalities in the proceedings, and he could not attack the decree as entered by the court without acquiring jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1298–1314; Dec. Dig. ⟸315.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Edward M. Dates was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Walter F. Thompson, and H. F. Marshall, both of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guerena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of the defendant under indictment and conviction for embezzlement and from an order denying a new trial.

The facts, which in the main are undisputed, are as follows: The defendant was the husband of Bessie S. Dates, deceased, and the stepfather of Mildred Jane Porter, the complaining witness before the grand jury. The wife of the defendant died in February, 1912, leaving a will, of which the defendant became and was the executor up to the time of the indictment. The estate of the deceased amounted in value to $64,804.40, of which the sum of $43,654.89 was net cash in the hands of the executor. By said will the defendant was bequeathed an undivided one-half of the estate, while to her daughter, Mildred Jane Porter, the deceased left a legacy of $25,000 in money. There were also certain other minor legacies aggregating the sum of $5,000. This will was duly offered and admitted to probate, and the defendant was appointed executor without bonds. The first annual account of the executor was filed in September, 1913, and showed the above net cash balance in his hands after all claims had been presented and paid. On April 13, 1914, a petition for partial distribution was filed. It purported to be signed by Mildred Jane Porter, but it is conceded that her signature to said petition was written by the local attorney who assumed to act for her in preparing and presenting the petition. At the time this petition was filed Mildred Jane Porter was in the state of Wisconsin, and was a minor just under the age of 18 years. Notice of hearing thereon was served upon the attorney of record of the defendant, and shortly thereafter a resistance to the petition signed by the defendant was presented and filed. A hearing was had on June 12, 1914, and thereupon the court made an order or decree of partial distribution, by the terms of which the defendant was directed to pay to Mildred Jane Porter on or about the 16th day of June, 1914, the sum of $25,000, the full amount of her legacy. On June 19, 1914, the defendant having failed and refused to comply with this order, an attachment was issued for his person upon an order to show cause why he had failed to pay over said legacy, and on July 10, 1914, on the hearing thereon, the defendant was committed to the custody of the sheriff until he should obey the order of the court. He remained in the sheriff's custody until August 5, 1914, when the grand jury returned an indictment charging him with the embezzlement of the amount of this legacy. Upon trial the defendant was convicted and sentenced to seven years in the state prison. From the judgment of conviction and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] The first contention urged by the appellant is that the venue of the offense was not proved as laid in the indictment. This contention the appellant predicates upon certain premises, the first of which is his assertion that the time within which his embezzlement of the money constituting this particular legacy could possibly have been committed is that lying between the 12th day of June, 1914, the date of the decree of partial distribution, and the 5th day of August, 1914, the date of the indictment. During this period the evidence shows that the defendant was in Monterey county from June 10th to June 19th, and hence, appellant argues, could not have committed a crime triable in Marin county between those dates. From June 19th to August 5th the defendant was in the custody of the sheriff and in jail in Marin county, and could not, therefore, according to the argument of appellant, have committed the crime of embezzlement between those dates. Conceding for the sake of argument that the venue of the crime would have been properly laid in Monterey county had the defendant committed the offense while there, still we see no difficulty in the way of his having been able to accomplish the criminal conversion of this money during the time when he was in the custody of the sheriff in Marin county. He could easily have drawn a check or order on the actual custodian of the funds if they were then intact, and have thus diverted them to his own use.

[2] The second premise of the appellant is equally untenable wherein he argues that the earliest date at which he could have committed the offense was June 12, 1914, the date of the decree of partial distribution. It is appellant's contention that the title of Mildred Jane Porter to this legacy takes its inception in this decree; but this is not the law of this state. According to the terms of section 1341 of the Civil Code:

"Testamentary dispositions, including devises and bequests to a person on attaining majority, are presumed to vest at the testator's death."

See Estate of Campbell, 149 Cal. 712, 87 Pac. 573; Estate of Glenn, 153 Cal. 77, 94 Pac. 230.

In the light of this section of the Code and of these authorities, it seems clear that Mildred Jane Porter was the owner of this legacy from the date of her mother's death, subject to the claims of the creditors of the estate and to the rights of other devisees and legatees to a ratable distribution in case the estate prove insufficient to fully satisfy the terms of the will, neither of which conditions exists in this case. For purposes of administration the temporary possession of the entire estate, including the money which this legacy called for, was in the executor; and the condition of his trust was that it should be safely kept until such time as it should be distributed to its owners by the court's decree. The fact that the defendant, as executor of this estate and custodian of these funds, was also the owner, as devisee, of an undivided one-half of the estate, would in no sense have entitled him to convert any portion of this estate to his own personal uses prior to its legal distribution; and, if he did so, he would be guilty of embezzlement, although no decree of partial or final distribution had yet been made. This being so, the contention of the appellant as to the limited period to which the time of commission of the offense is to be confined must fail. The jury may have concluded from the evidence before it that the defendant had converted these funds to his own uses prior to the making of the decree of partial distribution, and we think there was enough evidence to justify such a conclusion.

[3] The fact that in one or more of his reports or accounts the executor reported this money as on hand in the estate would not be at all conclusive that the funds were actually there at the time of such report.

[4] The appellant urged several objections to the admission in evidence of the decree of partial distribution, which objections he vigorously repeats in this court as grounds of reversible error. But the decree of partial distribution, as we have seen, was not the source of the legatee's title, but served only in this case as the basis for the demand made on behalf of the complaining witness, refusal of which would in itself amount to an act of conversion. This view of its value as evidence in the case removes much of the force of appellant's objections to the decree of partial distribution based upon the claim that it had not become final through the expiration of the period within which it might have been appealed from at the time of its offer and admission in evidence. As to this proposition, it was not necessary that it should have become final in order to serve as a basis for the legatee's demand for the delivery to her of the legacy which it directed. The statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1661) provides that the court may make its order "requiring the executor to deliver to the legatee the whole portion of the estate to which he may be entitled." It follows necessarily that the court could in such order require such delivery within a specified time, which might be much more brief than the time allowed for an appeal from such order; besides, this defendant, as executor, had not right of appeal from this order. Estate of Williams, 122 Cal. 76, 54 Pac. 386. His only right of appeal was in his capacity as devisee, and in that capacity his rights were unaffected by this order. And, since it did not determine the legatee's title to her legacy, but only her right to its present possession upon a fixed date, the defendant, as the executor of the estate, was bound to comply with it, or else, as a devisee injuriously affected thereby, to appeal from it within the time required for compliance with its terms, just as in the case of any other judgment or order requiring the present payment of money, from which a party has the right of appeal within a certain period. If he would stay the execution or effect of the judgment or order, he must exercise his right of appeal from it at once, or else he must obey its mandate. In this case the defendant neither obeyed the court's order in his capacity as executor, nor appealed from it in his capacity as a devisee, and hence it was properly admitted in evidence as the basis of the legatee's demand for the delivery of her legacy to her, the refusal of which would be evidence of a conversion.

[5] The appellant's further contention that the trial court erred in admitting this decree in evidence, for the reason that the probate court did not acquire jurisdiction to make it, is based upon the facts that the petition for partial distribution had appended to it the name of Mildred Jane Porter, which was written there, not by herself, but by her local attorney, while Mildred Jane Porter was, at the date of filing said petition, a minor just under the age of 18 years, and was not competent to give a delegation of authority. But the record affirmatively shows that shortly after the filing of this petition Mildred Jane Porter became of age, and coming to California, and, being then of age, participated in the proceedings for partial distribution, and thereby ratified the acts of the attorney who represented her in filing and presenting her petition. The record also discloses that the defendant appeared in response to whatever notice was given, and filed his formal resistance to the petition without objection to it upon the grounds now urged; and it further appears that upon the day set for hearing the attorney of record for defendant, as executor of the estate, appeared and consented in open court to the entry of the decree. These acts on the part of the defendant constituted a waiver of whatever informalities there may have been in the presentation of the petition or in the form of notice of the hearing thereon. Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 131, 51 Pac. 44.

The appellant urges a number of objections to the instructions given or refused or modified by the court; but a reading of the entire body of the instructions as given by the court convinces us that these objections are not substantial enough to justify a reversal or merit a separate review.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

29 Cal. App. 251

DABNEY OIL CO. v. PROVIDENCE OIL CO. OF ARIZ. et al. (A. H. BUTLER & CO. et al., Interveners). (Civ. 1775.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 23, 1915.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐80 — DECISIONS APPEALABLE.

In an action against numerous defendants, appellants were allowed to intervene after they had lost control of the corporate plaintiff. On motion of plaintiff the action was dismissed as to some of the defendants, but continued as to others. Held, that the interveners were not entitled to appeal from such order of dismissal, it being only a partial determination of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 429, 432, 433, 450, 456, 457, 494–509; Dec. Dig. ⇐80.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the Dabney Oil Company against the Providence Oil Company of Arizona and others, in which A. H. Butler & Co. and others were allowed to intervene. From a judgment of dismissal as to some of the defendants, the interveners appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Valentine & Newby, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Hunsaker & Britt, Murphey & Poplin, and N. P. Moerdyke, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. In this action a complaint was filed by the Dabney Oil Company to establish the plaintiff's ownership of certain oil-bearing lands and to have certain of the defendants declared trustees for the plaintiff of property held in possession by them, and for an accounting. After the filing of plaintiff's complaint an election of directors of plaintiff corporation was held and the control of the corporation passed from a board of directors which was acting in harmony with A. H. Butler & Co. (a corporation) and others associated with them as stockholders in the Dabney Oil Company, to a new board of directors controlled by certain of the defendants. Under its new control the plaintiff caused a substitution of attorneys to be made herein and moved for a dismissal of plaintiff's action as against the defendants A. T. Jergins, Palladium Investment Company, a corporation, and Midway Royal Petroleum Company, a corporation. At the time of substitution of a new attorney for the plaintiff corporation the court by order gave leave to said A. H. Butler & Co. et al. (appearing by the same attorneys who had theretofore been employed as attorneys for the corporation), to file a complaint in intervention. That complaint was filed, and later an amended complaint in intervention was filed by the same interveners. The motion for dismissal of the action of the plaintiff as against the three defendants above mentioned and the demurrer of those defendants to the amended complaint in intervention came on for hearing at the same time. After argument it was ordered that the motion be granted; also that the demurrer of those three defendants to the amended complaint in intervention be sustained without leave to amend, and it was ordered that the action be dismissed as to the defendants Midway Royal Petroleum Company, A. T. Jergins, and Palladium Investment Company, and that the amended complaint in intervention be dismissed as to said defendants. The defendants named in the amended complaint in intervention are the same as the defendants named in the principal complaint. So far as the record shows, the action remains pending as to seven defendants other than the three affected by said orders of dismissal. The interveners have attempted to appeal "from the judgment of dismissal as to the defendants Midway Royal Petroleum Company, A. T. Jergins, and Palladium Investment Company, rendered in the above-entitled action on the 1st day of April, 1913, and from the whole of said judgment."

The respondents claim that the appeal should be dismissed for the reason that the order of dismissal was not a final judgment and determination of the action. As authority for the proposition insisted upon by them they refer us to Nolan v. Smith, 137 Cal. 360, 70 Pac. 166, and other cases cited in their brief. In response to these cases appellants direct attention to Stich v. Goldner, 38 Cal. 608, and other cases, which hold that an appeal lies where an order has been made refusing to allow the filing of a complaint in intervention, or where a judgment of dismissal has been entered against the interveners after an order sustaining a demurrer to their complaint. In Baxter v. Boege,[1] (Civil No. 1763), wherein our decision was filed on the 21st day of December, 1915, we have discussed those decisions and outlined our views upon the subject. We agree that if the order appealed from herein had been an order or judgment dismissing the intervention as to all of the parties, the interveners would have the right to appeal therefrom. But since the order does not attempt to dispose of all of the issues involved in the intervention, but is only a partial determination thereof, the case is the same as where a dismissal is granted as to some but not all of the defendants to the action and the plaintiff attempts to appeal therefrom. As held in Baxter v. Boege, supra, such right of appeal does not exist.

For these reasons we conclude that the objections made by respondents to further consideration of this appeal should be sustained, and the appeal is dismissed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

(29 Cal. App. 225)

Ex parte O'CONNOR. (Cr. 333.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 21, 1915.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS ⟸92—NATURE OF PROCEEDING—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

The sole ultimate question involved in habeas corpus is whether the order, adjudication, or process whose validity is attacked is one within the lawful jurisdiction of the judge, court, or tribunal making, granting, or issuing it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. §§ 81, 83, 87–96; Dec. Dig. ⟸92.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⟸85—JUDGMENT—VALIDITY—PRESUMPTION.

The judge of the superior court who committed petitioner to the state hospital on the ground of intemperate use of narcotics or stimulants, causing the loss of his power of self-control, being by law invested with jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the adjudication, and having acquired jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner, it must be assumed on a collateral attack on the adjudication by habeas corpus, in the absence of a contrary showing upon the face of the judgment roll, that the proceedings leading to the judgment or order of commitment were in all respects regular and in accordance with the vital requirements of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. §§ 77, 78; Dec. Dig. ⟸85.]

3. DRUNKARDS ⟸2—COMMITMENT TO STATE INSTITUTION—PROCEEDINGS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Under Pol. Code, § 2185c, as added by St. 1911, p. 396, prescribing the proceedings for commitment of an inebriate to the state hospital, and requiring the judge to give a reasonable opportunity for the production and examination of witnesses, what constitutes a reasonable opportunity must be determined by the circumstances of each case, and is within the sound discretion of the judge before whom the charge is heard.

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] Opinion withdrawn, but for opinion in Supreme Court, see 160 Pac. 1072.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drunkards, Cent. Dig. §§ 2–4, 9; Dec. Dig. ⟸2.]

4. DRUNKARDS ⟸2—COMMITMENT TO STATE INSTITUTION—PROCEEDINGS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Under Pol. Code, § 2185c, as added by St. 1911, p. 396, requiring the judge in a proceeding to commit an inebriate to the state hospital to give a reasonable opportunity for the production and examination of witnesses, where the judge informed the person proceeded against that he was entitled to subpœna witnesses and to examine them at the hearing in his own behalf, the fact that only a few hours could have intervened between the making of the order and the time specified therein for the hearing, does not show an abuse of discretion by the judge, in the absence of any request by the party for further opportunity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drunkards, Cent. Dig. §§ 2–4, 9; Dec. Dig. ⟸2.]

5. JURY ⟸19—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY—NATURE OF RIGHT.

One against whom proceedings for commitment to the state hospital as an inebriate were commenced is not entitled as of right to a jury trial, and Pol. Code, § 2185c, as added by St. 1911, p. 396, authorizing such commitment, is not unconstitutional for failure to provide for jury trial; the right secured by the Constitution being the right to a jury trial as it was recognized at common law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 104–133; Dec. Dig. ⟸19.]

Application by Jeremiah C. O'Connor for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and prisoner remanded.

Edward D. Wilbur, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Edward J. Tyrrel, of Oakland, and W. F. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. The petitioner was on the 9th day of June, 1915, by the Hon. John J. Van Nostrand, a judge of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, committed, under and by virtue of the provisions of section 2185c of the Political Code (Stats. 1911, p. 396), to the Napa State Hospital for the cure and treatment of the insane. The petitioner insists that the order of commitment under which he is held at the state hospital is void for reasons to be hereafter noticed, and that therefore his confinement in said institution involves an unlawful restraint of his personal liberty.

So much of section 2185c of the Political Code as is necessary to a clear understanding of the points made by the petitioner reads:

"Whenever it appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of a magistrate of a county, or city and county, that any person is so far addicted to the intemperate use of narcotics or stimulants as to have lost the power of self-control, or is subject to dipsomania or inebriety, he must issue and deliver to some peace officer for service, a warrant directing that such person be arrested and taken before a judge of the superior court for a hearing and examination on such charge. Such officer must thereupon, arrest and detain such person until a hearing and examination can be had. At the time of the arrest a copy of said affidavit and warrant of arrest must be personally delivered to said person. Such affidavit and warrant of arrest must be substantially in the form provided by section 2168 of the Political Code for the arrest of a person charged with insanity. He must be taken before a judge of the superior court, to whom said warrant and affidavit of arrest must be delivered to be filed with the clerk. The judge must then inform him of the charge against him, and inform him of his rights to make a defense to such charge and produce any witnesses in relation thereto. The judge must by order fix such time and place for the hearing and examination in open court as will give a reasonable opportunity for the production and examination of witnesses. Such order must be entered in the minutes of the court by the clerk and a certified copy of the same served on such person. The judge may also order that notice of the arrest of such person and the hearing of the charge be served on such relatives of said person known to be residing in the county, as the court may deem necessary or proper. The hearing and examination shall be had in compliance with the provisions of sections 2169 and 2170 of the Political Code."

Sections 2169 and 2170 of the Political Code read as follows:

"Sec. 2169. The superior judge may, for any hearing, issue subpœnas and compel the attendance of witnesses and must compel the attendance of at least two medical examiners, who must hear the testimony of all witnesses, make a personal examination of the alleged insane person, and testify before the judge as to the result of such examination, and to any other pertinent facts within their knowledge. The judge must also cause to be examined before him as a witness, any other person whom he has reason to believe has any knowledge of the mental condition of the alleged insane person or of his financial condition or that of the persons liable for his maintenance. The alleged insane person must be present at the hearing, and if he has no attorney, the judge may appoint an attorney to represent him.

"Sec. 2170. If the medical examiners, after making the examination and hearing the testimony, believe such person to be dangerously insane, they must make a certificate, under their hand, showing as nearly as possible the facts as herein indicated, and in substantially the following form."

Then follows the form of the certificate of the medical examiners appointed to investigate the condition of the patient, which must, among other things, contain a general statement of the facts from which the medical examiners have reached the conclusion that the patient—

"is so far addicted to the intemperate use of narcotics or stimulants as to have lost the power of self-control, or is subject to dipsomania or inebriety."

The petitioner presents and urges several different and distinct grounds upon which he bases the claim that his commitment to the state hospital was beyond the authority of the judge to order. These are: (1) That a copy of the affidavit upon which the warrant for his arrest was issued and of said warrant of arrest were not personally delivered to him at the time of his arrest; (2) that the time fixed by the judge after the petitioner was brought before him for the hearing of the charge was not such as to afford to the petitioner "a reasonable opportunity for the production and examination of the witnesses"; (3) that the petitioner was, as a matter of right, entitled to a trial by jury upon the charge preferred against him, and that, such right having been denied to him, his commitment to the state hospital was not the crystallization of a trial according to due process of law, and that section 2185c, by reason of the absence therefrom of a provision giving to persons charged thereunder the right of trial by jury, is unconstitutional.

[1, 2] Obviously the sole ultimate question which is involved in a proceeding on habeas corpus is one merely of jurisdiction; that is, whether the order or the judgment or the adjudication or the process whose validity is thus attacked and questioned was one coming within the lawful authority or jurisdiction of the judge or the court or other legally constituted tribunal making, granting, or issuing it. And, since it is clear that the judge making the adjudication assailed through this proceeding is by law invested with jurisdiction of the subject-matter thereof, and that he acquired jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner, it must be assumed, in this collateral attack upon the adjudication, in the absence of a contrary showing appearing upon the face of the judgment roll, if it may so be called, that the proceedings leading to the judgment or order of commitment were in all respects regular or had in accordance with the vital requirements of the statute authorizing the commitment. Ex parte Clary, 149 Cal. 735, 87 Pac. 580; State Commission in Lunacy v. Eldridge, 7 Cal. App. 298, 94 Pac. 597, 600; Ex parte Lewis, 11 Cal. App. 530, 105 Pac. 774; Gridley v. College of St. Francis, 137 N. Y. 327, 33 N. E. 331. These observations apply particularly to the first two points, in the order above given, against the validity of the commitment.

The affidavit upon which the warrant of arrest was issued was made and filed by Jeremiah O'Connor, Jr., a son of the petitioner, on the 8th day of June, 1915, and on that day was, with a copy thereof and a copy of said affidavit, given into the hands of a police officer.

The certificate of the officer executing the warrant, and which is a part of the record in the proceedings, recites that said officer received said warrant on the 8th day of June, 1915, and served the same by arresting said Jeremiah O'Connor, alleged to be an inebriate, and brought him before Hon. John J. Van Nostrand, judge of the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco on the 8th day of June, 1915, "and I further certify," continues the certificate, "that I delivered a copy of said warrant of arrest, together with a copy of the affidavit of intemperance, as directed in said warrant, personally to said Jeremiah O'Connor at the time of his arrest."

The order fixing the time for the hearing of the charge, as does the judgment or order of commitment, recites that the petitioner was brought before the judge on the 9th day of June, 1915, upon a warrant issued upon an affidavit sworn to by Jeremiah O'Connor, Jr., that he was then and there, in open court, informed of the charge alleged in said affidavit against him, and was further informed of his rights to make a defense to such charge, and to be represented by counsel, and produce witnesses in relation to such charge. The order fixing the time for hearing also required that a copy of the same be served on the petitioner, the time for the hearing having been fixed for the hour of 11 a. m. of said 9th day of June, 1915, and one Roseberg certified that he served said order on the petitioner by delivering to him a copy of the same.

Thus it will be observed that there is absolutely no ground for the contention that a copy of the affidavit, and the warrant was not personally delivered to the petitioner at the time of his arrest, as the statute requires shall be done.

[3, 4] As to the point that the petitioner was not accorded "a reasonable opportunity for the production and examination of witnesses," as the statute requires, we cannot say that the judge abused his discretion in that regard. As has been shown, the record discloses that the petitioner, upon being brought before the judge, was by the latter informed of all the rights guaranteed to a person charged under section 2185c with being an inebriate or dipsomaniac. He was explicitly told that he was entitled to subpœna witnesses and to examine them at the hearing in his own behalf.

What constitutes the "reasonable opportunity" to produce and examine witnesses which the statute contemplates shall be given a person charged and examined under section 2185c of the Political Code is a matter which must be determined by the circumstances of each particular case, and thus the matter is one whose determination rests in the sound discretion of the judge before whom the charge is pending and heard. This court so held in the case of In re Lewis, on habeas corpus, 11 Cal. App. 530, 532, 105 Pac. 774, where the petitioner, an insane patient, was examined under the provisions of section 2168 et seq., Political Code, and wherein he raised the identical point under consideration; the section just named also providing that the patient must be given "a reasonable opportunity for the production and examination of witnesses." We there, among other things, said:

"The determination of what is 'reasonable opportunity' is committed by the statute to the sound discretion of the court, to be exercised in view of the surrounding circumstances of each particular case, and, where it does not appear on the face of the proceedings that such discretion has been abused, the judgment of the court, for the alleged reason that the person adjudged insane has not been given a reasonable opportunity to produce his witnesses and cause them to be examined touching his mental condition, cannot be disturbed."

The statute does not provide that any particular space of time shall intervene between the time at which the order is made fixing a time for the hearing and the time so fixed, and the mere fact that in this case there could have intervened only a few hours between the time of making the order and the time specified therein for the hearing does not necessarily justify the conclusion that the petitioner was not accorded a "reasonable opportunity" to produce and examine his witnesses. Whether the petitioner availed himself of this right by having witnesses produced and examined is not made affirmatively to appear in the record. Indeed, the law nowhere requires that that fact shall be so made to appear. But it is to be assumed that, had the petitioner, having been informed of his rights in that regard, made a demand for the production of witnesses and presented the names of such witnesses, the judge, in obedience to the duty expressly enjoined upon him by the statute, would have given the petitioner ample opportunity to have produced such witnesses, and, if necessary for that purpose, have continued the hearing to some future time. It does not appear in the record that any such demand or request was made by the petitioner.

Upon this point we conclude that upon no view of the record can it be said that the petitioner was denied the "reasonable opportunity" for the production and examination of witnesses to which he was entitled under the statute.

[5] 3. The contention that the petitioner was entitled as of right to a trial by jury is untenable, and it follows, therefore, that section 2185c is not unconstitutional because it omits to provide for a trial by jury in cases arising under its provisions.

The right of trial by jury secured by the Constitution is the right to a jury trial as it existed and was recognized at common law. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 249; Cassidy v. Sullivan, 64 Cal. 266, 28 Pac. 234; Woods v. Varnum, 85 Cal. 639, 644, 24 Pac. 843; People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 348, 25 Pac. 481, 11 L. R. A. 75; Ex parte Wong You Ting, 106 Cal. 296, 39 Pac. 627; In re Fife, 110 Cal. 8, 42 Pac. 299.

The Koppikus Case involved the question whether an act of the Legislature providing for the construction of the state capitol in Sacramento and investing the state capitol commissioners with the power and authority of appraising the value of the property upon which the capitol building was to be erected and making an award to the owner of the same, in accordance with such appraisement, was unconstitutional, in that it denied to the owner the right to have the issue as to the value of his property passed upon and determined by a jury. The Supreme Court upheld the validity of the statute, saying, through Field, J.:

"The provision of the Constitution that 'the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate forever,' applies only to civil and criminal cases in which an issue of fact is joined. The language was used with reference to the right as it exists at common law. * * * It is in this common-law sense that the language has always been regarded by the courts of this state. It is a right 'secured to all,' and 'inviolate forever,' in cases in which it is exercised in the administration of justice according to the course of the common law, as that law is understood in the several states of the Union. It is a right, therefore, which can only be claimed in actions at law, or criminal actions, where an issue of fact is made by the pleadings. It cannot be claimed in equity cases, unless such issue be specially framed for a jury under the direction of the court. It cannot be asserted upon the issue at law; for that is a matter purely for the court. The fact, therefore, that property and rights of property may be involved in the disposition of a particular case or proceeding does not determine the right to a trial by jury. There must be an action at law, as contradistinguished from a suit in equity, and from a special proceeding, or a criminal action, and an issue of fact joined therein upon the pleadings, before a jury trial can be claimed as a constitutional right."

Under the common law, there was no inquisition precisely like that authorized by section 2185c of the Political Code. The nearest approach thereto were the proceedings, under the writs of de idiota inquirendo and de lunatico inquirendo, which were analogous to the proceeding for like purpose under our law, whereby the question of the insanity or idiocy of one was investigated, with a view of committing him for treatment or safe-keeping, if he were found to be either a lunatic or an idiot. While in the earlier history of the common law, when the profits of the lands of one found to be an idiot or lunatic passed to the crown, the issue was tried by a jury of twelve men, yet in later times, when mental diseases of a nature to impair the will came to be recognized as curable and appropriate subjects of governmental cognizance, proceedings looking to the determination of whether a person was of unsound mind to the extent of being unable to take care of himself and his property rights or of being dangerous to the safety of the public were summarily conducted or prosecuted without the intervention of a jury; due provision being made for the care and preservation of the patient's estate while he remained mentally incompetent and the return of the same and its profits to him if he recovered from his malady, and for the proper disposition thereof should he die a non compos mentis. 3 Blackstone, p. 428; 1 Blackstone, pp. 303–305.

The theory upon which such inquisitions were conducted in a summary manner or without the aid of a jury was doubtless that the proceeding does not involve an inquiry as to whether a crime had been committed, nor was the commitment of the patient intended as a punishment, but that its purpose was for the sole benefit of the patient, by facilitating the proper treatment for his disease, and at the same time protecting his estate from being lost or destroyed by that improvidence which necessarily accompanies a defect of will or understanding or by impositions practiced upon the incompetent by those ever ready to enrich themselves by any means, however unconscionable, that may become available to them. And so it is true as to the proceeding under section 2185c of our Political Code. Said proceeding does not involve the investigation of a criminal act, nor is the detention of the patient for the period prescribed by said section penal punishment or intended as such. And, as was said by the Supreme Court of Iowa, in the case of In re Bresee, 82 Iowa, 573, 48 N. W. 991, where the main question was whether an alleged insane patient was entitled to have the question of her sanity tried by a jury:

"It is purely a special proceeding, and hence, technically, not a 'civil action,' which is defined to be a proceeding in which one party, known as the 'plaintiff,' demands against another party, known as the 'defendant,' the protection of a private right or the redress of a private wrong."

See sections 22 and 30 of our Code of Civil Procedure.

The object of the statute is merely to authorize the state to take charge of and force treatment upon those so far addicted to the intemperate use of alchoholic liquors or narcotics as to have lost the power of self-control or to have become inebriates or dipsomaniacs. The legislation represents in reality the exercise only of the police power, whereby the state may control or correct the individual habits of its citizens where such habits are or may become a menace to the peace, comfort, "good neighborhood," and health of the commonwealth. The proceeding does not involve a trial, but, in analogy to the common law proceeding in insanity cases, is a mere inquisition, by way of a special proceeding, the determination of which should be left, as the law intends, largely to persons possessing the learning of experts, and not to laymen, of whom juries are ordinarily composed, and who do not, nor are expected to, possess the training and learning essential to a just and intelligent solution of a scientific question such as is necessarily involved in a proceeding whose purpose is to ascertain and determine whether a person, from whatsoever cause, is suffering from some serious mental infirmity. But the position here taken is well buttressed by authority.

In Ex parte Ah Peen, 51 Cal. 280, the petitioner, a minor, had been committed to an industrial school in accordance with the provisions of an act of the Legislature of 1858. He claimed that his commitment was illegal because he had been denied the right, guaranteed by the Constitution, to a trial by jury, and that, in denying him said right, the further provision of the Constitution that no person shall be deprived of his liberty without due process of law was violated. The court, rejecting the contention, said:

"It is obvious that these provisions of the Constitution have no application whatever to the case of this minor child. The action of the police judge here in question did not amount to a criminal prosecution, nor to proceedings against the minor according to the course of the common law, in which the right of trial by jury is guaranteed. The purpose in view is not punishment for offenses done, but reformation and training of the child to habits of industry, with a view to his future usefulness when he shall have been reclaimed to society, or shall have attained his majority. Having been abandoned by his parents, the state, as parens patriæ, has succeeded to his control, and stands in loco parentis to him. The restraint imposed upon him by public authority is in its nature and purpose the same which, under other conditions, is habitually imposed by parents, guardians of the person, and others exercising supervision and control over the conduct of those who are, by reason of infancy, lunacy, or otherwise, incapable of properly controlling themselves"—citing Ex parte Crouse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 9, and Prescott v. State, etc., 19 Ohio St. 184, 2 Am. Rep. 388.

In Re Bresee, 82 Iowa, 573, 48 N. W. 991, supra, it is said:

"It is urged that the appellant [an alleged insane patient] was entitled to a jury trial in the district court, under the constitutional guaranties that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate; and in all criminal prosecutions, and in cases involving the life or liberty of an individual, the accused shall have a right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury. These provisions are found in sections 9 and 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state. In Black Hawk County v. Springer, 58 Iowa, 417, 10 N. W. 791, this court considered the rights of a person charged with insanity to a trial by jury under these provisions of the Constitution, and held that they applied 'only to criminal prosecutions or accusations for offenses against the criminal law, where it is sought to punish the offender by fine or imprisonment.'"

In County of Black Hawk v. Springer, 58 Iowa, 417, 10 N. W. 791 (the case referred to in the Bresee Case), the Iowa court thus expressed itself:

"* * * The inquest of lunacy by a board of commissioners is in no sense a criminal proceeding. The restraint of an insane person is not designed as punishment for any act done. The insane are by the law taken into the care and custody of the state for treatment for their unfortunate infirmity. In our opinion, whatever may be thought of the power of the legislative department of the state to provide a special tribunal for the examination of persons alleged to be insane, the safeguards and limitations provided by our laws for the correction of any abuse which may arise from the acts of the commissioners are ample for the protection of the citizen."

In Crocker v. State, 60 Wis. 553, 556, 19 N. W. 435, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin says that the common-law right of trial by jury, as guaranteed by the Constitutions of that and other states, extends neither to proceedings to commit infants to an industrial school or a house of refuge nor to the determination of the mere insanity of a party, and in support of this proposition cites Ex parte Crouse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 9; Prescott v. State, 19 Ohio St. 184, 2 Am. Rep. 388; Ex parte Ah Peen, 51 Cal. 280; Petition of Ferrier, 103 Ill. 367, 43 Am. Rep. 10; Milwaukee Ind. School v. Milwaukee Co., 40 Wis. 328, 22 Am. Rep. 702; Gaston v. Babcock, 6 Wis. 503; Shroyer v. Richmond, 16 Ohio St. 455; Hagang v. Cohnen, 29 Ohio St. 82.

But we need not further multiply cases upon the proposition in hand. They are numerous, and, like the cases above examined, all to the effect that, where the state Constitution guarantees the common-law right of trial by jury, only those cases in which that right was habitually exercised according to the course of the common law come within the terms of the guaranty, and that an inquisition of insanity is not one of those cases.

The cases and authorities cited by the learned counsel for the petitioner have reference to cases where the Legislature has provided that the question of insanity shall be tried by a jury. In none of them, except in the case of De Hart v. Condit, 51 N. J. Eq. 611, 28 Atl. 603, 40 Am. St. Rep. 545, is there any declaration approaching the statement that the right to a jury trial in such cases is the common-law right. And in the case mentioned it is merely stated, as we have already explained (quoting Blackstone), that under the old common law, proceedings under a writ of de idiota inquirendo or de lunatico inquirendo were had before a jury, and this for the obvious reason that with the adjudication of the person's idiocy or insanity passed the issues and profits of his estate, during the existence of his infirmity, to the crown. In such a proceeding the property rights of the alleged incompetent were to some extent involved, and quite logically, in harmony with the recognized and zealously guarded polity of the British government, after its establishment upon the conquest of William the Conqueror, with respect to the rights of property and the right to a trial by jury where those property rights are affected or questioned, the natural and appropriate mode for determining whether the subject's property should be taken from him, or, substantially, escheated to the crown in such cases, was by a jury of disinterested persons of good common intelligence. As we have already shown, after provision was made for the safe-keeping and preservation of the incompetent's estate and the issues and profits thereof, to be returned to him upon his restoration or devolved upon his heirs should he die without recovering from his malady, there was no longer allowed a trial of the question of the alleged incompetent's idiocy or insanity by a jury, but the whole question was committed for determination to a court or a committee, under the direction of the court, without the intervention of a jury. And this latter system prevailed long prior to the time when Sir William Blackstone gave to the civilized world his justly celebrated and splendid commentaries on the English common law.

The De Hart Case involved the question whether a statute of New Jersey expressly requiring a jury of 12 men for the determination of the question whether a person was insane or afflicted with some other mental infirmity justifying his detention amounted to a denial to the alleged incompetent of the constitutional right to a trial by jury because it provided that the sheriff should summon 12 instead of 24 persons for that purpose. And, as before intimated, in all the cases where it is held that one charged with insanity is entitled to have the question tried by jury such right is purely statutory or expressly conferred by legislative mandate. Very clearly, if the section of the Code in question here, like our statute governing the investigation of cases of alleged insanity (Pol. Code, § 2174), authorized or required the question of inebriety to be tried by a jury, such requirement, whatever its terms or conditions, if reasonable, would have to be complied with; but the right thus allowed would not be the constitutional or common-law right of trial by jury. But the Legislature has not so ordained as to the trial of questions arising under section 2185c of the Political Code, nor, for reasons already given, does said section violate any of the constitutional guaranties because there is omitted therefrom a provision according to a person charged under its provisions the right of trial by jury. Indeed, if, as the petitioner contends, he is entitled to a trial by jury as of right or by virtue of the constitutional guaranty with respect to trial by jury, it would be altogether unnecessary for the Legislature to declare such right in the statute.

The result of the foregoing views is, obviously, that the writ must be discharged, and the petitioner remanded; and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

29 Cal. App. 238

GRIFFITH v. WELBANKS & CO.

(Civ. 1394.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 21, 1915.)

1. SALES ⊂⊃384 — BREACH OF CONTRACT — MEASURE OF DAMAGES—STATUTE.

In an action for breach of a contract to take and market apples, assuming that the jury were justified in finding that plaintiff's loss was due to defendant's failure to perform the contract, and that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff 50 cents per box net for his apples, and not $10 per ton or 23 cents per box, Civ. Code, § 3300, providing that on breach of an obligation arising from contract the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate the injured party for all detriment proximately caused thereby or which would be likely to result therefrom, furnished the measure of damages, and plaintiff could not recover the full contract price, as the detriment to him at most was the contract price less the expenses he would have incurred had be delivered the apples; and section 3310, relating to the breach of an agreement to pay for personal property, and section 3311, relating to breach of agreement to buy personal property, did not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1098–1107; Dec. Dig. ⟸384.]

2. SALES ⟸382—ACTION FOR BREACH—EVIDENCE—DAMAGES.

In such action, where the pleadings presented plaintiff's claim for 50 cents per box net, more than double the amount defendant claimed as the contract price, evidence for defendant that the market value of apples where they were grown, of such kind as were involved, was $12 per ton, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1096; Dec. Dig. ⟸382.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Emmet T. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Jesse Griffith against Welbanks & Co. Judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

W. H. Mahony, of San Francisco, for appellant. Dudley D. Sales and Theodore A. Bell, both of San Francisco, and E. S. Bell, of Napa, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff commenced the action to recover the sum of $1,700 for the breach by defendant of the following alleged contract:

"Agreement.

"This agreement, made and entered into this twenty-third day of September, 1912, by and between Jesse Griffith, of St. Helena, California, and Welbanks & Company, a corporation, with its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, witnesseth:

"That the said Welbanks & Company agree to purchase and does purchase and the said Jesse Griffith agrees to sell and does sell all number one apples (approximately) 4,000 boxes growing on that certain tract of land leased by said Jesse Griffith at the price of (ten [10] dollars per ton or) fifty ($.50) cents per box f. o. b. St. Helena.

"Jesse Griffith agrees to nail up all shook, do all the picking and hauling from the orchard to St. Helena, and when apples are ready for shipment, haul same from the packing house and load f. o. b. the cars at St. Helena, California.

"Welbanks & Company agree to supply all the necessary material, viz.: Shook, paper, nails, etc., for the packing of said crop, to haul same from railroad at San Francisco to store, and to furnish the packer for the packing of said crop. (Pay freight on shook, apples, etc.)

"It is further understood and agreed that after said charges and cartage have been deducted from the gross proceeds the said Jesse Griffith and Welbanks & Company shall enjoy all profits, share and share alike.

"In witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

"[Signed] Welbanks & Co.,
"B. C. Flocton, Sec.
"Jesse Griffith."

It is alleged that the 4,000 boxes of apples mentioned in the contract "were ready for picking, packing, and shipping on or about October 1, 1912, as the defendant then and there well knew, but the defendant for a period of 15 days after said apples became ready for picking, packing, and shipping as aforesaid, willfully failed, neglected, and refused to supply the necessary materials and boxes for the packing of said crop, or to furnish the packer for the packing thereof, and solely by reason of said delay, about 2,500 boxes of said No. 1 apples which remained on the trees unpicked, were destroyed by wind and rain"; alleged that plaintiff was ready and willing at all times to do all the picking, etc., required of him by said contract, but by reason of defendant's said neglect plaintiff was unable "to pick any part of said 2,500 boxes, or to preserve them from destruction by wind and rain as aforesaid"; that there were picked and packed "1,594 boxes of said No. 1 apples," for which defendant has paid plaintiff $300 and no more, and there is now due and owing plaintiff from defendant the sum of $1,700; that plaintiff has fully performed each and every covenant in said contract by him to be performed.

Defendant denied the execution of the contract set out in the complaint, but alleges that, on September 23, 1912, defendant prepared and signed in duplicate a proposed agreement in form similar to that set forth in plaintiff's complaint, except that as proposed the contract read "at the price of ten ($10) dollars per ton or fifty ($.50) cents per box f. o. b. St. Helena," whereas, as changed by plaintiff, it read, "at the price of fifty ($.50) cents per box f. o. b. St. Helena," and there were added to the fourth paragraph the words, "Pay freight on shook, apples, etc." The words "ten ($10) dollars per ton or" were erased by drawing ink lines through them and the added clause was written in by pen. The contract as proposed was typewritten. That as thus changed plaintiff returned one of the duplicate copies of the agreement, with a letter calling attention to the words "pay freight on shook, apples, etc.," but did not call defendant's attention to the alteration by striking out the words "ten ($10) dollars per ton or," and defendant "had no knowledge of the striking out of said words last referred to until on or about the 3d day of January, 1913, when its attention was directed thereto by letter from plaintiff and after all the apples hereinafter described had been shipped, and the contract hereinafter alleged had been performed and executed by the defendant herein." It is then alleged that the document set forth in the complaint is but one of a number of paper writings signed by the parties; that it was not the intent of plaintiff to sell and defendant to buy the apples referred to, but that the transaction was to be a joint venture, except that plaintiff was to be guaranteed $10 per ton for all No. 1 apples shipped to defendant, and the terms of the agreement actually entered into were as follows: Plaintiff was to harvest the crop and haul it to the packing house to be packed; he was to nail up all shook and to haul all said crops, after it was so packed, to the depot at St. Helena, and place the same aboard the cars for shipment to San Francisco, and to receive in payment therefor $10 per ton, estimated at about 23 cents per box, and it was likewise agreed that the cost of packing, including the materials required therefor together with said $10 per ton or 23 cents per box would be 50 cents per box; that defendant agreed on its part to advance the cost of supplying materials for packing, namely, shook, paper, nails, etc., and the labor and service of packers, advance the cost of freight on shipments by rail and cartage at San Francisco, and to sell the apples at the best market price; that upon making sales all charges, including the material and cost of labor for packing and said guaranteed $10 per ton (or 23 cents per box) of apples and all charges for freight and cartage at San Francisco, were to be deducted from the gross proceeds of sales and the net profits, if any, were to be divided equally between plaintiff and defendant; that the words "price of fifty cents per box f. o. b. St. Helena," as appear in said document set forth in plaintiff's complaint, referred to "the estimated cost of said apples after payment of said $10 per ton to plaintiff and payment of the cost of the material and labor furnished for packing the same for shipment at St. Helena." The answer denies the averments of the complaint as to the alleged number of boxes of apples ready for shipment October 1, 1912, or at any time; denies that defendant refused to supply the necessary materials for boxes; denies that, by reason of any delay on defendant's part to furnish boxes, 2,500 or any number of boxes of said apples remained on the trees unpicked and were destroyed by wind or rain; denies that plaintiff was ready or willing to do the part of the work which he agreed to do; and denies that plaintiff solely or at all was unable to pick any boxes of apples or to preserve them from destruction by wind or rain through any neglect or refusal of defendant; denies that plaintiff packed or delivered to defendant 1,594 boxes of No. 1 apples pursuant to any agreement, or that defendant paid plaintiff any money other than under the agreement set out in the answer; denies that there is any money due plaintiff from defendant other than as alleged in the answer, that plaintiff packed and shipped 1,593 boxes of apples of which only 1,034 were No. 1 apples, and that 559 boxes were smaller in size and of less marketable value, and that defendant sold said 1,593 boxes to the best advantage and realized therefrom $1,228.85 and no more; alleges that defendant paid out on account of said charges certain stated sums, and that the share of the net profits to which plaintiff is entitled is the sum of $231.85, which defendant offered to pay plaintiff prior to the commencement of the action, but plaintiff refused to accept the same, and that defendant paid into court said sum of $231.85. Defendant prays judgment in favor of plaintiff for said last-named sum, and that defendant recover costs of suit. The cause was tried with a jury, and plaintiff had the verdict for $1,200. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff estimated that there were 4,500 boxes of No. 1 apples on the trees when the contract was made. In the contract the estimate was 4,000 boxes (approximately). He shipped 1,593 boxes. In his testimony plaintiff testified that, of the apples "blown off the trees on account of wind and rain, I figured from 2,500 to 3,000 boxes were No. 1 apples." Under the contract, plaintiff was to "nail up all shook, do all the picking and hauling from the orchard to St. Helena, and when apples are ready for shipment, haul same from the packing house and load f. o. b. the cars at St. Helena, Cal." Plaintiff testified at some length as to delays in sending packing materials and packers; that there were not enough packers to keep up with the picking and that some of them were incompetent; that by reason of defendant's failure to perform its part of the agreement in these and other particulars the picking and packing ran along so late in the season that about 2,500 or 3,000 boxes of apples were destroyed by wind and rain storms. He testified that 1,593 boxes of apples were packed and shipped and none of them rejected and that he had received on account $300; that his orchard was on Howell Mountain, 8 miles from St. Helena. Other witnesses testified to facts tending to establish plaintiff's contention that the destruction of his crop of apples was attributable to defendant's failure to perform its part of the contract. There was evidence submitted by defendant in conflict with plaintiff's testimony.

[1] Defendant's answer and its evidence was in effect that the contract agreed upon and under which plaintiff and defendant acted was one of profit sharing by which plaintiff was guaranteed $10 per ton or 23 cents per box, and, after the various charges referred to in the contract and the cost of marketing the fruit were deducted, plaintiff and defendant were to share equally whatever profits there might be. Plaintiff testified that there was no such understanding. Defendant called witnesses who testified in support of its contention and introduced letters written by plaintiff to defendant during the course of the packing and up to the close of the transaction, which seem to support defendant's position. At no time prior to January did plaintiff make any claim for apples destroyed by winter storms or that defendant was responsible for the loss. However, if the jury was justified from sufficient evidence in finding that the loss was caused by defendant's failure to perform its duty under the contract and plaintiff was free from fault, which we do not now deem it necessary to decide, and if the jury were justified from the evidence in finding that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff 50 cents per box net for his apples and not $10 per ton or 23 cents per box, and that there was no agreement to share profits as part consideration for the sale, issues upon which we express no opinion, there remains the question: Was the amount of the verdict justified by the evidence?

It is conceded that in estimating damages the jury allowed 50 cents a box on 3,000 boxes of apples, less $300 paid on account, but took no account of the cost of picking, nailing the shook, and hauling the apples to St. Helena and putting them on board the cars. Plaintiff justifies the verdict on the ground that, as the apples were destroyed, there was no occasion for incurring the expense of these charges, and defendant cannot complain because in any event its liability was to pay 50 cents per box. Except where otherwise expressly provided by the Civil Code, the measure of damages "for the breach of an obligation arising from contract * * * is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." Civ. Code, § 3300. Where the title to personal property is vested in the buyer, the detriment caused by his breach of the agreement to accept and pay for the property "is deemed to be the contract price." Civ. Code, § 3310.

"The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is not vested in him, is deemed to be: * * * (2) If the property has not been resold in the manner prescribed by section 3049 (i. e., sold to enforce a lien, not this case), the excess, if any, of the amount due from the buyer, under the contract, over the value to the seller, together with the excess, if any, of the expenses properly incurred in carrying the property to market, over those which would have been incurred for the carriage thereof, if the buyer had accepted it." Civ. Code, § 3311.

Clearly, the title to the property involved in the present case was not vested in defendant, and section 3310 has no application. Where, as here, the property consisted of a growing crop which was destroyed by the elements before it was harvested and was never in a condition to be delivered to the buyer, we do not think section 3311 furnishes the true measure of damages. The just and equitable measure is found in section 3300. Plaintiff was to receive, upon his view of the contract, 50 cents per box for his apples after he had picked, packed, and hauled them to St. Helena and delivered them on board the cars. Upon no just principle can he recover the full contract price, for the detriment to him is at most the contract price less the expenses he would have incurred had he delivered the apples.

In Coburn v. California, etc., Co., 144 Cal. 81, 84, 77 Pac. 771, the contract was for the sale of cement clay at a stated price per cubic yard on delivery. Defendant received a certain quantity and refused to receive any more. After referring to section 3311, Civil Code, the court said:

"Where, however, there is no value, or where under the terms of the special contract the market value is not an appropriate or adequate criterion of damages, it has been said that the measure of damages is compensation for the actual loss suffered. 24 Am. Eng. Ency. of L. 1115. The law seeks to give the complaining party the value of his bargain, to prevent a loss which the fulfillment of the contract would have prevented, to put the injured party, so far as money can do it, in the same position as if the contract had been performed. Id., vol. 8, p. 632. Accordingly, the contract price less the cost of performing the contract was held to be the proper measure of damages when the buyer refused to take all the tomatoes grown on a certain tract of land, it appearing that there was no other market for the tomatoes"—citing cases.

See O'Connell v. Main, etc., Hotel Co., 90 Cal. 515, 27 Pac. 373.

In Allen v. Los Molinos Land Co., 25 Cal. App. 206, 143 Pac. 253, there was a breach of a contract by failing to furnish water for the irrigation of a crop of potatoes, in consequence of which the yield was less than it would have been had sufficient water been supplied. We held in that case that section 3300 of the Civil Code furnished the rule for measuring the damages, namely, the market value of the potatoes at the selling place less the expenses incurred in growing and marketing the crop. Plaintiff offered no evidence of market value at the selling place or elsewhere. The jury had no criterion by which to measure the damages except the contract price of the apples and the estimated quantity destroyed.

In its answer defendant denied the execution of the contract sued upon; denied that in its altered form it expressed the intention of the parties and set forth in much detail what it claimed was the contract as shown by the acts, the verbal agreements, and correspondence of the parties; that the price guaranteed plaintiff was $10 per ton or what both parties estimated would be 23 cents per box, in addition to which plaintiff was to share equally with defendant in the profits. In a letter written by plaintiff to defendant, September 18, 1912, when negotiations were progressing for the sale and purchase of the apples, plaintiff stated that the price for the apples was figured at $10 per ton in enumerating the different items making up 50 cents per box.

[2] Upon the issues as presented by the pleadings, plaintiff claiming 50 cents per box net, more than double the amount defendant claimed was the contract, defendant was entitled to any evidence which would legitimately tend to discredit plaintiff's claim and sustain defendant's claim. Defendant's witnesses testified that the market value of apples at St. Helena, such as were involved, was $12 per ton. The court afterwards struck out this testimony, and defendant excepted to the ruling. We think this was error, for, had the jury believed the testimony of these witnesses, it would have had some tendency to show that plaintiff's claim was unreasonable and that defendant would not have been likely to enter into a contract to pay twice the market value of the apples.

We refrain from discussing the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the implied finding of the jury that the contract was as contended by plaintiff, for the reason that should another trial be had the evidence may not be the same as at the first trial.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

(29 Cal. App. 253)

IMPERIAL WATER CO. NO. 1 v. WORES et al. (Civ. 1772.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 24, 1915.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=157 — WAYS FOR CANALS—ACQUISITION.

A right of way for a canal for waste water of an irrigation corporation may be obtained by an executed parol license.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 185; Dec. Dig. ⊂=157.]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=157 — WAYS FOR CANALS—ACQUISITION.

An owner of land requested an irrigation corporation to construct a waste ditch along the south side of his land. The corporation constructed the ditch on a diagonal line through the land. The owner, on obtaining knowledge of the facts, protested and informed the corporation that he intended to make use of the ditch to irrigate his land by using some of the waste water. The ditch was completed, and the owner erected a check and gate therein. The corporation removed, when necessary, the check and gate, but replaced the same by a similar and more substantial structure. The check and gate remained in the ditch for some time, and the owner used water for irrigation. Held, that the corporation acquired the right to maintain the ditch subject to the owner's right to use the water therein for irrigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 185; Dec. Dig. ⊂=157.]

3. QUIETING TITLE ⊂=54—COSTS—LIABILITY—"RIGHT TO REAL PROPERTY."

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, subd. 5, providing that costs are allowed of course to plaintiff on a judgment in his favor in an action involving title or possession of real estate, a plaintiff, suing for a decree quieting its title to a ditch for waste water over the land of defendant and obtaining a decree establishing its right to maintain the ditch subject to the right of defendant to use the water therein, is entitled to recover costs, since the right claimed by plaintiff is a right to real property, under the rule that where a right, though originating in a license, exists for the benefit of the licensee's land and has become irrevocable its character is an easement, which is an irrevocable interest in real estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. ⊂=54.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the Imperial Water Company No. 1 against Lucy Wores and another. From a judgment, both parties appeal. Modified, amended, and affirmed.

F. P. Willard, of Heber, for plaintiff. Conkling & Brown, of El Centro, for defendants.

CONREY, P. J. At all times mentioned in the complaint the plaintiff was a corporation organized for the purposes of securing water for irrigation and other purposes, and for distribution of the same at cost, among its stockholders only, for use upon lands owned by them within certain described limits in the county of Imperial, and has been engaged in distributing upon said lands a large amount of water which it receives at the southerly boundary of its territory and distributes through a system of canals and ditches. The defendant Lucy Wores, in the year 1905 or prior thereto, became the owner of a tract of land, known as tract No. 74, situated immediately north of the territory watered by the plaintiff's irrigation system. The canal system of plaintiff extends in a northerly direction through its territory, and the canals converge in the northerly part of this territory and discharge their surplus and waste water into a canal designated as the Rose wasteway. Prior to the year 1906, there was a well-defined water course known as the Salton river, later called the Alamo river, which ran across a portion of tract 74, but in a more northerly direction than that taken by the present Rose waste canal. This water course carried the overflow water from the Colorado river whenever any was discharged, and also carried the rainwater which fell, when any such rainwater did fall, over a considerable part of the territory covered by the water system of the plaintiff. Such rainfall and overflow water was thus carried over and through tract 74 to lower lands lying farther to the north. Since March 1, 1904, plaintiff has continuously conveyed and discharged waste water from its canal system across and beyond said tract 74.

At all times mentioned in the complaint the defendant Charles R. Wores was the agent or representative of the defendant Lucy Wores in the transactions referred to herein. In the years 1905 and 1906 the defendants complained to plaintiff of the discharge and flow of waste and excess water going through plaintiff's Rose canal from the south and complained that the water was flooding tract 74, and requested the plaintiff to construct a ditch or canal from the said Rose wasteway south of tract 74 in such a way as to prevent the flooding of tract 74, and requested that such canal be constructed along the south line of tract 74 from the southwest corner of that tract easterly past its southeast corner to a deep gulch known as the Alamo cut-off. In April, 1906, after making surveys, the plaintiff concluded to build such waste canal, not along the south side of tract 74, but upon a diagonal line running through that tract northeasterly. Thereupon it proceeded to construct the canal upon such diagonal line and completed the work in December, 1906. The defendants were without knowledge of the selection of this diagonal route, or that plaintiff intended constructing the canal through the tract, until the same was partially constructed. They gave no prior consent thereto other than their request for the construction of a canal along the south line of their tract, as before stated. In April, 1906, at a time after the commencement of the construction of this canal or ditch, the defendants learned of the work that was going on and protested to plaintiff and objected to the place where the canal was being constructed. Shortly thereafter the defendant Lucy Wores notified plaintiff that she intended to make use of this canal herself for the purposes of conducting waste water over and irrigating her land. The canal having been completed, plaintiff began to use it as a wasteway for its surplus water, and ever since has so continued without interruption, except as will be herein stated. In January, 1908, defendants placed an obstruction consisting of a check and gate so arranged that they could dam up the water flowing in this waste ditch and divert the water therefrom so as to irrigate a portion of tract 74. In January, 1909, defendants commenced to irrigate and cultivate this land and have ever since continued so to do, and have irrigated such land by checking up the water in the waste canal and diverting the water therefrom, thereby causing the banks of the Rose wasteway to overflow and discharge water upon the roads, fields, and crops of those adjoining that canal to the annoyance and detriment of the plaintiff and its stockholders. The plaintiff and its officers and directors have at all times known that the defendants have obstructed this waste canal and used the water therefrom for irrigation, and until shortly prior to the commencement of this action never made any objection thereto. The action was commenced by filing of the complaint herein on June 26, 1912. About one year prior thereto plaintiff removed the check theretofore placed in the canal by the defendants, in order that plaintiff might clean out the canal, but immediately thereafter plaintiff replaced said check by a similar structure more substantial than that theretofore placed in the canal by the defendants. This replacement was made by the plaintiff for the convenience of the defendant Lucy Wores and in order that she might continue to irrigate her said land. The Rose Wasteway is a necessity to the canal system of the plaintiff, and it is impracticable to operate and maintain plaintiff's system without such wasteway or some available substitute therefor. Shortly before the 20th day of June, 1912, the plaintiff entered upon said canal and tore out the check and gate which it had constructed as above stated and destroyed the same. Two days later the defendants re-entered upon the canal and by the erection of a barbed wire fence excluded and ejected the plaintiff therefrom and placed a temporary check in the canal (near the place from which the former check had been removed) for the purpose of enabling them to divert water from the waste canal for irrigation, as they had been accustomed to do.

The plaintiff by this action seeks a decree quieting its title or right to the use of said wasteway across the land of the defendants, and enjoining the defendants from maintaining any obstruction which will in any manner interfere with the free ingress or egress of the plaintiff or its employés for the purpose of cleaning, repairing, or inspecting the wasteway, and further enjoining the defendants from obstructing in any way or for any purpose the flow of water therein. Upon sufficient evidence the court found the facts to be as we have stated them, and likewise found:

"That since the construction of said wasteway across the said tract 74, the defendant Lucy Wores has consented to the maintenance thereof subject to her right to use the same for irrigation in the manner in which she has used the same as aforesaid, and has not consented otherwise."

In accordance with its conclusions of law following the findings of fact, judgment was rendered to the effect that:

"Upon the restoration and reconstruction by plaintiff of the check torn out and destroyed about the 1st of June, 1912, and in substantially the same condition, location, and position as the same existed at the time the same was removed therefrom and destroyed by plaintiff, and not otherwise, plaintiff is entitled to use the waste canal described in the complaint, across the lands of defendant Lucy Wores, and to discharge its surplus waters therethrough in the same manner that it has been accustomed to discharge the same, subject always to the right of the defendant Lucy Wores to obstruct and divert such waste water by means of said check or irrigating so much of said tract 74 as she has been accustomed to irrigate previous to the said June 26, 1912, and no more. It is ordered and adjudged that in diverting the said waste water defendant shall not check said water to any higher level than that to which she checked the same prior to June 26, 1912. It is further ordered that any check placed in the said wasteway by plaintiff shall be so constructed as to permit all water in excess of that being diverted by defendant to flow down the said wasteway without interference, and that when not in use such check and obstruction shall be so removed as to permit the free flow of water and the scouring of the channel of said wasteway above said check of all deposits of silt. It is ordered and adjudged that plaintiff is entitled to convenient ingress and egress from the said canal for the purpose of cleaning and caring for the same, and that such right extends over the strip of ground 80 feet in width; that is to say, 40 feet on each side of the center line of said canal. It is further adjudged and decreed that the defendant Lucy Wores is entitled to enter upon the said strip of land at all times for the purpose of maintaining, repairing, and caring for the said check in the said canal so used by her for the purpose of diverting water therefrom for the irrigation purposes aforesaid, and for the purposes of making such diversion of water. It is further ordered and decreed that defendant Lucy Wores recover her costs therein taxed at $——."

The plaintiff appeals from certain specified portions of this judgment, including in the appeal substantially all of it, except the sentence defining plaintiff's right of way and its right of access thereto. The defendants appeal generally from the judgment. The record consists of the judgment roll and the notices of appeal.

[1] The plaintiff claims that it is entitled to this wasteway because at considerable expense it was constructed under a parol license and under circumstances which should now estop the defendants from destroying its efficiency. We have no doubt that a right of way may be thus obtained by virtue of an executed parol license. The circumstances being sufficient to create an estoppel, "the license becomes in all essentials an easement." Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 143 Cal. 248, 76 Pac. 1032, 65 L. R. A. 940; Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 83 Pac. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, 7 Ann. Cas. 704.

[2] The request made by the defendants that the plaintiff construct a waste ditch along the south side of their land was not a consent to the construction of such a ditch diagonally through such land. Knowledge by the owner that the work was being done without her permission was promptly followed by a protest from her, and this of course indicates that she did not consent thereto and was giving no license therefor. Following this, however, she informed the plaintiff that she intended to make use of the ditch for the purpose of irrigating her land by using thereon some of the waste water flowing through the ditch. This constituted by implication a consent that the plaintiff might build the ditch. On the other hand, if, without any other or different consent of the owner (and such seems to be the fact), the plaintiff completed the construction of its ditch, it may reasonably be inferred that the plaintiff intended thereby to consent to such use of the ditch by the defendants. That this was the understanding on the part of the plaintiff is evidenced by the fact that subsequently, when it found that a check and gate had been arranged in the ditch for irrigation purposes by the defendants, and when it became necessary for plaintiff temporarily to remove this obstruction in the course of repairs to the ditch, it immediately thereafter replaced the check by a similar and more substantial structure and so placed the same for the convenience of the defendants in order that they might continue to irrigate their land. Under these circumstances, when the plaintiff on or about the 1st of June, 1912, destroyed the gate theretofore established by it, this was a wrongful denial of a limitation under which its continuing right to maintain the ditch exists. Plaintiff's counsel contends that the facts found do not authorize a judgment requiring the plaintiff to restore and reconstruct the check torn out by it from the ditch. The judgment does not require the plaintiff to do anything; it merely imposes upon it the condition that it must do a certain thing as a necessary incident to the enforcement of a certain right. It is required to do equity in a matter incidental to its right to have affirmative relief in equity. Having complied with that condition, it is permitted to discharge its surplus water through the ditch in the same manner that it has been accustomed to discharge the same, and suitable provision is made for the free flow of the water, subject only to the temporary checking of that flow during times of irrigation of the land of the defendants by the use of such waste water.

It should be distinctly understood that this case does not attempt to settle or determine any right or claim of the defendants to have any water continue to flow through the Rose canal or ditch or across said tract 74. We are dealing solely with the ditch or canal itself and the right of the defendants to a certain limited use of the ditch for the diversion of water therefrom whenever such water is by the plaintiff permitted to flow therein.

[3] Plaintiff objects to the provision in the decree that the defendant Lucy Wores recover costs, and insists that the costs should be allowed in favor of the plaintiff. We are referred to Code of Civil Procedure, section 1022, subdivision 5, which provides that costs are allowed of course to the plaintiff upon a judgment in his favor in an action which involves the title or possession of real estate. Although the suit is in equity and includes the right to an injunction, it is primarily an action to quiet title to a right in real property. It has been held that where the plaintiff has any judgment in his favor in an action to quiet title, though it be for only a part of the property, the costs should be in favor of the plaintiff. Sierra Union, etc., Co. v. Wolff, 144 Cal. 430, 77 Pac. 1038. And there seems no doubt that the right claimed by the plaintiff herein is a right to real property. Lower Kings R. W. D. Co. v. Kings R. & Fresno C. Co., 60 Cal. 408. It is true that a mere license revocable in its nature would not amount to an interest or estate in the land. Emerson v. Bergin, 76 Cal. 197, 201, 18 Pac. 264. But where the right, although originating in a license, exists for the benefit of the licensee's land and has become irrevocable, its character becomes that of an easement which is an interest in real property within the meaning of the Code section above mentioned. Schmidt v. Klotz, 130 Cal. 223, 62 Pac. 470; Stoner v. Zucker, supra.

Concerning the plaintiff's claim that the defendants had not maintained a check in the canal and had not used the ditch for a period of five years, and therefore that the defendants had not acquired any prescriptive right therein, a sufficient answer is that the right of the defendants, so far as recognized by the judgment herein, is not based upon adverse use, but solely upon the condition inhering in the plaintiff's right of way as we have construed it in this opinion.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the provision contained therein allowing costs to the defendant Lucy Wores, and the court below is directed to further amend the judgment by allowing costs to the plaintiff. As so amended, the judgment shall stand affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 266

SCHEELINE et al. v. PEZZOLA et al.

(Civ. 1410.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1915.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⟸329 — ACTIONS FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action by wholesale liquor dealers to recover for liquors sold to defendants for use in a saloon in P. county, wherein there was an ordinance prohibiting any person from engaging in such business without a license and denying licenses to persons not citizens of the United States, it was error to exclude evidence that, when the first sale was made, one of the plaintiffs knew that the business which was to be conducted in the name of one of the defendants was for himself and the other defendant, that such other defendant was not permitted to engage in the business or hold a license because he was not a citizen, and that it was a violation of the ordinance for such defendant to engage in such business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 474–481; Dec. Dig. ⟸329.]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⟸327 — SALES — VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

Pen. Code, § 435, provides that every person who carries on any business, etc., in which a license is required without taking it out is guilty of a misdemeanor. Civ. Code, § 1668, provides that all contracts which have for their object a violation of law are against the policy of the law. Plaintiffs, wholesale dealers, sold liquors to S. and A. for use in conducting a saloon in P. county, in which county an ordinance prohibited any person from engaging in such business without a license, and no person could obtain a license who was not a citizen. A. was not a citizen, and plaintiffs had an understanding with S. that he was to make application for the license and conduct the business for A., and that, if the license was issued, the liquor was to be supplied to A. or to both S. and A. Held, that the contract of sale was invalid, and there could be no recovery of the price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 467–472; Dec. Dig. ⟸327.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Henriette Scheeline and others, a copartnership doing business as Roth & Co., against S. A. Pezzola and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. N. Peter, of Quincy, for appellants. H. B. Wolfe, of Quincy, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from a judgment for $1,023.25, and costs.

The following statement made by appellants is not disputed and seems to be substantially accurate: Respondents are a wholesale liquor firm engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors. They made certain sales of such liquors to appellants to be used by the latter in conducting a saloon in Plumas county. When the orders were placed with respondents for the delivery of the liquors, there was an ordinance in said county prohibiting any person from engaging in the saloon business without a license, and no person could obtain a license who was not a citizen of the United States. Appellant A. Pezzola was not such citizen. The facts were known to respondents. Respondent Edwin S. Scheeline had an understanding with appellant S. A. Pezzola whereby the latter was to make application to the board of supervisors of said county for a liquor license in his own name and conduct the business for appellant A. Pezzola, and it was understood that in case said license was issued the liquor was to be supplied to A. Pezzola or to both appellants. S. A. Pezzola made the application, the license was issued to him, and thereafter respondents furnished liquors, charging the sales on their books to both of the appellants, but all bills were made out against S. A. Pezzola. Said Edwin S. Scheeline testified:

That he understood "at the time that A. Pezzola, Steve Pezzola's father, was not a citizen of the United States, and not entitled to engage in the liquor business under the ordinance of Plumas county; that S. A. Pezzola was running the business for his parents in his own name; they were unable to get a license."

[1] Appellants contended that it thus appeared that there was a conspiracy, participated in by respondents, to violate or circumvent the law, and therefore that respondents were wrongdoers, and would not be aided in a court of justice to reap any advantage from their unlawful contract, and appellants sought still further to develop the situation, as is shown by the following quotation from the transcript:

"Q. You understood it was in violation of the liquor ordinance of this county at that time? Mr. Wolfe: Objected to as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. The Court: Sustained. Mr. Peter: Will your honor hear me on that? The Court: I can't see how it is material. Mr. Peter: I want to develop that there was a conspiracy here to violate the law, and this plaintiff was a party to it, and they cannot take advantage of their own wrong, and the court will leave them where they left themselves. The Court: I don't think there is anything in that; I will hear the evidence."

His answer was:

"All I understood that they were violating the order was the fact, if A. Pezzola should have the license, he couldn't have a license; they got the license for him."

Afterward the court sustained an objection to this question:

"You understood that under the law, under the liquor ordinance of this county and laws of the state, you had no right, no one had a right, to engage in the liquor business without a license, did you?"

Counsel for appellants then stated that he offered to prove by the witness:

"That at the time he made the first sale testified to by him that he knew and understood that all the business, that the business, which was thereafter to be conducted in the name of S. A. Pezzola, was for himself and A. Pezzola; that A. Pezzola was not permitted to engage in the business, to hold a license under the liquor ordinance of Plumas county, because he was not a citizen of the United States; * * * and that he knew the fact of A. Pezzola engaging in the business was a violation of the ordinance."

The court, however, held it to be immaterial. In this we feel satisfied the court was in error.

[2] The law is well settled as to matters of this character, and is aptly set forth in many quotations made by appellants from various authorities. The Penal Code of this state, in section 435, provides that:

"Every person who commences or carries on any business, trade, profession, or calling, for the transaction or carrying on of which a license is required by any law of this state, without taking out or procuring the license prescribed by such law, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

And that any contract having for its object the violation of the law is against public policy is expressly provided in section 1668 of the Civil Code.

The decisions are collated in 6 R. C. L. p. 692 et seq., and we may content ourselves with quoting section 98, as follows:

"At no time in the history of the common law were contracts in violation of law regarded as valid. Individuals were never allowed to stipulate for iniquity. A contract, though it may be based on consent, derives its obligatory force from the sanction of the law. It would therefore be anomalous, indeed, if the law were to sanction contracts which violate the law. The law which prohibits the end, will not lend its aid in promoting the means designed to carry it into effect. It will not promote in one form that which it declares wrong in another. The whole doctrine relating to illegal contracts is founded on a regard for the public welfare. In fact, it has been asserted that the maintenance of this doctrine is essential to the preservation of the state. It may therefore be said to be a fundamental principle of the law of contracts that a contract must have a lawful purpose, and that transactions in violation of law cannot be made the foundation of a valid contract."

As to the particular fraudulent contract before us it is sufficient to quote from Cyc. as follows:

"Where a license or certificate is required by statute as a requisite to one practicing a particular profession, an agreement of a professional character without such license or certificate is illegal and void. * * * The same is held where a license is required for the carrying on of a particular trade or business, as in the case of a wholesale or retail liquor dealer. * * * In such instances agreements made without the requisite license are generally held to be void." 9 Cyc. 478.

"Where the illegal sale of liquor enters into any contract as an inseparable part of its consideration, or the terms or conditions of the contract are inseparably connected with the illicit traffic in liquors, it is against public policy and immoral, and therefore void." 23 Cyc. 334.

The showing made was sufficient to bring the case within the purview of the foregoing principle. It appears with reasonable certainty that plaintiff conspired with defendant S. A. Pezzola to circumvent the said ordinance, and therefore the law will not aid in the collection of the claim. Besides, appellants sought unavailingly to make more apparent the invalidity of the contract.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 321

HOUGHTON v. DICKSON. (Civ. 1760.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 5, 1916.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⊂⊃18 — ACTIONS FOR NEGLIGENCE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against a physician and surgeon, evidence held insufficient to show negligence in treating a fracture of one of the bones of the arm, though the fractured bone failed to unite, or in failing to discover a dislocation of the other bone of the arm, there being no expert testimony as to any want of care or skill, but only evidence of the failure of the bone to unite and the failure of defendant to discover the dislocation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. §§ 34–41, 43–46, 48; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃18.]

2. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⊂⊃14—DEGREE OF SKILL AND CARE REQUIRED.

The implied contract on the part of a physician and surgeon is that he possesses that reasonable degree of learning and skill possessed by others of his profession, and that he will use reasonable and ordinary care and skill in the application of such knowledge to accomplish the purpose for which he is employed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. §§ 21–30; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃14.]

3. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⊂⊃16—DEGREE OF SKILL AND CARE REQUIRED.

If a physician and surgeon possesses the reasonable degree of learning possessed by others of his profession and in the treatment of an injury exercises ordinary care and skill in applying it, he is not liable for results that follow.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. § 31; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃16.]

4. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18 — Actions for Negligence—Presumptions.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the law will presume the exercise of a reasonable degree of care and skill by a physician and surgeon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. §§ 34–41, 43–46, 48; Dec. Dig. ⇐18.]

5. Evidence ⇐508 — Expert Testimony — Exercise of Care by Physician.

Whether a physician and surgeon called upon to set a fracture of one of the bones of the arm should, in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care and skill, have discovered a dislocation of the other bone of the arm was a question for expert testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2311; Dec. Dig. ⇐508.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by A. O. Houghton against C. B. Dickson. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. P. Jennings and Jennings & Horton, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. J. L. Fleming and W. S. Knott, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff as the result of negligent surgical treatment administered to him by defendant.

The case was tried by a jury which rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff, in accordance with which judgment was entered against defendant in the sum of $3,500. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial; his chief contention being that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict.

[1] It appears that on January 25, 1911, due to the kick of a horse, the ulna of plaintiff's right arm was broken, and that, after receiving emergency treatment, he, on the day following the injury, placed himself in the care of defendant, who was a physician and surgeon and who undertook the treatment of the injured arm. The negligence of defendant is predicated, not only upon the alleged fact that in setting and treating the fracture there was a lack of care and skill by reason of which the fractured bone failed to unite, but that the bone known as the radius was at the time, or at a later date during the treatment, dislocated at the elbow, which fact defendant, by reason of his failure to exercise ordinary care and skill, failed to discover or properly treat. On January 26th, after an examination of the fractured arm with a fluoroscope, defendant set the arm, using splints to retain the broken bones in place. On the following day he discovered that it would be necessary to wire the fractured ends of the bone and had plaintiff go to a hospital, where the operation of wiring was performed by defendant. After the operation, defendant dressed, bandaged, and otherwise treated the arm until March 29th, on which date plaintiff consulted Dr. Rowley, who found a dislocation, at the elbow, of the bone known as the radius; that there had been no union of the ends of the fractured bones; that the wire used in securing the same had broken, and that pus had developed in the wound, all of which conditions, except the formation of pus in the wound, were indicated by an X-ray photograph of plaintiff's arm taken on said last-mentioned date. At this time plaintiff placed himself in the care of Dr. Rowley, who treated the injured arm until about May 1st, when he and Dr. Lewis operated upon the arm by cutting off the head of the radius, declared necessary in order to reduce the dislocation, and reset and wired the fractured bone, which, however, as under defendant's treatment, from some cause unknown to Drs. Rowley and Lewis and contrary to their expectations, failed to unite. While plaintiff by his evidence shows in detail just what defendant did in operating upon the arm and in the treatment thereof while under his professional care, he produced no evidence tending to prove that defendant, either in performing the operation or treatment administered thereafter, was guilty of negligence. The condition of the arm on March 29th—that is, the dislocation of the radius; the fact that the wire intended to retain in place the fractured bones had broken; failure of the fractured bones to unite, and suppuration of the wound—was not, in the absence of other proof, sufficient evidence that there had been a want of ordinary care and skill on the part of defendant in treating plaintiff's injuries. In short, the record merely shows what defendant did in caring for plaintiff professionally, the condition of the arm existing on and prior to March 29th, when plaintiff placed himself in the care of Dr. Rowley, and what he and Dr. Lewis thereafter did professionally to effect a cure. Indeed, not only is there no evidence of negligence on the part of defendant, but the evidence of both Dr. Rowley and Dr. Lewis, who, by the way, were the only witnesses called on behalf of plaintiff who were competent to testify whether or not defendant had exercised reasonable care and skill in treating plaintiff's injury, tends to prove the contrary. This evidence was to the effect that the nature of the fracture was such as to demand the wiring of the bones, and that the wire used was such as surgeons generally used in such cases; that in operating upon the fracture they used like wire, which in the adjusting thereof likewise broke. Dr. Lewis said:

"After I operated on the bones they did not unite with a bony union, and have never united."

And, further:

"I did not see anything in the condition of the bones at the fracture, referring to the location of the holes in which the wires had been placed or the manner in which the wires were there, that would indicate that the operation which had been performed by Dr. Dickson was in any way improperly performed. * * * The condition of pus frequently follows an operation, especially operations upon bone. * * * That is true even with the utmost use of surgical care" —and that he certainly expected, in performing the operation and his wiring of the bones, they would make a perfect union, in which, however, he was disappointed, since the result was to secure a ligamentous union only, and that he did not know what caused such condition.

[2-5] The implied contract on the part of defendant was, not only that he possessed that reasonable degree of learning and skill possessed by others of his profession, but that he would use reasonable and ordinary care and skill in the application of such knowledge to accomplish the purpose for which he was employed (Bonnet v. Foote, 47 Colo. 282, 107 Pac. 252, 28 L. R. A. [N. S.] 136), and if he possessed such reasonable degree of learning, and in the treatment of plaintiff's injury exercised ordinary care and skill in applying it, he is not liable for results that followed (Wurdemann v. Barnes, 92 Wis. 206, 66 N. W. 111; Sims v. Parker, 41 Ill. App. 284; Staloch v. Holm, 100 Minn. 276, 111 N. W. 264, 9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 712). In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the law will presume the exercise of a reasonable degree of care and skill. State v. Housekeeper, 70 Md. 162, 16 Atl. 382, 2 L. R. A. 587, 14 Am. St. Rep. 340.

"No presumption of the absence of proper skill and attention arises from the mere fact that the patient does not recover." Haire v. Reese, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 138.

"A physician is not a warrantor of cures." Ewing v. Goode (C. C.) 78 Fed. 442.

In McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 873, it is said:

"Negligence on the part of a physician consists in his doing something which he should not have done, or in omitting to do something which he should have done."

Quoting again from McGraw v. Kerr, supra:

"The authorities are practically uniform in holding * * * that as to what is or is not proper practice in examination and treatment, or the usual practice and treatment, is a question for experts, and can be established only by their testimony."

Whether or not plaintiff's elbow was dislocated at the time when he first called upon defendant is not disclosed; indeed there is no evidence as to when the dislocation occurred, or as to what caused it. It is a subject purely for conjecture. While one witness states that a blow upon the arm, if of sufficient force and in the right direction, might dislocate it, there is no evidence that such blow was given, or that the dislocation was caused by the kick of the horse which broke the bone of the arm. Indeed, from aught that appears to the contrary, the dislocation might have been caused by the enfeebled condition of the muscles and ligaments following continued nonuse of the arm and the carrying of it bandaged and in splints. But assuming that it was dislocated at the time when defendant undertook the treatment of the fractured bone, or that it occurred thereafter during the treatment, such fact alone does not show that defendant was lacking in ordinary care and skill in not discovering such condition. No evidence whatever was offered on the part of plaintiff showing that, if it did exist at such time, defendant was negligent in his failure to make such discovery. So far as appears, he was called upon to set the fractured bones. No intimation was given him of any injury to the elbow. Whether or not defendant should, under the circumstances, in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care and skill, have discovered such condition, assuming it to have existed, was a question for expert testimony, and none was offered. Conceding that Dr. Rowley, as stated by him, had no difficulty on March 29th in discovering the dislocation, nevertheless this fact does not show a want of ordinary care and skill on the part of Dr. Dickson in failing to discover it, since Dr. Rowley, by reason of superior learning and advantages, may have been a man possessing far more than ordinary skill in his profession. In James v. Crockett, 34 New Brunswick, 540, it is said:

"A surgeon does not undertake to perform a cure, nor does he undertake to use the highest possible degree of skill, as there may be persons of higher education and greater advantages than himself; but he undertakes a fair, reasonable, and competent degree of skill, and in an action against him by a patient, the question for the jury is whether the injury complained of must be referred to a want of a proper degree of skill and care in the defendant or not."

To the same effect is Spain v. Burch, 169 Mo. App. 94, 154 S. W. 172.

The evidence wholly fails to show any lack of care and skill on the part of defendant in setting and treating the fractured bone of plaintiff's arm, and likewise fails to show when the dislocation of the elbow occurred, or that a physician in the exercise of ordinary care and skill in treating plaintiff, should, under the circumstances shown, have discovered the dislocation and treated the same.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

29 Cal. App. 309

HILBORN v. SOALE et al. (Civ. 1776.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 3, 1916. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 2, 1916.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇐299—SUITS TO SET ASIDE—EVIDENCE.

In a judgment creditor's action to set aside a conveyance by a husband to his wife of his alleged interest in land purchased with the wife's money, and conveyed to the husband and wife as joint tenants with the right of survivor-ship, the trial judge was required to take into consideration all of the circumstances to determine therefrom the actual intent of the parties, though the testimony of the parties negatived any intention on the part of the wife to make a gift to the husband of an interest in the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 876–890; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃299.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1001—REVIEW OF QUESTIONS OF FACT—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

In such action a judgment setting aside the conveyance could not be disturbed if there was some substantial evidence upon which to found it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3922, 3928–3934; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃1001.]

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⊂⊃299 — TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A judgment setting aside a conveyance from the husband to the wife in a suit by the judgment creditor was supported by evidence, where the wife had determined to leave the title to th property in such form that the husband upon her death should secure her interest in it, as a gift of the joint interest was thereby effectuated beyond her power to recall it after the recovery of a judgment, and, if the gift had become effectual, there could be no return gift made by the husband which would have the effect of defeating the claims of creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 876–890; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃299.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1042—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON PLEADINGS.

In a judgment creditor's action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance from the judgment debtor to his wife, the complaint alleged the entire history of the transaction upon which the judgment was obtained, including a recitation of fraudulent acts committed by the judgment debtor. A motion to strike out these matters was denied. Held that, while it was not necessary to set out the history of the litigation or an abstract of the pleadings, these matters would have appeared upon the introduction of the judgment roll in evidence, and, though defendants admitted the entry of judgment, the technical error in the ruling was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4110–4114; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃1042.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Grace Hilborn against Carl B. Soale and husband. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. J. Fleming and S. L. Carpenter, both of Los Angeles, and Bennett & Cary, of Pasadena, for appellants. Frank L. Muhleman, Jones & Evans, and Earl T. Miller, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff, a judgment creditor of defendant Wilson H. Soale, instituted this action to have a certain deed and conveyance executed by said defendant to his codefendant declared null and void, as having been made without consideration and for the purpose of preventing satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment. The decree was rendered as prayed for, and both defendants appealed.

[1-3] In the year 1908 the appellants purchased certain real property in the county of Los Angeles, for which a consideration of $8,000 was paid; this money, so the evidence showed, being at the time of the investment the separate property of appellant Carl B. Soale, who is the wife of appellant Wilson H. Soale. A contract of purchase was first entered into on the part of these appellants as vendees, in which contract the amount of money mentioned was agreed to be paid as a consideration for the transfer, and the character of deed mentioned in this contract as required to be given was a "grant" deed. Both of these appellants signed the contract of purchase, and when the deed was made out it contained the recital that the grantors did "grant to Carl B. Soale and Wilson H. Soale, her husband, as joint tenants with the right of survivorship," the property of which a description followed. This deed was recorded on the 21st day of July, 1908, in the office of the county recorder. On August 6, 1912, judgment was rendered in favor of respondent herein against appellant Wilson H. Soale. On the following day, and before this judgment was entered so as to become a lien against real property standing in the name of said appellant, appellant Wilson H. Soale made his deed, which purported to transfer to his wife all of his interest in the real property. Respondent, his judgment creditor, upon the entry of her judgment, caused execution to issue and a levy to be made against the interest of her judgment debtor in the real property, and then brought this action to have the conveyance of Soale to his wife set aside. Appellants in their answer denied that Wilson H. Soale had any interest in the real property at all, and alleged that the same had been at all times subsequent to the purchase thereof the sole and separate property of Carl B. Soale. This issue was decided adversely to their claims, and the question is presented here as to whether the evidence heard was sufficient to sustain the judgment declared by the court. On behalf of respondent it is insisted that there is ample evidence to support the finding of the trial court that appellant Wilson H. Soale, at the time respondent obtained her judgment against him, held a joint tenant's interest in the property, which he had acquired by gift from his wife. This contention makes it necessary that the evidence be examined in detail. It must be admitted at the outset that, in so far as the express declarations of appellants. are shown to have been given in testimony, such declarations negative wholly the claim that there was an intention on the part of the wife to make a gift to her husband of an interest in the real property. The trial judge, however, in making up his conclusions, was required to take into consideration all of the circumstances surrounding the transaction and determine from them as to what the intent of the parties really was. Title Insurance, etc., Co. v. Ingersoll, 153 Cal. 1, 94 Pac. 94; Reed v. Reed, 135 Ill. 482, 25 N. E. 1095; Brunner v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 26 Cal. App. 35, 145 Pac. 741. And if upon this review it may be said that there was some substantial evidence upon which to found the judgment as entered, such judgment cannot be disturbed. As before mentioned, it appeared that both appellants signed the contract of purchase, and, in so far as their relation to that contract is concerned, it would appear to an unadvised third party that they were taking a joint ownership in the property. The wife testified that she gave no direction as to what form the deed was to take, and the husband, when asked regarding any direction which he gave affecting that matter, was stopped by an objection from his counsel, and this objection was sustained by the court. At any rate, it did appear that in the following year, about April, the wife, so she testified, learned of the condition of the deed as to its form, and knew that it made her husband the joint tenant in the property with herself. When asked whether, if plaintiff had not obtained a judgment against her husband, she would have required any change to be made in the deed, she expressed uncertainty, and left her testimony as to that particular subject to a fair inference to be drawn by the court that she would not have required any change to be made. At any rate, she testified that, when her husband told her of the fact that judgment had been obtained against him by this respondent, she requested him to make the deed to her, which he did immediately. It fairly appeared also that the appellants kept their bank account in a form so that it could be drawn from by either party. We have, then, it shown in proof that the appellants jointly engaged to purchase the real estate mentioned in the pleadings and that they received a deed by which their interests were declared to be joint, with right of survivorship. As to who gave the direction to have the deed made in this somewhat unusual form seems immaterial, because the wife, when she learned that it had been so made, raised no objection to it until three years had elapsed, and at the trial fairly intimated that she never would have objected to it had it not been that judgment was obtained against the husband. If she had determined to leave title to the property in such a form as that the husband upon her death should secure her interest in it, then we think a gift of the joint interest was effectuated beyond her power to afterwards, and after a judgment creditor had reduced a claim against her husband to judgment, recall. If the gift had become effectual, then there could be no return gift made by the husband which would have the effect of defeating the claims of his creditors. Taking all of the facts and circumstances shown in evidence, we think that it must be said that the judgment finds some support in proof, and that it should be affirmed.

[4] In respondent's complaint filed in this action she alleged as preliminary matter the entire history of the alleged transaction upon which she obtained her judgment, which included a recitation of fraudulent acts committed by the appellant Wilson H. Soale. A motion to strike out these matters was made and denied, and a bill of exceptions prepared to cover that ruling. Of course, the material thing to be shown by the respondent, the plaintiff, was that she occupied the relation of a judgment creditor. It was not necessary to set out the history of the litigation or an abstract of the pleadings of the action in which the judgment was obtained. Nevertheless, as respondent suggests, the introduction of the judgment roll on making proof of the judgment would have shown in substance the same matters which it was sought to have stricken out of her complaint in this action. The fact that appellants admitted the entry of judgment does not render any technical error of the court made by the ruling on the motion prejudicial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

29 Cal. App. 289

BAKERSFIELD & KERN ELECTRIC RY. CO. v. HAY et al. (Civ. 1934.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 31, 1915.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸108 — ORDINANCES — REFERENDUM—PETITIONS—SUFFICIENCY—"GENERAL ELECTION."

The words "general election," in the Bakersfield city charter adopted at November, 1914, election, which provides for referendum elections, and declares that a petition protesting against the passage of an ordinance shall be signed by electors of the city equal in number to 25 per cent. or more of the vote "cast at the last general election," refer, when the provision is considered in connection with other provisions of the charter relating to elections, to the last general municipal election, and, where no general municipal election has been held since the adoption of the charter, the question of the sufficiency of a referendum petition depends on the number of votes cast at the last general municipal election preceding the adoption of the charter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. ⟸108.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, General Election.]

Petition for writ of prohibition by the Bakersfield & Kern Electric Company against George W. Hay and others. Demurrer to petition sustained, and writ of prohibition denied.

Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, and Borton & Theile, of Bakersfield, for petitioner. E. F. Brittan and Walter Osborn, both of Bakersfield, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Prohibition. On the 20th day of September, 1915, the city council of the city of Bakersfield adopted an ordinance relating to the regulation and control of the operation of automobile busses within that city. Within 30 days thereafter there was filed with the city clerk an instrument protesting against the passage of the ordinance. This protest was signed by 880 electors of the city. The council, having declared this protest sufficient to require a referendum vote upon said ordinance, have ordered an election and referendum thereon to be held on the 11th day of January, 1916. The petitioner claims that the protest is insufficient to authorize such election or to cause a suspension of the ordinance, and in support of this claim alleges that the protest does not contain the names of a sufficient number of electors. The respondents have filed a general demurrer to the petition herein, and it has been stipulated that the case may be disposed of in accordance with our decision upon that demurrer.

The present charter of the city of Bakersfield was adopted by the electors of that city at an election held on the 7th day of November, 1914, and, after its approval by the Legislature, was filed with the secretary of state on January 23, 1915. Stats. 1915, p. 1552. Section 32 of the charter provides for referendum elections, and it is there required that a petition protesting against the passage of an ordinance must be "signed by electors of the city equal in number to twenty-five per centum or more, of the entire vote cast at the last general election." It is further provided that:

"The council shall submit the ordinance to the electors of the city either at the next general municipal election, or at a special election, and such ordinance shall not go into effect unless a majority of the electors voting on the same shall vote in favor thereof. The provisions of article VII respecting the forms and conditions of the petition and the mode of verification and certification and filing, and the ballot to be used, shall be substantially followed, with such modifications as the nature of the case may require."

The petitioner contends that the general election referred to in section 32 is the last general state election, and not the last general municipal election. It is conceded that, if the required number is to be tested by the vote cast at the last general municipal election, the number of signatures upon the protest was sufficient; and it is shown by appropriate allegation in the petition that the entire vote cast within the city of Bakersfield on the 3d day of November, 1914, at the general election held on said date, at which a Governor was elected, was 6046.

Section 67 of the charter is in article 7 relating to elections, and provides that within ten days after the charter shall have been ratified by the Legislature, and the necessary certified copies thereof have been filed and recorded, "the governing body of the city of Bakersfield shall call a nominating election and a general election, under the provisions of this charter, to elect officers as herein provided." The officers thus elected are to hold office until their successors are elected and qualified; and it is provided that "a general election shall be held on the second Tuesday of April of the year 1917, and each odd-numbered year thereafter," etc.

Reading together the several sections of the charter which have relation to the question at issue, we are satisfied that the words "general election," as contained in section 32, are there used in the same sense in which the same words are used in section 67, and that they refer to the last general municipal election.

The petition herein directs the court's attention to the fact that at the nominating election held on April 6, 1915, in the city of Bakersfield councilmen were elected in three of the seven wards of the city, that (except members of the board of education, as to which the district includes territory outside the city limits) no other officers than councilmen were required to be elected under the provisions of the charter, and that at the so-called general election held on May 7, 1915, no election was held in the said three wards. For this reason petitioner contends that there was no general election. Even if this were conceded, it would not aid the case of petitioner. If no general municipal election was held by the city of Bakersfield since the adoption of this charter, the test would relate back to the last general municipal election preceding the adoption of the charter. Petitioner does not deny that under such test the protest to which this petition refers would be found sufficient.

There is a general law entitled "An act to provide for direct legislation by cities and towns, including initiative and referendum." Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 131. Conceding that that act does not apply to the city of Bakersfield, counsel for petitioner argue that the referendum provisions of the city charter are modeled upon the terms of that statute, and that, notwithstanding some differences between the charter provision and the provisions of the statute, the court should apply the rule that one statute founded upon another is deemed, in so far as it follows the terms of the previous statute, to adopt also its meaning. The statute provides for referendum petitions which shall be signed by qualified electors of the city or town "equal to ten per cent of the entire vote cast therein for all candidates for Governor of the state at the last preceding general election at which a governor was voted for." The argument is not convincing. We have no evidence that the referendum provisions of the charter were drawn from those of the statute to which counsel refer; and, even if they were so derived, the failure to copy words distinctly defining the last preceding general election as a state election serves to indicate that the charter framers preferred that the protest against the adoption of an ordinance should be signed by at least 25 per cent. of the number of electors voting at the last general municipal election, rather than that the test should be 10 per cent. of the entire vote cast at a state election.

The demurrer is sustained, and the petition for writ of prohibition herein is denied.

29 Cal. App. 793

BAKERSFIELD & KERN ELECTRIC RY. CO. v. HAY et al. (Civ. 1933.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 31, 1915.)

Petition for writ of mandate by the Bakersfield & Kern Electric Railway Company against George W. Hay and others. Demurrer to petition sustained, and application for peremptory writ denied.

Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, and Borton & Theile, of Bakersfield, for petitioner. E. F. Brittan and Walter Osborn, both of Bakersfield, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In response to an alternative writ issued herein, the respondents have filed a general demurrer. The facts are the same and the questions presented for decision are the same as in Bakersfield & Kern Electric Railway Co. v. George W. Hay et al. (Civil No. 1934) 155 Pac. 132, petition for writ of prohibition, in which decision has been filed this day. For the reasons stated in the opinion filed in that case, the demurrer is sustained, and the application for peremptory writ of mandate herein is denied.

29 Cal. App. 52

JOHNSON v. DIXON FARMS CO. (Civ. 1382.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 27, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 26, 1916.)

1. SALES ⟸353—ACTION ON CONTRACT—COMPLAINT.

A complaint averring that plaintiff sold hay to defendant, and that defendant promised to pay the amount on given dates, but failed, states a cause of action on a contract of sale, without an averment of delivery for, as Civ. Code, § 1721, defines sale as a contract by which for a pecuniary consideration called a price one transfers an interest in property, delivery is not essential in all cases to the possession of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 995–1004; Dec. Dig. ⟸353.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Sale.]

2. JUDGMENT ⟸106—DEFAULT—ANSWER.

Where the complaint was verified, the answer, to state a defense, must, under Code Civ. Proc. § 446, also be verified, so where an unverified answer was filed, plaintiff is entitled to have it stricken on motion and default judgment entered, or, in the absence of an order striking the answer, to a judgment for want of an answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 160, 162, 180–197; Dec. Dig. ⟸106.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1170—REVERSAL—DISREGARD OF ERROR.

Where the original verified complaint stated a cause of action and plaintiff was entitled to judgment because the answer was not verified, error in allowing an amendment to the complaint is harmless and should be disregarded under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where the amount claimed in the amended petition was the same as that claimed in the original petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4032, 4066, 4075, 4098, 4101, 4454, 4540–4545; Dec. Dig. ⟸1170.]

4. SALES ⟸353—ACTION FOR PRICE—PLEADING.

As forms of action were abolished by Code Civ. Proc. § 307, and section 452 requires pleadings to be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice, a complaint, averring that plaintiff sold hay of given value to defendant, but the defendant defaulted in its agreement to pay on dates specified, states a cause of action for goods sold and delivered, though no delivery of the hay was averred, the common-law distinction between an action for goods bargained and sold and goods sold and delivered being abolished, and averments of sale implying a delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 995–1004; Dec. Dig. ⟸353.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Martin Johnson against the Dixon Farms Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in Supreme Court, 155 Pac. 136.

T. T. C. Gregory, Thomas A. Allen, and Dan Hadsell, all of San Francisco, for appellant. W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment on the judgment roll alone.

By the filing of a verified complaint, the plaintiff brought the action to recover from the defendant judgment for the sum of $609, alleged to be due the former from the latter by reason of a transaction which is stated in the complaint as it was originally filed as follows:

"That on or about the 1st day of December, 1913, plaintiff sold to said defendant fifty-three tons of hay at twelve dollars per ton, amounting to six hundred and nine dollars; that said defendant promised to pay said plaintiff the said amount as follows: One-half thereof to be paid on the 1st day of January, 1914, and one-half on the last day of January, 1914."

It is then alleged that the defendant "failed and neglected to pay said amount at said times, and that the said amount, and the whole thereof, still remains due, owing and unpaid."

The defendant demurred to the complaint on both general and special grounds. The special grounds of demurrer are that the complaint is uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible, because it does not appear therein, nor can it be told therefrom, whether the defendant was required to pay for the hay before or after delivery, or whether the hay has been delivered to the defendant, etc. The demurrer was overruled, and thereafter, in due time, the defendant filed an unverified answer or a general denial to the complaint.

The judgment recites that the defendant was not represented at the trial, but it is stipulated that, during the course of the trial (evidence having been taken), the plaintiff was permitted by the court to add to the charging part of the complaint, above quoted, the words, "and delivered," inserting said words therein immediately after and following the word "sold." By the addition so made, the complaint was made to read:

"That on or about the 1st day of December, 1913, the plaintiff sold and delivered to said defendant" the hay, etc.

A copy of the complaint as so altered or of the language added thereto as indicated was not served on the defendant or its counsel.

[1] The position of the defendant is that the action was intended as one for goods sold and delivered, but that the complaint failed to state such a cause of action because it omitted to allege that the goods alleged to have been sold had been delivered, and that therefore the demurrer should have been sustained. It is further contended that the alteration made in the complaint at the trial by inserting therein the words, "and delivered," so that a cause of action for goods sold and delivered was stated, constituted an amendment of that pleading, and that therefore it was, under the terms of section 432 of the Code of Civil Procedure, entitled to be served with a copy of such amendment or the complaint as amended, thus giving it the opportunity to which it is entitled by virtue of said section to exercise its right to answer or demur to the amendment or the complaint as amended within the ten days allowed thereby.

We can see no reason for doubting that the complaint, in its original draft, stated a cause of action on a contract of sale. A "sale" is defined by our Code to be "a contract by which, for a pecuniary consideration, called a price, one transfers an interest in property." Civ. Code, § 1721; 35 Cyc. 25. In other words, a sale is the transfer of the title to a thing from one to another for a consideration. Thus it is plain that a contract of sale and the title to personal property thereby transferred may be consummated without a delivery of the property to the vendee, the rule requiring the possession of such property to be delivered to the vendee to render the sale valid as against the creditors of the vendors being one of evidence only and in no way enters into the contract of sale as an element thereof, so far as the parties thereto are themselves concerned. It is hence very clear that the complaint, in its original draft, having alleged that the plaintiff sold the hay to the defendant, that the latter promised to pay for the same in two installments on specified dates, and that it defaulted in its promise so to pay, at the least stated a cause of action on the contract of sale so pleaded, and that, therefore, the demurrer was properly overruled.

[2] The complaint having been verified, it was necessary for the defendant, to have stated a defense to the cause of action set up in the complaint, to have filed a verified answer. Code Civ. Proc. § 446. This it failed to do, having, as seen, merely filed an unverified answer, and the "answer" so filed constituted no defense to the cause of action pleaded by the plaintiff. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to have the answer stricken out on motion and a judgment by default thereupon entered, or, in the absence of an order striking the answer out, to a "judgment for want of an answer." McCullough v. Clark, 41 Cal. 298; Hemme v. Hays, 55 Cal. 337; Hearst v. Hart, 128 Cal. 327, 328, 60 Pac. 846.

[3] Thus it is to be observed that the plaintiff, under his complaint as it was originally filed, was entitled to and properly awarded judgment for the sum for which he sued, and that by the alleged amendment of his complaint as indicated he could have obtained judgment for neither more nor less, nor, indeed, have obtained any different relief from that originally prayed for and which he finally received. In other words, he was admittedly entitled to judgment for the amount sued for on the contract of sale, whether the goods were or were not delivered. We cannot, therefore, perceive wherein the defendant could derive any benefit from a decision returning the cause to the court below for further proceedings, assuming that the alteration of the complaint in the respect shown may truly be said to have resulted in changing the cause of action or amounted to an amendment of the pleading in a material particular. Indeed, we are of the opinion that, in view of the peculiar state of the record in this cause, the appeal here should be considered and decided under the light and according to the spirit and intent of the recent amendment of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, for we cannot say that the order allowing the purported amendment of the complaint has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[4] But we may, we think, safely take another view of the question presented. While it would, of course, always be the better practice and responsive to the rules of good pleading, in an action for goods sold and delivered, to specifically and directly allege the fact of delivery as well as the fact of sale, we cannot bring ourselves to the belief that the fact of delivery is not necessarily implied from the averment that the hay was sold to the defendant, and therefore we think the complaint in this case, as it was originally drafted and filed, sufficiently stated a cause of action for goods sold and delivered.

A word or a phrase should be interpreted according to the connection in which it is used and the general purpose for which it is employed in particular instances. While in a contract of sale the phrase, "goods sold," might not necessarily imply that the goods had been delivered, it seems to us that delivery would necessarily be implied therefrom where the phrase is used in a pleading in an action to recover the price for which the goods were sold. As used in common parlance, the phrase, "goods sold," would be understood as goods sold and delivered to the buyer. And it is difficult to conceive a statement in a pleading, in an action to recover the price or consideration, that goods had been sold without, at the same time and as a part of the same concrete thought, conceiving the fact of the delivery of the possession of the chattel to the vendee, in whom the title thereto had been vested eo instanti upon the consummation of the sale. So, we are of the opinion that the allegation in the complaint that the plaintiff sold the hay to the defendant necessarily carried with it the implication that he delivered it to the defendant, and that this is sufficient as against the attack against the complaint upon any of the grounds set out in the demurrer. From this it would follow that the insertion of the words, "and delivered," in the complaint as above explained was unnecessary, and did not have the effect of adding anything to the complaint or changing the cause of action already pleaded.

Most assuredly, as counsel for the defendant maintain, under the old common-law system of pleading, as we find it expounded by Mr. Chitty and Mr. Stephens and other eminent juristic writers, the construction to which we feel justified in subjecting the complaint here would not be permissible. Under the common law, there were two different actions growing out of the sale of personal property, to wit: (1) An action for goods bargained and sold, where the goods had been sold but not delivered, and there had been a complete sale and the property in the commodity sold had become vested in the defendant, there having been an actual acceptance of the same by him; (2) an action for goods sold and delivered, in which case it was requisite to directly allege the delivery as well as the sale of the article. That system of pleading and procedure, however, required a literal observance of its rules and the slightest technical departure therefrom, either as to the form of the action or the pleading of the facts essential to the statement of a cause of action in a particular form, would leave the party without a standing in court. Form was, in other words, held paramount to substance under that system of pleading, procedure, and practice—so much so, indeed, that that notion finally became responsible for the development of the more liberal ideas which directly forced the invention of the more elastic legal actions of case and assumpsit and, indeed, the body of equitable remedies which now adorn the jurisprudence of all civilized countries.

But, under the reformed procedure, substance is no longer subordinated to form, and, under that system (in this state), there is but one form of civil actions for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress or prevention of private wrongs. Code Civ. Proc. § 307. And, as to the viewpoint from which pleadings shall be considered, the rule is that, in their construction, for the purpose of determining their effect, their allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice. Code Civ. Proc. § 452. Therefore, where, under the old common-law system, a pleading would crumble under the weight of a demurrer, under the advanced or reform system, which concerns itself more with substance, the same pleading might reasonably and justly be held sufficient to state a cause of action for the particular relief prayed for. So, measuring the scope of the complaint in this action by our own rules of pleading, we do not hesitate to say, as we have already declared, that from the averment that the plaintiff sold the hay to the defendant, the fact of delivery is implied, and this, while not the strictly proper manner of stating a case for goods sold and delivered, is, nevertheless, sufficient.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

29 Cal. App. 52

JOHNSON v. DIXON FARMS CO.

(Sac. 2476.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 26, 1916.)

COSTS ⟸260—FRIVOLOUS APPEAL—DAMAGES.

Where an appeal is manifestly destitute of merit and taken for delay, the appellant may be penalized by the imposition of damages for frivolous appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 983–996, 1002, 1003; Dec. Dig. ⟸260.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Martin Johnson against the Dixon Farms Company. A judgment for plaintiff being affirmed by the District Court of Appeal (155 Pac. 134), defendant moves for rehearing. Motion denied.

T. T. C. Gregory, Thomas A. Allen, and Dan Hadsell, all of San Francisco, for appellant. W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The application for a hearing of this cause in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District is denied.

In denying such application we deem it proper to say that the appeal was properly disposed of by the District Court of Appeal on the first ground stated in the opinion. What was said in support of a second ground for affirmance, commencing with "but we may, we think, safely take another view of the question presented," is not at all essential to the maintenance of the judgment of the District Court of Appeal, and while not intimating any view as to the correctness thereof, we do not desire to be understood by our denial of the application as approving the same. The appeal in this case was manifestly destitute of merit, and the District Court of Appeal would have been well warranted in penalizing appellant by the imposition of damages for a frivolous appeal, taken purely for delay, as asked by respondent's counsel in his brief.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.; MELVIN, J.

27 Cal. App. 498

PEOPLE v. KNOWLES. (Cr. 297.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 27, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, July 26, 1915.)

1. WITNESSES ⟸293½—PRIVILEGES AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION — STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Pen. Code, § 1324, as added by St. 1911, p. 485, providing that a person who is an offender may be compelled to be a witness and testify against another person for an offense of which both are guilty, and he shall not be exempt from prosecution for such offense where he testifies voluntarily or fails to ask to be excused from testifying on the ground that his testimony may incriminate himself, applies to a person who is believed to be implicated with third persons in a crime investigated by the grand jury, and he is within the protection of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1011; Dec. Dig. ⟸293½.]

2. WITNESSES ⟸297 — PRIVILEGES OF WITNESSES—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

A witness cannot, under Pen. Code, § 1324, as added by St. 1911, p. 485, refuse to testify in a criminal case, though his testimony may incriminate him, but, if he demands that he be excused on that ground, he is not liable thereafter to prosecution, and one objection to a question is sufficient to protect a witness from prosecution, but if he testifies voluntarily, or if he fails to ask to be excused from testifying, his testimony may be used against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1011, 1026–1037; Dec. Dig. ⟸297.]

3. WITNESSES ⟸293 — PRIVILEGES AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS—IMMUNITY FROM PROSECUTION.

Pen. Code, § 1324, as added by St. 1911, p. 485, declaring that a person who is himself an offender may be compelled to be a witness and give testimony against another for an offense of which both are guilty, but where he demands to be excused from testifying on the ground that his testimony may incriminate him his testimony shall not be used against him except for perjury, nor shall he be liable thereafter to prosecution for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given, gives complete immunity to a witness presenting a demand to be excused, and is therefore not violative of Const. art. 1, § 13, declaring that no one shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1009–1014; Dec. Dig. ⟸293.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸42 — IMMUNITY—SELF-INCRIMINATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A witness who was brought by subpœna before the grand jury, and sworn, and told what the offense was with which he and others were charged and about which the investigation was had, and that the grand jury could not compel him to testify, but that he could voluntarily make a statement, which could be used against him if detrimental to him, was not accorded the rights given by Pen. Code, § 1324, as added by St. 1911, p. 485, and an indictment against him, returned after he testified, will be quashed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 45–48; Dec. Dig. ⟸42.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

J. H. Knowles was indicted, and from an order granting a motion to dismiss after the jury had been impaneled and the cause was about to proceed, on the ground that the grand jury had not complied with the law, the People appeal. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in Supreme Court, 155 Pac. 140.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People. J. B. Curtin, of Sonora, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was indicted and brought to trial for the crime of bribery. After a jury had been impaneled and the cause was about to proceed, counsel for defendant moved the court to dismiss the action—

"upon the ground that the grand jury, finding the indictment, did not comply with section 1324 of the Penal Code. The Court: I think the objection made by counsel is well taken. I can see no escape from the result. Further proceedings are quashed in the matter, and the motion granted. Mr. Hardin (district attorney): I give notice under section 1240 that the people appeal from the order of the court. Mr. Curtin: The motion being granted, I now ask that the indictment be dismissed and the jury discharged. The Court: It is so ordered. Mr. Hardin: I want the appeal to apply to both of these—the order granting the motion and the order dismissing the indictment."

Before the indictment was found defendant was brought before the grand jury of Tuolumne county as a witness upon a subpœna. We quote from the bill of exceptions:

"Defendant now offers in evidence the records and proceedings before the grand jury at the time the indictment herein was found and returned against defendant, which record is as follows: 'J. H. Knowles, called, sworn, and examined, testified as follows: Mr. Hardin: Mr. Knowles, the grand jury at this time is investigating a charge, or into a matter that occurred in Jamestown here a few months ago, which affects to a certain extent Mr. V. A. Solari, yourself, and David Martinez, the investigation being of the alleged charge of offering to an officer a bribe and that officer receiving a bribe in connection with the granting to David Martinez of a liquor license. Now, then, of course, you being one of the parties mentioned in the investigation, why, the grand jury can't require or compel you to make any statement if you don't want to do it, but voluntarily you can make a statement, if you want to, but you can't be compelled to make a statement, but you can do so voluntarily. Of course, any statement made can be used against you, if it is detrimental to you. Now, in view of that, do you care to make any statement to the grand jury in reference to that matter? Mr. Knowles: I do.'

"For the purpose of shortening this transcript, it is admitted that Mr. Knowles, defendant herein, was then and there, as a witness under oath, examined by the district attorney and by several of the grand jurors as to all the matters and facts alleged in the indictment, and that his testimony was material to the inquiry then pending, and in which testimony said defendant detailed all the conversations and interviews he ever had with the Martinez Bros. and Supervisor Solari relative to the liquor license mentioned in the indictment herein."

It was conceded at the argument that the testimony given by the defendant did, in fact, incriminate himself as well as the others charged in the indictment, and was the testimony on which, in part, the indictment was found.

A motion was made by respondent to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the order is not appealable. We incline to the belief that the point is not well taken, but from our view of the case it is not necessary to decide it, since, conceding that the order was appealable, we are constrained to hold that whatever it may in effect be it must be affirmed.

[1] Section 1324 is a new section added to the Penal Code in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 485). It reads as follows:

"A person hereafter offending against any of the provisions of this Code, or against any law of this state, is a competent witness against any other person so offending, and may be compelled to attend and testify and produce any books, papers, contracts, agreements or documents upon any trial, hearing, proceeding or lawful investigation or judicial proceeding, in the same manner as any other person. If such person demands that he be excused from testifying or from producing such books, papers, contracts, agreements or documents on the ground that his testimony or that the production of such books, papers, contracts, agreements or documents may incriminate himself, he shall not be excused, but in that case the testimony so given and the books, papers, contracts, agreements and documents so produced shall not be used in any criminal prosecution or proceeding against the person so testifying, except for perjury in giving such testimony, and he shall not be liable thereafter to prosecution by indictment, information, or presentment, or to prosecution nor punishment for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given, or for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may have testified or produced evidence, documentary or otherwise.

"No such person shall be exempt from indictment, presentment by information, prosecution or punishment for the offense with reference to which he may have testified as aforesaid, or for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may have testified as aforesaid, or produced evidence, documentary or otherwise, where such person so testifying or so producing evidence, documentary or otherwise, does so voluntarily, or when such person so testifying or so producing evidence fails to ask to be excused from testifying or so producing evidence, on the ground that his testimony or such evidence, documentary or otherwise, may incriminate himself; but in all such cases, the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, so given may be used in any criminal prosecution or proceeding against the person so testifying or producing such evidence, documentary or otherwise.

"Any person shall be deemed to have asked to be excused from testifying or producing evidence, documentary or otherwise, under this section, unless before any testimony is given or evidence, documentary or otherwise, is produced by such a witness, the judge, foreman or other person presiding at such trial, hearing, proceeding or investigation, shall distinctly read this section of this Code to such witness, and the form of the objection by the witness shall be immaterial, if he in substance makes objection that his testimony or the production of such evidence, documentary or otherwise, may incriminate himself, and he shall not be obliged to object to each question, but one objection shall be sufficient to protect such witness from prosecution for any offense concerning which he may testify, or for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, upon such trial, hearing, proceeding or investigation."

Appellant contends, and by a rather ingenious course of reasoning endeavors to show, that the "section was intended to apply to a person who is a witness 'against any other person,'" and not to one who is himself charged with the offense being inquired into. We do not feel inclined to pursue appellant's argument on the point, for we think it is quite obvious that the section was intended to apply to just such a witness as we have here who was believed to be implicated with others in the crime being investigated. Appellant further contends that the notice given the witness by the district attorney was sufficient compliance with the statute; that his answer, after what the district attorney said to him, "had the effect of taking the case entirely away from the operation of section 1324, Penal Code"; that, when the reason for the rule ceases, "the rule is no more applicable than if it had ceased to exist."

[2] The true meaning and intent of this section may be expressed in much briefer form than as enacted.

The first paragraph declares that a person who is himself an offender may be compelled to be a witness and give testimony against another person for an offense of which both are guilty, and he shall not be excused from testifying on the ground that his testimony, might, even though he may demand to be excused, incriminate him, but in such case, except for perjury, his testimony shall not be used against him, nor shall he be liable thereafter to prosecution for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given.

The second paragraph declares that no such witness shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for such offense where he testifies voluntarily, or fails to ask to be excused from testifying on the ground that his testimony may incriminate himself, but his testimony so given may be used against him.

The third paragraph then provides that:

Such witness "shall be deemed to have asked to be excused from testifying * * * unless before any testimony is given * * * the judge, foreman or other person presiding at such trial, hearing, proceeding or investigation, shall distinctly read this section of this Code to such witness, and the form of the objection by the witness shall be immaterial, if he in substance makes objection that his testimony * * * may incriminate himself, and he shall not be obliged to object to each question, but one objection shall be sufficient to protect such witness from prosecution for any offense concerning which he may testify."

To paraphrase the section still more briefly, a witness can no longer refuse to testify in a criminal case, though his testimony may incriminate himself, but, if he demands that he be excused on that ground, he shall not be liable thereafter to prosecution. If, however, he testifies voluntarily, or if he fails to ask to be excused from testifying on the ground above stated, his testimony may be used against him. But he is deemed to have asked to be excused from testifying "under this section, unless before any testimony is given * * * the judge, foreman or other person presiding at such trial, hearing, proceeding or investigation, shall distinctly read this section of the Code to such witness." And one objection to a question shall be sufficient to protect such witness from prosecution.

[3] The Constitution provides that no person shall "be compelled in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself." Article 1, § 13. When, however, the statute gives the witness complete immunity from prosecution for the offense with reference to which his testimony is given, he cannot refuse to answer. Ex parte Clarke, 103 Cal. 352, 37 Pac. 230; Ex parte Cohen, 104 Cal. 524, 38 Pac. 364, 26 L. R. A. 423, 43 Am. St. Rep. 127; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110.

In the present case the statute gives complete immunity and is not violative of the Constitution. When the Legislature enacted this law, the protection given by the Constitution to a witness called upon to testify with reference to matters which might incriminate himself was, presumably, in its mind, and it was careful to provide with considerable particularity the proceeding by which a person may be compelled to testify against himself and under what circumstances he should enjoy complete immunity for thus serving the state and the cause of justice. It is perhaps not wide of the mark to say that the legislation was inspired by the conditions existing prior to its enactment, where there was a miscarriage of justice because of the constitutional shield given the witness who might believe that his testimony would implicate himself. There was no power to compel him in such case to testify, and no power to grant him immunity from prosecution if he did testify. In enacting this statute the Legislature pointed out the precise mode to be followed, which, if not followed, the witness was deemed to have asked to be excused from testifying, and his testimony was not to be used against him in any proceeding. Whether the section should be read to the witness by one of the persons mentioned in the section to perform that office, and not by any other person, whether it would satisfy the law if, for example, the district attorney should by direction of one of such mentioned persons read the section to the witness, or whether it would be sufficient if one of such persons, or the district attorney, should call attention to the section and state its provisions in substance, are questions we do not find it necessary to decide. We venture to suggest, however, that a very easy and simple thing to do is to read the section as it directs shall be done and thus avoid all question. The view taken by the Attorney General would cast upon the appellate court what might be sometimes a difficult duty of determining in each case by construction of the language that may happen to be used, whether, in effect, it substantially measured up to what the section required and gave the witness the information to which he was entitled. It must be admitted that the safer course would be to follow the direction given and read the section to the witness. However this may be, it seems quite clear to our minds that the essential provisions of the statute must be stated to the witness and stated correctly. For certainly a declaration that the witness is deemed excused unless the section —all of it—is distinctly read to him can mean no less than that all its substance must at least be told the witness.

[4] Now, what are the facts? The defendant was brought before the grand jury by a subpœna as a witness, and was sworn before anything was said to him. He did not appear voluntarily, and had he testified without having claimed his constitutional privilege, and had not been informed as to his rights, his testimony could not have been used against him. People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 60, 130 Pac. 1042, and cases there cited. The defendant was told what the offense was with which he and others were charged and about which the investigation was being made. He was then told the grand jury could not compel him to testify—a statement directly contrary to what the statute would have told him. He was told that he could voluntarily make a statement, and again told that he could not be compelled to do so. He was not told the very important provision of the statute that a statement voluntarily made could be used against him. What he was told was: "Of course, any statement made can be used against you if it is detrimental to you." Prior to the enactment of this section that might have been true. But in the broad sense as stated it is not now true. The district attorney probably meant to be understood as saying, but did not say it, that any statement made by him voluntarily could be used against him. He was not told that, if he failed to ask to be excused on the ground that his testimony might incriminate him, it could be used against him; nor was he told that he was deemed excused unless the section was read to him. In fact, all the district attorney told him was what his rights were before this section was enacted, but it fell far short of explaining to him his rights under the new section of the Penal Code. We do not think defendant was given that information which the statute intends should be given a witness called under the circumstances which surrounded the defendant at the time he was called as a witness.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. KNOWLES. (Cr. 1951.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1024—APPEALS BY PEOPLE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

An appeal by the people does not lie except in the cases specified in Pen. Code, § 1238, enumerating the cases in which an appeal may be taken by the people.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2599–2614; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃ 1024.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1024—APPEALS BY PEOPLE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

An order granting a motion to dismiss the prosecution of accused on the ground that the grand jury finding the indictment against him did not comply with Pen. Code, § 1324, relating to the immunity of witnesses against self-incrimination, is not appealable within section 1238, enumerating the cases in which the people may appeal, including the right to appeal from an order setting aside an indictment, where the motion to dismiss was made on the trial after issue joined on the merits, and was not based on any ground specified as cause for setting aside an indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2599–2916; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃ 1024.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

J. H. Knowles was indicted. From an order dismissing the prosecution, the People appealed to the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District; and from an order of affirmance, the People apply for a rehearing in the Supreme Court. Denied.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 155 Pac. 137.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People. J. B. Curtin, of Sonora, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District is denied. In denying the application we deem it proper to say that we do not express or intimate any opinion as to the correctness of the views expressed by the District Court of Appeal as to the effect of section 1324, Penal Code, under the circumstances of this case as the same are shown by the opinion.

[1, 2] It is apparent to us that the appeal should have been dismissed on the ground that the order appealed from was not an appealable order. The cases in which an appeal may be taken by the people are specifically set forth in section 1238, Penal Code, and it is well settled that such an appeal will not lie except in a case so specified. The order here appealed from was both in form and in substance and effect one dismissing the action against this defendant. The only subdivision of section 1238, Penal Code, that could by any possibility be suggested as including the order before us is subdivision 1, which provides that an appeal may be taken by the people "from an order setting aside the indictment or information." As we have said, the order under consideration here was one granting a motion to dismiss the action. The motion therefor was made on the trial, after issue joined on the merits by plea of not guilty, and was not based on any ground specified in our law as cause for setting aside an indictment, but was designed solely to prevent the further prosecution of the action for the reason stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal. The order here made was based solely on the ground specified in the motion. The appeal here cannot be held to be an appeal from an order setting aside an indictment within the meaning of subdivision 1 of section 1238, Penal Code. The superior court had the power to dismiss the action, and, the Legislature having restricted the right of appeal by the people to certain specified cases of which this is not one, there can be no review of its action. The case is like many others under our law, one in which the superior court is the ultimate tribunal as long as it does not exceed its jurisdiction, and where error in the exercise of its jurisdiction may not be reviewed by any other tribunal.

As the practical effect of a dismissal of the appeal is the same as the affirmance of the order appealed from, and as any expression of views as to the statute discussed in the opinion as applied to the circumstances of this case would be obiter, no reason appears why the application for a hearing in this court should be granted.

⊂⊃For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

27 Cal. App. 508

PEOPLE v. ANTONETTI. (Cr. 299.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 27, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, July 26, 1915.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Carlo Antonetti was indicted, and from an order of dismissal, the People appeal. Affirmed. Rehearing denied in Supreme Court 155 Pac. 141.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People. J. C. Webster, of Sonora, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was jointly indicted with one J. Ruffino for having unlawfully sold intoxicating liquor in violation of the local option law. Ruffino was found guilty, and judgment entered that he pay a fine of $150 or be imprisoned in the county jail for one day for each $2 of said fine. He paid the fine and was discharged. When Antonetti was called for trial he moved that the action be dismissed on the same ground as was urged in the case of People v. Knowles (Crim. No. 297) 155 Pac. 137, this day decided.

It appears from the bill of exceptions that defendant was subpœnaed to appear before the grand jury of Tuolumne county. We quote from the bill of exceptions: "Carlo Antonetti, called, sworn, and examined, testified as follows: Mr. Hardin: Mr. Antonetti, the grand jury are at this time considering the alleged charge, a charge against you for the sale and delivery of liquors within the Third supervisorial district in violation of what is known as the local option law, and testimony has been placed in here to that effect, delivering liquors at your place of business to parties there, and conducting a room whereby other parties could go and drink liquors upon the premises. Now, the grand jury can't require of you any testimony whatever, as you are one of the parties, one of the defendants named, and can't compel you to make any statement, and any statement you might make, of course, would be free and voluntarily made, and could be used against you if detrimental to you, but the grand jury at this time are desirous of giving you an opportunity of making a statement, if you desire to. In view of this, do you wish to make any statement in connection with this matter? A. I never did sell anything. Q. To get this settled first, do you wish to say anything? The grand jury can't compel you to say anything unless you want to. Do you want to make a statement in connection with this matter? A. I don't got nothing to do with the wine nor nothing else. I be only a partner running the boarding house. I never sell any wine, nothing of the kind. Q. Do you wish to make a statement to that effect—your connection with the business? A. I haven't got nothing to do with the wine, anything of the kind. Q. Do you want to make a statement to that effect to the grand jury? A. Yes."

He was then examined at great length, and, concededly, his testimony was used as the basis for the indictment against him.

In all essential particulars the case does not differ from People v. Knowles, and the questions presented are the same.

Upon the authority of that case, the order is affirmed.

27 Cal. App. 508

PEOPLE v. ANTONETTI. (Cr. 1953.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1915.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Carlo Antonetti was indicted, and the People applied to the Supreme Court for a hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal affirming an order of dismissal. Denied.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 155 Pac. 141.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People. J. C. Webster, of Sonora, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District is denied, for the reasons stated in our opinion filed in denying such a petition in the case of People v. Knowles, (Crim. No. 1951) 155 Pac. 140.

27 Cal. App. 510

PEOPLE v. SOLARI. (Cr. 300.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 27, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 26, 1915.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

V. A. Solari was indicted, and from an order of dismissal, the People appeal. Affirmed. Rehearing denied in Supreme Court, 155 Pac. 141.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People. J. C. Campbell, of San Francisco, and J. C. Webster, of Sonora, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was indicted for the same crime involved in People v. Knowles (Crim. No. 297) 155 Pac. 137, this day decided. When the case came on for trial defendant moved to dismiss the indictment on the same ground urged in the Knowles Case, and a like order was made as in that case. The people appeal from the order.

Solari was brought before the grand jury as a witness by subpœna, as was Knowles, and after he was sworn the district attorney made a statement to the witness substantially the same as he made to Knowles, to which he replied: "I am willing to make a statement." Then follows his testimony, comprising some 30 odd pages of the transcript, and it is admitted that the indictment was based upon this testimony, at least in part.

Upon the authority of the decision in People v. Knowles (Crim. No. 297) 155 Pac. 137, the order is affirmed.

27 Cal. App. 510

PEOPLE v. SOLARI. (Cr. 1954.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1915.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

V. A. Solari was indicted for crime, and the People applied to the Supreme Court for a hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal affirming an order of dismissal. Denied.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 155 Pac. 141.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People. J. C. Campbell, of San Francisco, and J. C. Webster, of Sonora, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District is denied, for the reasons stated in our opinion filed in denying such a petition in the case of People v. Knowles (Crim. No. 1951) 155 Pac. 140.

27 Cal. App. 507

PEOPLE v. BIGELOW. (Cr. 298.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 27, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 26, 1915.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

J. O. Bigelow was indicted for crime, and from an order of dismissal, the People appeal. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in Supreme Court, 155 Pac. 142.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People. J. C. Webster and F. P. Otis, both of Sonora, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was indicted for having violated the local option law. Before the indictment was found he was subpœnaed to appear as a witness before the grand jury, as in the case of People v. Knowles (Crim. No. 297) 155 Pac. 137, this day decided. When before the grand jury the district attorney informed him of the nature of the charge against him then under investigation, to which he added: "Now, of course, the grand jury can't require of you any testimony being you are an interested party, or compel you to testify; they can simply give you an opportunity to explain this matter away, if you wish. Of course, any testimony you give is really considered a free and voluntary statement on your part, and not compulsory, and if any testimony is given it can be used against you if it is detrimental in any manner. Now, with this statement, do you wish to make a statement in connection with this matter? Mr. Bigelow: I would like to; I would be willing to." His testimony then follows, and was used in finding the indictment.

When brought to trial defendant made a motion to dismiss the indictment and discharge defendant, upon the ground stated in People v. Knowles, and the court granted the motion. The appeal is from this order and presents the same questions involved in People v. Knowles. If there is any substantial difference between that case and the present one, it tends to strengthen the view we have taken in the Knowles Case and to confirm the opinion we have felt constrained to express.

The order is affirmed.

27 Cal. App. 507

PEOPLE v. BIGELOW. (Cr. 1952.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 26, 1915.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

J. O. Bigelow was indicted, and the People applied to the Supreme Court for a hearing after a decision by the District Court of Appeal affirming an order of dismissal. Denied.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 155 Pac. 141.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People. J. C. Webster and F. P. Otis, both of Sonora, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third District is denied, for the reasons stated in our opinion filed in denying such a petition in the case of People v. Knowles (Crim. No. 1951) 155 Pac. 140.

28 Cal. App. 761

PEOPLE v. RICHMAN. (Cr. 418.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 12, 1915. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 10, 1916.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸393—IMMUNITY—NONINCRIMINATING TESTIMONY—STATUTES.

Pen. Code, § 1324—providing that an offender may be compelled to testify against another like offender, provided that if he demands to be excused from testifying, on the ground that his testimony may incriminate him (which he shall be deemed to do unless the section is read to him), he shall not be liable to prosecution for the offense or any transaction relative to which he testifies, but that he shall not be exempt from such prosecution, where he testifies voluntarily—is designed to enable testimony of persons implicated in a crime to be obtained without violating Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself; and therefore his testimony, if not incriminating himself, does not prevent his prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 871–874; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 393.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸393—SELF-INCRIMINATION.

Statement in a stipulation, on motion to dismiss information against defendant for participation in a fight, that he on prosecution of another for participation therein testified "as to matters and things concerning" it, and was "required to and did testify concerning it," does not show his testimony incriminated himself, so as to prevent, under Pen. Code, § 1324, his prosecution therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 871–874; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 393.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

E. Richman was convicted, and appeals. Affirmed.

Wright & Winnek, of San Diego, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Appellant was, by an information filed in the superior court of San Diego county, charged jointly with Richard Richman with having committed the crime of assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of Daniel W. Johnson. The assault was alleged to have been committed on or about the 24th day of October, 1914. At the trial the jury returned verdicts finding Richard Richman not guilty and finding E. Richman guilty of having committed a simple assault. Upon this verdict appellant was sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment in the county jail. This appeal was taken from the judgment.

Appellant contends that because he was called and examined before another court concerning matters affecting the transaction set forth in the information in this case, without having first had read to him section 1324 of the Penal Code, no further proceedings could be taken against him, and that the court was without authority to pronounce the judgment as entered. This proposition was urged in the court below, first upon a motion to dismiss the proceedings, and later by request for an instruction to be given to the jury. It appears from the record as presented by the reporter's transcript that the Richmans, who were father and son, and Johnson, the complainant in this case, had some dispute concerning their rights to use water from a pumping plant. On October 24th an altercation occurred which resulted in physical force being resorted to between the parties. This prosecution was thereupon instituted, and later Richard Richman caused to be filed a complaint in the justices' court charging Johnson with a similar crime as that which the latter had preferred against him. The hearing on the charge so preferred by Richman came on before the justice of the peace, and the two Richmans were called as witnesses and testified at that examination. On March 27, 1915, after the information was filed in this case and the defendants had entered their pleas thereto, the defendants presented a motion to dismiss. The ruling of the court was adverse to them. In the minute order in which was recorded the facts as to the hearing on the motion was contained the following recitation:

"Come the people by H. V. Mather, Esq., deputy district attorney, and come the defendants herein by counsel, Leroy A. Wright, Esq., and it is stipulated in open court that subsequent to October 24, 1914, the day on which the fight occurred between defendants and Daniel W. Johnson, the defendants E. Richman and Richard Richman were examined by deputy district attorney of San Diego county in the case of the People of the State of California, Plaintiff, v. Daniel W. Johnson, charged with assault upon E. Richman and Richard Richman, and that at said preliminary hearing an inquiry was being conducted as to the fight that occurred on October 24, 1914. That both of the defendants in the above-entitled case were examined by the district attorney as to the matters and things concerning said fight and said defendants were required to and did testify concerning the same. That prior to the defendants being sworn and prior to their testifying section 1324 of the Penal Code of the state of California was not read to them, nor was its substance stated to them, and without said section being read or its substance stated to said defendants they and each of them did voluntarily testify concerning the offense for which they are prosecuted in this case. That said testimony was given on the 9th day of February, 1914."

[1, 2] Section 1324 of the Penal Code, the provisions of which were relied upon by the appellant to support his motion to dismiss, provides that a person offending against any of the provisions of the Penal Code, or other law of the state, is a competent witness against any other person so offending; that he may be compelled to attend and testify at any trial or other judicial proceeding in the same manner as any other person, with the proviso that, if such witness demands that he be excused from testifying on the ground that his testimony may incriminate him, he shall not be excused, but in that case the testimony so given shall not be used in any criminal prosecution or proceeding against the person testifying, except for perjury in giving such testimony, and "he shall not be liable thereafter to prosecution nor punishment for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given, or for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may have testified or produced evidence, documentary or otherwise." The section then proceeds to provide that no person shall be exempt from prosecution for the offense with reference to which he may testify, or for or on account of any transaction concerning which he may have testified, where he does so voluntarily, or where he fails to ask to be excused from testifying, "on the ground that his testimony or such evidence, documentary or otherwise, may incriminate himself, but in all such cases, the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, so given may be used in any criminal prosecution or proceeding against the person so testifying or producing such evidence." This provision then follows:

"Any person shall be deemed to have asked to be excused from testifying or producing evidence, documentary or otherwise, under this section, unless before any testimony is given or evidence, documentary or otherwise, is produced by such a witness, the judge, foreman or other person presiding at such trial, hearing, proceeding or investigation, shall distinctly read this section of this code to such witness. * * *"

The whole purpose of this enactment seems to have been to enable prosecuting officers to obtain the testimony of persons implicated in a criminal transaction. Under the provisions of section 13, art. 1, of the Constitution, no person may be compelled to give testimony against himself. The protective force of the constitutional provision applied to cases where the testimony sought from a party involved in a criminal transaction may tend in some way to fasten the crime upon him. In order to furnish a means by which testimony of an interested party, even though it might tend to incriminate him, might be obtained in aid of the prosecution of other persons, the Legislature has provided that such testimony may be compelled, but that when it is extracted in this mandatory way the person giving the self-incriminating testimony may not be subjected to prosecution for the offense concerning which he has furnished evidence against himself. Under the construction which we feel impelled to give to the provisions of the section, it would seem that, in order to make the objection presented by the appellant available and of force, it must be shown that the testimony given by the appellant at the preliminary examination of Johnson was of an incriminating nature. Aside from the reference found in the minute order hereinbefore quoted, as to the nature of the testimony so given, there is nothing in the entire transcript which shows what the testimony, if any, of appellant, as given before the committing magistrate in the Johnson Case, was, either in detail or substance. The son, Richard Richman, testified that he and his father were called in that case to the witness stand, and that he (Richard Richman) testified therein. The record of the trial is wholly silent as to whether this appellant gave any testimony at all at that preliminary examination. So we revert to the contents of the minute order for the purpose of determining this question. In that order it is recited that the district attorney stipulated that at the preliminary examination of Johnson this appellant was examined "as to matters and things concerning said fight, and said defendants were required to and did testify concerning the same," and that section 1324 of the Penal Code was not read to them, nor its substance stated. It should be remembered that the prosecution at no time offered in this trial any of the testimony alleged to have been given by the appellant at the preliminary examination of Johnson. So we are left to determine only as to whether, where a person testifies relative to occurrences which are concerned in the matter of a criminal charge pending against him, he is, because of that fact alone and regardless of the character of his testimony so given, thereafter exempt from any prosecution growing out of any occurrence about which he has testified, unless before giving his testimony he has read or stated to him what is provided by section 1324 of the Penal Code. At the outset in this opinion we have suggested what we conceive to be the true design out of which section 1324 of the Penal Code was originated; that was, to enable testimony of an interested party to be secured without violating the constitutional provision which gives to every person the right to refuse to incriminate himself by his testimony. If no incriminating testimony is given, then, of course, the constitutional provision is not violated; neither should any exemption from prosecution follow in favor of a person who has not so been compelled to furnish evidence against himself. The mere statement in the stipulation that the appellant testified before the magistrate "as to matters and things concerning said fight, and said defendants were required to and did testify concerning the same," in no wise warrants the conclusion that the testimony so given was of an incriminating nature. The likelihood is that, if we may indulge in speculation, the testimony given was entirely exculpatory of any offense committed on the part of appellant. Appellant has cited the case of People v. Knowles, 155 Pac. 137. Nothing is said in that decision which is out of harmony with the views that we have herein expressed. We may call attention to one paragraph in the opinion:

"It was conceded at the argument that the testimony given by the defendant did in fact incriminate himself, as well as the others charged in the indictment, and was the testimony on which, in part, the indictment was founded."

In the case now under review the condition of fact which was presented in the Knowles Case, and which we deem most material to give point to appellant's contention, was entirely wanting.

For the reasons given, it is ordered that the judgment be, and it is, affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

172 Cal. 102

BUSH v. ALLEN. (L. A. 3515.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1916.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸612 — RECORD — TRANSCRIPT OF EVIDENCE.

A party expecting to appeal under the alternative method prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 941a et seq., and have his record prepared according to the procedure prescribed must see to it that the official phonographic reporter is present at the trial, in order that a transcript of the evidence and proceedings may be furnished, and the judge may refuse to affix his signature on the ground that there was no phonographic report of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2694–2701; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 612.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸671 — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—RECORD.

Where the transcript under the clerk's signature alone is in the record on appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 941a et seq., the court may consider only the judgment roll.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2867–2872; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 671.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by George M. Bush against Nellie G. Allen, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Works & Jordan and Eugene D. Williams, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Shaw & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought his action to quiet title. Defendant answered and cross-complained, asserting title in herself. The court found the allegations of the complaint to be true and the allegations of the answer to be untrue, and gave its decree quieting title in favor of plaintiff. From that judgment defendant gave notice of appeal, and attempted to appeal pursuant to the provisions of section 941a et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. The clerk prepared the transcript, consisting of the judgment roll, stipulations of facts, and certain exhibits.

There was no certificate of the judge, as contemplated and required by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon appellant's attention being called to this fact in the brief of respondent on appeal, appellant sought and obtained an order of this court authorizing the trial judge to affix his certificate to the transcript in so far as he found it correct.

[1] Upon application to the trial judge so to affix his certificate, objection was made by respondent, upon the ground that there was no phonographic report of the trial, and that the judge's certificate is properly affixed only when there is a phonographic reporter present at the trial, and that phonographic reporter has prepared his transcript of the evidence and proceedings in accordance with law. Such is the settled law upon this matter of procedure. Totten v. Barlow, 165 Cal. 378, 132 Pac. 749. The judge thereupon refused to affix his certificate, basing his refusal upon the ground indicated. Thereupon an application for mandate was made to the Court of Appeals to compel him so to do. The matter was there heard on demurrer to plaintiff's petition, setting up the foregoing facts. The Court of Appeals held that:

"If a party to an action expects to take his appeal under the alternative method and have his record prepared according to the procedure affecting that method, then he must see to it that the official phonographic reporter is present at the trial in order that a transcript of the evidence and proceedings may be furnished by the one officer whose duty it is to prepare it."

The application for mandate was denied. Allen v. Conrey, 22 Cal. App. 409, 134 Pac. 730.

[2] Under the law of the case thus made we have before us a transcript under the clerk's certificate alone and are empowered to consider only the judgment roll. No error appears upon the face of the judgment roll. Indeed it is not contended that there is any such error, and the judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J ; LORIGAN, J.

(172 Cal. 98)

BARLOW v. BARNES. (L. A. 3624.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1916.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸341—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS—CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

A cause of action for criminal conversation may exist independent of a cause of action for alienation of affections; it being immaterial whether the husband's marital rights were invaded with his wife's consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1128; Dec. Dig. ⟸341.]

2. EVIDENCE ⟸215—LETTERS.

In an action for alienation of affections and criminal conversation, letters which it was claimed were sent by plaintiff's wife to defendant are not admissible in evidence, where it was established that they did not reach him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 754–759; Dec. Dig. ⟸215.]

3. PLEADING ⟸381—ISSUES AND PROOF.

Where irrelevant averments were not stricken from the answer, defendant was entitled to introduce evidence in support of them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1238, 1253–1279; Dec. Dig. ⟸381.]

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸333, 348—CRIMINAL CONVERSATION—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for alienation of affections and criminal conversation with plaintiff's wife, where it was alleged the acts occurred in the daytime, evidence that plaintiff frequently gambled all night on the circus train upon which he, defendant, and his wife rode, is admissible as bearing on the conduct and relationship of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 1124, 1132, 1133; Dec. Dig. ⟸333, 348.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸926—REVIEW—PRESUMPTION.

Where all the evidence was not brought up, the admission of evidence will, under the rule that every intendment is in favor of the regularity of the procedure in the lower court, be presumed justified by reason of the admission of other evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1279, 2899, 3729, 3730, 3735–3747; Dec. Dig. ⟸926.]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1056 — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action for alienation of affections and criminal conversation, the rejection of evidence as to defendant's wealth, if erroneous, was harmless, where verdict was for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4187–4193, 4207; Dec. Dig. ⟸1056.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Fred A. Barlow against Al. G. Barnes. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Murphey & Poplin, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Leo V. Youngworth and Horace S. Wilson, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. [1] Plaintiff sued defendant, charging upon two separate causes of action. The first prayed damages for the alienation of the affections of plaintiff's wife. The second prayed damages for defendant's criminal intercourse with her. The gravamina of these two actions are, of course, essentially different. A cause of action for alienation of affection may exist where there has been no criminal conversation, and, upon the other hand, where criminal conversation is the basis of a right of action, alienation of the wife's affection is not a necessary element of the offense. "Her sexual intercourse with another is an invasion of his rights, and it is immaterial whether this invasion was obtained by force or by the consent of the wife." Bedan v. Turney, 99 Cal. 653, 34 Pac. 442; Colwell v. Tinker, 169 N. Y. 531, 62 N. E. 668, 58 L. R. A. 765, 98 Am. St. Rep. 587;

Evans v. O'Connor, 174 Mass. 287, 54 N. E. 557, 75 Am. St. Rep. 316.

[2] Trial was had before a jury, which rendered its verdict in favor of defendant. He had answered by denial of the matters charged in the complaint, which, in addition to those above indicated, were that defendant, the owner of a circus traveling about the country, had induced plaintiff and his wife to go with them, and had induced plaintiff to accept employment under him, to the end that he might the more conveniently accomplish his corrupt design. Defendant further affirmatively alleged that plaintiff is the brother of his (defendant's) wife; that defendant is a part owner in the circus; that through the importunities of his wife he was induced to grant to her brother the concession to sell peanuts in and around the circus; that plaintiff thus joined the circus, accompanied by his wife; that plaintiff is a ne'er-do-well and a gambler, and does not support himself nor his wife; they have been supported by defendant's wife; that an estrangement had sprung up between defendant and his own wife; and that defendant's wife instigated her brother, plaintiff herein, to make these groundless charges and institute this trumped-up action against him. Trial was had upon these pleadings. Plaintiff offered in evidence three letters addressed to George Alphaeus. Defendant's name is Alphaeus George Barnes Stonehouse. These letters were placed in the United States post office at Klamath Falls, Or., postage prepaid, addressed to George Alphaeus at different towns where, it is said, his circus was by the writer of the letters thought to be. Admittedly these letters were never delivered, but were returned to the writer at Klamath Falls, where they had been posted. These letters the court refused, under objection, to admit in evidence. Its ruling was proper. There was not only no evidence that the letters were received by the defendant, but there was positive evidence that they were not received. Making no account of the minor objections advanced by respondent in support of the court's ruling, as that the handwriting was not shown to be that of plaintiff's wife, and the addressee of the letters was not shown to be the defendant, upon broader ground the letters were not entitled to admission. Not having been received by defendant nor in any way assented to or acted upon by him, they amounted, at the most, but to the utterances of the wife, not to, but concerning, her absent lover. They had no more legal competency against the defendant than her declarations to her husband not made in the presence of the defendant would have had. They were not admissible under section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Humphrey v. Pope, 1 Cal. App. 374, 82 Pac. 223. The case is quite different from that presented by Dalton v. Dregge, 99 Mich. 250, 58 N. W. 57, where letters written by the wife and received by the defendant were admitted in evidence, as the court points out, under circumstances refuting any presumption of collusion between the wife and the husband.

[3-5] The court permitted inquiries of the witnesses touching plaintiff's habits of gambling—of playing poker all night on the train when the circus was in transit, as often as two or three nights a week. It is urged that the character and the habits of the husband, where no consent to the wife's infidelity is shown, have no place before the jury as a defense to the action. 8 Cyc. p. 270, and notes. But defendant had alleged these very matters in his answer. No motion had been made to strike them out. The evidence, moreover, had specific bearing upon the conduct and relationship of the parties upon the circus train and in the car, where it appears plaintiff sought to prove that these illicit acts of intercourse by defendant with his wife were committed, and committed in the daytime. And finally upon this point it may be said that appellant has not brought up all the evidence for review, but has asked us to consider merely certain specific rulings of the court in admitting and rejecting evidence. Every intendment being in favor of the regularity of the court's procedure, it will, if necessary, be inferred that other evidentiary matters in the case made this particular evidence pertinent, competent, and admissible.

[6] The final point made by appellant is that the court erred in sustaining the defendant's objection to the attempt of plaintiff to show defendant's wealth. We need not enter into a consideration of this matter. That consideration could only be of value to plaintiff in the event that he was entitled to a verdict from the jury. But, as he has shown no reason why the verdict of the jury given against him should be disturbed, the objection becomes absolutely inconsequential upon this appeal.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

178 Cal. 76

SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY v. STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (L. A. 3545.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1916.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐967—TAXATION—CAR COMPANIES OPERATING IN STATE—PROPERTY EXEMPT FROM LOCAL TAXATION.

Property of a car company operating in the state, consisting of land and a manufacturing pre-cooling and repairing plant, located thereon, with railroad tracks and other incidents necessary thereto, all of which is used in the conduct of its business, is exempt from local taxation under Const. art. 13, § 14, par. A, providing that taxes therein provided for shall be entirely for the state, and in lieu of all other taxes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2062–2067; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃967.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃967—TAXATION—EXEMPTIONS—CAR COMPANIES—"OPERATIVE PROPERTY."

Such property is "operative property," and therefore exempt within St. 1911, p. 534, § 8, defining operative property and exempting it from local taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2062–2067; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃967.]

3. TAXATION ⊂⊃200 — CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS — SUBSTITUTION OF TAXES—"EXEMPTION."

The provision in Const. art. 13, § 14, par. A, in St. 1911, p. 530, for taxing property of a corporation by collecting a percentage of their gross earnings, is not an "exemption" from taxation, but is merely a change in the method thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 319; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃200.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Exemption.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃967—TAXATION—EXEMPTIONS.

The words in Const. art. 13, § 14, par. A, and St. 1911, p. 530, relieving public service and certain other corporations from local taxation, must be given fair and reasonable interpretation, without any definite leaning to the side of the taxing power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2062–2067; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃967.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃967—TAXATION—"OTHER PROPERTY"—EXEMPTIONS.

The words "other property," in Const. art. 13, § 14, and St. 1911, p. 530, providing for taxation of certain property, are not limited, under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, to a previous enumeration of specific things, but are to be construed with respect to the use that is made of such other property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2062–2067; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃967.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Other.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by the County of San Bernardino against the State Board of Equalization of the State of California and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. B. Goodcell, of San Bernardino, for appellant. Henley C. Booth, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. The state board of equalization held that certain property of the Pacific Fruit Express Company, located at Colton and comprising a "pre-cooling plant," was exempt from local taxation because of the provisions of section 14, art. 13, of the Constitution of this state. Being dissatisfied with the decision of the board the authorities of San Bernardino county decided to test the correctness of the conclusion reached by the equalizers, and the result was this action, founded upon an agreed statement of facts, pursuant to the provisions of section 1138 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The superior court sustained the action of the state board of equalization, holding the property not subject to local taxation, and this appeal is from the judgment.

By the agreed statement of facts it appears that the Pacific Fruit Express Company comes within the meaning of paragraph A, § 14, art. 13, of the Constitution and of the act approved April 1, 1911, providing for the separation of state from local taxation (Stats. 1911, p. 530), and that said company, being a car company operating in this state, pays 3 per centum of its gross receipts as prescribed by that act. From the statement we also learn that the express company prepares and operates cars of its own, and that under a contract with the Southern Pacific Company it agrees, for certain considerations, to supply the railroad company refrigeration and refrigerator cars as the said Southern Pacific Company may require. The property sought to be submitted to local taxation belongs to the Pacific Fruit Express Company, and consists of land, and a manufacturing, pre-cooling, and repairing plant located thereon, which, with the personal property therein contained, is used by the said express company for the following purposes:

"The manufacture of ice for the icing and re-icing of refrigerator cars containing perishable commodities transported by Southern Pacific Company; the pre-cooling of perishable commodities in cars owned by said Pacific Fruit Express Company for the purpose of putting such commodities into proper condition to be transported over the rails of said Southern Pacific Company; the repair of cars used for the transportation of perishable commodities and belonging to said Pacific Fruit Express Company; the tracks necessary to and which do connect said plant with the railroad of said Southern Pacific Company; said services of icing, re-icing, pre-cooling, and repairing—were and are all done and performed by said Pacific Fruit Express Company in the carrying out of its contract with said Southern Pacific Company."

[1, 2] The sole question before us, therefore, is whether in contemplation of law the property described in the quotation above is "operative property." Section 8 of the statute of 1911, to which reference is made above, defines "operative property" which is exempted from local taxation by the terms of the act. In the case of express companies this includes the franchises, cars, trucks, wagons, horses, harness, and safes, and in the case of refrigerator car companies the definition covers the franchises, cars, and other rolling stock. But section 8 of the act also contains the following language:

"Provided, that the operative property of the companies enumerated in this section, shall also include any other property not above enumerated that may be reasonably necessary for use by said companies exclusively in the operation and conduct of the particular kinds of business enumerated in section two of this act."

This is merely the legislative definition of the "other property" specified in the constitutional provision under which the statute was passed. Even without the statute the expression in the Constitution would sustain this judgment. That the property here described comes within this definition we are fully persuaded.

[3] Appellant's counsel insists that the statute of 1911 is one providing for an exemption of property from taxation, and that therefore it should be strictly construed. But the constitutional and statutory provisions for taxing the property of certain corporations by collecting a per centum of their gross earnings is not an exemption. It is merely a change in the method of taxation. We need not here discuss this matter elaborately, because the origin and purpose of such taxes have been fully considered by this court in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Henshaw, in Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Roberts, 168 Cal. 423, 143 Pac. 700.

[4] The words relieving public service and certain other corporations from local taxation must be given fair and reasonable interpretation "without any definite leaning to the side of the taxing power." City and County of San Francisco v. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, 166 Cal. 249, 135 Pac. 971; Hartford Fire Insurance Co. v. Jordan, 168 Cal. 285, 142 Pac. 839. This court has followed the liberal interpretation given by the Supreme Court of the United States to the federal Workingmen's Compensation Act in classifying instrumentalities which are used in interstate commerce. Southern Pacific Company v. Pillsbury, 50 Cal. Dec. 246, 151 Pac. 277. A similarly broad and reasonable policy should be followed in deciding questions relating to property which the state claims the exclusive right to tax. The prime requisite for property properly classified as "operative" is that it shall be used in the conduct of the business of one of the corporations enumerated in subdivision (a), § 14, art. 13, of the Constitution. Lake Tahoe Ry., etc., Co. v. Roberts, 168 Cal. 553, 143 Pac. 786. It will be seen that all of the property here in question is so employed. The express company is engaged in the business of shipping in refrigerated cars and furnishing such cars to the railroad company, and its plant for pre-cooling, repairing, etc., is an essential part of its equipment.

[5] There is no force in the argument of appellant's counsel that under the rule designated by the expression "ejusdem generis," the general words of the Constitution and the statute with respect to "other property" are limited by the previous enumeration of specific things. He says that the land and the "pre-cooling plant," not being of the same nature and quality as franchises, cars, rolling stock, wagons, horses, harness, and safes, are not within the meaning of the words "other property." In Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Roberts, supra, it was held that motor vehicles used exclusively by a public service corporation in its business are exempt from the tax provided by the "motor vehicle act." The measure of the taxing power of the local authorities, applied in all of the cases, is not the quality or the nature of the property so much as its use. For example, in San Diego & Arizona Railway Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 165 Cal. 561, 132 Pac. 1044, the use, and not merely the kind, of property governed our conclusion that it was "operative." The Interstate Commerce Commission has held that where a common carrier undertakes the transportation of perishable commodities in refrigerated cars, the icing and, when necessary, the reicing, of the cars are just as essential as the hauling of the freight —that the ice is not merely an incident to the service of transportation, but is a part of the service itself and is inseparable therefrom. In re Charges for the Transportation and Refrigeration of Fruit, 11 Interstate Commerce Com. Reports, 129. In the case at bar the functions performed by means of the Pacific Fruit Express Company's property in San Bernardino county are all so intimately connected with the furnishing of refrigerated carriage of perishable articles as to be, in contemplation of law, a part of the transportation itself.

Even under statutes exempting railroad property from taxation (which according to the authorities must be strictly construed), buildings, repair shops, and other instrumentalities reasonably incident to the proper and convenient carriage of passengers and commodities are included within the exemption. See 37 Cyc. 918, and cases cited. And there is stronger reason why similar adjuncts to the safe transmission of products requiring refrigeration should be removed from the local taxing power by the constitutional and statutory provisions which we have before us in this case, because we are bound to give them liberal construction.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; HENSHAW, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

172 Cal. 70

McGIBBON v. SCHMIDT. (L. A. 3563.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1916.)

1. PLEADING ⇐32—CONTRACT OF PRINCIPAL SIGNED BY AGENT.

Where a complaint alleges the legal effect of a contract signed by an authorized agent, the contract may be pleaded as that of the principal without mentioning the agency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 53–57; Dec. Dig. ⇐32.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇐189—CONTRACT OF PRINCIPAL SIGNED BY AGENT—PROOF.

In such case, execution of a contract by the principal, if denied, may be sustained by proving its signing and delivery by the agent and his authority to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 713–717; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 189.]

3. Appeal and Error ⟸1039 — Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

Though the complaint for the specific performance of a contract signed by an agent for the sale of realty be defective in failing to show that the contract was authorized by defendant, the overruling of an objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the complaint does not state a cause of action, if error, is not prejudicial, when it appears that defendant was cognizant of the case against him and met it on the facts alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4075–4088; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 1039.]

4. Equity ⟸72—Commencement—Delay—Laches.

Delay in bringing an action does not constitute laches unless prejudice results.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 207, 210–220, 225, 226; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 72.]

5. Specific Performance ⟸105 — Action — Laches.

Where a vendor of land tendered a deed containing conditions not authorized under the agreement of purchase, and the purchaser, considering the imposing of such conditions a termination of the contract, sued to recover the purchase money paid by her, and was nonsuited, the vendor contending that the contract was in force, her delay of 18 months after the judgment of nonsuit in suing for specific performance of the contract held not to constitute laches.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 325–341; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 105.]

6. Vendor and Purchaser ⟸75—Time of Performance—Reasonable Time.

Where a contract for the sale of realty does not fix the time of final payment, a reasonable time is allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 113–118, 126; Dec. Dig. ⟸75.]

7. Vendor and Purchaser ⟸334—Remedy of Buyer—Recovery of Payment—Breach of Rescission of Contract.

An action by a purchaser to recover the amount paid on a contract as for money had and received, not based on fraud, cannot be maintained except by proof that the contract was rescinded, or that defendant was guilty of a breach thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 959–980; Dec. Dig. ⟸334; Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1203.]

8. Appeal and Error ⟸934 — Judgment — Reasons Not Appearing in Record—Presumption.

A judgment of nonsuit in such an action, in the absence of any reason for it shown in the record, will be presumed to have been based upon plaintiff's failure to prove a cause of action; that is, a rescission, termination, or breach of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777–3782; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 934.]

9. Election of Remedies ⟸11—Mistake as to Remedy—Estoppel.

Where a party to a contract for the sale of realty institutes an action to recover the amount paid thereon and suffers a nonsuit for failure to prove a rescission or breach of the contract, he is not estopped by his election from availing himself of an action for specific performance, since the remedy first elected was one to which he was not entitled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Election of Remedies, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. ⟸11.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Isabella McGibbon against Fred Schmidt. From a decree for specific performance and an order denying defendant a new trial, he appeals. Decree and order affirmed.

Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Lewis R. Works, John D. Works, C. Hughes Jordan, and Eugene D. Williams, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to compel specific performance of an alleged contract, whereby defendant agreed to convey to the plaintiff a certain lot situated in Los Angeles. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and decreed specific performance of the contract. The defendant appeals, both from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The complaint alleges that on November 26, 1906, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract, whereby it was agreed that the defendant should convey to the plaintiff lot 132 in the Schmidt Heights tract, situate in the county of Los Angeles. It further alleges:

"That said contract was in fact signed by one Oscar E. Schmidt, but the said Oscar E. Schmidt was acting for the defendant, and said contract was in fact the contract of the defendant, duly authorized by him."

The contract in question is as follows:

"$100.00 Los Angeles, November 26, 1906.

"Received from Isabella McGibbon, per James D. McGibbon, the sum of one hundred dollars, making in all eight hundred dollars, which amount is the first payment on lot 132 in the Schmidt Heights tract; next payment of principal being due December 1, 1907, amounting to eight hundred dollars, and interest, to start from December 1, 1906, at six per cent. on sixteen hundred dollars, interest payable every three months. [Signed] Oscar E. Schmidt."

Interest payments of $24 each were made thereafter on May 31, September 3, and November 26, 1907, by checks drawn in favor of the defendant, but delivered to Oscar E. Schmidt by James D. McGibbon, who represented the plaintiff, his sister, in all her transactions relating to the lot in controversy. Two of these checks were indorsed by the defendant. They were as follows:

"Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles.

"No. 303. Los Angeles, Cal. May 31, 1907.

"Pay to order of Fred Schmidt, $24 00/100, twenty-four 00/100 dollars, Int. to June 1, 1907 —$1,600, on bal. purchase price, being $1,600, on lot 132, Schmidt Heights tract, owned by Isabella McGibbon. Jas. D. McGibbon."

"[Indorsed] Fred Schmidt."

"Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles.
"No. 331. Los Angeles, Cal. Sept. 3, 1907.
"Pay to order of Fred Schmidt, $24 00/100, twenty-four 00/100 dollars Int. to Sept. 1st on $1,600 00/100, Deferred payments on lot 132, Schmidt Heights tract, belonging to Isabella McGibbon. Jas. D. McGibbon."
"[Indorsed] Fred Schmidt."

In June, 1907, James McGibbon requested that a deed be made to Isabella McGibbon, in accordance with the contract, upon the giving of a mortgage by her for the balance of the purchase money unpaid. A deed was accordingly prepared by the attorney for defendant containing building restrictions, to which McGibbon objected. Nothing further was done in regard to the execution of the deed or mortgage. December 12, 1907, the attorney for the defendant wrote to the plaintiff and to McGibbon, requesting that the payment of the purchase money and interest due December 1, 1907, be made immediately, but no further payments were or have been made. On May 11, 1908, plaintiff began an action to recover of defendant the purchase money and interest theretofore paid. A judgment of nonsuit was entered against her in that action on May 13, 1909. The precise reason for such judgment does not appear in the record. On November 12, 1910, 1 year and 6 months after such judgment was entered against her, she tendered the defendant the balance of the purchase money and interest due under the contract, and demanded a deed without restrictions or conditions, which was refused. She began this action to compel a conveyance by the defendant November 25, 1910.

[1-3] The defendant did not demur to the complaint. At the trial he objected to the introduction of evidence, on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action, and his objection was overruled. This ruling is the basis of the first assignment of error. It is claimed that the complaint does not show that the contract relied upon was signed by the defendant; that the allegation above quoted, to the effect that the contract signed by Oscar E. Schmidt was "in fact the contract of the defendant, duly authorized by him," is a mere conclusion of law and insufficient as a pleading of fact. Where a pleading alleges a contract according to its legal effect, which may be done under our system (Stoddard v. Treadwell, 26 Cal. 303), the contract, if it is executed by an agent duly empowered, may be pleaded as if it were the contract of the principal, without mentioning the agency (31 Cyc. 1626). In such case the execution, if denied, may be sustained by proof of signing and delivery by the agent, supported by proof of his authority. But where, as is the case here, the pleading shows that the agent alone signed the contract sued on, we are not prepared to say that the further statement that it "was in fact the contract of the defendant, duly authorized by him" is not faulty, as being a conclusion of law. Upon the facts proven as above recited, the complaint might well have stated that the contract, as signed by the agent, was afterwards, in writing, ratified and confirmed by the defendant, by means of the aforesaid checks indorsed by him. But even if we concede that the complaint was defective in this particular, and that the defect may be reached without a special demurrer, we do not deem the ruling sufficient cause for reversal. The defendant was not misled or at all prejudiced by the failure of the complaint to state the facts more elaborately. He appears to have been entirely cognizant of the case against him and to have met it as far as the existing facts would allow. If error at all, it was error without prejudice.

[4-6] It is next insisted that there was such a lack of diligence upon the part of the plaintiff in the prosecution of this action as to constitute laches. The rule is well settled that mere lapse of time does not constitute laches unless accompanied by circumstances from which the defendant or some other person may be prejudiced, or such lapse of time that prejudice may be reasonably supposed to occur if the remedy is allowed. Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 42, 78 Pac. 467; Cook v. Ceas, 147 Cal. 618, 82 Pac. 370. No laches can therefore be attributed to the plaintiff in this case unless it appears that because of the delay of 18 months in bringing the action it might result in serious wrong to grant the relief requested. There is nothing in the case to indicate that the defendant has been injured by the delay, or that his defense was rendered more difficult thereby. Furthermore, there was some excuse for the delay. The offer of June, 1907, to perform the agreement in a modified form, was made before its maturity. This offer was met by the tender, on behalf of the defendant, of a deed containing conditions not provided in the agreement of sale, and which defendant had no right to insert or to demand. The plaintiff seems to have considered this as a termination of the agreement, and accordingly, she sued to recover the purchase money she had paid. So far as appears, she did this in good faith. The defendant refused to return the purchase money, defended that action, and obtained a judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff. This judgment was not rendered until May 12, 1909. Up to that time at least, the defendant himself was insisting that the agreement was in force, else he should have returned the purchase money paid, since it is not claimed that plaintiff had taken possession. This suit was begun 18 months thereafter. The agreement itself did not fix any time for the making of the final payment. In such cases the law allows a reasonable time. The court found that plaintiff acted with reasonable diligence in offering performance and in beginning the action. We cannot say that this finding is contrary to the evidence. The plaintiff cannot, therefore, be deemed guilty of laches.

[7-9] It is next claimed that plaintiff was put to her election either to recover the purchase money or to insist upon a performance of the contract, and that by bringing the former action, even though unsuccessful therein, she is estopped to insist upon this action for specific performance. This claim is based upon the well-settled rule that where two inconsistent, concurrent remedies are available, the party is confined to the remedy which he first prefers and adopts. Parke v. White, 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442; Holt Mfg. Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 357, 42 Pac. 435; Agar v. Winslow, 123 Cal. 587, 56 Pac. 422, 69 Am. St. Rep. 84; Liver v. Mills, 155 Cal. 459, 101 Pac. 299; Rodermund v. Clark, 46 N. Y. 354. The action to recover the purchase money was not based on fraud. It was in the form of an action for money had and received. It could not have been successfully maintained except by proof that the contract had been rescinded, or that defendant had been guilty of a breach thereof. The judgment of nonsuit was therefore, as we must presume, based upon the fact that no rescission, termination, or breach of the contract had been proven, and that it was still in force; that the plaintiff had no remedy such as she sought to enforce by that action. As was said in Agar v. Winslow, supra, 123 Cal. 591, 56 Pac. 422, 69 Am. St. Rep. 84:

"If plaintiff was mistaken and undertook to avail himself of a remedy that he was never entitled to, this does not prevent him from subsequently availing himself of a remedy that he is entitled to under the facts of the case."

The defendant is placed in no worse position by reason of the unsuccessful prosecution of that action. There is consequently no estoppel. There is substantial evidence in the record in support of each finding. No other questions are raised requiring consideration.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

172 Cal. 80

UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 7565.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1916.)

1. MANDAMUS ⊂⊃60—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS —ENFORCEMENT OF INJUNCTION.

Where a temporary prohibitory injunction is granted, and the defendant appeals, and continues to perform the acts inhibited, a writ of mandate will issue to compel the superior court to cite and punish for contempt a violation of the temporary injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 70, 71; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃60; Contempt, Cent. Dig. § 216.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃488—SUPERSEDEAS —APPEAL FROM MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

Although an appeal will stay the effect of a mandatory injunction, it will not stay the operation of a prohibitory injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2277, 2278; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃ 488.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃488—SUPERSEDEAS —"PREVENTATIVE RELIEF"—"INJUNCTION."

Civ. Code, § 3368, defines "preventative relief" as being given "by prohibiting that which ought not to be done," and Code Civ. Proc. § 525, defines an "injunction" as a "writ or order requiring a person to refrain from a particular act." The plaintiff street railroad corporation secured a temporary injunction prohibiting the defendant municipal street railway from running an excess number of cars over its tracks and loops. The defendant appealed and continued to operate its cars as before, claiming that the injunction was mandatory in character, although prohibitory in terms, as it required the defendant to do a positive act by relinquishing an incorporeal hereditament which it had acquired by continued use of the tracks in the manner objected to. Held, that the injunction was essentially prohibitory in character, as it merely restrained continuing trespasses and improper use of possession, and its operation was not superseded by an appeal, and a writ of mandate would issue to compel the superior court to cite and punish for contempt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2277, 2278; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃ 488.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Injunction.]

Lawlor, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Original petition for a writ of mandate by the United Railroads of San Francisco against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco and another. Writ issued.

See, also, 151 Pac. 129.

Wm. M. Abbott and Wm. M. Cannon, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. Matt I. Sullivan and Geo. Lull, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. The United Railroads brought its action to enjoin the city and county of San Francisco, operating a municipally owned electric street railway, from using a portion of its tracks, poles, and wires owned in common with the municipality, and of its terminal loops owned by it exclusively, with cars in excess of the number which plaintiff contended defendant was entitled under contract to use. The trial court granted an injunction pendente lite, in terms requiring the defendant to desist and refrain from operating this excess number of cars upon the tracks and around the loops. Defendant promptly appealed from this order granting the injunction pendente lite, and continued to use the property as it had been doing. Plaintiff proceeded in the superior court to cause the mayor of San Francisco and the members of the city's board of public works and the superintendent of the municipal railways of the city to be cited and punished in contempt for violation of the injunction pendente lite. The trial court refused to issue the citation in contempt, and this original writ of mandate was sued out to compel the superior court to perform what petitioner conceives to be that court's manifest duty in the premises.

[1] It is well settled that in proper cases the superior court should so cite and punish for disobedience to its orders, including injunctions, and it is equally well settled that mandate is the proper remedy where the court refuses to hear and decide such a contempt proceeding. Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130; In re Wilson, 75 Cal. 580, 17 Pac. 698; Crocker v. Conrey, 140 Cal. 213, 73 Pac. 1006; In re Tirey L. Ford, 160 Cal. 334, 116 Pac. 757, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 882, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1267.

[2] The justification of the court's refusal to proceed, it is declared, rests in the fact that the operation of the injunction pendente lite was stayed by the appeal taken from it. It is well settled, indeed conceded, that an appeal does not stay the operation of a preventive injunction. Equally well settled is it that an appeal does stay the operation of a mandatory injunction. The argument is that the injunction here under review belongs to the latter class.

Equities are weighed in granting or refusing a temporary injunction, and are to be considered in interpreting it. What are those equities in this case? Fairly to review them the consideration must be divorced from the fact that the defendant is a municipally owned railroad and a popular institution of the city of San Francisco, and the case considered as in every proper judicial aspect it is, simply a controversy between two private street railroad litigants. So considering it, no difficulty will be experienced in determining what are the equities. Street railroad A. contends that by contract it has agreed to permit street railroad B. to use a portion of its tracks owned in common and of its terminal loops owned by it exclusively for a limited number of cars, and asks to have street railroad B. restrained from using its property with cars in excess of the contract number. If A. is right, then the injury which it is suffering is clear, and lies in the unwarranted invasion and use of its property, in its depreciation by wear, in the illegal congestion and hampering of its own traffic, and in its monetary loss occasioned by its rival carrying passengers who otherwise would patronize A.'s cars. A temporary injunction is granted. What now are the equities? If the injunction is prohibitive, B. is wholly and fully protected, until final determination, by the bond which A. is compelled to give. Every dollar of loss which B. may sustain will thus be made good. But what is A.'s position if this injunction is mandatory? B. takes an appeal from the injunction pendente lite, and stays its operation without filing any undertaking, and proceeds to make free use of A.'s property without the slightest security. This continues until judgment on the merits, when the injunction is made permanent. Again B. appeals, and again destroys the purpose and effect of the injunction pending appeal, and still continues, without security to A., to injure it financially and deprive it of valuable property rights. And this is precisely the result in this case. Defendant has continued to use the property pending this decision, and, while this phase of it has been held here under advisement, the cause has been tried and determined on its merits in the superior court, and plaintiff has been awarded a permanent injunction, from which, of course, an appeal will be taken. If this be a mandatory injunction, petitioner will thus be compelled, without hope of recoupment, to bear great financial loss until final determination of the controversy. A consideration of the broad equities thus outlined will not serve to change in the slightest the character of the injunction, but they aid in understanding the true character of the relief awarded, its nature and necessity.

[3] To destroy all of plaintiff's rights pending the final determination of this litigation, or, putting it conversely, to give the defendant all that it claims, the justice of which claims is denied by the trial court, we are asked to hold that this is a mandatory injunction. In terms it simply forbids defendant to use the tracks and loops with an excess number of cars. To the common understanding this would appear to be an order to defendant to stop doing something, not to compel it to do something else, and no more mandatory in character than an order telling a man to desist from throwing his rubbish in his neighbor's vacant lot. But it is said that, while merely prohibitive in terms, it is really mandatory in effect, and compels defendant to surrender real property, or something in the nature of it, an incorporeal hereditament, of which he has possession by the use of the excess cars. Of course, no case is cited—none can be cited—which holds that an injunction such as this under review calls for the surrender of the possession of real property. But it is argued that the principle of the cases dealing with an actual order to surrender possession of realty is applicable to this case.

Thus a very narrow shoe is elastically stretched to fit the defendant's very large foot. Let us apply then the same principle to a parallel case in which a great city is not defendant. A. is the owner of land. B. is engaged in the trucking business. A. for a limited period of time licenses B. to use a convenient short cut across his land as an easement or private right of way with power to confer similar rights upon another. B. in turn licenses C. (who is in the same business) to use this private right of way to the extent of operating across it 10 trucks a day. Soon C. is operating 50 trucks. B. protests. C. is obdurate. B. seeks to enjoin C. from driving more than 10 trucks a day over this right of way. It is a gross interference with B.'s business. The court finds B.'s contention well founded, and C. to be acting without right, and forbids C. from employing more than 10 trucks. What is the difference between the two cases? Nothing in principle, nothing in fact, saving that in the actual case here presented a large municipality is the party defendant. And what would have been the answer in the supposititious case had C. appealed and contended that the appeal stayed the operation of the injunction because it was mandatory? Unhesitatingly C. would have been told that every separate act of his in causing one of his excess trucks to be driven over B.'s right of way was a trespass subjecting him to an action at law; that it is one of the peculiar provinces of equity to restrain and forbid by injunction precisely such repeated acts of trespass where the loss sustained is difficult of admeasurement, and where the legal redress involving a multiplicity of suits is wholly inadequate; that an injunction restraining trespass is not mandatory; it is strictly prohibitory within the exact language of section 3368 of the Civil Code, which defines "preventive relief" as being given "by prohibiting a party from doing that which ought not to be done." And equally is it within the explicit definition of an "injunction" found in section 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where it is defined as "a writ or order requiring a person to refrain from a particular act." In Georgia (Florida Yellow Pine Co. v. Flint River Naval Stores Co., 140 Ga. 321, 78 S. E. 900), where mandatory injunctions may not be granted at all, this precise question arose in an injunction granted to restrain continuing trespasses upon plaintiff's land, and the contention was made that the restraining injunction was mandatory in character. The contention was disposed of by the Supreme Court of Georgia in the following language:

"The court restrained the defendants from going upon the land, and from cutting, boxing, and working the timber. Inasmuch as the defendants were already upon the land, engaged in cutting, boxing, and working the timber, it is contended that the injunction was mandatory in character. We do not think so. The scope of the court's order was, not to require the defendants to do a particular act, but to refrain from cutting and boxing the timber."

In Longwood Valley Railroad Co. v. Baker, 27 N. J. Eq. 166, defendants by a dam had caused the impounded water of a millpond to rise above a certain height. The injunction restrained defendants from maintaining the water above a specified height. It was contended that, as the dam was already built, this was mandatory, in that it compelled defendants to lower the height of their dam or to construct a spillway. The court answered:

"The objection cannot be sustained. The injunction is against causing the water to rise any higher than it was accustomed to rise on the day designated. The injury was a continuing injury from day to day. The millowners were not required to reduce their dam, but to refrain from raising the water beyond a certain height."

In Moore v. Clear Lake Water Works, 68 Cal. 146, 8 Pac. 816, complaint was made of a continuous wrongful diversion of water against plaintiff's rights, and an injunction was sought. It was granted. This court was not embarrassed over the question of its being a mandatory injunction. It was tacitly conceded to be a prohibitive injunction. Says this court:

"Here the plaintiff complains of a continuous wrongful act and consequent infringement of his rights, and therefore prays for an injunction to stay such continuous injury, and it is only in a court of equity and by means of an injunction that an adequate remedy can be had."

To the same purport is Conkling v. Pacific Improvement Co., 87 Cal. 296, 25 Pac. 399. Here, in effect, it was asserted that the injunction was mandatory, in that at the time of the commencement of the action "the diversion by the six-inch pipe was complete, and for that reason injunction could not properly issue." Says this court:

"But, conceding that the six-inch pipe had been put in and the diversion of the water had taken place at the time that the amended complaint was filed, * * * and conceding that the diversion had actually taken place, the act of carrying the water away from its natural channel, if wrongful, was a continuous act, against which an injunction might issue. * * * The continued diversion of the water was the material thing to be enjoined, and not the putting in of the pipe."

Returning to the argument of the city, it is this: That the right to use the rails of the United Railroads is an incorporeal hereditament, an interest in real property which can be enjoyed only by use, and the possession of which can be manifested only by running the cars over the tracks from time to time; that as the city had been thus for several months operating its excess cars over these tracks, under claim of right, and had not been at any time actually prevented by the United Railroad from so doing, the city was in legal possession of the interest claimed, and consequently the injunction, though prohibitory in form, requiring it merely to cease operating such cars, is, in effect, an order directing the city to relinquish its possession of the incorporeal hereditament, and therefore mandatory in character.

If this argument were valid, it would put an end to the universally established doctrine that equity enjoins by preventive injunction the commission of repeated trespasses affecting realty where legal redress would require a multiplicity of actions or where the wrongful use, if permitted to continue, would eventually ripen into a right by prescription. The application for an injunction would be met by the statement that the defendant had been in actual use of the right claimed, that this was equivalent to legal possession thereof, and that injunction will not lie to oust one who is in peaceable possession, since there is an adequate remedy at law by an action to recover possession. That such doctrine cannot be maintained is apparent. The answer is that the continual entry without right upon the land of another is not possession thereof. It is nothing more nor less than a series of continuing trespasses, each a wrongful act, and no one nor all of those acts become rightful until by the lapse of time necessary to establish title by prescription the trespasser has become the legal owner of the right to use the way. Chattanooga, etc., Co. v. Felton (C. C.) 69 Fed. 277; Coatsworth v. Lehigh, etc., Co., 156 N. Y. 454, 51 N. E. 301; Hooper v. Dora Coal Mining Co., 95 Ala. 235, 10 South. 652; Lake S., etc., Co. v. Felton, 103 Fed. 227, 43 C. C. A. 189.

There is no magic in the phrase "maintaining the status quo" which transforms an injunction essentially prohibitive into an injunction essentially mandatory. The phrase is commonly employed in discussing mandatory injunctions compelling the surrender of possession of realty by the actual peaceable occupant at the time the injunction has been secured. Indeed, the phrase has been defined to mean "the last actual peaceable, uncontested status which preceded the pending controversy." There was no such uncontested possession here. It is undisputed that petitioner protested before beginning its action, protested vigorously against the misuse of it property, and only brought its action when its protests were disregarded. It is not easy to perceive what more the plaintiff should have done in the assertion and maintenance of its rights. Nor, upon the other hand, can it be perceived how the conduct of the city officials conferred upon the city any new rights. When in New York the creation of a new right was asserted, upon a similar state of facts, the Supreme Court of that state found no difficulty in declaring:

"But this failure and acquiescence amounted to simply a license for the time being, and was not sufficient to create any permanent and irrevocable right." Chapman v. Syracuse Rapid-Transit Ry. Co., 25 Misc. Rep. 626, 56 N. Y. Supp. 250.

Sufficient has been said, we think, to show that, when the character of an injunction is subjected to review before a higher tribunal, that tribunal, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, seeks first to determine the nature and adequacy of the relief granted. It will not condemn an injunction even if it be mandatory in character; for injunctions of this character, when they afford the only adequate means of relief to a petitioner, are steadily growing in favor. 1 Joyce, Injunctions, § 101; 1 Beach, Injunctions, § 101. So, too, the court will not destroy the relief granted by any excessive astuteness in selecting some minor mandatory feature of the injunction and holding that that should control the consideration of the nature of the relief awarded. What essentially are the features of this injunction? The defendant is not compelled to surrender any possession. It retains its possession. But it is forbidden from making what the court has determined to be an illegal and improper use of that possession.

There are but few jurisdictions where appeals, even when appeals are permitted, are allowed to operate to stay the effect even of a mandatory injunction. In this state such an appeal does so operate. But in other states where a similar rule prevails the courts have been swift in holding that the character of a prohibitive injunction was not transformed and made mandatory because it incidentally involved the doing of an affirmative act. A man has unlawfully diverted the water of a stream above his neighbor's land. The neighbor seeks to enjoin this diversion, and the court grants the prohibitive injunction restraining him from further diverting the water. But he had already diverted it, and to comply with this injunction requires him either to shut down his headgate or fill in the diverting ditch. Here is compulsion upon him to do an affirmative act. Yet the Supreme Court of Georgia, like this court, found no difficulty in declaring that this incidental fact did not change the character of the injunction. Goodrich v. Georgia R. & Banking Co., 115 Ga. 340, 41 S. E. 659. In Georgia, as has been said, the granting of a mandatory injunction is absolutely prohibited. In Merchants' & Miners' Trans. Co. v. Granger, etc., 132 Ga. 167, 63 S. E. 700, the injunction restrained the defendant "from refusing to receive and carry the lumber of the plaintiffs in the order in which it is duly tendered for shipment." It was contended that this was not a preventive injunction, but was strictly mandatory in character, since its effect was to compel the defendants to do the affirmative act of taking and receiving and shipping the lumber. The Supreme Court of Georgia declared:

"While under the Code * * * an injunction will not issue to compel a person to perform an act, yet the court may grant an order the essential feature of which is to restrain, although in yielding obedience to the restraint the defendant may incidentally be compelled to perform some act."

The same principle is announced in Falcon v. Boyer, 157 Iowa, 745, 142 N. W. 427, in the following language:

"While an injunction is issued primarily to restrain, and not to compel, an act, defendant may be required to do some affirmative act necessary to effectuate the principal purpose of the order."

In Fairfield Floral Co. v. Bradbury (C. C.) 87 Fed. 415, the postmaster had changed the usual course of business of his office. An injunction was sought to prevent the continuance of such interruption. It was argued that the injunction would be mandatory because it would compel the postmaster to do things other than those he was performing. The circuit court disposed of the contention in the single sentence:

"If, incidentally, this would compel the postmaster to perform some minor things which, in the ordinary course of business, he would perform, this would not render it a mandatory injunction."

And we may properly conclude this discussion by a quotation from one of our own early cases (Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130):

"But when a party is restrained by injunction, he is not injured in contemplation of law, as he is already secured by the undertaking. If, on the contrary, an appeal, with an undertaking of $300, would have the effect of staying the injunction itself, then the plaintiff would have no remedy, and the writ be idle. It would entirely destroy the usefulness of this writ. A stay of proceedings, from its nature, only operates upon orders or judgments commanding some act to be done, and does not reach a case of injunction."

Sufficient, we think, has been said to show what other courts have declared to be the true principle governing the construction of injunctions. In this state the same principle was at a very early date pointed out, as appears from the quotation in Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, supra.

It thus conclusively appears that in its essence this injunction is prohibitive and restrains continuous acts of trespass upon plaintiff's property. Clute v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 15, 99 Pac. 362, 132 Am. St. Rep. 54, relied on by respondents, was the case of a defendant, manager of the plaintiff hotel corporation, who was in managerial control of plaintiff's hotel and of its servants and employés. He was holding possession under claim of contract right. He disputed the right and power of the plaintiff to represent the corporation or to oust him from his position. The injunction in terms restrained him "from interfering with, or directing, or attempting to direct or control the employés of said corporation." The conclusion which this court reached was so plain and impregnable that there was no dissent from it, and that conclusion was that the defendant by this injunction was, in effect, ordered to surrender possession and management of the hotel property to plaintiff. It was a most manifest case of a mandatory injunction couched in prohibitive terms. To find in this case authority for holding the injunction in the present case to be mandatory passes comprehension. If this be a mandatory injunction, then must every injunction restraining waste and trespass be equally mandatory.

As little pertinency is there in the argument that after the issuance of the injunction the defendant continued in the enjoyment of its alleged rights. It continued this enjoyment only by the open defiance on the part of the mayor and other municipal officers to which we have adverted, and a complete answer to this is found in the language of the Court of Appeals of New York, in Sixth Avenue R. R. Co. v. Gilbert E. R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 430:

"It would seem to be preposterous that a party could * * * be deprived of the whole fruit of the judgment by the lawless act of the defeated party pending an appeal, without remedy, that he must stand by and without possibility of redress, see the subject-matter of the litigation destroyed, so that, if he succeeds in affirming the judgment, it will be a barren victory."

Let mandate issue as prayed for.

We concur: SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

SLOSS, J. I concur in the judgment. While the question is not to my mind free from doubt, I have come to the conclusion that the injunction should be viewed as prohibitive rather than mandatory.

The solution of the problem is not greatly aided by an examination of the authorities cited on either side; for in none of them was there presented a set of facts at all like those before us here. A mandatory injunction is one which commands affirmative action by the defendant. The character of the order as mandatory or prohibitive is not determined by the form of words in which it is cast. Affirmative action may be required by phrases which on their face purport to prohibit. An injunction which restrains directors of a corporation from refusing to recognize the plaintiff as one of their number is mandatory, because in effect it compels them to recognize him. Foster v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 279, 284, 47 Pac. 58. An injunction which prohibits a defendant in possession of tangible real or personal property from interfering with the plaintiff's taking of possession is mandatory, because it compels the defendant to turn over his possession to the plaintiff. Clute v. Sup. Ct., 155 Cal. 15, 99 Pac. 362, 132 Am. St. Rep. 54. The Clute Case is the one upon which the respondents place their main reliance, but I do not think the doctrine of that decision can be extended to fit the requirements of the present situation. Here the defendant is not required to transfer the possession of tangible real or personal property. The defendant was claiming the right to run its cars over certain tracks. This right was disputed, and its exercise enjoined. If we take words in their ordinary meaning, it is difficult to see that any affirmative action is required by an order which merely prohibits a defendant from operating cars over a certain route. The fact that the defendant had for some time been enjoying its asserted right to so run cars does not change the character of the order. If this were not so, almost any injunction against the doing of repeated acts would be mandatory if the performance of the acts had begun and been carried on for any considerable time prior to the application for the injunction. For example, an injunction against the continued operation of a cement plant to the injury of plaintiff's adjacent orange grove (Hulbert v. California Cement Co., 161 Cal. 239, 118 Pac. 928, 38 L. R. A. [N. S.] 436), or against the operation of a ferry claimed to have been conducted in infringement of the plaintiff's franchise rights (Vallejo Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club, 165 Cal. 255, 131 Pac. 864, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1197), or one restraining a smelting company from permitting fumes from its works to blow over and upon neighboring lands (People v. Selby S. & L. Co., 163 Cal. 84, 124 Pac. 692, 1135, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1267), could be regarded as mandatory. But, although in each of the cases just referred to the plaintiff's right to an injunction was bitterly contested, it does not appear to have occurred to the learned counsel representing the various defendants that the injunctions were mandatory, and that their effect could, for this reason, be stayed pending appeal.

I agree, therefore, that this injunction does not command affirmative action, but prohibits the repetition of acts found by the court to be unlawful. It is not made mandatory by the fact that the commission of such acts had gone on for some time before the commencement of the action.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I concur in the judgment and in the opinion of Mr. Justice SLOSS. While at first inclined to the view that the facts of this case made applicable the doctrine of the decision in Clute v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 15, 99 Pac. 362, 132 Am. St. Rep. 54, consideration of the question in the light of the foregoing opinions has satisfied me that the cases are not analogous in principle. It is only upon the theory that the injunction here involved requires something in the nature of a surrender of real or personal property that such cases as the Clute Case can be held to apply. The argument of respondents, of course, is that such is the situation here, and the facts shown by the record are such as to give some degree of plausibility to the argument made. But I have finally concluded that the argument is not well based. So far as "possession," within the meaning of the rule, may be said to substantially exist as to the municipality, it is not at all affected by the injunction, and the municipality is not required by its terms to abandon or yield possession of anything. The "possession" of the municipality continues unimpaired. The question presented by the proceeding is simply one of the extent of the use the municipality may make of the property, part of which it owns and possesses in common with petitioner, and part of which is owned exclusively by petitioners. Admittedly this is a matter regulated entirely by a contract between the parties, and it is claimed by petitioner and adjudicated for the purposes of the injunction pendente lite that the municipality is violating the terms of the contract by operating cars over the railway tracks that it has no right to so operate in view of the contract. The injunction substantially forbids a use found by the court to be unwarranted in view of the contract, and, of course, forbids this on the theory that the unwarranted use complained of, and found to exist, the operation over the railway of cars that the contract gives it no right to operate thereon, is simply a trespass.

LAWLOR, J. I dissent. Upon the record before us it seems to me that there can be no question but that the injunction changes the status of the city and county of San Francisco in relation to its claim of right to operate the C and D cars over the outer tracks on Market street and the loop on the Embarcadero—a right which had been peacefully enjoyed with the apparent acquiescence of petitioner for some months prior to the commencement of the action. To disturb such a status involves the exercise of mandatory authority.

And "it is thoroughly settled that, while an injunction which merely has the effect of preserving the subject of the litigation in statu quo is not suspended by an appeal (Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130; Heinlen v. Cross, 63 Cal. 44; Swift v. Shepard, 64 Cal. 423 [1 Pac. 493]; Dewey v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. 64 [22 Pac. 333]; Rogers v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 183 [58 Pac. 452]), a mandatory injunction, i. e., one which compels affirmative action by the defendant, cannot be enforced pending a duly perfected appeal (Foster v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 279 [47 Pac. 58]; Mark v. Superior Court, 129 Cal. 1 [61 Pac. 436]; Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106 [43 Pac. 580]; Stewart v. Superior Court, 100 Cal. 543 [35 Pac. 156, 563]). If an injunction, though couched in terms of prohibition, is mandatory in effect, a proceeding by the court issuing it to punish a violation as a contempt is in the nature of process for the enforcement of the affirmative feature of the writ. * * * If the injunction compels him affirmatively to surrender a position which he holds, and which, upon the facts alleged by him, he is entitled to hold, it is mandatory." Clute v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 15, 99 Pac. 362, 132 Am. St. Rep. 54.

See, also, Hagen v. Beth, 118 Cal. 330, 50 Pac. 425.

As to the C and D cars, it was sought to compel the said city and county to abandon the use and occupation of the tracks, which would have had the result of placing the petitioner in the precise position it seeks through a permanent injunction.

On the score of the equities involved, it is to be kept in mind that, if the legal effect of the injunction was to make it prohibitory, its enforcement would have worked a serious injury, not alone to the said city and county, but to the public at large, by reason of the interference with the expeditious transportation of passengers to and from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to which service these cars were particularly dedicated. And, as the proceeding may involve the liberty of the persons sought thereby to be brought before the superior court, any doubt touching the question of the character of the injunction should be resolved against the petition.

172 Cal. 815

SUTTER ST. RY. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 7566.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1916.)

In Bank. Original petition for a writ of mandate by the Sutter Street Railway Company against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco and another. Writ issued.

See, also, 151 Pac. 134.

Wm. M. Abbott and Wm. M. Cannon, both of San Francisco, for petitioner. Matt I. Sullivan and Geo. Lull, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Upon the authority of United Railroads of S. F. v. Superior Court, etc. (S. F. No. 7565) 155 Pac. 463, this day decided, it is ordered that a writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

I dissent: LAWLOR, J.

171 Cal. 234

GRAY v. PACIFIC SUCTION CLEANER CO. (S. F. 6253.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 11, 1915. Rehearing Denied Nov. 8, 1915.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸40—BREACH OF EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT — DAMAGES — MITIGATION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where, in an action for damages for breach of a contract of employment, the defendant undertook to show in mitigation of damages that it offered to reinstate plaintiff in his position, the burden was on defendant to show the good faith of the offer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 47–49; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 40.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸40—FINDING OF COURT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in an action for damages for breach of a contract of employment held to support the finding of the court that defendant's offer to reinstate plaintiff in his position was made in bad faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 47–49; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 40.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by William B. Gray against the Pacific Suction Cleaner Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bishop, Hoefler, Cook & Harwood and Finlay Cook, all of San Francisco, for appellant. W. M. Cannon and T. C. Judkins, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff sued to recover damages for his alleged wrongful discharge from service under a contract whereby the defendant employed him for one year, beginning February 1, 1909, at $250 a month, payable at the end of each month. The findings, in effect, state that the plaintiff was wrongfully discharged on June 9, 1909, that his salary had been paid up to the end of May, 1909, that plaintiff had obtained other employment during the remainder of the year, from which he received $1,000, and that he was entitled, as damages, to the difference between the agreed salary for the eight months and the $1,000 received from the other employment, together with interest on the balances for each month. Judgment was accordingly given in his favor for the sum of $1,000 and $138.70 interest. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] In its defense the defendant undertook to prove, in mitigation of damages, that on June 19, 1909, it offered to take plaintiff back in its service under the contract aforesaid, and to allow the salary to continue as from June 1, 1909, and that the plaintiff refused to accept said offer. The claim is that this offer and refusal defeats the right of plaintiff to recover anything more than nominal damages for the technical breach. The findings state that:

"It is not true that the defendant ever in good faith requested or notified plaintiff to resume his duties in the service or employment of said defendant."

This, if correct, would defeat the attempt to mitigate the damages by the offer of reemployment. The defendant claims that the finding is contrary to the evidence. The evidence on the subject is altogether inferential and circumstantial, but, upon the whole case, we cannot say that the finding was not justified by the evidence. When the contract was made, one John Lee, Jr., was president of the company and the principal stockholder therein. It was at his instance that the plaintiff was employed. He was in the active management of the company for the ensuing two months, and during that period the plaintiff's salary was promptly and regularly paid. Some time in April Lee disposed of part or all of his stock and ceased to control the company's affairs, although he remained president until about June 1st. In the meantime the company was managed and controlled by Otto H. Mohr. At the end of April the plaintiff was given a check for his April salary, which, at his request, was made payable to one Roeder. The check was dishonored, plaintiff had to make it good, and was subsequently reimbursed by Lee. The company paid only $100 of the May salary, and thereupon, about June 8th, the plaintiff began an action for the recovery of the remaining $150 and caused an attachment to issue thereon against the company. The next day he was discharged without cause. Two days afterwards he began this action for damages for the wrongful discharge. Lee resigned as president and disposed of his stock therein to Mohr about the 1st of June. Upon the issuing of the attachment, and knowing himself to be personally liable for a part of the debt, Lee immediately repurchased the stock from Mohr, and again became the president of the company, and took the active management thereof, and paid the attachment claim. On June 18th he wrote to plaintiff, asking him to call at the company's office. The plaintiff called on June 19th, whereupon Lee declared that he had never been discharged, and asked him to resume his place as an employé of the company. The negotiations then took the form of letters between plaintiff and the defendant; Lee conducting the correspondence of the defendant. Five letters passed between them. In his letter of June 19th, Gray, after stating that the failure to pay his salary was sufficient cause for him to leave the defendant's service, and that his discharge was without cause, stated his position as follows:

"I am willing to waive the breach of my contract of employment with you, and report promptly for duty, provided you give me satisfactory security for the payment of my salary when due. You can readily understand that I cannot waive any rights I now have, and still have constant difficulty in obtaining my salary when earned. * * * Otherwise, I will stand on my rights and endeavor to enforce my suit against you. * * * Your company has in many other ways failed to live up to the letter and spirit of my contract of employment, but I deem it unnecessary to mention them here."

To this, on June 23d, the company answered as follows:

"The company's position is this: That you have never been discharged from your employment, and that your contract for services is in full force and effect, and notwithstanding the fact of your having secured the contract under representations which will not appeal to the court, we are perfectly willing to waive that defense, and have you report and perform your duty as an employé of the company. If you will do so, we do not ask you to waive any rights that you ever had, and expressly agree that your original contract has not been terminated. While there would ordinarily be no objection to secure the payment of your salary under the contract, we will not, as a matter of principle, permit you, our employé, to dictate any new terms of employment. This you may consider as a final refusal on the part of this company to comply with the new terms of employment which you now believe you can impose; but nevertheless, and notwithstanding the large expense to which you have subjected this company, we will say that, while we cannot accept your proposal to resume your duties upon the conditions mentioned in your letter, your position is still open to you under the terms of your original employment. We make this proposition in good faith, and if you refuse it we shall, of course, be obliged to secure the judgment of the court as to the duties of an employé under the facts which will be disclosed on the trial of the case."

On the 28th, Gray replied that he had no fear of any defense the company might have growing out of any representations he had made, that he did not care to resume employment from which he had been discharged, if he should be required to sue monthly for his salary, reiterating his demand for security, and stating that he understood the proposition of the company in its letter of June 23d to be:

"That I shall resume my duties with your company, waiving the breach of contract created by my discharge, and take the chances of collecting my salary when due. This proposition I refuse."

In the next letter, on July 2d, the company stated that plaintiff well knew that Lee was now in control of all the stock and was amply able financially to pay the salary when due, and that in view of this fact:

"We cannot but look upon the reasons for your refusal to resume your duties with this company under your contract, which is still in full force and effect, as a subterfuge. You are wholly mistaken when you assume or pretend to understand our letter of June 23, 1909, as requesting on your part a waiver of the breach of contract claimed by you. We expressly now state that we do not care to have you waive any rights that you ever had or now have as an employé of the company, but we do demand that you immediately resume your employment under your contract and that you discharge your duties required of you thereunder."

The final letter was written by Gray on July 7th, in which he declined to resume service under the contract unless he had additional security for his salary.

It is to be observed that all this occurred after the action was begun. The contents of the letters of the defendant indicate that they were prepared either by the attorneys for the defendant or under their direction. The correspondence and the circumstances shown in the evidence justify the inference that the defendant was much more desirous of laying a foundation for a mitigation of damages in the suit than of taking the plaintiff back into its service. The motive is, of course, apparent. A reasonable person would easily perceive that the continuance of Gray in the service of the company after the occurrences leading up to the beginning of the action would most probably be disagreeable and undesirable to both parties, and would necessarily cause friction between them. Without further discussion, we think it sufficient to say that upon all the evidence the court was justified in drawing the conclusion that the offer was made in bad faith, and that the finding to that effect is supported by the evidence. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the additional questions whether or not the offer as made covered an agreement by the company to reimburse the plaintiff for his costs in the action, if he should resume employment, or whether it was sufficiently clear in that respect. Its apparent ambiguity on that point is one of the circumstances tending to show bad faith.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

29 Cal. App. 293

PERICH et al. v. MAURER et al. (Civ. 1423.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 31, 1915.)

1. EJECTMENT ⟸86 — ENCROACHMENT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action in ejectment and for damages for unlawful detention of the land claimed by plaintiffs, the burden of proof was on plaintiffs to show that defendants were encroaching on their land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 238–245; Dec. Dig. ⟸86.]

2. BOUNDARIES ⟸5—FENCE—"MONUMENT."

A fence claimed by defendants in ejectment for many years to mark the boundary between their lands and plaintiffs' is a "monument."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 44–46; Dec. Dig. ⟸5.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Monument.]

3. BOUNDARIES ⟸48 — ESTABLISHMENT — FENCING—EVIDENCE.

Where adjoining landowners, either knowing the true boundary between them, or to determine an uncertain line, erected a fence, which they acquiesced in as marking the boundary for more than 40 years, making improvements accordingly, the line of such fence may be considered to be the true boundary, where there is no satisfactory showing to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 232–242; Dec. Dig. ⟸48.]

4. BOUNDARIES ⟸47 — ESTABLISHMENT — FENCING.

The building of a fence does not conclude adjoining landowners as to the boundary line, if it was built for temporary purposes without intent to make it the permanent boundary, or was the result of mistake or fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 227–231; Dec. Dig. ⟸47.]

5. EJECTMENT ⟸95—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action in ejectment and to recover damages for an encroachment on plaintiffs' land, a holding that plaintiffs failed to establish any title to the land covered by the alleged encroachment, held justified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 280–295; Dec. Dig. ⟸95.]

6. EJECTMENT ⟸19—LOCATION OF BOUNDARY —SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action in ejectment and to recover damages for an encroachment, even if the evidence as to the fence between the parties was insufficient to locate the boundary line as contended for by defendants, the mere occupancy of the disputed strip of land by defendants was a species of title, prevailing over plaintiffs' entire lack of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 65–73; Dec. Dig. ⟸19.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. N. Post, Judge.

Action by Luka Perich and others against Sadie Maurer and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. A. Gett, of Sacramento, for appellants.
M. S. Wahrhaftig, of Sacramento, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was in ejectment and for $500 damages for the unlawful detention of the land, and the judgment was in favor of defendants for costs. The real question in the case concerns the location of the boundary line between the land of plaintiffs and that of defendants. It was admitted that each of the parties deraigned title from John A. Sutter, the plaintiffs to the "east 35 feet of lot 2 in the lot between N and O streets and Fifth and Sixth streets in the city of Sacramento, and the defendants to the west one-half of lot No. 3" in said block. It is shown very clearly that there is and has been for many years, probably forty or more, a fence on the dividing line as claimed by respondents. Their dwelling house in the rear also extends to this line, and the entire holding of respondents is and has been for many years inclosed. It is the contention, however, of appellants that respondents have included in their inclosure a strip about twenty inches in width belonging to the former, and thus the controversy has arisen.

To establish their claim plaintiffs called D. R. Cate, a civil engineer, who testified:

That in 1911 he surveyed the lots in question; that it was an accurate survey from the "monuments of the city as they were found at the intersection"; that according to said survey the west fence of Mrs. Maurer was over on the land of Mr. Perich; "at N street it is 1.58 feet; 20.3 feet, back from N—that is, toward the alley—it is 1.26 feet. The porch that goes up into the house is 1.9 feet over. The main part of the building back of the porch is over 1.56 feet and the back end of the building is 1.21 feet. The barn which is 129.68 feet from N street is 1.81 feet. That is where the fence joins the barn."

The way he traveled in reaching the foregoing conclusion is indicated by his statement in answering questions of the court to the effect that he found there were 400.95 feet between "stones—between the centers of street intersections"; that, taking forty feet for the half of Fifth street and forty for the half of Sixth street, there would remain 320.95 feet to be divided into four lots or "practically eighty feet and a quarter for each lot." According to this calculation he located the boundary line between plaintiffs and defendants at varying distances, with a maximum, as we have seen, of over twenty inches further east than said fence and improvements would indicate.

For the defendants, one J. C. Boyd, a civil engineer and surveyor of long experience, testified:

"There were practically two surveys of the entire city as a whole; the first in laying out of the city originally by Sutter; subsequently, in 1878, a re-surveying by L. S. Bassett, then city engineer, who attempted to adjust the apparent difference in the property ownership to the line of the streets, for the purpose of street improvement largely, and for the purpose of rectifying errors that were shown to have been made by private surveys of private property, lots and so forth. It had been the custom theretofore to make surveys from the established monuments, from buildings, taking the nearest building as being a corner, approximately correct, and run out from that"; that the Sutter survey was made in 1848 or 1849 and the Bassett survey in 1878; that these two surveys do not agree, that Bassett attempted to adjust differences through the city, that his policy "was to run a line for several blocks as long as possible, the longer the better, and adjust it with existing conditions"; that there is no way of determining whether this recent survey "conforms to the original survey, the Sutter survey"; that he considered that there was physical evidence that there was a line fence established by agreement between the coterminous owners and "the only monument that we could accept of the old Sutter survey would be the consideration of old buildings"; furthermore, that the Bassett survey "most assuredly is not the accepted survey at this time for the measurement of lots in the city of Sacramento" and "that considered in the light of the original survey, I do not think there is any part of lot 2—as originally surveyed—in this inclosure," declaring this was his professional opinion from a physical examination of the entire block including the said fence and "other collateral evidence."

The foregoing is substantially all of the expert testimony in the case. In addition, as we have stated, the evidence is ample of the occupancy and inclosure for many years in accordance with the claim of respondents, although the proof falls short of title by prescription. The court found specifically:

"That plaintiffs and defendant Sadie Maurer have deraigned their respective titles from the same grantor, to wit, J. A. Sutter; that said J. A. Sutter had surveyed and laid out the blocks and lots in the said city of Sacramento over sixty years ago, and that all the monuments of such survey have been obliterated; that since that time there has been no official survey adopted by the city of Sacramento except that one city surveyor, Bassett, in or about 1878, caused an arbitrary adjustment of the various subdivisions within the then city limits of the said city of Sacramento, so as to facilitate the uniform grading or paving of streets and sidewalks, and such survey of adjustment has been and now is conformed to by the said city of Sacramento, and for the purposes aforesaid; that plaintiffs' claim of 20 inches is based upon the arbitrary survey of the said city surveyor Bassett; that the dividing line, according to said arbitrary survey of Bassett, was not and is not the true line as surveyed and laid out by the common grantor, to wit J. A. Sutter.

"That defendant Sadie Maurer and her grantors have continuously, for a period of over forty years, owned and occupied the land and premises described in her answer to the plaintiffs' complaint herein, and paid taxes therefor; that during all of that time, and probably much longer than such period of time, a fence between her land and that of the plaintiffs was taken and considered by all as the dividing line; that the land of the defendant Sadie Maurer has for that length of time been inclosed, and so inclosed, was all of that time occupied as the land of said defendant and her grantors, described in her answer to plaintiffs' complaint herein; that plaintiffs bought the adjoining land also inclosed by fences, and as so inclosed."

The evidence is meager but, no doubt, it was difficult to secure evidence of the boundary line as located and fixed at the time of the Sutter survey.

[1] As to the showing made by plaintiffs, it is apparent that it was quite incomplete and unsatisfactory. They bore the burden of proof and it is at least doubtful whether there was sufficient evidence to support a finding in their favor. According to the Bassett survey, it is true, they have the legal title to the strip of land, or at least a portion of it, which they claim in their complaint. But the real boundary line was determined by the Sutter survey and the deeds were made in accordance with that survey. To that we must look, therefore, for the location of said line. The Bassett survey was made, admittedly, thirty years subsequent to the other, and we are left largely to conjecture as to the degree of correspondence, if any, between the two. The contention that the later survey is virtually a duplication of the earlier is based upon the assumption that the monuments found at the intersections of the streets by Bassett were recognized by Sutter and that the lots as established by the latter were all of the same size. As to these points the record is entirely silent, and we cannot forbear feeling that the case made out by plaintiffs is hopelessly weak.

[2, 3] We are not required, however, to hold that a judgment in favor of plaintiffs would be unsupported, as there is substantial evidence to uphold the contention of defendants. As to this, we observe the opinion of the expert Boyd that there is no part "of lot 2 as originally surveyed" within defendants' inclosure. There was no objection made that this was not a matter of expert testimony. Besides, the witness proceeded to state certain facts tending at least to support his conclusion. The most important of these, probably, was in reference to the fence which has been claimed for so many years as marking the boundary line. The fence itself is a monument, visible and obtrusive, which has existed for forty years or more, that under the peculiar circumstances of this case is quite persuasive in favor of the claim of defendants. It is a fair presumption that this fence was originally placed upon the true line as then recognized and understood, and it is proper to assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that when the fence was built, either that the contiguous owners had knowledge and information of the lines of the Sutter survey and acted accordingly, or that the true line was uncertain and by agreement it was fixed and marked by said fence. It is not surprising that this fence seemed so important to Boyd and to the trial judge. Its existence for so many years, the recognition accorded it as the true boundary, the acquiescence of the respective owners in the location and the improvements made accordingly, were rightfully regarded as important if not decisive considerations in the determination of a line otherwise obscure and uncertain. It is true that no one testified directly that the boundary was actually located on the ground or that there was uncertainty in reference to it, but such may be fairly inferred from the various facts disclosed, and we may invoke the principle announced in Schwab v. Donovan, 165 Cal. 360, and cases therein cited. This must be especially true since there is no clear and satisfactory showing here that the legal title is different from what is indicated by the fence.

[4] Of course, it is true, as said in Dierssen v. Nelson, 138 Cal. 398, 71 Pac. 456, that—

"the building of a fence does not always conclude the parties as to the boundary line; it may have been built for mere temporary purposes and with no intent to make it the permanent boundary, and it may have been the result of a clear mistake or fraud; but nothing of that kind appears in the case at bar."

Not only does nothing of that kind appear here, but the rational inferences are contrary, as we have seen.

[5, 6] Again, considering the imperfect showing of plaintiffs and the fact that the Bassett survey was repudiated by expert Boyd as a safe criterion by which to gauge the Sutter survey, we may conclude that the court was entirely justified in holding that plaintiffs had failed to establish any title to the property in controversy. Even further, it may be admitted that the evidence as to the fence was insufficient to locate the boundary line as contended for by respondents. The result of this view of the record would be, of course, a vindication of the judgment for defendants for costs. Moreover, without dispute, it was established that defendants and their predecessors are and have been for many years in possession of the property. This mere occupancy is a species of title, which would prevail, manifestly, over no title at all.

We think there is no doubt that considerations of equity as well as the exacting requirements of the law demand an affirmance of the judgment, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 298

McMUNN et al. v. LEHRKE. (Civ. 1409.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 31, 1915.)

1. TRIAL ⇐6—NOTICE OF TRIAL—SERVICE—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1012, 1013, providing that notices may be served by mail where the person making the service and the one to whom it is to be made have offices in different places by deposit in the post office in a sealed envelope addressed to the person on whom it is to be served at his office or residence, the clerk's notice of trial by postal card to defendant was insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 13–18; Dec. Dig. ⇐6.]

2. TRIAL ⇐21 — PRESENCE OF PARTY AND COUNSEL—STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 284, provides that the attorney in an action may be changed before or after judgment upon consent of both client and attorney filed with the clerk or entered upon the minutes, or by order of court on application of either client or attorney after notice to the other. Section 285 provides that, when an attorney is changed, written notice thereof and of the substitution of a new attorney must be given to the adverse party, but that until then he must recognize the former attorney, and section 286 provides that, when an attorney ceases to act as such in an action, the client, before any further proceedings against him, must be required by the adverse party by written notice to appoint another attorney. After setting an action for trial January 26th, when defendant's original attorney was his attorney of record, the court thereafter, on January 21st, reset the case for January 28th, in the absence of such attorney, and without notice of such order to the attorney, who did not appear on the 26th, and, in the absence of defendant and his attorney, and after plaintiff had presented an affidavit from the original attorney that he no longer represented defendant, tried the case and rendered judgment against defendant. Held, that the court was without authority to proceed with the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 39; Dec. Dig. ⇐21.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐969—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—PROCEEDING TO TRIAL.

In such circumstances, if it was within the discretion of the trial court to proceed to trial in the absence of defendant or any attorney for him, it was an abuse of its discretion to do so, and defendant would be relieved from his default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3845–3848; Dec. Dig. ⇐969.]

4. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇐75—CHANGE OF ATTORNEY.

A party to an action has the right to change his attorney in the manner provided by the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 110–119; Dec. Dig. ⇐75.]

5. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇐88—REPRESENTATION BY ATTORNEY.

Where a party to an action appears by an attorney, he must be heard through him, and, while the attorney remains of record, the court cannot recognize any other as having control of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 161–163; Dec. Dig. ⇐88.]

6. JUDGMENT ⇐136—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—RELIEF.

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing for relief from a judgment suffered through mistake, inadvertence, etc., is best observed by disposing of causes upon their substantial merits, rather than with strict regard to technical rules of procedure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 248; Dec. Dig. ⇐136.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by James McMunn and another against Albert W. Lehrke. Judgment for plaintiffs, motion for new trial denied, and defendant appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

W. H. Mahony, of San Francisco, for appellant. McNair & Stoker, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action in which plaintiffs seek to recover payments made by plaintiffs upon two contracts in writing by which plaintiffs agreed to buy and defendant agreed to sell two certain five-acre lots of land. Defendant filed a verified answer admitting the execution of the contracts referred to in the complaint and that payments had been made thereon as alleged, but denied that plaintiffs expended the sum of $30 or any other sum for improvements of said property; alleged that plaintiffs failed to make the payments stipulated to be paid, and "that more than two months elapsed after the nonpayment, * * * and that defendant thereupon elected to terminate the said contracts, and did thereupon terminate said contracts according to the terms of said agreement"; denied that, in May, 1914, or at any other time, defendant requested plaintiffs to relieve him from carrying out the said contracts in consideration of which defendant would either refund to plaintiffs the payments made by them or offer plaintiffs other land in lieu of the land described in said contracts; denied that plaintiffs accepted said or any proposition, or that plaintiffs released defendant from said or any obligation to perform the aforesaid contracts in consideration of the promise then made by defendant or at all; denied that plaintiffs ever demanded of defendant that he either repay said money or offer plaintiffs said or any land in lieu of the land described in said contracts.

The cause came on for trial January 28, 1915, and the court found:

That "all the allegations of the complaint herein are true and sustained by the evidence, and that none of the denials or allegations of the defendant's answer is true, except such thereof as admit allegations in plaintiffs' complaint."

Judgment went accordingly for plaintiffs.

It appears from the engrossed statement on motion for a new trial that:

"The cause was called for trial in the absence of the defendant, and in the absence of counsel representing the defendant on the 28th day of January, 1915, the plaintiffs appearing and being represented by counsel, Messrs. McNair & Stoker, whereupon the following proceedings were had and taken on the following oral and documentary evidence adduced, viz.: The Court: McMunn v. Lehrke. Mr. Stoker: Ready for plaintiffs, your honor. The Court: Proceed. There don't seem to be anybody else here. Mr. Stoker: I desire to read an affidavit, if the court please, and, after reading it, I will ask the clerk to file it. Affidavit of T. J. Butts, one of the attorneys of record in this action, and, as far as that is concerned, he still appears as attorney of record."

Then follows Mr. Butts' affidavit, which was sworn to on January 27, 1915, the day before the trial. The affiant stated:

That "he was one of the attorneys for the defendant above named, and as such prepared the answer which defendant verified, and which was filed in the above-entitled cause" (the answer was filed December 5, 1914); that on his own motion affiant had the cause set for trial for Tuesday, January 26, 1915; that "some time during the month of December, 1914," defendant was in affiant's office in the city of Santa Rosa, "at which time affiant advised defendant that said cause had been set for trial for Tuesday, January 26, 1915; that thereafter, and during the month of December, 1914, the said Albert Lehrke informed this affiant and R. L. Thompson, the associate of this affiant in said action, that he had placed all his matters, including said case, in the hands of an attorney at San Francisco, and that neither this affiant nor the said R. L. Thompson would represent him any further, and that neither this affiant nor the said Thompson has had anything further to do with any of the matters in which the said Lehrke was interested, and that said attorney from San Francisco has been representing him ever since said time."

At the request of Mr. Stoker Mr. Butts' affidavit was read into the record. Mr. Stoker stated that the cause had been regularly set for trial, on motion of defendant's attorney, "for last Tuesday" (January 26, 1915), and, he continued:

"I believe on the court's own motion it was carried over until to-day [January 28th], and the clerk advised me he wrote Mr. Lehrke advising him of that fact. At any rate, I understand Mr. Lehrke was not here either by counsel or in person last Tuesday. The Court: That is a fact, is it, Mr. Clerk? Clerk: Yes, your honor. I dropped him a card stating that the case was set for the 28th, and if he had an attorney to advise him of the matter. The Court: Proceed with the case. Mr. Stoker: Mr. McMunn, be sworn."

And the trial thereupon proceeded to judgment.

Among the grounds now urged for a reversal of the order it is claimed that the court was without jurisdiction to try the cause; that defendant did not appear at the trial through accident and surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against; and that the court erred in proceeding with the trial in the absence of defendant, after it was made to appear that the defendant's attorneys had ceased to act as such. It becomes necessary to state the facts as they were before the court at the hearing of the motion.

In his affidavit filed with the motion for a new trial, defendant deposed:

That he received no notice and had no knowledge that the cause had been set for trial for January 28, 1915, or at any other time, and, had he known that the cause was set for trial, he would have appeared and presented his defense to the action; that after service of summons he employed Messrs. R. L. Thompson and T. J. Butts, attorneys at law at Santa Rosa, as his attorneys in said cause; that they appeared therein and filed a demurrer and answer; that affiant was not informed by T. J. Butts or any other person that the case had been set for trial for January 26, 1915; that since the 5th day of February, 1915, he was informed that on January 21, 1915, the court made a minute order on its own motion, and without notice to affiant, and in the absence of his attorneys, "that this cause be reset for trial for January 28, 1915"; that affiant did not at any time, either by mail or otherwise, have notice or knowledge of the order setting the case for trial for January 28th; that at all times since the commencement of the action he was a resident of Vineburg, in Sonoma county, at which place was an established United States post office, and was "affiant's regular and sole post office address in said county"; that he relied on his said attorneys "to represent him and to protect his interests in said litigation as long as they remained his attorneys of record, and so continued to rely upon said attorneys until on or about February 6, 1915, when for the first time affiant was informed that a trial of said action had been had, and that a judgment had been rendered against said affiant therein; that he then learned that an affidavit made by T. J. Butts, one of said attorneys of said affiant, had been presented to the court upon said trial and read and offered in evidence, wherein it was made to appear that for a long time prior to the date of said trial the said Thompson & Butts had ceased to act for said affiant as his attorneys in said action; that it is not true, as set forth in said affidavit of said Butts, that during the month of December, 1914, the said Butts advised affiant that said cause had been set for January 26, 1915;" that affiant did not inform said Thompson & Butts or either of them that he had placed all his matters, including this action, in the hands of an attorney in San Francisco or elsewhere, and that neither said Thompson nor Butts would represent affiant thereafter; "but in this behalf affiant says the facts were: That prior to December 7, 1914, to wit, on or about the 24th day of November, 1914, affiant expressed to his said attorneys Thompson & Butts, his desire to employ his present attorney herein, but that no substitution or change of attorneys was then or there agreed to; that said attorneys Thompson & Butts then and there expressed their willingness to make the change of attorneys suggested, and stated that they would at a later date provide the necessary and formal substitution to be executed, and that they would in the meantime look after said cause and represent affiant therein until such substitution was made and given; that, affiant relying upon said promise, and not knowing that any immediate proceedings would be taken in said action requiring the attention of counsel, affiant did not apply to the court for an order changing the attorneys herein, and said substitution was for those reasons left in abeyance. And affiant further says: That said Thompson & Butts, did not give, in fact, make or give, their said substitution of attorneys for affiant in said action until the 4th day of February, 1915;" that subsequently, to wit, on the 7th day of December, 1914, the said T. J. Butts, acting as one of the attorneys for affiant in said action, moved the court for an order setting said cause for trial, "and on his said motion the court set the same for trial for January 26, 1915."

In opposition to the motion Mr. Geo. E. Stoker, one of plaintiffs' attorneys, made affidavit, in the course of which he introduced the affidavits and records filed at the hearing of the motion to vacate the judgment, which motion seems not to have been passed upon. Mr. Stoker stated no facts bearing upon the question of his own knowledge, except what took place at the trial already set forth. It appeared that defendant made a deposition at the hearing of the motion last above referred to in which the facts stated are substantially as in the affidavit above shown. He stated, however, that he received communications from Mr. Thompson during the month of December, 1914, but no reference was made in any of them that the cause had been set for trial or that either he or Mr. Butts had ceased to act as his attorneys. He deposed further:

"That before the filing herein of this affiant's answer he made a full, complete, and fair statement to his attorneys Messrs. T. J. Butts and R. L. Thompson of all the facts of the case in the foregoing entitled action, and was by his last-named attorneys informed, and he believes, that he has a good defense to said action upon the merits."

Attorney W. H. Mahony deposed:

That on or about November 24, 1914, he was consulted by defendant in relation to certain litigation then pending in the county of Sonoma, in which defendant was then represented by Messrs. Thompson & Butts, of Santa Rosa; that he informed defendant he would not accept employment before consulting his present attorneys, and that he could not legally act in said matters before "receiving from said present attorneys and filing a substitution of attorney authorizing him to do so"; that thereafter, on or about November 25, 1914, affiant went to Santa Rosa, called upon R. L. Thompson, one of said attorneys, "informed him of defendant's desire to employ him to act as attorney in the matters then being conducted by said Thompson & Butts, including the above-entitled action," and that he did not wish to interfere with their employment unless satisfactory to them; that said Thompson expressed his willingness to be relieved from further responsibility in said litigation, and that, though they had not been paid for their services "he knew that the defendant was responsible and would pay them without trouble"; that on said November 25, 1914, affiant received from said Thompson & Butts substitutions of attorney in two cases other than the present case in which they had been acting for defendant, and at that time the said Thompson promised to forward to affiant by mail substitution of attorney in the present case, and also in one entitled Lehrke v. Nelson; that on November 26, 1914, affiant informed defendant of the result of his interview with said Thompson and that affiant had decided to accept said employment and had accepted substitution in two cases; that affiant had been promised substitution in the present case, "and would assume control as soon as he received said substitution, but could not do so otherwise"; that affiant met said Thompson in the courtroom at Santa Rosa on December 15, 1914, and he again promised to forward to affiant by mail substitution of attorney in said last two mentioned cases, together with the papers in said action; that, said Thompson not having sent substitutions as promised, affiant wrote to him on January 4, 1915, requesting him to send them; that said Thompson replied, on January 6th, by letter (which is set out in the record), stating that since talking with affiant he had concluded he should be paid in the Nelson Case before making the substitution; that he had so written defendant, and that he simply wished to explain the delay "in forwarding papers"; that on January 7, 1915, Mr. Mahony wrote Mr. Thompson explaining that defendant was then in the mountains, where he expected to remain 10 or 12 days; that affiant forwarded Mr. Thompson's letter to defendant immediately; that, on January 13, 1915, affiant met Attorney Butts at Sacramento in the courtroom of the District Court of Appeal and informed him that he had not received from Mr. Thompson the substitution in the McMunn Case "and could not assume to act in said case as attorney for defendant until formally authorized to do so, whereupon said Butts replied that he would see that the substitution of attorney was forwarded to me by Mr. Thompson"; that affiant did not receive said substitution and heard nothing from Mr. Thompson until February 4, 1915, when affiant telephoned said Thompson "to inquire the status of the case at bar, and was told by said Thompson he did not know the condition of the case"; that affiant again requested substitution, and on February 5, 1915, he received a letter from said Thompson inclosing substitutes in the McMunn Case and Nelson Case "with office copies of the pleadings and copies of contract in the first-named case" (McMunn v. Lehrke); that on February 6, 1915, affiant went to Santa Rosa, and then for the first time discovered that a judgment had been entered against defendant, Lehrke, on January 28, 1915; and that affiant at no time prior to February 6, 1915, was informed that the case had been set for trial, or that a judgment had been entered therein.

Attorney Thompson testified that he had not been consulted by defendant relative to the facts, and "only knew in a general way that such a case was in the office"; that his associate, Mr. Butts, had charge of the case and prepared the answer; "that he did not remember that W. H. Mahony, the present attorney for defendant, ever mentioned the case of McMunn v. Lehrke in any of the conversations had between himself and said Mahony, and referred to in said Mahony's affidavit"; that he did remember Mahony's request for substitution in the Nelson Case, which was in witness' personal charge; that when he wrote to Mr. Mahony, January 6, 1915, "he did not have the case of McMunn v. Lehrke in mind," nor later, until receiving Mr. Mahony's letter of February 2, 1915, in which he asked for such substitution, and he thereupon prepared and sent the same to him.

[1, 2] Without attempting to analyze the various statements of facts thus appearing or separating uncontradicted facts from such as are in more or less conflict, it seems to us the learned trial court erred in denying the motion and upon a question not wholly the subject of judicial discretion. It is undisputed that Messrs. Thompson & Butts were defendant's attorneys of record when the case was set for trial for January 26, 1915; that they were his attorneys of record when the court, of its own motion, on January 21st, reset the case for January 28th, in their absence and in the absence of defendant, and there is no evidence that they were notified of the order of January 21st, or that they knew that the cause was to be tried on January 28th. The clerk stated, in response to the inquiry of the court whether the defendant had been advised of the trial, that he "had dropped him a card stating that the case was set for the 28th, and if he had an attorney to advise him of the matter." This was not legal service of notice such as the law requires, nor was service made upon defendant's attorneys, the persons upon whom it should have been made. The affidavit of Mr. Butts was introduced by Mr. Stoker as "affidavit of T. J. Butts, one of the attorneys of record in this action, and, as far as that is concerned, he still appears as attorney of record."

It is true that Mr. Butts knew the case was set for January 26th, and he deposed that some time in December he so told defendant, and it is urged that, had the attorneys for defendant appeared on the 26th, they would have learned of the order of January 21st resetting the case for January 28th, and defendant cannot now be heard to complain of their default. But we do not think that knowledge of the order of January 21st can be imputed to them because of their failure to appear on January 26th. The order setting the trial for that day was superseded, and was no longer in effect. Both defendant and his attorney Mr. Mahony testified that they had no notice or knowledge that the case was set for trial for January 28th, and it does not appear that either Mr. Thompson or Mr. Butts had notice.

Section 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

"The attorney in an action or special proceeding may be changed at any time before or after judgment or final determination, as follows: 1. Upon consent of both client and attorney, filed with the clerk, or entered upon the minutes; 2. Upon the order of the court, upon the application of either client or attorney, after notice from one to the other."

Section 285 provides that:

"When an attorney is changed, as provided in the last section, written notice of the change and of the substitution of a new attorney, or of the appearance of the party in person, must be given to the adverse party. Until then he must recognize the former attorney."

Section 286 provides that:

"When an attorney dies, or is removed or suspended, or ceases to act as such, a party to an action, for whom he was acting as attorney, must before any further proceedings are had against him, be required by the adverse party, by written notice, to appoint another attorney, or to appear in person."

It is undisputed that early in December, 1914, defendant was endeavoring to dispense with the services of Messrs. Thompson & Butts and to engage Mr. Mahony. The latter made reasonable efforts to be substituted as defendant's attorney by applying to defendant's attorney of record, who refused to make the substitution, though claiming that they had ceased to be defendant's attorneys. Later, and before the trial, they promised to make the substitution, but failed to do so. Mr. Mahony took the position rightfully that he had no authority to act until substituted in their stead, and he so advised defendant. In the meantime, without notice to either Thompson & Butts, or Mahony, or defendant, the cause came on for trial, and was tried in the absence of defendant and his attorneys. The only service of notice of the trial attempted was by the clerk, as we have seen, who testified that he "dropped a card" to defendant "stating that the case was set for the 28th." But this was no evidence at all of notice to defendant. The statute points out the method by which service by mail is to be proven (sections 1012, 1013, Code Civ. Proc.), and it was not followed. If plaintiffs knew that Thompson & Butts had "ceased to act" as defendant's attorneys, it was plaintiffs' duty before any further proceedings were had against defendant to require defendant "by written notice to appoint another attorney or to appear in person." Section 286, Code Civ. Proc. If plaintiffs did not know that Thompson & Butts had "ceased to act," notice of the trial should have been served upon them. Section 285,

Code Civ. Proc. But the day before the trial plaintiffs for some unexplained reason obtained Mr. Butts' affidavit from which it appeared that neither he nor Mr. Thompson represented defendant, and plaintiffs' attorney stated to the court that they were still defendant's attorneys of record. The court therefore was advised, when the case was called, that the defendant had attorneys of record who, in the language of section 286, supra, had "ceased to act as such" and were not present, and that the defendant was without a representative. In such a case the statute provides that, before any further proceedings are had against a party thus situated, the adverse party must, by written notice, require such party to appoint another attorney or to appear in person.

[3] It seem to us that the court was without authority to proceed with the trial. We are further of the opinion that, if it was within the discretion of the court so to proceed, it was, under all the circumstances, an abuse of discretion to do so, and that defendant should be relieved from the consequence of his default.

[4, 5] A party to an action has the right to change his attorney; "yet such change must be effected in the manner provided by the statute" (Gill v. S. P. Co., 154 Pac. 478); "and, where a party to an action or proceeding appears in court by an attorney, he must be heard through him" (Id.). "As long as he has an attorney of record in an action, the court cannot recognize any other as having management or control of the action, and the party can act only through his attorney." Boca & Loyalton R. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 153, 88 Pac. 718. In the case of Toy v. Haskell, 128 Cal. 558, 61 Pac. 89, 79 Am. St. Rep. 70, the plaintiff, without the knowledge or consent of his attorneys of record, signed and delivered to defendant's attorneys a written stipulation authorizing a dismissal of the case, which was accordingly done. The lower court denied a motion to set aside the judgment. On appeal to the Supreme Court the order was reversed, the court saying:

"A party must be heard in court through his attorney, when he has one, and the court has no power or authority of law to recognize any one in the conduct or disposition of the case except the attorneys of record."

In Nicol v. San Francisco, 130 Cal. 288, 62 Pac. 513, plaintiff's attorney died, and plaintiff appointed an attorney who appeared at the hearing of the motion to dismiss the action. He challenged the jurisdiction of the court because of failure to serve the notice required by section 286 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court said:

"If the plaintiff had failed to appear at the hearing upon the 15th day of April, either personally or by attorney, then the lack of service of such a notice would probably have been good cause to justify the invoking of the aforesaid provisions of the statute."

But because of his appearance by attorney and his having litigated the matter upon its merits, the court said:

"Any question of lack of jurisdiction upon the part of the court to proceed with the hearing is eliminated from the case."

[6] Speaking of the remedial provision of the statute found in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court said, in Melde v. Reynolds, 129 Cal. 308, 61 Pac. 932:

"It is best observed by disposing of causes upon their substantial merits, rather than with strict regard to technical rules of procedure. The discretion of the court ought always to be exercised * * * in such a manner as will subserve rather than impede or defeat the ends of justice."

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

29 Cal. App. 270

PEOPLE v. LIM FOON. (Cr. 323.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1915.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐560—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1828, recognizing the distinction between primary and secondary, direct and indirect evidence, section 1831, defining "direct evidence," and section 1832, defining "indirect evidence," the degree of proof necessary to a conviction is precisely the same whether the proof relied on is direct or circumstantial, so that whatever the character of the evidence, and whether the direct testimony of an eyewitness to the fact in dispute, or evidence of circumstances from which the existence of such fact may be inferred, if relevant and competent, a conviction will be justified if the guilt of the accused is shown beyond a reasonable doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1266; Dec. Dig. ⇐560.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐784 — INSTRUCTIONS — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

In a trial for homicide, an instruction that there is nothing in the nature of circumstantial evidence rendering it less reliable than other classes of evidence, a man may as well swear falsely to an absolute knowledge of the facts as to a number of facts if true, the facts on which the guilt or innocence depends must follow, and clearly explaining that either direct or circumstantial evidence must establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, while ungrammatical and lacking in clearness, was not misleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1883–1888, 1922, 1960; Dec. Dig. ⇐784.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐789 — INSTRUCTIONS — REASONABLE DOUBT—IDENTITY.

In a trial for murder, a requested instruction that if the one who fired the fatal shot was a man taller and heavier than the defendant, notwithstanding testimony that it was defendant, that would raise such a conflict as to the identity of the person as to raise a reasonable doubt and require an acquittal, was properly refused, as it merely stated the obvious proposition that, if the jury should believe that some other person than defendant shot and killed deceased, defendant should be acquitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1846–1849, 1851, 1880, 1904–1922, 1960, 1967; Dec. Dig. ⇐789.]

4. Criminal Law ⇐763, 764—Instructions—Reasonable Doubt—Province of Jury.

Such instruction, if intended to state that a conflict as to defendant's guilt arose in the evidence by reason of the positive statements of certain witnesses that a man not fitting his description did the shooting, and of the expressions of other witnesses claiming to have seen the trouble that defendant was one of the men who shot deceased, creating reasonable doubt of guilt, was improper, as invading the province of the jury, who alone have the power to determine a reasonable doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731–1748, 1752, 1768, 1770; Dec. Dig. ⇐763, 764.]

5. Criminal Law ⇐829 — Requested Instruction—Given Instruction.

In a trial for murder, defendant's requested instruction on the question of alibi, fully covered by a part of the general charge, was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. ⇐829.]

6. Criminal Law ⇐829 — Requested Instruction — Given Instruction — Reasonable Doubt.

In a trial for murder, a requested instruction that, if a single juror had a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt arising out of any part of the evidence, they could not convict, was properly refused, where the jury in the general charge were told that, if they entertained a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt upon a single fact necessary to constitute the crime, it was their duty to give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and acquit; since the court must assume that the jury must have understood that, if on the evidence any one juror entertained a reasonable doubt, it would be his duty not to agree to a verdict of guilty, and to adhere to such doubt while he remained in that state of mind, and as the court could not assume that a juror entertaining a reasonable doubt of guilt will yield his views merely because the majority of the jurors, or all but himself, agree upon the defendant's guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. ⇐829.]

7. Criminal Law ⇐829 — Requested Instruction — Given Instruction — Dying Declaration.

In a trial for murder, a requested instruction that dying declarations should be received with caution, and that, unless it appeared that the declaration in evidence that defendant had fired the fatal shot was made under a clear opinion of impending death, it could not be considered in evidence, and that it could not be given as much weight as if testified to in health and subject to cross-examination, was properly refused, where the court admonished the jury to receive the declaration with caution because it had not been made under oath with an opportunity for cross-examination, and that declarant might be influenced against defendant, and that declarant's physical condition might affect its reliability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. ⇐829.]

8. Criminal Law ⇐814 — Requested Instruction—Evidence to Support—Dying Declaration.

In such trial, a requested instruction that, if the jury found that defendant in making such declaration was actuated by vengeance upon some person whom he believed to be a member of a society which was an enemy to the society to which deceased belonged, the jury should disregard such declaration, was properly refused, where there was no evidence that in making such declaration deceased was actuated by vengeance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1821, 1833, 1839, 1860, 1865, 1883, 1890, 1924, 1979–1985, 1987; Dec. Dig. ⇐814.]

9. Homicide ⇐213—Evidence—Dying Declaration—Statute.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 4, providing that the declaration of a dying person made under a sense of impending death, respecting the cause of his death, shall be admissible in criminal actions, the declarant's belief or nonbelief that, if he were to falsely accuse another, he would subject his soul to punishment, need not be shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 445–447; Dec. Dig. ⇐213.]

10. Homicide ⇐219—Evidence—Dying Declaration—Credibility.

If it should appear that the declarant was wholly obtuse to religious convictions, and entertained a complete disbelief in a future spiritual existence, or any theory of rewards and punishments, the credibility of his declaration would be greatly impaired, and should be viewed with caution; but it could not be presumed merely because declarant, a Chinaman, was an adherent of a non-Christian religion, that he did not as religiously believe in future rewards and punishments as those believing in the Christian religion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 460; Dec. Dig. ⇐219.]

11. Witnesses ⇐282½ — Cross-Examination—Scope—Repetition.

In a trial for murder, where a witness for the people testified that he was near the scene of the shooting and that defendant fled northward, and was asked on cross-examination as to the direction in which defendant fled and how many feet he was away from defendant, the court's stopping of further cross-examination on that point, because it had been covered, was within its sound discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 928, 990–992; Dec. Dig. ⇐282½.]

12. Witnesses ⇐282½ — Cross-Examination—Objection.

In such case, the statement of the witness that defendant ran from the place of the shooting in a "northerly" course, though somewhat confusing upon that point, sufficiently brought it out to make it available to the defendant to impeach such witness' testimony and to justify a limitation of further questioning to bring out the ultimate fact that defendant ran in a northerly direction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 928, 990–992; Dec. Dig. ⇐282½.]

13. Criminal Law ⇐942 — New Trial — Newly Discovered Evidence Impeaching Adverse Witnesses.

A motion for new trial, after conviction of murder in the first degree, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, in which defendant, in support of his alibi, attempted to show that at the time of the shooting he was in a certain store, in which he was corroborated by a number of other witnesses who were rebutted by witnesses for the state, would not be granted, where the offered evidence merely went to impeach the witnesses for the state who had rebutted defendant's evidence tending to establish an alibi.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2316, 2331, 2332; Dec. Dig. ⇐942.]

14. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂939 — NEW TRIAL — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—MOTION.

A motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is regarded by the courts with much suspicion and disfavor; as the temptations are so strong to make a favorable showing after a defeat in a bitter controversy, and the circumstance that the testimony had just been discovered when it is too late to introduce it is so suspicious, that courts require the strongest showing of diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2318–2323; Dec. Dig. ⊂939.]

15. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂938, 1156 — APPEAL — DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The granting of a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and its denial of a new trial on that ground will not be reversed unless it clearly appears that it abused its discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2306–2315, 2317, 3067–3071; Dec. Dig. ⊂938, 1156.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Lim Foon was convicted of murder in the first degree, his motion for a new trial was denied, and he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Stephen N. Blewett and George F. McNoble, both of Stockton, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted in the superior court of San Joaquin county of the crime of murder of the first degree, the jury fixing the penalty at imprisonment for life. Section 190, Pen. Code. This appeal is prosecuted by the defendant from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

The homicide occurred in the Chinese quarters of the city of Stockton, on the 7th day of March, 1915, and the party killed was an aged Chinese by the name of Yip Suey. There is testimony showing that the shooting resulting in the killing of Yip Suey took place a short time after the noon hour of the day mentioned; that it was witnessed by several white men and a number of Chinese; that two Chinamen, the defendant and another, the latter not having been captured, simultaneously shot into the body of the deceased, one of the Chinamen so shooting being approximately on the right and the other likewise on the left side of their victim; that, after the shooting, both the Chinese engaged in the shooting ran from the scene thereof, the defendant going in a southerly direction and throwing the pistol with which he did the shooting on the sidewalk or street as he ran, and the other going rapidly in the opposite direction; that the defendant was pursued and ran into a building, into which he was followed by some citizens and was finally apprehended near a chicken house in the rear of the building into which he fled and which was occupied by Chinese; that, when arrested, he was freely perspiring and bore the appearance of being nervous; that, shortly thereafter, the assistant district attorney brought the defendant into the presence of Yip Suey and asked the latter if he knew the Chinaman so brought before him, and Yip Suey, who had previously stated that he expected to die from his wounds, declared, pointing at said Chinaman, "Yes, him man shoot me"; that Yip Suey shortly thereafter expired from the effects of his wounds; that an autoptical examination disclosed that into his body six shots had been fired; and that at least two of the wounds so produced were necessarily mortal. The defendant at the trial claimed that he had nothing to do with the shooting, was not present at the scene of the homicide when it occurred and therefore sought to establish an alibi.

It is not claimed on these appeals that the verdict is not sufficiently supported by the evidence, but it is contended that alleged errors in the rulings upon the evidence and in the action of the court in giving and in refusing to give certain instructions so seriously militated against the substantial rights of the accused at the trial as to compel a reversal of the judgment and the order. It is further insisted that the court should have granted a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and that its refusal so to consider and determine the effect of the showing made in that particular constituted an abuse of its discretion, and therefore prejudicial error.

The assignments involving attacks upon the action of the court with respect to certain instructions are numerous, and some of them merit, and will receive, special notice.

[1, 2] 1. The first point under this head is directed against an instruction in which the trial court described to the jury the two classes of evidence—direct and circumstantial—which are permissible in courts of justice for the proof of a disputed fact, and upon either of which, in a criminal case, a verdict of conviction may be predicated, if it measures up to the requirement of the rule in that class of cases that guilt must be established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. The particular part of said instruction to which the strictures of the defendant are confined is as follows:

"There is nothing in the nature of circumstantial evidence that renders it any less reliable than other classes of evidence; a man may as well swear falsely to an absolute knowledge of the facts as to a number of facts, if true, the fact on which the guilt or innocence depends must follow."

In the same instruction, the court explained to the jury with clearness that in any case, whether the proof relied upon to establish guilt was direct or merely circumstantial, a conviction could not be justified unless such proof was such as to establish the fact of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

Instructions explaining to juries in criminal cases the distinction between direct and circumstantial evidence have often been given in substantially the same language as the one challenged here and have as often been approved by reviewing courts. People v. Morrow, 60 Cal. 142, 144; People v. Wilder, 134 Cal. 182, 184, 66 Pac. 228; People v. Simmons, 7 Cal. App. 559, 565, 566, 95 Pac. 48. And such an instruction may with propriety be given in all appropriate cases, for there is a distinction between those two classes of evidence—an inherent distinction which is expressly recognized and explained by our laws (sections 1828, 1831, and 1832, Code Civ. Proc.)—which should be explained to juries with the further explanation that the degree of proof essential to a conviction is in no sense or measure influenced by such distinction. The common notion with respect to the proofs in criminal cases is that a stronger case should be made before a conviction is justified where, for a conviction, sole reliance is placed upon evidence of purely a circumstantial character. This is, of course, an erroneous notion; the true rule being that the degree of proof necessary to a conviction is precisely the same whether the proof relied upon for a conviction be direct or circumstantial. In other words, whatever may be the character of the evidence, whether it be the direct testimony of an eyewitness to the fact in dispute or evidence of circumstances from which the existence of the fact in dispute may be inferred, it being relevant and competent, a conviction will be justified and sustained if the guilt of the accused is shown to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, and, as stated, it is with eminent propriety that the jury should be enlightened upon these important matters.

While the language above quoted from the instruction in question here, as it appears in the record, is lacking in that clearness of expression which should always characterize instructions to juries, and, indeed, is not strictly grammatical, because of the omission to have inserted in the part quoted above the words, "from which," immediately following the phrase, "as to a number of facts," still, taken as a whole, the instruction appears to be sufficiently clear in the expression of its true meaning as not to have had the effect of misleading the jury with respect to the proposition which it was the purpose and intention to explain by it.

[3] 2. The following instruction was proposed by the defendant, but disallowed by the court:

"* * * If you believe from the evidence in this case that the person who fired the shots which caused the death of Yip Suey was a man taller and heavier than this defendant, notwithstanding that certain witness or witnesses may testify that the person who fired such shots was said defendant, nevertheless there would exist such a conflict as to the identity of the person who fired such shots as to raise a reasonable doubt as to whether or not it was the defendant, then it is your duty to acquit this defendant."

The instruction was properly refused. Paraphrased, and thus reduced to its actual meaning, it merely states to the jury the very obvious proposition that, if they should believe from the evidence that some other person than the defendant shot and killed Yip Suey, the accused would be entitled to an acquittal, and, of course, in that case he would be, and his acquittal obviously the result of a total failure to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt or at all and necessarily the complete repudiation of contrary proof, and not upon the proposition that a reasonable doubt existed by reason of a conflict between the evidence convincing them that some other person did the shooting and the testimony involving an expression of the opinion of certain witnesses that the defendant was the guilty party.

[4] Perhaps, however, the real purpose of the instruction was to state that a conflict as to the defendant's guilt arose in the evidence by reason of the positive statements of certain witnesses that a man not fitting his description did the shooting and testimony showing the expression of the belief by other witnesses who claimed to have seen the trouble that the defendant was one of the men who shot the deceased, and that the conflict so arising in the proofs was sufficient to create a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt. But, assuming that to have been the proposition so sought to be stated, the instruction would still be vulnerable and wholly improper, since clearly it would involve a trespass upon the province of the jury, with whom alone rests the right or the power to determine for themselves whether there exists under the evidence reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt.

[5] 3. The instruction requested by the defendant but rejected by the court, upon the question of the alibi interposed by the defendant, was fully covered by an instruction which constituted a part of the court's general charge. Instructions upon particular propositions are not required to be repeated, and for this reason the court was justified in disallowing the instruction in question.

[6] 4. The defendant proposed an instruction which would have told the jury that if, after considering all the evidence, "a single juror has a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, arising out of any part of the evidence, then they cannot convict him." The court rejected said instruction, and it is here claimed that it was prejudicial error to do so. The court properly disallowed the instruction upon the ground, as assigned by it, that the proposition therein stated was covered by the charge. The charge was, of course, addressed to all the jurors, and therein it was declared that, if the jury entertained a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt or "upon a single fact or element necessary to constitute the crime, it is your duty to give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and acquit him." We must assume that from that language the jury must have understood that if, after a consideration of the evidence, any one of them entertained a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt or upon any element or fact the proof of which was essential to a conviction, it would be his duty not to agree to a verdict of guilty, and to adhere to his conviction so long as he remained in that state of mind. We are not authorized to assume that a juror who entertains a reasonable doubt of the guilt of a person charged with a criminal offense will yield his views merely because a majority of the jurors, or all but himself, have agreed upon the guilt of the accused. Such an assumption would involve an imputation against the intelligence of the average person competent under the law to serve in that important capacity which is not warranted, and such would necessarily be the assumption if we were required to hold that the jurors in this case did not understand from the court's general charge that a concurrence of all was requisite to reach a verdict, and that none was required or, indeed, justified, in concurring in a verdict of guilty if he entertained a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt under the evidence.

[7, 8] 5. The defendant requested the court to submit to the jury an instruction in which it was declared that dying declarations should be received with caution, and that, unless it appeared that the declaration made by the deceased just prior to his death accusing the defendant of having fired the fatal shots, and which declaration was admitted in evidence, was made "under a clear opinion of impending death, you cannot consider such declaration as evidence in this case; and the court cautions you * * * not to give as much weight to such evidence as if the same statement had been testified to in health and subject to cross-examination." The instruction further stated that, if the jury believed that the deceased "had no fear of God" and "had no conception of life after death wherein he would receive punishment for failure to tell the truth," then his alleged dying declaration should be disregarded "for the reason that there was no compelling cause to tell the truth in the hour of his impending death." The court refused to adopt the instruction on the ground that there was "no evidence upon which to base part of the instruction—proper portion covered by instruction elsewhere given."

Another of the instructions proposed by the defendant bearing upon the dying declaration stated that, if the jury found that Yip Suey was actuated, in making said declaration, by the desire to wreak vengeance upon some person whom he might believe was a member of a society or a relative of a member of such society which was an enemy of a society to which said Yip Suey belonged, * * *" it would then be their duty wholly to disregard and place no reliance upon such declaration. The court disallowed said instruction on the ground that there was no evidence to which it was pertinent.

The court committed no error by thus disposing of the proposed instructions. An instruction was embodied in the court's charge which admonished the jury to receive with caution the evidence of the dying declaration, "for the reason that the declarant had not been administered an oath, and an opportunity for cross-examination has not been afforded the defendant, and that the declarant might be influenced against the defendant," and for the further reason that the physical condition of the deceased, when making the statement, might have been such as to render questionable the reliability of his declaration.

The instruction given, as will be observed, fully covered the portion of the rejected instruction cautioning the jury, for reasons therein stated, to scrutinize the dying declaration with more than the usual care with which ordinary testimony is received and considered. There was no testimony justifying the implication contained in the rejected instruction that the deceased, in accusing the defendant of having fired the shots into his body, was actuated by "the desire to wreak vengeance upon some person whom he might believe was a member of a society or a relative of a member of such society which was an enemy of the society or tong to which said Yip Suey belonged."

[9] Nor was there any testimony from which it may be determined what the declarant's belief was as to a "hereafter," or whether be believed or did not believe that he would, were he to falsely accuse another, subject his soul to punishment after his immortal self had been separated from the flesh. And our law does not require that such fact should be shown to render the declarant's statement admissible.

If it is made to appear, as it was made to appear here, that the declaration was made by a dying person under a sense of impending death, and that such declaration related to the cause of his death, then it is sufficient. Section 1870, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc.

[10] Undoubtedly, if it were made to appear that the declarant was wholly obtuse to religious convictions, and that he entertained complete disbelief in a future spiritual existence or had no regard whatsoever for the theory of rewards and punishments in the hereafter, his statement in extremis would not be supported by those considerations which may naturally be supposed to exercise an overruling influence upon the minds of men in such circumstances, and in such case, even if, nevertheless, the competency of the declaration as evidence would not be destroyed, the credibility of it would be greatly impaired, and when given under such circumstances it should never be submitted to a jury unaccompanied by an explicit admonition by the court that it should be viewed with great caution. In this case, however, no less than in any other, it is not to be presumed, merely because the declarant might have been an adherent of a heathenish religion—a fact which may reasonably be implied from the race to which he belonged—that he did not as religiously believe in "future rewards and punishments" as those who believe in the Christian religion, and that a statement made by him in the face of impending death would not be attended by the same degree of solemnity or given under the same conception of consequences as that under which a statement under like circumstances would be made by one charged with religious convictions of a more rational and civilized order. In any event, as stated, the court sufficiently enlightened the jury with respect to their duty in considering the dying declaration admitted in evidence, and for the reasons assigned by the court the instructions proposed by the defendant upon that subject were properly rejected.

The refusal to allow some other instructions proposed by the defendant is criticized; but said instructions involved, substantially, a repetition of the statement of principles contained in the rejected instructions which we have above noticed, and it is therefore unnecessary to give them special attention herein. In concluding on this branch of the case, we may observe that the court's charge to the jury, as a whole, covered every pertinent point or issue developed in the case correctly and in clear language, and that in this regard, as in all others, the court's conduct of the trial was notably characterized by fairness and impartiality.

[11, 12] 6. The witness Corbett, testifying for the people, said that he was near the scene of the shooting when it occurred, and that the defendant, in fleeing therefrom after the firing had ceased, ran north on Hunter street and entered a house north of the house in which the defendant was found. On cross-examination, after subjecting the witness to extended questioning as to the direction in which the defendant fled from the scene of the shooting, he was asked:

"Well, about how many feet were you from him [defendant] when he was running towards you, when you got over here?"

The court thereupon interrupted, addressing the attorney:

"Mr. Blewett, you have gone over that now several times."

Mr. Blewett retorted:

"Well, this is very important."

"The Court: I know, but you can't go over it and over it—repeat every question. You had him say he was above five feet from the south line. Go on to a different examination. The court will not permit you to take the time to go over and over it. I want to give you a full opportunity for cross-examination, but not by going over and over."

It is now claimed that the action of the court in thus limiting the defendant's right to fully cross-examine the witness upon the lines then being pursued constituted prejudicial error, particularly in view of the fact that the testimony of said witness was of singularly vital importance; he having testified that he witnessed the tragedy and identified the defendant as one of the assailants. It is argued that, if permitted to proceed with his cross-examination upon the lines upon which he was questioning the witness when interrupted by the court and further cross-examination upon those lines curtailed, the attorney for the accused would have probably succeeded in making the witness definitely and unqualifiedly say that the defendant, upon the cessation of the shooting, ran in a northerly direction from the scene thereof, and that thus the verity of his statement that he witnessed the shooting would have been greatly impaired, if, indeed, his testimony in that regard not altogether impeached, inasmuch as the defendant was found, shortly after the shooting, in the rear of a building south of the point where the shooting took place.

As has been shown, the question asked by the attorney when the court made the order or ruling complained of was:

"Well, about how many feet were you from him when he was running towards you, when you got over here?"

Precisely the same question had several times been previously propounded to the witness by the defendant's attorney and as many times answered. At page 226 of the transcript, on cross-examination, it will be found that Corbett stated that the defendant, in his flight, had passed "close" by where the witness was standing; at page 228, it will be seen that the witness, on cross-examination, testified that the defendant passed him, or where he was standing, at a distance of about five feet; at page 229, it will be observed that the same question was put to the witness, and that he replied that the accused passed him at about a distance of five feet from where he (witness) was standing. At page 231 of the transcript will be found the question which is responsible for the present discussion.

Even if it might justly be said that the allowance of further questioning of the witness as to the matter to which the question was addressed would have ultimately led, as counsel contend would have been the inevitable result thereof, to a positive statement of the witness that the defendant ran from the place where the shooting occurred in a northerly course, and thus the force of the witness' testimony that he saw the shooting destroyed an answer to the objection that the witness, as seen, did testify that the defendant ran in a northerly direction from the point at which the shooting was done, and, although his testimony thereafter appears to be somewhat confusing or hazy upon that point, the fact was nevertheless sufficiently brought out to be available to the defense for any purpose to which it might be advantageously put in argument to the jury. But it is manifest that the court's order curtailing further cross-examination did not, nor was it intended to, have the effect of putting an end to the questioning of the witness further as to the direction in which the defendant ran from the scene of the homicide, but that the sole purpose of the order was merely to foreclose further inquiry as to the question of how near the defendant went to the point where the witness stood as he (the defendant) in his flight passed the former. And, very clearly, the witness had been sufficiently questioned as to that fact, and the court as clearly remained within the bounds of a sound judicial discretion in stopping further cross-examination upon that point. As was said in Phenegar v. Paolini, 149 Pac. 1008, 1012:

"There must be a limit somewhere to the examination of a witness upon a particular subject, and where, as seems to have been true here, it is evident to the trial court, after a full and exhaustive examination of the witness upon the subject concerning which particular information is desired or desirable, that nothing more can be accomplished by continuing the inquiry than has already been accomplished, then it is clearly within the discretion, and indeed the duty, of the court to put an end to the further prosecution of the examination."

See, also, Reed v. Clark, 47 Cal. 194, 201; People v. Mooney, 132 Cal. 13, 17, 63 Pac. 1070; People v. Harlan, 133 Cal. 16, 22, 65 Pac. 9; People v. Rader, 136 Cal. 253, 254, 68 Pac. 707.

[13] 7. One of the grounds upon which the defendant pressed his motion for a new trial was that of newly discovered evidence, and in support of the motion upon that ground a number of affidavits were filed and presented to the trial court.

The defendant, in support of his alibi, attempted to show that, at the time of the shooting, he was in the store of the Quong On Chung Company, at 138 Washington street, and he testified that he was at said store, and therein was corroborated by a number of other witnesses, among whom was one Lem Yeong. In rebuttal, the people called to the stand two Chinese, Hong Lun and Lee Loy, who claimed to have been in the store of the Quong On Chung Company at the time of the shooting, and who testified that neither the defendant nor his witness Lem Yeong was in said store at said time. Four of the affidavits filed by the defendant in support of his motion for a new trial on the ground mentioned were made by as many different Chinese, who therein deposed that, when the shooting occurred, Hong Lun was not a farmer, as he had testified, but was a gambler, and that when the shooting occurred he was in a gambling house at 131–133 East Washington street, which is located at some distance from the store above named. Two of the affidavits so filed were by two Chinese, who therein declared that they were in a rooming house above the store of the Quong On Chung Company, that they heard the shooting, and that at that time Lee Loy was with them in a room in said rooming house. Two other Chinese made affidavits, which were in among those filed, in which they deposed that they saw Lee Loy, immediately after the shooting, come out of the rooming house above mentioned. Mr. Blewett, attorney for the defendant, made and filed an affidavit in which, after showing the relevancy and alleging the importance of the testimony of the several Chinese affiants, he declared that he had no knowledge of the existence of the evidence to which the affidavits related at the time of the trial, and that he "could not by the use of reasonable diligence have discovered and produced the same upon the former trial."

[14] It is plainly manifest that the effect of the evidence claimed to be "newly discovered" and referred to in the affidavits would merely be to impeach the statements of Hong Lun and Lee Loy that the defendant was not in the Quong On Chung Company store when Yip Suey was shot.

"A motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence has always been regarded by the courts with a great deal of suspicion and disfavor. It has been said that 'the temptations are so strong to make a favorable showing after a defeat in an angry and bitter controversy, and the circumstance that the testimony had just been discovered when it is too late to introduce it is so suspicious, that courts require the very strictest showing of diligence.'" People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 359, 366, 367, 28 Pac. 261, 264; People v. Sutton, 73 Cal. 243, 15 Pac. 86.

[15] Hence, it has always been held that whether a motion for a new trial should or should not be granted upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is a proposition which is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and that the denial of a new trial on that ground will not be reversed unless it clearly appears that the court abused its discretion by its action in that regard. People v. Loui Tung, 90 Cal. 377, 27 Pac. 295; People v. Tallmadge, 114 Cal. 427, 430, 46 Pac. 282. And, furthermore, where the only office of newly discovered evidence is to impeach adverse witnesses, it is insufficient as a basis for granting a new trial. People v. Loui Tung, 90 Cal. 377, 27 Pac. 295; People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 352, 19 Pac. 161; Stoakes v. Monroe, 36 Cal. 388; People v. Anthony, 56 Cal. 399. As before stated, and as is plainly apparent from the affidavits themselves, the only purpose which the evidence therein referred to could accomplish, if anything at all, would be the impeachment of two witnesses who testified for the prosecution and whose testimony was itself wholly in impeachment of the testimony of the defendant and his witnesses upon the question of the alibi sought to be shown by the accused.

We conclude that there was no error or abuse of discretion in the action of the court refusing to grant the defendant a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence.

No substantial error appearing in the record, the judgment and the order appealed from must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

29 Cal. App. 703

O'BRIEN et al. v. REARDON et al.

(Civ. 1747.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 17, 1916. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 14, 1916.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟸584 — CONCLUSIVENESS — IN PROBATE COURT.

The denial of a party's application to the probate court for administration of an estate already administered and distributed bars his subsequent action to set aside the decree of the probate court, distributing the estate on the first administration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1067; Dec. Dig. ⟸584.]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸264—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that property was accumulated through considerable contributions of cash and labor by the husband, although at one time it stood in wife's name as her separate property, and that the taxes on it were paid by her husband and he always regarded it as community property, held sufficient to prove it community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 916; Dec. Dig. ⟸264.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by P. J. O'Brien and another against Annie Reardon and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. C. Black, of San Jose, for appellants. A. A. Caldwell, of San Jose, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiffs, P. J. O'Brien and Harold Costello (a minor, acting through his guardian ad litem) bring this suit for the purpose of having vacated and set aside a decree of the probate court of the county of Santa Clara, distributing to Annie Reardon, in the matter of the estate of Annie Nelson, deceased, the real property described in the complaint. Annie Reardon, a daughter of said deceased, and C. O. Nelson, the surviving husband, are made defendants; and it is charged that they "entered into a conspiracy by fraud and falsehood to capture the said property, and with the intent by fraud and falsehood to defraud the plaintiffs out of their lawful interest as heirs at law in the estate of Annie Nelson, deceased"; that to accomplish their ends they "alleged, asserted, and gave out that the whole of the property of Annie Nelson, deceased, was community property," knowing such assertion to be untrue; that the defendant Nelson, claiming it to be community property while knowing that it was the separate property of his deceased wife, made a conveyance to his co-defendant of his title and interest therein as surviving husband; that the latter, as administratrix of the estate, caused it to be inventoried and returned to the probate court as community property, and petitioned the court for its distribution to herself as the grantee of the surviving husband of the deceased; that Annie Reardon by false testimony deceived the court, and obtained from it the decree of distribution in question. The defendants answered, denying the allegations of fraud, asserting that the property in question was in fact the community property of the spouses; that the decree of distribution which the plaintiffs attacked, not having been appealed from, was res adjudicata, and had been so held by the Supreme Court of this state in a proceeding brought by the plaintiff O'Brien, in which practically the same allegations as to its invalidity had been made as in the present suit. The matter came on for trial, and the plaintiffs introduced their testimony, at the conclusion of which the defendants moved the court for a nonsuit upon various grounds, viz., that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they had any title or interest to the property described in the complaint; that they had failed to prove any fraud in the procurement of the decree of distribution sought to be vacated; that the evidence introduced by the plaintiffs failed to show that the said property was the separate estate of Annie Nelson, deceased; and finally upon the ground that the questions involved were also res adjudicata by virtue of a second proceeding in the probate court of the county of Santa Clara brought by said P. J. O'Brien, praying for letters of administration upon the said estate to be issued to him. Defendants' motion for nonsuit was granted in general terms, and judgment entered thereon. Defendants appeal from the judgment, and from orders of the trial court denying: (1) A motion to correct their notice of intention to move for a new trial; and (2) their motion for a new trial.

So far as previous litigation in the matter of this estate is concerned, the record shows: That Annie Nelson, wife of the defendant C. O. Nelson, died in the county of Santa Clara in February, 1910. Thereafter the defendant Annie Reardon, a daughter of the deceased, applied for and was granted letters of administration upon her estate. An inventory of the property of the estate was filed, which included the real estate involved in this action, but which was stated to be the community property of the deceased and her surviving husband. The latter executed to the administratrix a conveyance of his title and interest in said real property, and in the decree of distribution subsequently entered it was distributed to the administratrix as such grantee. No appeal was taken from said decree, and it is now in full force and effect. Subsequently, and in December of the same year, the plaintiff herein, P. J. O'Brien, applied to the same probate court for letters of administration upon the estate of Annie Nelson, deceased, alleging that the real property already distributed to Annie Reardon in the proceeding above mentioned was in fact the separate property of the deceased and not community property, and that the court had been imposed upon by the fraudulent representations of said Reardon. The defendants herein filed a contest to said petition; and, after a trial of the questions involved, the probate court denied the petition, and found and decreed that the said real property was the community property of the deceased and her surviving husband, and that the decree of distribution theretofore made was legal, valid, and binding upon the plaintiffs herein as heirs at law of the deceased. Upon appeal by O'Brien the Supreme Court affirmed this second decree, and incidentally held that the decree previously entered, not having been appealed from, was valid and binding upon plaintiff O'Brien and other heirs at law. O'Brien v. Nelson, 164 Cal. 573, 129 Pac. 985.

Upon the trial of this cause the facts above narrated appeared in evidence; and testimony was also introduced upon the question of whether the real estate in suit was the separate property of the deceased or community property.

[1] As to the plaintiff O'Brien, it is immediately apparent that the motion for a nonsuit was properly granted upon the ground that the questions upon which his right to recover depend are res adjudicata by virtue of the prior proceeding brought by him and finally decided against him in the Supreme Court. It also seems clear that, if in fact the real property involved in this proceeding was the community property of Annie Nelson and C. O. Nelson, and that the testimony introduced in the plaintiffs' case so showed, then the allegations of fraud with which the complaint is so plentifully besprinkled fall of their own weight, and that neither of the plaintiffs made out any case.

[2] From the evidence so introduced it was shown that the deceased in the year 1880 (her name at that time being Annie O'Brien) was a widow, with three young children, earning her living by taking in washing. She became acquainted with the defendant Nelson, whom she subsequently married. In 1882, with the help of $100 borrowed from Nelson, she opened a small workingmen's boarding house, with a saloon attached, at Second street and Broadway in Oakland. In this venture she met with but indifferent success, for just prior to her marriage the following year she borrowed from Nelson a further sum of $200, which was used in the furnishing of the boarding house, of which, although consisting of only eight rooms, two were still completely unfurnished. Upon their marriage it was agreed between Nelson and his wife that the loan of $300 should not be repaid, but that whatever they possessed should be lumped together and considered as the family or community property. Shortly after his marriage Nelson obtained employment at $75 per month, his duties consisting of lighting the street lamps in the evening and extinguishing them in the early morning. During part of the day he tended bar in the saloon and helped around the house. His wages were regularly turned over to his wife (who, in the language of the testimony, "carried the purse"), and were by her placed with the money received from the boarding house and saloon, all expenses both of the family and the business being paid from such common fund. In 1884 a fire occurred in the saloon and boarding house, which destroyed part of the furniture. From an insurance company $500 was collected on account of this loss. At this time the Nelsons removed from Oakland to East San Jose, and purchased part of the real estate involved in this suit, the price of which was $1,600. Five hundred dollars was paid down, and a note secured by mortgage given for the balance. From this time on Mrs. Nelson, whose health was not as robust as formerly, did no more work other than attending to her household duties. On the other hand, Mr. Nelson was continuously employed. Part of the property so purchased was subsequently sold; there is evidence of the mortgage being paid off, and of a subsequent mortgage being taken on the property, which in turn was satisfied with money earned by Nelson. At the time of the purchase of the property the deed was taken in the name of Mrs. Nelson, and the habendum clause therein stated that the land was bought with the separate funds of the grantee and was to be held as her separate property, but this was done in the absence of her husband and unknown to him, and he never consented thereto. However, upon a subsequent exchange of part of this property for other land, the deed, although taken in the name of Mrs. Nelson, contained no clause designating it as her separate property; and it may also be mentioned that these deeds were taken at a time when the presumption of law prevailed that real property taken in the name of either spouse was community property. The remainder of the real property involved in this proceeding, consisting of lots in the county of Santa Cruz, was acquired by the spouses during coverture by purchase. All taxes on all the real estate were paid by money earned by Nelson, and the land was always assessed in his name. He never heard his wife claim that the property was other than community in character, and he always so regarded it.

With this evidence in the record upon the submission of the plaintiffs' case we think the trial court was entirely warranted in reaching the conclusion that the real property claimed by the plaintiffs to be the separate property of Annie Nelson, deceased, was in fact the community property of the deceased and her husband, that consequently the plaintiffs had failed to make out any case, and that their motion for nonsuit was properly granted.

If, as we hold, the nonsuit was correctly granted, it follows that the court did not err in denying the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, based as it was upon the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision, and that, even if we assume that the plaintiffs' motion to amend their notice of intention to move for a new trial should have been granted, they suffered no prejudice by its denial.

The judgment and orders are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

172 Cal. 123

BELL v. WILSON. (L. A. 3561.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1916. Rehearing Denied March 16, 1916.)

1. HOMESTEAD ⊂59 — PROPERTY SUBJECT — CONTIGUOUS TRACTS.

One residing on an 80-acre pre-emption of government land may include in his homestead contiguous land held by other title, there being no limitation as to the amount of land or number of contiguous tracts which may be lawfully impressed with the homestead characteristic, the excess over $5,000 alone being subject to the demands of creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 87; Dec. Dig. ⊂59.]

2. HOMESTEAD ⊂59 — PROPERTY SUBJECT — NATURE OF TITLE.

A homestead right does not depend on the character of the claimant's title, a mere naked possession being sufficient to support it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 87; Dec. Dig. ⊂59.]

3. HOMESTEAD ⊂81 — PROPERTY SUBJECT — NATURE OF TITLE.

A debtor may claim a homestead on public lands of the United States of which he has possession, and maintain his homestead rights against all the world, but the owner of the superior title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 114–118; Dec. Dig. ⊂81.]

4. HOMESTEAD ⊂154—ABANDONMENT—STATUTORY PROVISION.

Under the express provision of Civ. Code, § 1243, a homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment or a grant of the homestead.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 307; Dec. Dig. ⊂154.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Mary Jane Bell, administratrix with will annexed of the estate of Solomon Bell, deceased, against C. N. Wilson. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Will D. Gould, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Leon F. Moss, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action by a judgment creditor who seeks to have held void a homestead declared by the judgment debtor upon certain real estate. It is alleged that plaintiff has a judgment exceeding $9,000 against defendant, which defendant refuses to pay; that there is a homestead upon the property declared by defendant; that the homestead has not been canceled of record or abandoned, and that the lands affected by the homestead "would now be subject to the statutory lien of said judgment and would now be subject to levy of execution and sale for the satisfaction of the judgment were not the same now covered by said declaration of homestead." It is further alleged that the lands affected by the homestead declaration exceed in value $10,000 and are sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's judgment. Plaintiff does not elect to proceed under section 1245 of the Civil Code and subject this asserted excess value of the homestead over $5,000 to the payment of the judgment, but rests her whole action upon the legal contention that the homestead itself is void.

[1] In all essentials of form and substance the declaration of homestead is unquestionably good. Its illegality and consequent voidness plaintiff and appellant asserts consists in this: The homestead covered a single tract of land, consisting, however, by government subdivisions, of 80 acres upon which defendant had filed a pre-emption declaratory statement. South of this was another 80 acres and two fractional lots, upon which the defendant had a timber culture entry. Such was the condition of his titles at the time of the declaration of the homestead. The timber culture entry was afterwards canceled by a relinquishment, and defendant thereafter filed a homestead entry on the lands embraced in the former timber culture entry. The homestead entry in turn was canceled by a relinquishment and a state lien selection embracing the same land was filed on the same day. Appellant's contention is that as respondent had entered upon and pre-empted 80 acres of land, his right to declare a homestead was limited to that 80 acres, as upon that 80 acres only could he have resided within the contemplation of the law, and that his effort to embrace within his homestead claim 201 acres was, as to the excess over the 80 acres, void; that defendant could not have a dual residence which would entitle him to complete his pre-emption purchase and at the same time entitle him to homestead the adjoining land; that the homestead declaration declared the value of all the land to be $2,500, but made no separate declaration as to the value of the pre-emption claim, which alone could legally be affected by the homestead declaration, and that therefore the homestead declaration as to all of the land was invalid and void for this failure to specify value.

In support of this position appellant cites a number of decisions of the land department, sound in their legal declaration, to the effect that a claimant cannot pre-empt land under the United States laws while residing on other land, and that, consequently, as declared by this court in Tromans v. Mahlman, 111 Cal. 647, 44 Pac. 327, the declaration of homestead cannot be extended over land not resided on. Hesnard v. Plunkett, 6 S. D. 79, 60 N. W. 159, is also relied upon in support of appellant's contention.

But appellant quite misconceives the meaning of our homestead laws, which, as correctly construed, fail to sustain his position and fail equally to give any pertinency in this discussion to the decisions of the land office and of the Supreme Court of South Dakota in the case above cited. But before touching upon these matters, it should be pointed out that the evidence establishes that at the time of the declaration of homestead defendant had been married and was residing upon the 80 acres acquired by pre-emption, with two minor children. The land was not fenced. Defendant had filed an application for a certificate of purchase on the other portion of the land outside of the pre-emption 80 acres. He had a bee ranch and bought these other waste lands for the purpose of bee culture. He occupied these lands for that purpose, and with a pick had dug and planted 20 acres of eucalyptus and other trees upon the land. Furthermore, there is no evidence tending to show that defendant had not been in the exclusive possession and control of all the lands in controversy with his improvements thereon continuously from the time of the homestead declaration; and indeed appellant, as has been indicated, does not attack the homestead upon any evidentiary showing other than that which we have outlined. In other words, he contends that it is a legal impossibility for the defendant to have been able to occupy for purposes of homestead under the laws of the state of California any land other than the pre-emption 80 acres. This, as we have intimated, is the fundamental error into which he falls. There is no limitation in this state as to the amount of land or the number of tracts and parcels of land (provided they are contiguous) which may be lawfully impressed with the homestead characteristics. The limitation is upon the value of the land, and not upon the quantity or acreage. If the value of the land is proved to exceed $5,000, the homestead protection and exemption goes only to that amount, and the excess over is subject to the demands of the creditors. Brown v. Starr, 79 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 973, 12 Am. St. Rep. 180.

[2-4] Again, as was long ago decided in this state, the homestead in no wise depends upon the character of the title which the homestead claimant has. A mere naked possession, without other title, may be impressed with the homestead characteristic. Spencer v. Geissman, 37 Cal. 96, 99 Am. Dec. 248. Whatever the character of the claim or title which the declarant has at the time of making the declaration, the homestead right will attach to such claim or title, and every improvement in the title to and including its perfection will be impressed with the homestead characteristic. Alexander v. Jackson, 92 Cal. 519, 28 Pac. 593, 27 Am. St. Rep. 158; Brown v. Starr, supra; King v. Gotz, 70 Cal. 241, 11 Pac. 656; Gaylord v. Place, 98 Cal. 478, 33 Pac. 484. Imperfections in or even the absence of a title is a false quantity which must be excluded from consideration. Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 373. Consequently the character of the title to the land impressed with the homestead not being a matter which in the slightest concerns the creditor, a debtor can claim a homestead on public lands of the United States of which he has possession and maintain his homestead rights against all the world but the owner of the superior title. Watterson v. Bonner Company, 19 Mont. 554, 48 Pac. 1108, 61 Am. St. Rep. 527. And finally upon this matter it is to be pointed out that while in the early case of Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 220, 91 Am. Dec. 637, it was held that a homestead could be abandoned by nonuse—a construction which still obtains in some of the states—under the statute now in force and in force at the time of the declaration of this homestead, it can be abandoned only in the manner prescribed by statute, which is declared to be "by a declaration of abandonment, or a grant thereof, executed and acknowledged." Civ. Code, § 1243. Moreover, plaintiff has pleaded nonabandonment.

With these, our laws, before us, it must be quite apparent that there is nothing obnoxious to those laws in the declaration of homestead here under consideration. In other words, disregarding, as we must and do, the matter of title, or conceding that a title superior to the homestead claim was vested in the government of the United States to the lands lying outside of the pre-emption 80 acres, whatever title or possession the defendant did have in that outlying land was susceptible of being impressed with the homestead characteristic and was in fact impressed with it by his declaration and use. And this indeed has been directly decided in the similar case of Payne v. Cummings, 146 Cal. 426, 80 Pac. 620, 106 Am. St. Rep. 47, where the declaration of homestead covered 523 acres, including a pre-emption claim, a desert land claim, and water rights in which the claimant had a part interest.

The South Dakota case, to which reference has been made, may now be briefly considered. The facts in that case were that under the territorial laws of Dakota one might impress a homestead upon land not exceeding 160 acres. Of course the United States land laws provided for homesteads of an entirely different character, but limited the maximum acreage of those homesteads also to 160 acres. Plaintiff had pre-empted and secured a patent to 160 acres. Upon this 160 acres he declared a homestead under the territorial laws. He then undertook to secure to himself a homestead under the United States laws to an adjoining 160 acres of government land. To do this he sold 19 acres of his 160 acres homesteaded under the territorial law and moved his residence onto a corresponding 19 acres of the 160 acres, title to which he proposed to acquire under the United States homestead law. When the legality of the two homesteads was challenged he insisted that he was complying with the federal laws by living upon this 19 acres of the 160 acres, and, upon the other hand, that he was entitled to attach this 19 acres to the 141 acres of his territorial homestead, and thus retain his homestead exemption to 160 acres under the territorial law. For reasons so plain and obvious that they do not even require setting forth, the Supreme Court of South Dakota held that such a fraud would not be permitted. There is not even a resemblance in the situation presented in that case to that which confronts us here.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

172 Cal. 132

FLICKINGER v. WRENN INV. CO. et al.

(L. A. 3616.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1916. Rehearing Denied March 16, 1916.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⇐120 — SALE OF STOCK — OPTIONS.

A buyer of corporate stock under a contract stipulating that the seller at the option of the buyer at the expiration of one year will repurchase the stock, provided the buyer gives 10 days' notice before the expiration of the year of his intention to exercise the option, does not exercise his option so as to put the seller in default by merely serving on the seller the 10 days' notice, unaccompanied by any tender of the stock and demand for the repurchase thereof by the seller.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 495, 504; Dec. Dig. ⇐120.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐544 — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 661, 662, 952, providing that the judgment roll and the affidavits or bill of exceptions may be used on a hearing of a motion for new trial and shall constitute the record to be used on appeal, an appeal from an order granting a new trial after a nonsuit after the reopening of the case to permit plaintiff to introduce evidence to excuse his failure to perform a contract alleged in the complaint to have been performed by him, will be heard as against the objection that appellant has prepared no bill of exceptions to support his contentions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2412–2415, 2417–2420, 2422–2426, 2428, 2478, 2479; Dec. Dig. ⇐544.]

3. CONTRACTS ⇐346—PLEADING ⇐237—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE — AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS.

A complaint alleging performance by plaintiff of a contract is not sustained by evidence of a waiver by defendant of performance, but where the evidence shows a waiver the court in the interest of justice may allow an amendment to the complaint to conform to the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1714, 1718–1751; Dec. Dig. ⇐346; Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 603–619; Dec. Dig. ⇐237.]

4. EVIDENCE ⇐258—DECLARATIONS OF THIRD PERSONS—AGENCY.

Declarations made by a third person are not admissible to bind a party where there is a failure to show agency and authority of the third person to speak for the party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1006, 1007; Dec. Dig. ⇐258.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by J. C. Flickinger against the Wrenn Investment Company and others. From an order granting a new trial after nonsuit, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Geo. E. Whitaker and T. N. Harvey, both of Bakersfield, for appellants. W. W. Kaye and Alfred Siemon, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The defendants Wrenn Investment Company, a corporation, and O. C. Heck, were interested as stockholders in the Owners' Garage & Supply Company. To increase the working capital of this company and to secure the services of plaintiff they induced him to purchase 25 shares of the stock of the Owners' Garage & Supply Company at par and to take employment in that company as manager for the period of one year agreeing in writing that they (the defendants) would "at the option of the party of the second part (plaintiff), at the expiration of one year from the date hereof purchase from the said second party the said 25 shares of the capital stock of the said corporation for said sum of $2,500 * * * provided that said second party may give 10 days' notice before the expiration of said year of his intention to exercise said option."

In his complaint plaintiff set up these facts and pleaded further that:

"At the expiration of one year from the date of the said contract the said plaintiff exercised his option to sell and delivered the said 25 shares of the capital stock of the said Garage & Supply Company to the defendants for the sum of $2,500, and in accordance therewith gave to the defendants and to each of them 10 days' notice before the expiration of the said year of the intention of the plaintiff to exercise said option and thereupon tendered to the said defendants the said shares of stock and the said certificate No. 54."

The defendants met this complaint with certain admissions and denials, the essential admissions going to the execution of the contract and their failure to purchase the stock from plaintiff, their denials joining issue upon the allegations of the exercise of his option by plaintiff.

Upon the trial there was introduced in evidence plaintiff's written notification delivered to the defendants 10 days or more before the expiration of the year. The writing was a notification by plaintiff:

"That I intend to exercise the option given to me under agreement dated the 1st day of March, 1910, for the sale by me to you of 25 shares of the capital stock of the Owners' Garage & Supply Company for the sum of $2,500. Upon payment of the said sum to me on the 1st day of March, 1911, the said stock will be delivered to you."

It further appeared that plaintiff did nothing more in the matter until he brought his action months afterwards. Only upon the trial did he tender to defendants the certificate of stock.

[1] In this condition of the evidence defendants moved for a nonsuit upon the unassailable ground that plaintiff had not shown an exercise of his option so as to put defendants in default, but had shown merely a service upon defendants of the preliminary 10 days' notice without which he could not at the expiration of the year take the second necessary step of tender and demand; that this tender and demand he had never made, and the evidence showed that he had never made it.

The trial court expressing its conviction that the motion for a nonsuit must be granted permitted plaintiff to reopen his case and introduce evidence to excuse him for this failure. After this evidence was introduced the court granted the motion for a nonsuit. The plaintiff then moved for a new trial, which the court granted. It is from this last order that this appeal is taken.

[2] By respondent a preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal is made upon the ground that the appellants have prepared no bill of exceptions to support their contentions upon which alone they may be considered. The contention is groundless. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 952, 661, 662; Loucks v. Edmondson, 18 Cal. 203; Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304; Leonard v. Shaw, 114 Cal. 69, 45 Pac. 1012; Sprigg v. Barber, 122 Cal. 573, 55 Pac. 419; Byxbee v. Dewey, 128 Cal. 322, 60 Pac. 847; Frost v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 365, 132 Pac. 442.

[3] It is apparent that the court's order granting a new trial must have been based upon its conviction that the proffered evidence to receive which the case had been reopened was legally sufficient to show a waiver of the necessity of performance on the part of plaintiff because of the repudiation of their contract by defendants. This, of course, presents an entirely different cause of action from that relied on in the complaint which squarely rests upon full performance by plaintiff of the terms of the contract including the notice of intent to exercise the option and the exercise of the option itself. Conceivably, however, if the evidence were sufficient to show this waiver the court in the interest of justice might have permitted an amendment to conform to the proofs, and so have obviated the legal difficulty that a judgment cannot be sustained, unless the proof establishes the cause of action alleged in the complaint, even though a different cause of action be fully proven. Nichols v. Randall, 136 Cal. 426, 69 Pac. 26; Rogers v. Kimball, 121 Cal. 247, 53 Pac. 648; Schirmer v. Drexler, 134 Cal. 134, 66 Pac. 180; Kredo v. Phelps, 145 Cal. 526, 78 Pac. 1044. We pass on therefore to a consideration of the evidence introduced.

[4] The Wrenn Investment Company was a corporation. W. W. Kaye, one of the attorneys for plaintiff, was permitted to testify that he went to see defendant Wrenn, who he understood was carrying on negotiations looking to the sale of the Owners' Garage & Supply Company, and told him that Flickinger would not consent to a sale "unless something was done on the part of himself or the Wrenn Investment Company and Mr. Heck in regard to taking up this contract, which is the subject of action." Mr. Wrenn replied " that he or they would not entertain any proposition at all in regard to carrying out that contract. He said that before he would pay one cent or offer one cent to Mr. Flickinger on that stock he would take the whole concern out in the street and burn it." Mr. Kaye did not know what if any position Mr. Wrenn occupied in the Wrenn Investment Company; did not know whether or not he had any authority to represent the company or to represent the defendant Heck; all that he knew was that he purported to speak for the Wrenn Investment Company, but he knew nothing about his authorization or lack of authorization so to do. Another witness, E. P. Hoisington, in the employ of the defendants Wrenn and Heck, testified that he overheard Mr. Wrenn and Mr. Heck in conversation state that "they did not intend to pay Mr. Flickinger the amount that became due on this contract." Both of these conversations took place in the summer of 1910, and, according to the testimony of plaintiff, he was informed of them in July, 1910. Hoisington was not nor is it contended that he was, authorized to receive any communication on behalf of plaintiff nor authorized by the defendants to represent them or to communicate to anybody anything which he had overheard. All of this was some 9 or 10 months before the arrival of the time for the exercise of the option. Flickinger was at the time a director of the Wrenn Investment Company. After receiving this information he did not make the matter of it a subject of inquiry before the board of directors, of which he was a member. He said nothing and did nothing in the matter. Indeed, so far from regarding the contract as repudiated, when under familiar principles his right of action would immediately have arisen, he permitted the full time to run and thereafter, instituting his action, formally pleaded due performance upon his part. Touching the conversation testified to as having been had between Mr. Wrenn and Mr. Kaye, there is an utter failure of evidence to show the agency and authority of Wrenn to speak either for the corporation or for defendant Heck, and without such authority shown whatever may have been the declarations they were inadmissible in evidence to bind either of the defendants. Garfield v. Knight's Ferry W. Co., 14 Cal. 35; Grigsby v. Clear Lake Water Co., 40 Cal. 396; Smith v. Liverpool W. Ins. Co., 107 Cal. 432, 40 Pac. 540; Peterson Bros. v. Mineral King Fruit Co., 140 Cal. 624, 74 Pac. 162; 1 Clarke & Skyles, Agency, p. 1027; Reinhard, Agency, § 353; 31 Cyc. 1654.

It is unnecessary to pursue the consideration further or to discuss the additional proposition ably presented by appellant to the effect that even if defendants had repudiated their contract, nevertheless plaintiff by his course of procedure shown by his complaint continued to treat the contract as in existence, and, so doing, performance upon his part became incumbent, and he failed to perform. Hammon on Contracts, p. 896; 3 Page on Contracts, § 1438; 3 Elliott on Contracts, § 2033; New Brunswick, etc., R. Co. v. Wheeler (C. C.) 12 Fed. 377; Smith v. Georgia, etc., Co., 113 Ga. 975, 39 S. E. 410; Bernstein v. Meech, 130 N. Y. 354, 29 N. E. 255; Roeblings Sons v. Lock Stitch, etc., Co., 130 Ill. 660, 22 N. E. 518; Zuck v. McClure, 98 Pa. 545.

Without consideration of this last proposition sufficient has been said and shown to establish the error into which the trial court fell in treating the proffered evidence as in any legal and sufficient way tending to establish plaintiff's case.

The order granting the new trial is therefore reversed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

172 Cal. 120

CORNISH et al. v. DICKEY. (L. A. 3595.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1916.)

INJUNCTION ⊂=56 — DISCLOSURE OR USE OF TRADE SECRETS—LISTS OF CUSTOMERS.

Where the defendant, a driver of plaintiffs' bakery wagon, furnished his own horse and harness and solicited patronage in his district, but was furnished by the plaintiffs with a wagon bearing their name and with lists of customers secured by advertising, and the defendant came each morning to the bakery for supplies and returned unsold goods each evening, receiving as compensation 25 per cent. of his sales, he was not the independent owner of a bakery route, and such a transaction did not constitute a sale, but he was an employé of the plaintiff, and his abuse of confidential relations in taking employment with a rival concern and using the list of names furnished by the plaintiffs to solicit their patrons and supply them with the products of his new employer was improper and would be enjoined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 110; Dec. Dig. ⊂=56.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Thomas J. Cornish and another against W. S. Dickey. From a judgment for defendant, the plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Kaye & Siemon, of Bakersfield, for appellants. R. H. Wilson, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action for injunction. Plaintiffs conduct a bakery business. For the increase of their trade and for the convenience of their customers they districted the city of Bakersfield, in which their business was conducted, into routes, and the business of each route was carried on in the following manner. Plaintiffs furnished the driver of the route with a delivery wagon bearing conspicuously the name "Cornish's Bakery." The driver supplied his own horse and harness. He called at the bakery each morning, and placed in his wagon the daily supplies for the customers. At the end of the day he returned to the bakery the unsold goods, and received for his compensation 25 per cent. of the sales. The driver solicited patronage in his district. The bakery advertised in the public prints that it maintained a free delivery, and that its bakery wagon would call daily, and when the patrons by letter or by telephone indicated their desire that the wagon should so call, a notification to this effect with the name and address of the new patron, was given to the driver. In this way the business was fostered and increased. The defendant in this case was the driver of one of these Cornish's Bakery wagons operating in a prescribed district or "route." With the consent of the bakery he purchased the rights of his predecessor for $250, this including the horse and harness. He had been conducting his business, as it was understood that it should be conducted, with the bakery products of the Cornish's Bakery only. Suddenly, and without notification to the plaintiffs he ceased driving the Cornish's Bakery wagon and delivering the Cornish's Bakery goods and took employment in a rival bakery operating one of its wagons over the same route and soliciting and supplying his former patrons and the patrons of the Cornish's Bakery with the products of its rival. To restrain this conduct on his part the action was brought.

The position of the defendant, which was taken by the court and expressed in its findings, is that he was the independent owner of this bakery route, entitled to serve whom he pleased, as he pleased, and with what products he pleased; that he was not an agent or employé of Cornish's Bakery and stood in no confidential relations to the plaintiffs which rendered it at all improper for him to change his employment, and in so doing to supply his customers from the rival bakery, and that thus there was no abuse of the confidential relations existing between employer and employé. This position, however, does not find support in the evidence. It was necessary for the defendant to establish that his relations with the plaintiffs were such as to justify him in acting as he did. Conceivably this could be done by showing that he was an independent operator; that he purchased his supplies daily from the bakery; was at liberty to purchase supplies from any other bakery; and that he then peddled the goods at his own pleasure and price along his chosen way. But there is no showing to this effect. He did not purchase the goods. Each day he took out a given quantity, returning, without cost to himself, the unsold portion and receiving a commission of 25 per cent. of the prices of the goods sold. Such a transaction in no wise constituted a sale, and therefore in no wise made defendant an independent purchaser. In re Columbus Buggy Co., 143 Fed. 861, 74 C. C. A. 611; Eldridge v. Benson, etc., 7 Cush. (Mass.) 485.

When consideration is paid to the undisputed facts that plaintiffs were actively engaged in increasing their own business; that they advertised to this end; that they made over the list of their customers to defendant, increasing the list as new patrons applied, that defendant was really employed as a sales agent on commission; and that it was to his interest, as well as to his principals' interest, to develop the business in every legitimate way; that his wagon was a Cornish's Bakery wagon; that he advertised and used only the products of the Cornish's Bakery—it makes the case too plain for the need of further discussion. The facts fit most aptly and appositely with those of Empire Steam Laundry v. Lozier, 165 Cal. 95, 130 Pac. 1180, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159.

The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(172 Cal. 129)

FOUNTAIN v. WILLARD-SLATER CO. et al. (L. A. 3638.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1916.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⟸55 — INJURY TO SERVANT OF SUBCONTRACTOR—LIABILITY OF GENERAL CONTRACTOR.

Where a building contractor furnished as required by the contract all the materials and appliances used by a subcontractor and his employés, and the contractor erected steps in the building for the workmen in general, an employé of a subcontractor was not a mere licensee when using the steps in the performance of his work; the steps being the most accessible and direct method of doing the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 68; Dec. Dig. ⟸55.]

2. NEGLIGENCE ⟸71—INJURY TO SERVANT OF SUBCONTRACTOR — LIABILITY OF GENERAL CONTRACTOR—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

An employé of a subcontractor who used in carrying on his work steps erected by the general contractor pursuant to the contract with the owner binding him to furnish appliances was not negligent for failing to use a ladder which had been used in doing work in another part of the building; the steps being the most direct method of doing the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 98; Dec. Dig. ⟸71.]

3. NEGLIGENCE ⟸71—INJURY TO SERVANT OF SUBCONTRACTOR — LIABILITY OF GENERAL CONTRACTOR—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a stairway is tendered by a general contractor to an employé of a subcontractor as fit for the use he is making of it, the employé is not guilty of contributory negligence merely because he does not pick out some particular part of the stairway to use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 98; Dec. Dig. ⟸71.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by John W. Fountain against the Willard-Slater Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant named, it appeals. Affirmed.

John Murray Marshall, Walter Gould Lincoln, and Perry F. Backus, all of Los Angeles (Roy V. Reppy, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. Paul M. Nash and Le Roy D. Barnett, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant Willard-Slater Company, under contract with the Los Angeles city school district, was erecting for it a school building in Los Angeles. It engaged defendant Venable to do the work of plastering this building. Plaintiff in turn was employed by Venable as a hodcarrier. In the building was a flight of stairs. The permanent stringers or supports of the steps were in place and across, and resting upon them, were temporary treads of Oregon pine, one inch thick by six inches wide, laid flatwise. The stairway was eleven feet five inches wide. The stringers were at each end and in the middle. There was thus between the stringers an unsupported space of over five feet upon each side of the middle stringer. The treads themselves were covered with the ordinary litter deposited in the process of the construction of such a building. Plaintiff was carrying a hod full of mortar up these steps when a tread broke, precipitating him to the floor below, and inflicting the injuries complained of. The tread which broke was not a clear board, but contained several knots, and the break was through these knots. Plaintiff sued his immediate employer, Venable, and the general contractor. Judgment was given against the general contractor alone, and that corporation appeals.

[1] Upon appeal it argues that plaintiff in using the steps was a mere licensee to whom it owed no especial duty; that the steps were not an appliance furnished to Venable and his employés, and that they used them at their peril. In answer to this there may be first pointed out the finding of the court that the defendant Willard-Slater Company furnished all the materials and appliances which were used by the defendant Venable and his employés, including the plaintiff. Defendant not only so furnished these materials and appliances, but it was a part of its express duty under its contract with the city so to furnish them, and it is not denied by the pleading that appellant did furnish all the materials and appliances which were to be used by all of the workmen. Moreover, it is undisputed that the steps were made by defendant's own workmen. And finally Mr. Slater, of the defendant company, testified:

"The temporary steps were placed there for the workmen in general to be able to get from one part of the building to the other easily."

[2] It is argued that a ladder had been supplied, and that plaintiff could have climbed this ladder, and not used the steps. To this it may be answered that it was not incumbent upon him to do so, and it was not negligence for him not to do so. It appears that there had been a ladder which plaintiff, with other hodcarriers, had used when the plastering was being done in another part of the building. At the time of the accident the plastering was being done upon the first landing of the staircase. The ladder had been taken away, and the steps were the most accessible and direct mode and method of reaching the plasterers where they were then at work. Plaintiff was given no warning against using the stairway. Other hodcarriers and other workmen did use it, and the defect in the tread which broke was concealed by the rubbish. Thus plaintiff was not a mere licensee using instrumentalities not designed for his use and so using them at his peril. He was using an appliance which it was the duty of appellant to furnish, and which appellant did furnish, for the use of all the workmen about the building. Thus such cases as Fanjoy v. Seales, 29 Cal. 244, and Ryan v. Toop, 114 App. Div. 165, 99 N. Y. Supp. 590, differ radically in their facts from the case at bar, and render the legal considerations there set forth themselves inapplicable. In Fanjoy v. Seales, the plaintiffs, who were employed to paint a house, supported their scaffold by a cornice, which cornice broke. The owner had done nothing to induce them so to attach their scaffolding, and the declaration of this court was that the cornice was not designed for the purpose for which it was used. Its use was not suggested or invited by the owner, and he was not responsible for the injury which resulted from the breaking of the support. Similar facts and a similar declaration of law are found in Ryan v. Toop. There the subcontractor for the plastering of a building, which building was in process of construction, himself ordered his employé to plaster along a stairway, and the employé attempted to do so by standing on the iron treads of the stairs. These treads were not bolted. They were not intended to be walked on. They were designed to serve merely as a sheathing for stone treads not in place. One of these unbolted iron treads gave way, and the servant was injured. The holding of the court that the contractor was not liable for this misuse and uninvited use of the stairway was clearly correct, and as clearly inapplicable to the facts of this case.

[3] It is said that it would be difficult to find a clearer case of contributory negligence than that shown by the facts in this case, this clear contributory negligence consisting in the failure of the plaintiff to walk up the stairs along the line of the middle supporting stringer, the testimony showing that he attempted to ascend the stairs about halfway between the middle stringer and the end stringer. We state the point to show that it has not been overlooked, but we cannot agree that, where a staircase is tendered to an employé as fit for the use he is making of it, he is guilty of contributory negligence if he does not pick out some particular part or portion of the stairway to use in his ascent. The general duty of furnishing reasonably safe machinery and appliances is not subject to any such limitation.

None of the other questions presented by appellant call for special consideration.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

172 Cal. 147

In re CASPAR'S ESTATE.

BABIK v. AINLEY.

(L. A. 4284.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1916. Rehearing Denied March 16, 1916.)

1. WILLS ⇐324—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY TO TAKE TO JURY.

The rules with regard to the sufficiency of evidence to justify its submission to the jury are the same in a contested will case as in any civil action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 225, 767–770; Dec. Dig. ⇐324.]

2. NEW TRIAL ⇐72—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Although the evidence upon the issues is substantial and conflicting, it is the duty of the trial judge to set aside a verdict at least once, if his conviction is that the verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 146–148; Dec. Dig. ⇐72.]

3. TRIAL ⇐178—RIGHT OF COURT TO DIRECT VERDICT.

The right of a court to direct a verdict is, touching the condition of the evidence, the same as the right to grant a nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent Dig. §§ 401–403; Dec. Dig. ⇐178.]

4. TRIAL ⇐165—NONSUIT—POWER OF COURT.

A court may grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to the plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, there is not sufficient evidence to support a verdict for the plaintiff if such verdict were given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374; Dec. Dig. ⇐165.]

5. NEW TRIAL ⇐72—GROUNDS—POWER OF COURT.

The court may grant a new trial even where there is substantial evidence to sustain the verdict, if it believes that the evidence preponderates against the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 146–148; Dec. Dig. ⟸72.]

6. New Trial ⟸70, 110—Grounds—Duty of Court.

The court is under compunction to order a new trial, and may do this of its own motion when the evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent.Dig. §§ 142, 143, 231; Dec.Dig. ⟸70, 110.]

7. Wills ⟸324—Direction of Verdict — Review.

An order directing a verdict for proponents in a will contest held error, in that there was a substantial conflict of evidence on the issue of undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 225, 767–770; Dec. Dig. ⟸324.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Petition by Sahmin Babik to revoke the probate of the will of Shaopin Caspar. There was a verdict for the contestant which was set aside, and, on second trial, upon motion of the proponent, the court directed a verdict in favor of the proponent, and, from a judgment confirming the probate of the will and dismissing the petition to revoke that probate, the contestant appeals. Reversed.

Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Daniel M. Hunsaker, I. Henry Harris, Hunsaker & Britt, and Hunsaker & Harris, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. D. H. Laubersheimer and Trippet, Chapman & Biby, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Shaopin Caspar died testate in the county of Los Angeles and his will was probated. Appellant, Sahmin Babik, as his cousin and one of his heirs at law, instituted this contest to revoke the probate of the will. Trial was had before a jury, and the issues were submitted to that jury for determination. They were all found in favor of the contestant. Subsequently the court set aside the verdict of the jury on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain it. A second trial was had before a second jury, and the evidence presented to that jury was (under stipulation) precisely the same evidence which had been considered by the former jury. Upon motion of the proponent, the court directed the second jury to find all of the issues in favor of the proponent, with the exception of the issue of relationship. The jury so found. Judgment thereupon was entered affirming the probate of the will, and the petition to revoke that probate was dismissed. This appeal is taken from the judgment so rendered, and it involves a consideration of the correctness of the court's ruling in directing a verdict. Necessarily it demands a presentation of the evidence relied upon by contestant, which presentation will in due course be made in as brief terms as possible.

[1, 2] Before doing so, however, it is necessary to consider the law governing the conduct of a court in a case such as is here presented. The rules of evidence and the weight to be accorded to the evidence are the same in a contested will case as in any other civil case, and those rules apply when the question goes to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify its submission to the jury. Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252. Without elaboration of the authorities, and contenting ourselves with citing a few of them, the following propositions may be taken as determined beyond controversy: In this state, though the evidence pro and con upon the issues be substantial and conflicting, it is the duty of the trial judge to set aside a verdict at least once if his conviction is that that verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence. Estate of Carriger, 104 Cal. 81, 37 Pac. 785; Estate of Motz, 136 Cal. 558, 69 Pac. 294; Estate of Everts, 163 Cal. 449, 125 Pac. 1058. We say at least once. We are not to be understood as saying that the court's powers and duties in this regard are exhausted by its first action. Our consideration here is not complicated by that question. With the statement that the number of times that a trial judge may so exercise his powers to set aside a verdict in a given case is in many states controlled by statute, as in this state it is not, it will suffice upon the general question to cite: Clark v. Barney Dumping Co. (C. C.) 109 Fed. 235; In re Geiser (D. C.) 129 Fed. 237; Daniels v. Leonard, 105 Ga. 841, 32 S. E. 122; Dethrage v. City of Rome, 125 Ga. 802, 54 S. E. 654; Howard Express Co. v. Wile, 64 Pa. 201; Van Doren v. Wright, 65 Minn. 80, 67 N. W. 688, 68 N. W. 22; Wilkie v. Roosevelt, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 206, 2 Am. Dec. 149; Van Blarcom v. Kip, 26 N. J. Law, 351; Gibson v. Hill, 23 Tex. 77.

[3, 4] Next, it is beyond controversy that the right of a court to direct a verdict is, touching the condition of the evidence, absolutely the same as the right of the court to grant a nonsuit. It may grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given. Of course, if in such a case no motion for nonsuit has been made and the issues have been turned over to the consideration of the jury, and that jury has rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff, such verdict being unsupported by any substantial evidence, it becomes the imperative duty of the court to set it aside. Estate of Arnold, supra; Estate of Chevallier, 159 Cal. 161, 113 Pac. 130; Marron v. Marron, 19 Cal. App. 326, 125 Pac. 914. But when, and only when, the evidence of the proponent is thus insufficient, the court may and should, as has been said, grant a nonsuit, and may and should on motion direct a verdict. Thus in Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 472, 123 Pac. 267, it is declared that:

"A directed verdict is proper, unless there be substantial evidence tending to prove in favor of plaintiff all the controverted facts necessary to establish his case. In other words, a directed verdict is proper whenever, upon the whole evidence, the judge would be compelled to set a contrary verdict aside as unsupported by the evidence. To warrant a court in directing a verdict, it is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence; but, to deprive the court of the right to exercise this power, if there be a conflict, it must be a substantial one."

To the same effect are the cases last above cited, as well as Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 82 Pac. 57; Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 257, 104 Pac. 6; Estate of Chevallier, supra; Sill v. Ceschi, 167 Cal. 698, 140 Pac. 949.

[5, 6] The rule as to directed verdicts is not that a verdict may be directed whenever the evidence is such that upon motion the court would grant a new trial. The court may grant a new trial even when there is substantial evidence to sustain the verdict, if it believes that the evidence preponderates against the verdict. It is under compulsion to order a new trial, and may do this of its own motion when the evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain the verdict. This is the meaning of the language in Estate of Baldwin, supra, where it is said that a directed verdict is proper "whenever, upon the whole evidence, the judge would be compelled to set a contrary verdict aside as unsupported by the evidence." For a detailed and satisfactory discussion of this proposition reference may be made to McDonald v. Metropolitan Street Ry. Co., 167 N. Y. 66, 60 N. E. 282.

To sum up, then, the situation is this: If contestant did present evidence of so substantial a character as that, notwithstanding the conflict raised by proponent's evidence, it would support a verdict in favor of contestant, it would have been error for the court to have granted a motion for a nonsuit, and it was error upon the part of the court to direct a verdict for proponent.

To the consideration of contestant's evidence we thus come, bearing in mind that every intendment is to be indulged in favoring any reasonable inference which can be drawn and thus might have been drawn by the jury from the direct and positive evidence itself.

Shaopin Caspar was an Armenian, born in Adrianople, Turkey, in 1861. There his early life was spent. Sahmin Babik was his cousin, two years younger. His family also resided in Adrianople, and the families of the two cousins were on intimate terms. Caspar and Babik were playmates. Caspar's parents died when young and he received little or no education. Babik, upon the other hand, was well educated and had held positions of distinction in the Bulgarian government. When 18 years of age, Caspar came to the United States and settled in Lawrence, Mass. There he lived for over 25 years. Before departing for the United States, he made a journey to the city where his cousin Babik was then residing to bid him good-bye. By industry, frugality, and business ability, Caspar in Massachusetts achieved comparative affluence. When he died in Los Angeles in 1913, at the age of 52 years, his estate was appraised at $30,000. For years he was a photographer in Lawrence and did a prosperous business, employing several assistants. In 1911 he moved from Lawrence, Mass., to Los Angeles, and died a year and a half thereafter. He never married, nor did he seem to have sought the society of women. He was a Mason and an Odd Fellow, and his social activities were confined within the orbits of these orders. He was prudent, frugal, and respected.

In 1904 Babik came to America. He wrote to Caspar from New York advising him that he was without a position and asked Caspar's advice. Caspar expressed great delight upon receiving this letter. He had seen no blood relative for 22 years or more. He wrote a cordial reply to his dear cousin, and Babik then went to Lawrence, where the meeting between the cousins was most cordial and affectionate. Babik was married, and Caspar gave him a position in his studio and provided him and his wife with a home. He appeared proud of his cousin, of his education, and of the high positions he had occupied, including a secretaryship to the King of Bulgaria, and frequently spoke of these matters to his friends. He made Babik acquainted with his brethren of the Masonic Order, introducing him as his cousin and securing his election to membership. In many ways he expressed more than mere affection and admiration for his cousin, declaring his intention to provide for him in his life and at his death as being one of his nearest relatives and the one to whom he was fondly devoted.

In 1905 Emily Ainley, proponent of the will and the sole beneficiary thereunder, arrived in Lawrence with her husband, Sam Ainley. Mrs. Ainley was an immoral and designing woman. Sam Ainley was a complacent husband, if not worse. The two conspired to get Caspar in their clutches and subject him to their domination. This was to be accomplished by the seduction of Caspar, and to the accomplishment of this end, with the connivance and procurement of her husband, Mrs. Ainley set herself. She was the janitress in charge of the hallways of the building in which Caspar's studio was situated. She was much younger than Caspar. She was frequently and unnecessarily in his room. She accomplished her purpose and became the mistress of the well-to-do bachelor. The relationship Caspar admitted, with epithets of contempt for the complacent husband, but at that time he regarded the woman as nothing more than his mistress. Mrs. Ainley did not conceal the fact that her designs were meretricious and mercenary. She said that Caspar had a lot of money and she might as well have it as anybody else; that she proposed to get it even if she had to work hard to do it. The relationship between the two seemed to have been fairly well recognized in Lawrence, and a sister-in-law of Mrs. Ainley protested against it. In 1909 the Ainleys came to Pasadena, Cal., Caspar paying their fare. On reaching California both husband and wife importuned Caspar to join them. The woman wrote frequently, indeed almost daily. One letter would be couched in terms of fond endearment and longing; the next would contain threats that she would go back to Massachusetts "and show you what I can do to you" if he did not come out. Ainley likewise wrote, and an extract from one of his letters is as follows:

"Mr. Caspar, why do you stay away? You have got enough money. What do you want staying in Lawrence, ruining your health in that old shack. This is Pasadena, the heaven on earth. You want to come out and see it. My wife will take you around. Also my wife. I can't do anything with her, as she has lost her health since she came out here. Every night she won't sleep, she is crying and sobbing, and in the daytime she is always thinking of you. I think it will be well for you and will help Emily for you to come out here."

Caspar was distressed over these letters. He showed them to his friends. He declared that they were bothering him; that nearly every letter he got from them asked for money. He became nervous and timid over their threats; he was afraid they would drag him into court. He had never been in court and would give anything to avoid going. He consulted an attorney. He did not want his good name destroyed. He was advised to go to California and see the Ainleys and try and fix the matter up. In 1910 he did go to California and was gone three weeks. Upon his return he intimated, if he did not declare, that he had resumed his illicit intercourse with Mrs. Ainley, with the knowledge of her husband. After his return to Lawrence, Mrs. Ainley continued to write to him. In 1911 Babik was in France, and Caspar a second time joined the Ainleys in California and lived with them until his death. He built a bungalow for the Ainleys, installed them in it, and lived there with them. He became Mrs. Ainley's devoted slave, fetching and carrying, doing servile and menial duties, and was, according to the medical testimony, a masachist—her love-slave. Changes in his demeanor, deportment, and dress were noted. There is testimony of the blandishments and endearments which she practiced upon him. He was "just like her maid." The explanation of both the Ainleys of this conduct is that it was sexually harmless because Caspar had declared that he was impotent from childhood. Upon one occasion Mrs. Ainley declared that she detested Caspar, but that she proposed to get his money. "He has got more money than anybody has any idea of, and he is dead in love with me."

In 1912 Caspar seems to have become nervous, excitable, disheartened, melancholy, absent-minded, preoccupied, and negligent in attire, while before he had been neat. Notwithstanding his years, if it be true that "a man is as old as his arteries," he was rapidly approaching senile decay, for, though he died at the age of 52, the cause of his death was brain lesion following arterial sclerosis. During this time his cousin Babik wrote to him, asking him to lend money to aid him in a business venture. He repudiated Babik in terms of hostility and denied that Babik was related to him. In the latter part of January he was taken to a hospital. He had complained of constipation. While in the hospital the will in question was executed. In the hospital he was stricken with a cerebral hemorrhage. While suffering from this hemorrhage, but after the execution of the will, he was taken back to the Ainley home, and there, five days later, he died. The hospital charts during the days he was there showed a marked failure of physical powers and control. He could not retain his urine; he vomited; he was kept on a low diet—eggs and milk, which he could not retain. Mrs. Ainley was constantly at the hospital and in attendance on him. Frequently before her he expressed to the attending doctor, who had been called in by Mrs. Ainley and who was not the physician who had previously treated Caspar, his desire to make his will. This physician summoned D. H. Laubersheimer, an attorney at law, for that purpose, and in the hospital and under these circumstances and in the presence of Mrs. Ainley, Mr. Ainley, Mrs. Ainley's mother, Dr. Cook, and a friend of the Ainleys, George Shaw, and Mr. Laubersheimer, the will was drawn by Caspar, devising and bequeathing all of his estate "to my dear friend Emily Ainley to be hers forever," and appointing her sole executrix to serve without bonds. The testimony of these witnesses, all favorable to the proponent, is that they were all present at Caspar's request. The attorney upon asking the sick man if he desired to make a will was met with the response that he did not desire to make a will, but that he desired to adopt Mrs. Ainley. Whereupon the attorney asked either Dr. Cook or the whole assemblage, "Is this man competent?" Receiving a favorable answer and proceeding to interrogate Caspar, and learning from him the nature of the will which he proposed to make, he asked him, "Has any one influenced you to make this will?" The will was thus reduced to writing and presented to Caspar for his signature, with the surprising result that it was found that Caspar could not write his own name. He had suffered a brain lesion, the immediate effect of which was partial paralysis and aphasia. He was able to write in proper order "C-a" or "C-a-s" of his name, but could not remember, and so could not write any more of it, or, if he could remember, he could not form the familiar letters. Notwithstanding his serious condition, the will was not only executed, but on that day he was removed from the hospital to the home of the Ainleys, where five days thereafter he died.

An appellate tribunal sitting to review asserted errors at law always regrets the necessity which here confronts us of presenting and analyzing matters of evidence. It regrets the necessity because the analysis of the evidence may be and frequently is misunderstood to be an expression of the court's views as to the weight of the evidence. We are here compelled to set forth contestant's evidence for the single and sole purpose of determining whether it has legal weight and substantiability in and of itself, and without regard to the conflicting evidence to support the issues tendered by contestant, and what has been said and what may be said is to be construed, therefore, solely from this point of view, and not at all as expressing the court's opinion touching the question whether with contestant or with respondent lies the preponderance upon a review of all the evidence in the case. We are not here concerned with the conflicting evidence introduced by proponent. We repeat, we are concerned simply with the determination of the question as to whether the direct evidence introduced by contestant, with the reasonable inferences permissible to a jury to draw therefrom, would have sustained the verdict of the jury in favor of the contestant. If it does, the court's action in directing a verdict against contestant is grave error.

[7] We think upon this proposition that the summary of the evidence above given, omitting as that summary does many other evidentiary matters and many reasonable inferences which appellant argues are deducible from that evidence, speaks for itself upon the proposition, without need of lengthy argument; the illicit relation between the deceased and the beneficiary (In re Flint, 100 Cal. 391, 34 Pac. 863; Smith v. Henline, 174 Ill. 184, 51 N. E. 227; McClure v. McClure, 86 Tenn. 173, 6 S. W. 44), the beneficiary's expressions of intent to secure the deceased's property, the methods which she adopted to this end, her control and his sex bondage, his repudiation of his blood relatives and disavowal of relationship, the changes in his demeanor, deportment, and character, his physical and mental breakdown at the time of the execution of the will, in and of themselves furnish sufficient and substantial evidence to support contestant's position that the will was the product of a mind upon which undue influence was exercised in the very matter of the testamentary act by the Ainleys. True it is that the opposing testimony is to the effect that the testator was of sound and disposing mind at the time of the execution of the will; that he was not acting under duress or undue influence; that Mrs. Ainley had come into his lonely life and had taken the place to him of a daughter, as evidenced by his expressed desire to adopt her; that he had ceased to care for his cousin, the contestant, because his cousin was incessantly seeking to borrow money from him; that his repudiation of the cousin was not so much a repudiation of the relationship as a declaration of his loss of interest in the man. But when all this has been said, and everything else which could be said upon the question, it does not for one moment militate against the proposition that there is a substantial conflict of evidence upon the matter.

Such being the situation, the court erred in directing its jury. It was the duty of the court under the circumstances to have submitted the cause a second time for the jury's determination, and then, a second time, should a motion for a new trial have been made, to act in accordance with the dictates of the law.

We are not here confronted, as has been said, with the conflict between the constitutional right of a litigant to the determination of a jury and the duty of a court to set aside the verdict of that jury where in its judgment the evidence preponderates against the verdict. The fact that the question is new in this state bears highest testimony to the judicial fairness of trial judges in the matter. We have heretofore cited some of the conflicting decisions upon the matter and mentioned that in some of the states the right of the trial judge to set aside successive verdicts of juries upon the same evidence is controlled by statute. This could happily be done by the Legislature in this state, and the matter thus removed from the need of judicial consideration, which, however, we repeat, is not pressed upon us here and now.

The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

172 Cal. 104

MEYER v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 17.
(Sac. 2193.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1916. Rehearing Denied March 13, 1916.)

1. DRAINS ⇐82 — RECLAMATION DISTRICTS — SUITS AGAINST.

Under Pol. Code, § 3462, as amended by St. 1911, p. 644, providing for hearing of objections to assessments levied in behalf of reclamation districts, the same to be filed with the boards of supervisors, and for action by any person aggrieved by the decision of the board, but that no objection to the assessment shall be allowed, unless it shall have been made in writing to the board of supervisors, only objections going to the jurisdiction of the board to levy the assessment and those filed in writing can be considered in the action provided therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 81, 83–87; Dec. Dig. ⟸82.]

2. Appeal and Error ⟸1011—Review—Decisions.

A finding of fact by the trial court on conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3989; Dec. Dig. ⟸1011.]

3. Drains ⟸76—Reclamation Districts—Assessments.

The report of commissioners of a reclamation district, which provided for drainage canals and pumping plant on which an assessment is based, is not bad because it did not specify the cost of a right of way for the same, as the right of way might be donated or the district have other funds with which to pay for the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76–81; Dec. Dig. ⟸76.]

4. Drains ⟸76—Reclamation Districts—Assessments.

In such case, the failure of the reports to specify the width at the top of the canals or the slopes of the sides will not invalidate the assessment where the total number of cubic yards to be excavated was given, and from the data furnished an engineer might ascertain the width at the top of the canal and the slope.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76–81; Dec. Dig. ⟸76.]

5. Drains ⟸76—Reclamation Districts—Assessments.

A statement in the report of commissioners of a reclamation district providing for a 12-inch pump to be run by electricity with necessary housing, etc., is sufficient under Pol. Code, § 3459, requiring statement of the work to be done to furnish basis for assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76–81; Dec. Dig. ⟸76.]

6 Drains ⟸82—Reclamation Districts—Assessments.

Where an assessment for a reclamation district was attacked by the action provided for by Pol. Code, § 3462, as amended by St. 1911, p. 644, the insufficiency of the report of the commissioners of the district relating to improvements cannot be questioned where plaintiffs were not injuriously affected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 81, 83–87; Dec. Dig. ⟸82.]

7. Drains ⟸76—Reclamation Districts—Trustees—Duty of—Reports.

An assessment for a reclamation district based on the report of the commissioners of the district which provided for brush and rock revetments and specified the cost of the same, is not bad because the dimensions of such revetments which were to protect levees were not given, for as a reclamation district is a continuing agency and commissioners are a continuing board to protect the lands, it is proper to leave something to their discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76–81; Dec. Dig. ⟸76.]

8. Drains ⟸76—Reclamation Districts—Assessments—Statute.

Pol. Code, § 3455, as amended by St. 1911, p. 642, relating to an assessment for the payment of debts for previous work requires a description of the levees and other reclamation work constructed, while section 3459 merely requires a statement of the work done. The old levees built were visible, and maps and profiles showed their location and height. Held, that an assessment based on the report of the commissioners of a reclamation district for work already done is not bad because the character of the work done and the outstanding warrants were not specifically stated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76–81; Dec. Dig. ⟸76.]

9. Drains ⟸76—Reclamation Districts—Assessments.

That the board of supervisors did not take evidence before appointing commissioners to make an assessment for a reclamation district or make formal findings regarding objections to assessment, is immaterial to the validity of the assessment, as are the reasons actuating them and plaintiff's ignorance regarding form of proceedings; therefore averments as to such matters are properly stricken from a complaint attacking the assessment in the courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 76–81; Dec. Dig. ⟸76.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by Cynthia A. Meyer against Reclamation District No. 17. From a judgment for defendant and order denying new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Ashley, of Stockton, for appellant. Nutter & Orr and Clary & Louttit, all of Stockton, for respondent.

SHAW, J. [1] This is an action authorized by section 3462 of the Political Code, as amended in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 644). The plaintiff seeks to modify or annul an assessment levied in behalf of the reclamation district by the board of supervisors of the county. That section provides that when the commissioners have completed their assessment the same shall be filed with the clerk of the board of supervisors, who shall thereupon appoint a time for the hearing of objections thereto, of which notice shall be given. At this hearing any person interested in any land assessed may file written objections to the assessment, stating the grounds of the objections. After hearing the objections, if the board approves the assessment, it shall make an order to that effect and indorse the same upon the assessment list, which shall then be filed with the county treasurer. The section provides that the decision of the supervisors "shall be final, and thereafter said assessment list shall be conclusive evidence that said assessment has been made and levied according to law, except in an action commenced as hereinafter provided." It further provides that any person aggrieved by the decision of the supervisors may commence an action in the superior court of the county to have the decision corrected, modified, or annulled, that such action must be commenced within 30 days after the assessment list has been filed in the office of the county treasurer, and that if not commenced within that period "no action or defense shall thereafter be maintained attacking the legality of the assessment in any respect." There is also a provision that no objection to the assessment shall be allowed in any action, unless it shall have been made in writing to the board of supervisors as prescribed by the section. The present action was begun within the 30-day period prescribed; consequently, the objections presented in writing to the board of supervisors are open for consideration. None other are available, except such as go to the jurisdiction and render the proceedings void. Finnan v. Reclamation Dist., 26 Cal. App. 714, 148 Pac. 227, 152 Pac. 1197. The court made findings against the contentions of the plaintiff and rendered judgment in favor of the defendant. A motion for new trial was denied. The plaintiff appeals both from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The entire sum assessed was $131,727.04, of which $97,058.74 was for the purpose of paying outstanding warrants of the district for reclamation work already done.

[2] The report and plans of the engineer, upon which the assessment was based, estimated as a part of the work to be done the construction and installation of a pumping plant designated as Pump No. 3, together with drainage canals leading thereto, the estimated cost of which was $8,040. One of the objections stated was that this pump and canals would be of no benefit to the lands of the plaintiff. Another was that the assessment to plaintiff's land was not in proportion to the benefits accruing from the works of reclamation. With respect to these objections it is sufficient to say that the evidence at the trial of this action was conflicting, and the decision of the court below is therefore conclusive on appeal.

[3] Another objection was that the cost of the right of way for the proposed canals and pump was not provided for in the report or plans. The district is not required to make such cost a part of the estimate of the expense of making the pumping plant and canals. It may be that the right of way will be given free of cost, or that the district has other funds with which to pay for the same. In any event the omission of this item of possible cost does not make the assessment invalid. Reclamation Dist. v. Hershey, 160 Cal. 692, 117 Pac. 904.

The other objections made to the supervisors were stated generally. They are, in effect, that the plans were not sufficiently full or in detail to advise the board of the necessity of making the assessment, or the landowners of the nature or extent of the work theretofore done or thereafter to be done; that the assessment for the portion of the money estimated for the outstanding warrants is invalid because the work previously done was unlawfully done by reason of defective plans therefor, and the plans reported for the present assessment do not remedy the objection, in that they do not show the character or extent of the previous work for which said warrants were issued.

The report of the engineer stated the character of the pumping plant and canals and the estimated cost thereof as follows:

Cost of 12-inch pump, electrical motors, transformers, housing, and installation complete	$2,680 00
31,400 cubic yards excavation for canal system for pump No. 3 as per plans herewith	3,300 00
Cost of operation, pump No. 3, for one year	560 00
Estimated cost of necessary bridges over canals	1,500 00

[4] The plans consisted of profiles and maps. The maps showed the lines and location of the canals to be constructed leading to the pumping plant, and the profiles showed the bottom width of the canals. They also showed the contour of the land and the height of the surface above the bottom of the ditch. The first objection is that the description of the canals does not show the width at the top nor the slopes of the sides, so that the yardage could be computed therefrom. The number of cubic yards to be excavated, taken in connection with the courses and length of the several canals, their depth and the width on the bottom, furnish all the data necessary to enable an engineer to ascertain the slope of the bank and the width of the top, if any person deemed these items important enough to justify the labor of the calculations. The amount of excavation is the important thing in estimating the cost, and that is stated specifically.

[5] It is also claimed that the pump is not adequately described. The statement shows that the pump was a 12-inch pump to be run by electricity with the necessary housing, transformers, and attachments. We think these specifications constitute a sufficient "statement of the work done or to be done," within the meaning of section 3459 of the Political Code, or a sufficient report of the "plan of the work" as required by section 3455, to form a legal basis for the assessment. The Code does not require that such statement shall have the certainty and completeness of detail that would be necessary in a contract for the construction of the works, but only "a plan showing in some detail and with some degree of certainty the extent and character of the proposed works." Reclamation Dist. v. Bonbini, 158 Cal. 203, 110 Pac. 577. It is difficult to draw a line of certainty and fullness of detail to which such statements must conform. But the above specifications are as complete and certain in all respects which may be said to be substantial, in view of the purposes for which such statement is to be made, as those held sufficient in the Bonbini Case and in the subsequent decisions in Reclamation Dist. v. Diepenbrock, 167 Cal. 577, 143 Pac. 763, and Reclamation Dist. v. Hershey, 169 Cal. 793, 148 Pac. 185.

[6] Furthermore, section 3462, as amended, authorizing this form of action, permits it to be maintained only by "any person aggrieved by the decision of the board." It is not alleged that these, or any other of the specifications attacked will, by their uncertainty or want of detail, cause any injury to the plaintiff or others, or in any manner injuriously affect the proceeding, or in any degree hinder or prevent the carrying out of the proposed reclamation or add to the cost thereof. The objections are made on wholly technical grounds and upon the theory that their effect is to render the assessment void, regardless of their practical importance. The policy of the law should be to discourage such objections.

[7] The report further stated that:

"It is necessary that the following named sums be expended for the following named purposes, to wit:

* * * * * * * *

Rocking and brushing 1000 ft. east of the bank of the San Joaquin river, ¼ mile below the S. P. R. R. bridge $5,000 00

Rocking and brushing fill along east bank of the San Joaquin river, in the N. E. ¼ section 5, T. 1 S., R. 6 E., at power line crossing..... 500 00"

There was evidence that rocking and brushing, in engineering parlance, means a covering or revetment of brush held in place by rocks to protect the levee against the washing of waves and currents. The written objections to the supervisors did not specify any particular defects in this part of the report, but merely stated the general objection that the report and plans were not sufficiently full or in detail to advise the board or the landowners of the nature of the work to be done. The briefs discuss it only in a general way. The report and plans do not give the thickness of the layer of brush, the size of the rocks to be used, nor the width of the space to be covered. Apparently it was not the purpose to determine these things in advance. Obviously it might be inadvisable to do so. The conditions would vary from time to time, and they might change before the work was done, so as to make a change in such details necessary. It would be impossible to foresee all the conditions and fix the exact plan in advance. It would also be impracticable, in many cases, to prepare the details required by the minute variations in the surfaces of the levees. Such matters are often better left to the discretion of persons in charge of the work. The intention apparent on the face of the report was not to provide a complete plan for the work, but to raise a specific sum of money to expend in such work, leaving the details to the discretion of the trustees. We think it is within the power of the trustees to make an assessment in this manner for protective work of this kind. The functions of the trustees of a reclamation district are not confined merely to the construction of the works necessary to prevent the overflow and secure the drainage of the land therein. The district is a permanent agency organized to keep the lands protected. The trustees constitute a continuing board charged with the duty of carrying on the affairs of the district, operating its pumps and other machinery, when necessary, and keeping in repair the levees and ditches. In this respect they are a governing body similar, in respect of district affairs, to a city council with regard to municipal affairs. They must raise revenues sufficient to enable them to discharge these duties. Protective work of the character here involved is analogous to the repair and preservation of streets, sewers, and the like in a city. The funds necessary to carry on this part of the district government, though raised by a special assessment, are in the nature of taxes. It is never considered necessary in levying taxes for such matters to state in detail how the funds are to be expended. It is enough to state the specific purpose to which they are to be applied and the amount to be devoted to that purpose. We hold that it is a sufficient plan for an assessment, under this law, with respect to such protective work of this kind, for the report of the supervisors to state the character of work and the amount estimated to be necessary to accomplish it.

[8] The objection that the character and nature of the work previously done and for which the outstanding warrants were given is not shown is untenable. The Code, with respect to an assessment for the payment of debts for previous work, requires, at most, a mere "statement of the work done" (Pol. Code, § 3459), and a description of the "levees and other reclamation works already constructed" (Pol. Code, § 3455; Stats. 1911, p. 642). A description of such work that will identify it with certainty is enough. The old levees here to be paid for were existing things visible by any one who chose to look at them. The maps and profiles showed their location and height, and also the height to which it was proposed to raise them by the new work, the number of cubic yards required therefor, and the top width of the levees when so raised, together with the estimated cost of the work to be done. This is clearly sufficient.

In cases where work had been done under a previous assessment which had been adjudged invalid, section 3466½ provides that the landowners who did not pay such assessment may be charged by a subsequent assessment with their just proportion of the former assessment, according to the benefits to the lands from the works constructed. The petition for the assessment set forth the fact that a former assessment had been adjudged void, and that certain landowners had not paid the amounts charged to them thereon. The plaintiff was not one of the delinquents. The work previously done under that assessment is a part of that shown on the maps and profiles above mentioned and, for the reasons above stated, the description thereof is sufficient as a basis for the present assessment.

The remark in Reclamation Dist. v. Bonbini, supra, criticizing the plans there held to be insufficient, are not to be understood as holding that the assessment is void in every case, unless the plans were so certain and specific that a perfect contract for the contemplated work could not be let thereon, or unless the estimates showed separately the cost of each material part into which the work might be subdivided. There must be enough of detail to show the particular purpose to which the money will be applied and some degree of certainty as to the extent and character of the work to be done. The examples held bad in that opinion go only to the extent that the cost of repairs and of new work on levees and of drainage ditches and pumps, respectively, must be stated separately. The case is not authority for the conclusion that the present assessment is invalid. We find no fatal defects in the proceeding here attacked.

[9] Objection is made to the ruling of the court striking out certain portions of the complaint. The portions stricken out consisted of allegations that the supervisors did not take evidence prior to appointing the commissioners to make the assessment; that certain evidence was given at the hearing upon the objections to the assessment before the board; that the board made no formal findings regarding the objections; that plaintiff did not know of the prior proceeding; the nature and effect of the evidence received by the board of supervisors at the time of the hearing upon her objections to the assessment; the reasons which actuated the board in making the assessment; and the claims and arguments made in her behalf at the hearing. The court properly decided that the matters stricken out were immaterial to the objections urged against the assessment.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

172 Cal. 137

SWEETSER v. PACHECO. (S. F. 7646.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1916.)

1. ELECTIONS ⟸194—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

Under Pol. Code, § 1211, providing that no unauthorized mark shall invalidate a ballot unless it appears to have been made to identify it, ballots on each of which the voter had stamped a cross in the voting square at the right of a blank space left on the ballot for the insertion by the voter of some name not printed on the ballot, without writing any name in said space, were properly counted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

2. ELECTIONS ⟸194—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

A ballot on which the voter had written the name of a candidate for Lieutenant Governor in the blank space left for insertions, though the candidate's name was printed as running for Lieutenant Governor, there being no indication that the act was to identify the ballot, was properly counted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

3. ELECTIONS ⟸194—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

A ballot on which the voter wrote two names for justice of the peace and constable and stamped a cross immediately to the right of such names, but not in the voting squares, without indicating any intent to identify the ballot, was properly counted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

4. ELECTIONS ⟸194—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

A ballot on which the voter had stamped a cross as to both "Yes" and "No" on one of many propositions submitted to the voters, and then had attempted to rub out one of the crosses, there being nothing to indicate an intention to identify the ballot, was properly counted for a candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

5. ELECTIONS ⟸194—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

A ballot on which the voter had attempted with the voting stamp to cancel a cross placed by him in the voting square as to one of the propositions submitted by the ballot, there being no indication of intent to identify the ballot, was properly counted for a candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

6. ELECTIONS ⟸194—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

A ballot on which the voter had stamped his cross in three instances in the rectangular space to the right of the name of his candidate, but not in the voting square, the cross as to a particular candidate being in the voting square, there being nothing indicating an intention to identify the ballot, was properly counted for such candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

7. ELECTIONS ⟸194—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

Ballots, the distinguishing marks of which were obviously accidental, were properly counted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

8. ELECTIONS ⟸180—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

A ballot, wherein a voter had simply written in a name for both justice of the peace and constable, was properly counted for a candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 151–155, 157; Dec. Dig. ⟸180.]

9. ELECTIONS ⟸180—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

Under Pol. Code, §§ 1205, 1207, touching the marking of ballots, a ballot on which all the crosses, including the only one opposite a candidate's name, were stamped in a rectangular space to the right of the name, but none of the stamps were either wholly or partly within the voting square, was properly rejected as to such candidate, since the only way in which a voter can indicate his intention to vote for a particular candidate is by stamping a cross in, or at least partly in, the voting square.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 151–155, 157; Dec. Dig. ⟸180.]

10. ELECTIONS ⟸186—BALLOTS—INDICATION OF CHOICE—STATUTE.

Under Pol. Code, § 1205, touching the marking of ballots, a ballot on which all the crosses, including that in the voting square opposite a candidate's name, were made with a lead pencil was properly rejected, since the statute requires expression of the intention of a voter by stamping a cross.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

11. Elections ⟸194—Ballots—Indication of Choice—Statute.

Under Pol. Code, § 1211, providing that no unauthorized mark on a ballot invalidates it unless apparently made to identify the ballot, a ballot on which the cross as to various propositions was stamped on the word "Yes" or "No," instead of in the voting square, there being nothing to indicate an intention to identify, was valid as to a candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

12. Elections ⟸194—Ballots—Indication of Choice—Statute.

A ballot on which a cross was stamped on the word "Yes" as to several propositions, and then stamped in the square, there being nothing to indicate an intention to identify the ballot, was valid as to a candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

13. Elections ⟸194—Ballots—Indication of Choice—Statute.

A ballot, whereon a voter had attempted to vote on various propositions by writing "Yes" or "No" in the voting squares, instead of stamping a cross, and had marked a cross with pen and ink in the voting square on one of the propositions, there being no indication of intention to identify, was valid as to a candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

14. Elections ⟸186—Ballots—Indication of Choice—Statute.

A ballot, whereon a voter had penciled "Matt" in the blank space for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, drawn a line through it, and then written "Matt Sullivan" in the blank space for Chief Justice, short term, was valid as to another candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 159; Dec. Dig. ⟸186.]

15. Elections ⟸194—Ballots—Indication of Choice—Statute.

Ballots on which there were attempted erasures of all signs of the crosses first placed by the voter as to some candidate or proposition, there being nothing to indicate an intention to identify, were valid as to a candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

16. Elections ⟸194—Ballots—Indication of Choice—Statute.

A ballot, containing an attempted erasure of a cross stamped opposite one candidate's name, the vote having been changed by erasure and another stamped to the other candidate, there being nothing to indicate an intention to identify, was valid as to another candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

17. Elections ⟸194—Ballots—Indication of Choice—Statute.

Pol. Code, § 1197, touching the form of ballot, and providing that on the top of its face a direction shall be printed that all marks except the cross are forbidden, and that all distinguishing marks or erasures are forbidden and make the ballot void, is a mere provision that certain cautions shall be given the voter, and does not invalidate ballots on which erasures have been made, not indicating an intention to identify.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

18. Elections ⟸194—Ballots—Indication of Choice—Statute.

A ballot, containing a light and apparently inadvertent impression of the voting stamp in the upper right-hand corner on the margin, was valid under Pol. Code, § 1211, providing that unauthorized marks do not invalidate unless apparently made to identify.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

19. Elections ⟸305—Contest—Review.

In an election contest, where the bill of exceptions shows that the proceedings on trial consisted solely of a recount of ballots to determine whether they were properly counted, also showing all objections made by either party to ballots, it must be taken as settled that ballots as to which no objection was made were properly counted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 317-332; Dec. Dig. ⟸305.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Proceeding to contest an election by Fred W. Sweetser against G. Pacheco. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions.

W. H. Early, of Petaluma, for appellant. Thomas P. Boyd, of San Rafael, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The parties to this proceeding, an election contest, were rival candidates for the office of supervisor of the fifth supervisor district in Marin county at the election held November 3, 1914. Upon the canvass of the votes for said office by the board of supervisors it was declared that Mr. Pacheco had received 351 votes and Mr. Sweetser 350. Thereupon this proceeding was instituted by Sweetser in the superior court of Marin county. Upon a recount of the ballots in court, it was determined by the court that Pacheco had received 333 votes and Sweetser 330, and by the judgment the former was declared elected. This is an appeal by Sweetser from the judgment, the appeal having been ordered transferred to this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First District.

The only questions presented by the appeal are as to rulings of the trial court in the counting of ballots. The bill of exceptions shows the proceedings in the trial court as to the ballots to which objection was made by either party, and the ruling of the court thereon, said ballots numbering 38. By stipulation these ballots were made a part of the bill of exceptions, and have been brought to this court for inspection and consideration.

[1] The trial court counted seven ballots on each of which the voter had stamped a cross in the voting square at the right of a blank space left on the ballot for the insertion by the voter of some name not printed on the ballot, without writing any name in said space. Its action in that regard was correct, as recently held by this court in

Turner v. Wilson, 154 Pac. 2 (decided December 21, 1915).

[2-8] We have examined all the other ballots counted by the trial court to which objection was made, and find no error. In Turner v. Wilson, supra, we discussed the effect of subdivision 4, § 1211, Political Code, added to the section by amendment in the year 1903, providing that:

"No mark upon a ballot which is unauthorized by this act shall be held to invalidate such ballot, unless it shall appear that such mark was placed thereon by the voter for the purpose of identifying such ballot."

In the case at bar there was no evidence of any kind before the court other than the ballots themselves. In view of this provision and what is said concerning it in Turner v. Wilson, supra, it is clear that the action of the trial court in counting each of these ballots must be approved. On ballot "Black 10," the voter had written the name of J. V. Snyder in the blank space for the office of Lieutenant Governor, although Snyder's name was printed on the ballot as one of the candidates for that office. Although this was an unauthorized act, there was nothing to indicate that it was done for the purpose of identifying the ballot. On ballot "Nicasio 3," the voter having written in the names of Frank Rogers and E. Cotta for justice of the peace and constable, respectively, had stamped a cross immediately to the right of each name, but not in the voting square. While such crosses were ineffectual for any purpose, there was nothing therein to indicate any intent to identify the ballot thereby. On ballot "Nicasio 8," the voter had stamped a cross as to both "Yes" and "No" on one of the many propositions submitted to the voters at that election, and then had attempted to rub out one of said crosses. On ballot "Nicasio 9" the voter had attempted with the voting stamp to cancel a cross placed by him in the voting square on one of the propositions. On ballot "Novato 2–5" the voter had stamped his cross in three instances, not including Pacheco, in the rectangular space to the right of the name of his candidate, but not in the voting square. The cross as to Pacheco was in the voting square. As to none of these ballots was there anything to indicate an intent to identify the ballot. As to ballots "Black 12," "Novato 1–1," and "Novato 2–16," the alleged distinguishing marks were obviously accidental. On ballot "Black 6" the voter had done simply what he had an absolute right to do, written in the name of Wm. Farley for both the office of justice of the peace and constable.

[9, 10] The trial court did not err in refusing to count as a vote for Sweetser either ballot "Novato 1–15" or ballot "Novato 2–8." On the former all the crosses, including the only cross opposite Sweetser's name, were stamped in the rectangular space at the right of the name, but none of the stamps was either wholly or partly within the voting square. Under the law as it now is and has been ever since the year 1903, the only way in which a voter can indicate his intent to vote for a particular candidate is by stamping a cross in, or at least partly in (see section 1211, Pol. Code), the voting square, the provisions of section 1205, Political Code, being mandatory in this regard. Any other method is legally ineffectual to express an intent to vote for a particular candidate, by reason of the express language of this section providing how, and how only, the intent shall be indicated. This is made manifest by what is said by this court as to the mandatory character of section 1205, Political Code, in regard to the method of indicating a vote, in Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 109, 41 Pac. 454, 29 L. R. A. 673, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68, Huston v. Anderson, 145 Cal. 333, 78 Pac. 626, and Tout v. Hawkins, 143 Cal. 104, 106, 76 Pac. 897. As that section now is, the voter who has omitted to stamp his cross in, or at least partly in, the voting square, opposite the printed name of a particular candidate, has not voted for that candidate. The case is simply one of no vote. As to ballot "Novato 2–8," all the crosses, including that in the voting square opposite Sweetser's name, were made with a lead pencil. What we have already said applies also to this ballot. In view of the provisions of section 1205, Political Code, the intent of the voter to vote for a particular candidate whose name is printed on the ballot can be expressed only by stamping a cross in, or at least partly in, the voting square. Lacking such stamped cross, the ballot cannot be counted for such candidate, even though the courts may feel that the voter in fact intended so to vote. The express language of the law forbids it.

[11-13] The trial court rejected ballot "Nicasio 1," a Sweetser vote, because the voter had stamped the cross as to various propositions on the word "Yes" or "No," instead of in the voting square; also ballot "Novato 2–19," a Sweetser vote, because the voter had stamped the cross on the word "Yes" as to several propositions, and then had stamped a cross in the square; also ballot "Black 8," a Pacheco vote, because the voter had attempted to vote on the various propositions by writing the word "Yes" or "No" in the voting squares instead of stamping a cross, and had also marked a cross with pen and ink in the voting square on one of the propositions; and also ballot "Novato 1–3," a Pacheco ballot, because the voter had stamped his cross on the word "Yes" or "No" as to various propositions, instead of in the voting square. The vote for supervisor was properly indicated on each of these ballots. It was error to reject any of these votes in so far as the contest for supervisor was concerned. There was nothing on any of these ballots to indicate any intent to identify the ballot, and however defective any of them was to indicate a vote on any other candidate or proposition, it showed a good vote for a candidate for supervisor. See Turner v. Wilson, supra.

[14] The trial court erred in rejecting ballot "San Antonio 6," a Pacheco vote. The only objection thereto was that the voter had written with a pencil the word "Matt" in the blank space for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, drawn a pencil line through the word, and had then written the name "Matt Sullivan" in the blank space for Chief Justice Supreme Court, short term. Obviously there was nothing thereon to indicate any intent to identify the ballot.

[15-17] The trial court rejected 14 ballots, 9 Sweetser votes and 5 Pacheco votes, because of attempted erasures by the voter with more or less success, of all signs of the cross first placed by him thereon, as to some candidate or proposition, generally some proposition or propositions. On only 1 of these was the attempted erasure as to a candidate for supervisor, ballot "Novato 1-2," where the voter had first stamped his cross in the voting square opposite Pacheco's name, and then had almost entirely removed all indications of such cross and stamped his cross in the voting square opposite Sweetser's name. The vote as cast was clearly one for Sweetser, and the question in regard to this ballot is the same as that presented by the other 13 ballots on which erasures appeared. We are satisfied that in view of the provisions of subdivision 4, § 1211, Political Code, and the opinion in Turner v. Wilson, supra, it must be held that all of these ballots should have been counted in the contest for supervisor. It is too plain for discussion that there was nothing on any of these ballots to indicate any purpose to thereby identify the ballot. The attempted erasures were at most unauthorized "marks upon the ballot," such marks as it clearly was the object of subdivision 4, § 1211, Political Code, to cover. Unless there be some provision of law making a ballot void whenever an erasure or attempted erasure appears thereon, no sufficient ground for the rejection of the ballot exists except that of a distinguishing mark placed thereon by the voter, and this ground of objection is governed by subdivision 4, § 1211. In this connection reliance is placed by counsel for defendant on a provision in section 1197, Political Code, a section devoted to the matter of form of ballot. This section provides that on the top of the face of the ballot, "the following directions shall be printed." Then follow many directions, including this:

"All marks except the cross (x) are forbidden. All distinguishing marks or erasures are forbidden and make the ballot void. If you wrongfully stamp, tear or deface this ballot, return it to the inspector of elections and obtain another."

But, as was said by Mr. Justice Shaw in his concurring opinion in Turner v. Wilson, supra, this provision—"is not an enactment of substantive law at all, but a mere provision that certain cautions shall be given to the voter himself."

This was definitely held by this court in Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 101, 109, 41 Pac. 454, 456 (29 L. R. A. 673, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68), as to another portion of the directions contained in said section 1197, viz.:

"To vote for a person, stamp a cross (x) in the square at the right of name."

At the time of that decision, section 1205, the section providing how the voter must indicate his choice, simply provided that he shall prepare his ballot "by marking a cross after the name of the person," etc., saying nothing about a voting square, and it was held that a cross "after the name" which was not in the voting square should be counted. As we have seen, the law in this particular respect has since been changed. It was said that "the mandatory provisions as to voters are found in sections 1205 and 1215 of the same Code," and that neglect to comply with the directions printed on the ballot to place the cross in the voting square did not make the ballot void. It was also said that, while—

"the statute contemplates, at least inferentially, the making of a square, and that the square is the proper place for the marking of a cross, * * * it has not made the doing of this a prerequisite to the casting of a legal ballot."

And so here, while section 1197 still provides for printing a direction on the ballot that "all distinguishing marks or erasures are forbidden and make the ballot void," there is absolutely no provision of substantive law anywhere in the Code to the effect that "a distinguishing mark or erasure" does make the ballot void. As was said by Justice Shaw in his concurring opinion to which we have referred:

"These instructions to voters have been carried down in the same form from the time when the statute provided that every distinguishing mark should invalidate the ballot, and it apparently has not been perceived that subdivision 4 aforesaid changes the rule in that respect."

The controlling rule of substantive law as to the invalidating of ballots by reason of unauthorized marks, including erasures, is that contained in subdivision 4, § 1211, Political Code. There is no difference between erasures and other unauthorized marks in this regard. As was said in Turner v. Wilson, supra, decisions relative to unauthorized marks on a ballot, rendered prior to the amendment of section 1211 in this regard, must be read in the light of the law as it then was. The real ground on which ballots containing erasures were rejected in People v. Campbell, 138 Cal. 11, 20, 70 Pac. 918, 922, was, as is apparent from the opinion, that the erasures "might serve as distinguishing marks." The court said:

"The objections of the appellant to counting for the relator ballots No. 36(a), 137(a), and 276(a), upon the ground that they contain certain erasures which might serve as distinguishing marks, should have been sustained and the votes rejected" (citing Salcido v. Roberts, 136 Cal. 670, 69 Pac. 431).

In the case so cited, where the voter had attempted to "rub out" a written name, rendering it illegible, this court ruled that the ballot should have been rejected, because by the erasure the voter had left a conspicuous mark on the ballot "by which it might easily have been identified." At the time of these decisions, both prior to the enactment of subdivision 4 of section 1211, Political Code, the settled law of the state was that the ballot must be rejected if the voter placed thereon any mark by which it might be afterwards identified as the one voted by him. It was for the very purpose of changing this rule that subdivision 4 of section 1211 was enacted. Of course, in the light of that amendment it is impossible to hold, as was said in People v. Campbell, supra, that a voter "spoils" a ballot when he places thereon "any mark by which it may be identified." (The italics are ours.)

[18] The trial court rejected ballot "Novato 2–13," a Sweetser vote, on the objection that a cross near the upper right-hand corner of the ballot, on the margin to the right of the directions to voters, constituted a distinguishing mark invalidating the ballot. The cross is very light, and does not have the appearance of being the result of a deliberate impression of the voting stamp. There is absolutely nothing to indicate that it was not inadvertently made. We are satisfied that it cannot fairly be held that it appears from the ballot that this cross "was placed thereon by the voter for the purpose of identifying such ballot," and the statute says that such a mark cannot be held to invalidate the ballot, unless this appears. As already suggested, the only evidence on the subject is the ballot itself. We must hold that the learned trial judge erred in his conclusion that it appeared that this cross was placed on the ballot by the voter for the purpose of identifying the ballot, and in refusing to count the same as a vote for Sweetser.

What we have said disposes of all the ballots to which objection appears to have been made on either side. The erroneous rulings were in the rejection of 20 ballots, 8 of which were Pacheco votes and 12 Sweetser votes. The ballots as to which no objection appears to have been made must be assumed to have been correctly counted. The result is that Pacheco received 341 votes instead of 333, and that Sweetser received 342 votes instead of 330. The trial court found the vote of each by precincts, and also in the aggregate. The findings as to precincts should have been as follows:

Novato 1.....	Sweetser	98	Pacheco	84
Novato 2.....	"	126	"	97
Nicasio	"	63	"	50
San Antonio.....	"	21	"	73
Black	"	34	"	37

[19] The only grounds of contest alleged in the statement filed by the plaintiff were malconduct of the election officers in the various precincts, in that they miscounted the ballots cast, and illegal votes. The latter ground apparently was not urged on the trial, and the bill of exceptions shows that the proceedings on the trial consisted solely of a recount of the ballots cast, for the purpose of determining whether they were properly counted. The findings of the trial court show simply the conclusions based entirely on such recount. As already stated, the bill of exceptions shows all objections made by either party to ballots, respondent as well as appellant, as is proper in a proceeding of this character. See People v. Campbell, 138 Cal. 17, 70 Pac. 918. In such a proceeding, too, it is clear that, in view of the record, it must be taken as settled that ballots as to which no objection was made were properly counted. Therefore nothing remains for the trial court to do in the matter of this contest except to add to the totals already declared by it said 20 rejected ballots, that is, 12 for Sweetser and 8 for Pacheco, making their respective totals 342 and 341, to make its findings accordingly, and thereupon to enter judgment declaring Sweetser elected. No useful purpose can be accomplished by any further proceedings in the trial court, and the law contemplates as summary a disposition of proceedings of this character as is consistent with a proper ascertainment of the result of the election.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to count the 20 rejected ballots declared by the opinion herein to have been improperly rejected, for the parties for whom they were cast, viz., 12 for plaintiff Sweetser and 8 for defendant Pacheco; to add to the total vote heretofore declared by the findings as having been received by each party the votes thus gained; to make its findings of fact accordingly; and thereupon to enter judgment annulling the election of defendant, Pacheco, and declaring plaintiff, Sweetser, elected.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(172 Cal. 112)

CARPENTER v. MARKHAM et al.

(L. A. 3631.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1916.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸226—BOND AGAINST LIENS—CONSTRUCTION.

A bond given by a builder, in consideration of the premature payment of the last installment of the contract price before lapse of time for filing liens, to hold the owner harmless from any liens, is immaterial relative to a claim for extras as to which it says nothing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 409; Dec. Dig. ⟸226.]

2. EVIDENCE ⟸408—RECEIPT — CONTRADICTING.

A receipt is open to evidence contradicting or explaining its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1829–1842; Dec. Dig. ⟸408.]

3. EVIDENCE ⟸409—PAROL EVIDENCE—EXPLAINING RELEASE.

Even if an instrument executed by a building contractor, reciting receipt "in full as per contract for house," be a release instead of a mere receipt, the question of what is released thereby, whether the claim for contract price merely or also that for extras, is open to explanation and elucidation by parol evidence; Civ. Code, § 1647, providing that a contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made and the matter to which it relates, and section 1648 providing that, however broad the terms of a contract, it extends only to those things concerning which it appears that the parties intended to contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1843–1845; Dec. Dig. ⟸409.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by J. A. Carpenter against W. F. Markham and others. From an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Edward Winterer, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Andrew M. Strong, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. Plaintiff, as contractor, entered into a contract with Carrie B. Shortman, since and now by marriage Carrie B. Markham, to construct for her a dwelling house. In recompense he was to receive the total sum of $6,440, payable in four separate installments of $1,610 each, the last payment to be due and payable, under the mechanics' lien law, 35 days after the completion of the work. In terms the contract between the parties provided that compensation for additions, changes and extras shall be agreed upon between the parties—

"at a fair and reasonable price * * * and the owner shall give the contractor written authorization for the work, setting forth the changes to be made, the price to be paid and the extra time allowed for its execution. * * * This authorization shall be signed by both parties to the contract and shall be binding upon both. No extras will be allowed without agreement for the same. Changes thus made shall in no wise alter, make void, or in any other way affect the standing of the original contract."

After the completion of the building and the payment by the owner of the last payment of $1,610, plaintiff contended that there was due him $540,21 for and on account of extra work. Defendant denying this, the present action followed. The court heard the evidence of plaintiff and of plaintiff's witnesses tending to show that all the items charged for in the extra work, material, and labor performed were actually supplied and performed, and that the reasonable value was the amount sued for. Evidence was also offered that when plaintiff made his demand upon defendant after payment by defendant of the $1,610 final payment, defendant did not question her liability to pay for these extras, but questioned only the amounts charged for them. The defendant W. F. Markham, now the husband of defendant Carrie B. Markham, and at the time her man of affairs, was the one through whom these negotiations were carried on and with whom these discussions were had. Indeed there is in evidence a letter from defendant W. F. Markham admitting some liability on account of these extras, and declaring that when the plaintiff had finished some other work upon which he was engaged for defendant, defendant had expressed his intent to "settle with him fair and square and was willing to pay him more than his due; that we would get together personally or by friendly arbitration if necessary." This evidence, legally sufficient to establish plaintiff's contention, was admitted under objection and subject to defendants' motion to strike it all out. Subsequently and upon defendants' motion to this end the court did strike out all of this evidence and gave judgment, so far as these controverted matters are concerned, for defendants.

The court based its ruling upon the following facts: Upon the completion of the building and before the expiration of the 35 days during which the last payment must be withheld, defendants agreed with plaintiff to make him this last payment of $1,610 if he would execute an indemnity bond protecting them against possible lien claimants. This indemnity bond declared that the principal and sureties were bound unto Carrie B. Shortman in the sum of $1,610, the conditions of the bond being that whereas Carpenter has carried the work to completion, and whereas the contract provides that the sum of $1,610 shall be due and payable 35 days after the final completion, and whereas Carrie B. Shortman is ready and willing to make the final payment provided the said Carpenter as such contractor shall hold her "harmless from any and all liens or incumbrances which may accrue and grow out of or be caused by the construction of that building, and the furnishing of any labor or material used in the construction of the same," therefore the principal and sureties declared themselves bound in consideration of the payment of the $1,610 to Carpenter to indemnify and save harmless Carrie B. Shortman from any and all cost, damages, and counsel fees and all other expenses which she may sustain by reason of the matters set forth. Accompanying this indemnity there was given to defendants a receipt in the following language:

"Received from Miss C. B. Shortman in full as per contract for house on lot 18 and 19, Morning Gate tract, in Los Angeles, Cal.
"J. A. Carpenter."

Defendants' motion to strike out was based upon the contention that upon their faces these two instruments amounted to a release and discharge of defendants against all claims of plaintiff, and thus operated to estop him from proceeding to prove those claims. The motion was granted by the court, and plaintiff's case thus being without evidence to support it judgment, as has been said, passed for defendants.

[1-3] We may pass over certain well-founded objections which the appellant takes to the rulings of the court in this respect; the objections being that whether defendants' position be that there was an accord and satisfaction, or whether it be that these instruments raise an estoppel against plaintiff, in either case to be availed of the facts constituting the accord and satisfaction or the facts constituting the estoppel must have been pleaded. Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 39, 85 Am. Dec. 157; Etcheborne v. Auzerais, 45 Cal. 121; Landis v. Morrissey, 69 Cal. 86, 10 Pac. 258; Simmons v. Oullahan, 75 Cal. 508, 17 Pac. 543; Dellapiazza v. Foley, 112 Cal. 386, 44 Pac. 727; Newhall v. Hatch, 134 Cal. 273, 66 Pac. 266, 55 L. R. A. 673; Chapman v. Hughes, 134 Cal. 641, 58 Pac. 298, 60 Pac. 974, 66 Pac. 982; Great Western Gold Co. v. Chambers, 153 Cal. 307, 95 Pac. 151. To rest this determination simply upon the fatal error of defendants to plead their satisfaction and accord or their estoppel would still leave the fundamental proposition in the case undecided. That proposition, stated in the form of a question, is: Do these instruments constitute such an accord and satisfaction or raise such an estoppel?

It is better for all concerned that this basic question be now decided. Considering the indemnity bond, it is quite plain that it deals with the premature advancement of the final payment of $1,610, and it deals with nothing else. It is designed to protect the owners who have made this premature payment against any ill consequences that may flow therefrom if liens should be filed and lien claimants exercise their undoubted right to resort to this fund. Neither directly nor indirectly does it say or intimate anything else or further. Analyzing next the receipt, that instrument it is true declares over plaintiff's signature that he has received (payment) "in full as per contract for house." But it is only a receipt, and a receipt is always open to evidence contradicting or explaining its terms. Even if it be considered a release instead of a mere receipt, the question of what is released thereby is open to explanation and elucidation by parol evidence. Civ. Code, §§ 1647, 1648; Stufflebeem v. Arnold, 57 Cal. 11; Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 383, 63 Pac. 692; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630; Jersey Island Dredging Co. v. Whitney, 149 Cal. 269, 86 Pac. 509, 691; Davis v. Diamond Carriage Co., 146 Cal. 59, 79 Pac. 596; California P. Co. v. Merritt, 6 Cal. App. 507, 92 Pac. 509. It was precisely this evidence in elucidation and explanation of this receipt which the court after admitting it struck out, with evidence touching the nature and value of the extras.

In so doing the court erred and the order appealed from is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court upon new trial to admit the excluded evidence, with such other legal evidence upon these matters as may be tendered by either party and determine the litigation accordingly.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(172 Cal. 116)

BARRETT v. METROPOLITAN CONTRACTING CO. (L. A. 3622.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1916. Rehearing Denied March 16, 1916.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸999—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

For purpose of appeal the jury are to be considered as having accepted the testimony supporting the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3912-3921, 3923, 3924; Dec. Dig. ⟸999.]

2. ANIMALS ⟸70 — VICIOUS ANIMALS—LIABILITY—IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE — SERVANTS IN CHARGE.

Where defendant, though having a foreman who frequently made the rounds of its stables, permanently kept at each stable only stablemen, whose authority was simply to feed the animals, and at times to hook them up, such stablemen were placed sufficiently in charge of the animals as to make their knowledge of the vicious propensities of one of them, through complaints lodged with them by the drivers, imputable to defendant, as regards liability for injury inflicted by the animal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. §§ 225, 228-237; Dec. Dig. ⟸70.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1170(3)—HARMLESS ERROR—RULING ON DEMURRER.

Though the complaint was open to demurrer, as not stating with sufficient certainty that plaintiff's ignorance of the vicious propensities of the horse which injured him extended up to the time of the accident, yet, his testimony having been certain to that effect, overruling the demurrer on that ground was harmless, within Code Civ. Proc. § 475, and Const. art. 6, § 4½.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4066, 4075, 4098, 4101, 4542; Dec. Dig. ⟸1170(3).]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by J. H. Barrett against the Metropolitan Contracting Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Vincent Hannon, of Los Angeles, for appellant. R. T. Lightfoot, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while driving a team furnished to him by defendant under the following circumstances: The city of Los Angeles had entered into a contract with defendant whereby the latter had agreed to furnish suitable horses and their harness and wagons to the city for the purpose of doing its street sprinkling work. The city was to supply the drivers. The teams and wagons were furnished subject to the approval of the inspector or his deputies. "Nothing could leave the yard that was not satisfactory to him." In the performance of this contract defendant maintained, in convenient parts of the city, stables where its horses were kept. Each morning a harnessed team was delivered to each of the city's drivers. Each team was attached to a sprinkling wagon, and, with the city's driver in charge went on its way. The defendant had a foreman or overseer of its stables and horses, who frequently made the rounds of the stables, but was not permanently at any one of them. Each stable was in charge of one or more stablemen—"stable-bucks" they are called. Touching the powers and duties of these stable-bucks the uncontradicted evidence is as follows:

"The authority of the stable-bucks was simply to feed the animals and at times to hook them up."

Upon the day of his injury plaintiff under the direction of a deputy city inspector, took his team, hitched to a sprinkling wagon, and proceeded about his usual duties. There was assigned to him a particular district. His duties were to fill his wagon at convenient water plugs, sprinkle the streets and reload his wagon from the most accessible plug, and so to continue throughout the day. His team upon this day consisted of a horse and a mule. He had not driven them before. At the time of the accident he had refilled and emptied his wagon some 15 or 18 times. He had noticed that the horse was high-spirited and restive, and seemed to be disturbed at the noise made by the rushing water at the fire plugs. The horse started much more quickly than did its companion, the mule, and when it started did not wait for the mule, but dragged forward the whole of the load. To mount to the driver's seat one was obliged to climb first upon the hub, then upon the tire, and then upon the step below the seat. When filling the wagon it was usual and was the habit of plaintiff to tie the lines securely to the seat. When the lines were released the restive horse seemed to regard this as its signal to start and "plunge forward." The plaintiff had filled his wagon at one of the fire plugs, had released the lines, the horse had started, when noticing that the check rein or a line of the mule's harness was out of place over a hame, he stopped his team and dismounted to arrange it. In doing so he left the brake on, dismounting upon the left-hand side with the lines in his hand. He fastened the lines not to the seat, but to the step just above the wheel. He arranged the harness, returned to mount to his seat, was standing on the tire with the loosened reins in his hand, when the horse started, jerked the tire from under his feet, and precipitated him to the ground with the lines in his hand. The wheel passed over his leg and inflicted the injury. He shouted, "Whoa," as he fell off the wheel, but the team did not stop until the wheel had passed over and crushed his foot.

[1] Such is the evidence of the accident. Defendant moved for a nonsuit upon several grounds: That the evidence failed to show that the horse was a dangerous animal, and that it failed to show that, if it were, in fact, a dangerous animal, defendant had any actual or imputed knowledge of its character. This motion was denied. The same propositions advanced upon the motion are in different form presented on this appeal. Evidence was admitted touching the dangerous character of the horse. This evidence consisted of statements made by other drivers of the horse to one or more of the stable-bucks to the effect that the horse was dangerous and would "kill somebody some day," and was restive and high-spirited, and not fitted for the work. The making of these statements to the stable-bucks was disputed by them, the testimony on behalf of the defendant being that no complaint was ever made about the horse; that it was purchased by the defendant upon the recommendation of the city inspector, after an examination of its qualifications by both of them. But, of course, for the purposes of this consideration, it is necessarily to be concluded that the jury accepted the statements of plaintiff's witnesses.

[2] The second proposition advanced by appellant is that, even if these statements were made, they were not made to any officer or agent of the company under such circumstances as to carry actual or imputed knowledge to the defendant itself, and herein is pointed out the limited duties of the stable-bucks in the matter of the horses.

The general question of the responsibility of the owner of a vicious animal for damages by that animal inflicted received some consideration in the case of Clowdis v. Fresno Flume, etc., Co., 118 Cal. 315, 50 Pac. 373, 62 Am. St. Rep. 238. It is there said that knowledge by or notice to a servant charged

